NOTE.

Where evidence has been given with the intention of rebutting, explaining, or supplementing any statement previously made before the Commission, a reference to the Question at which the original statement was made has been inserted in the margin, and where such rebutting, explanatory, or supplementary evidence has been given prior to the final publication of the original statement, a cross reference to the former has also, so far as possible, been inserted in the margin opposite to such statement.

D. LLEUFER THOMAS,

Secretary.

SIXTY-FOURTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Llangollen, Denbighshire, Tuesday, August 28th, 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Lord KENYON.

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.

Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.

Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.

Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.

Mr. EDWIN GROVE.

Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. WILLIAM PARKER called and examined.

Chairman.

55,092. Are you the agent of the Chirk Castle estate?—Yes.

55,093. To whom does that property belong?—Mr. Myddelton Biddulph.

55,094. How large is it?—10,000 acres in extent.

55,095. How many farms are there?—The number of farms to which my evidence relates is 34.

55,096. What is the acreage of those 34 farms?—7,640 acres.

55,097. I have looked through your evidence and it is very much the same as that which we have gone through and through, over and over again, in different parts of Wales. Do you, however, wish to go through it?—With your permission I should like to read my evidence.

55,098. We will just look at it seriatim, and those questions which you say you know nothing at all about we can pass over?—I should like to say in the first place that my evidence relates to the Chirk Castle estate only.

55,099. We understand that. There are no courts held?—But, with your permission, I should really like to read it exactly as I have written it.

55,100. Let me ask, do language, politics, and religion influence the choosing of tenants?—I should like to read my statement. I have added several items to it since I first sent it in, and I should like to read it through as I have prepared it. The estate is about 10,000 acres in extent, but the 34 farms to which my evidence refers are 7,640 acres in extent; the remainder is lands in hand, woods, houses and gardens, &c., and the rent of the 34 farms is 5,708*l*. The figures to which my evidence relate are for the last 14 years, from 1880 and I wish to say that the expenditure on the farms prior to that date, not having been kept separate from the other portions of the estate, which consists largely of house and cottage property, the actual figures are not available, but about the same rate of expenditure has been going on since 1872, when the present Mr. Biddulph succeeded to the property, and even prior to that date during the lifetime of Mr. Biddulph's father. I have been for over six years agent of the Chirk Castle estate in the county of Denbigh, previous to which I had been on the estate for about eight years assisting my uncle in the management. The land is in the lordship of Chirk, which is about 12,300 acres in extent. There are no Courts held in connexion with the manor. As to management it is impossible to lay down a rule. Neither language, politics, nor religion ever influence the choosing of tenants; they are never even questioned on either point. Speaking for myself as to whether agents receive any special training, I may say that I have received a special training as an estate agent, having had 14 years' experience in every branch of estate management. The usual date of entry is Lady-day. The tenancies are from year to year. There is no demand for leases. Tenants do not care to bind themselves to pay a fixed rent for a long period, and they believe themselves to be quite as safe in a yearly tenancy, which my evidence later on will prove to you. As to the question whether tenants readily accept leases I have no information; I have never been asked for a lease. Then, as to the condition of leaseholders I have no experience. Changes in tenancy have not varied to any extent on this estate. No cases of hardship have arisen to my knowledge. As to compensation in resuming the occupation of a field, or plot, out of a holding for the sake of planting, and so on, that is always by private arrangement, and compensation is always given. Damage by timber cutting is compensated. Rents are always re-adjusted and compensation granted in such cases. In reference to the question "If any mining, brick-fields, quarries, or other industrial operations

"have been commenced on the land, has the rent been re-adjusted or compensation granted in consequence?" I say rents are always re-adjusted and compensation granted in such cases. Then I produce a copy of the agreement. [Handing in same.] The agreement is rather an old form, and the clause as to repairing might be better worded, it simply means "taking proper care of the structures"—as an actual fact the tenants are not required to do repairs, and have never done any. There are none of the clauses in that agreement considered oppressive. Penalising clauses are not common, and they are never enforced, except in the case of a bad tenant. A good tenant has practically a free hand. Tenants are always given a copy of their agreements, and usually have it for perusal for some days before signing. The rent is fixed at a gross sum. There is uniformity in rents on this estate, but I am not prepared to speak as to rents on neighbouring estates. As to whether the rent of the smaller tenantry is higher per acre than on larger farms it really depends upon circumstances, sometimes one way and sometimes another. The average rents of upland farms vary from 12s. to 20s. an acre, and the lowland farms from 20s. to 35s. per acre. There are no cases of right of pasturage over a common on this estate. There are no services other than the payment of rent rendered by the tenants. The rent is fixed by private agreement. As to whether a holding is practically let to the highest bidder, I say no, the farms are let to the most eligible tenants; no matter how many applications for a farm, the rent asked for it does not vary. Proof of sufficient capital has to be produced. I always endeavour if possible to ascertain an applicant's means. Arbitration is never resorted to as a means of settling rents; and we have never any difficulty in settling by private arrangement. As to whether rents have varied, in 1875 the rents of some farms were slightly increased, and the result at the time was to increase the rental of the estate, but permanent reductions have since been made, and the rental is now considerably reduced. There have been both permanent reductions and temporary abatements of rents. The permanent reductions since 1875 are 394*l.* per annum.

The temporary abatements since 1879 are these:—Mr. Biddulph commenced in 1879 (Michaelmas), and allowed a remission of 10 per cent. on all the farm rents, which was continued each year without remission for 10 years until 1889 (Michaelmas), and during that period it amounted to upwards of 5,200*l.* Again from Lady-day, 1892, to Lady-day, 1894, 10 per cent. was returned, 1,040*l.*, making a total remission, since 1879, of 6,240*l.*, besides which he made allowances of lime and other manures, and in some cases substantial arrears have been wiped off. I would like to say that these abatements have always been voluntarily given by the landlord; the tenants have never even asked for them. They are always given notice of such abatements. The alterations in rent are settled by private arrangement.

I have not prepared details as to the fluctuations in prices. The audit is about three months after the rents become due, and further time has always been given if asked for. The effect of preferential claim for rent is practically nil, but it induces landlords to give tenants the opportunity of realising the best prices for their produce, and to take advantage of the best markets. If it did not exist, landlords would probably insist on payment in advance, and other creditors are always aware of this claim. The tithes, land tax, chief rent, and local rates are paid by the occupier, and the income tax of course by the landlord. The local rates in Chirk parish have considerably decreased. The size of the farms varies from 50 acres to about 350 acres. The average is about 120 acres each. Holdings have not been consolidated; they are much about the same as they have been for many years. There is no sub-letting on the estate. There is very little difference as to skill in farming produced by the size of the holding; it depends upon the individual farmer. Then as to cultivation, the farms are mixed farms, partly arable, partly dairy and feeding. The four-course system is mostly prevalent. The labour market fluctuates, but there is usually a fair supply. The condition of the fences, &c. depends upon the individual farmers, who vary as to their tidy farming, but on the whole on this estate the condition of the fences, &c. is very creditable. There is no land going out of cultivation; no waste land being reclaimed; no ploughing up of rough land; no draining of marshy ground, and no embanking of rivers. Arable land has not been laid down to pasture to any extent. There has been a slight increase of root crops; there has been no fallowing; all improvements are done by the landlord. Reconstruction and increased facilities in the way of building, &c.; all repairs; gates, posts, and fencing material supplied free, and often put up; occasionally manures, &c. supplied.

From 1880 to 1893, the expenditure on improvements and repairs (exclusive of cottages) has amounted to	8,026
Permanent reductions during that time	3,436
Temporary abatements amounted to	6,240
Arrears remitted	178

£17,880

An average during the last 14 years of 1,277*l.* per annum, or 22 per cent. on the rental of 5,708*l.* of the farms referred to.

In addition to the above amount, considerable sums have been spent in putting farms (which have been on hand for short periods) into a high state of cultivation, and where any improvements or additions have been made, the rents have not been raised. I know of no case of co-operation in improvements, and I know of no case of improvements by tenants. I know of no instance where either party contracted out of the Agricultural Holdings Act—of course it is not legal—except as to clause 33. Farmers never apply for consent for specific improvements; all necessary improvements are done by the landlord, and this system is preferred by the tenants. As to consent being readily given, it would depend upon circumstances whether it was suitable and necessary. As to the custom of the country and allowances to outgoing tenants in respect of growing crops, the seeds are paid for, half the wheat crop belongs to the outgoing tenant, and is invariably taken to by the incoming tenant by valuation. As to tillage and cultivation, that is entirely by arrangement between the outgoing and incoming tenants. As to manure and produce remaining at the expiration of the tenancy, the manure is left without compensation, unconsumed hay and straw (which must not exceed one-third of last year's produce) is taken to by valuation at consuming prices. Unexhausted manures are paid for. We have never had a case of permanent improvements by tenants. The respective rights of outgoing and incoming tenants are covered by the agreement; also their liabilities as to mode of cultivation. I have had no case where the outgoing tenant has failed to obtain compensation for any improvement. I know of no instance where compensation has been given for the general improved condition of a holding. There is no right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interest in their holdings to any solvent tenant to whom the landlord shall not have any reasonable objection; it would create competition and would result in unfair rents. As to the system of the sale of sheep on upland farms, the sheep are first offered to the incoming tenant by valuation. I have never had a claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act, so that I have no experience on that subject. As to game preserving, the rabbits cannot be preserved except on land in the occupation of the owner. Other game is moderately preserved. The tenants generally avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act. There have been isolated cases of damage to crops by game which are always compensated by arrangement. Tenants are not expected to beat covers. I cannot say that game preserving affects cultivation or the relations between landlord and tenant, the labourers, or the public generally. I have no information as to offences under the game laws. There has been very little attention paid I think in the district to fruit culture, horticulture or forestry, and very little to poultry farming. I think poultry keeping might be a source of much more profit if more attention was paid to it. As to bee-keeping, there has been none. These are sources of very little profit, but possibly they might be improved if they would give attention to them. Instruction has been given in the market towns in butter and cheese making. There have been no field experiments or experiments in other agricultural subjects. As to railway rates, there are excellent market towns where most of the produce is disposed of within reach by road without much recourse to the use of railways. I know of no instance where profits or risks are shared by the landlord and tenant. Landlords usually share the loss, but not the profit. There is no co-operation amongst farmers for purchasing or analysing farm stuffs for purposes of production in butter factories or selling produce. Farmers insure their buildings, and sometimes the stock. There is no combination of any kind in the nature of a trade union either among landlords, farmers, or labourers. So far as I am aware the farmers avail themselves to a very small extent of benefit societies, but the labourers do to a fair extent. I have no knowledge as to whether life assurance societies or other provident institutions are used by them. There are no proprietor farmers in the parish. I know of no tenant farmers, who have bought either their own or other holdings for their own occupation in this district. On the smaller farms the farmers and their wives do such work as is necessary to a peasant life, and I am glad to say that the majority of the tenants do take personal part in the work of the farm, and work hard. Children sometimes work at home, but I have no information as to their arrangements. I have no information as to what provision is made for them by their parents on marriage or independent settlement in life. As to the state of cottage accommodation it is much about the same as the past; they are ample for the requirements of thorough cultivation; they are chiefly dispersed on the farms, and their condition and construction are good. Every cottage has a garden. The tenure varies according to circumstances. The tenants of cottages on farms are usually restricted to work on those farms.

In my opinion the trade depression began in 1879. Mr. Biddulph is and always has been on good terms with his tenants. He is anxious at all times (as the large expenditure on the estate will prove) to do anything so far as practicable to help his tenants by doing such improvements, and giving them such facilities as will be of permanent value to them, being in his opinion the best way to help them to fight the depression.

As to cases on the estate of families having held the same farms for generations. There are 10 cases of one member of a family following another, there is one farm (Macs-gwyn) now tenanted by a family who have been on the estate about 200 years. One (Penypark) until lately occupied by a family for about 200 years. When the last tenant died his sons could not agree, and did not go on with the farm. One (Cherry Orchard) until a few years ago occupied by a family for about 200 years, when they died out. One (Tyissa) now occupied by a tenant who has held it for about 25 years, and succeeded a family who has been on the estate nearly 200 years. One (Plas-offa) was held for about 40 years by one tenant, who fixed his son in another farm on the estate. One (Penybryn) still held by a tenant who has been on the farm about 35 years. One (Caeaugwynion) present occupier has held the farm about 20 years, having succeeded a tenant who held it for about 45 years and retired and still lives in the neighbourhood. One (Chirk Green) present occupier has held for upwards of 20 years, succeeded his father who held it for some years, and is still prosperous.

I have a table of the dates of the tenancies.

55,101 Will you put that in?—Yes. (Handed.) I may say the average tenancy is 18 years :—

1, 200 years.	1, 21 years.	1, 12 years.
1, 40 "	2, 20 "	2, 11 "
2, 35 "	1, 19 "	1, 7 "
1, 32 "	1, 17 "	1, 6 "
2, 29 "	1, 16 "	2, 4 "
1, 28 "	1, 15 "	2, 2 "
4, 25 "	1, 14 "	1, 1 year.
1, 23 "	2, 13 "

I think these figures will prove the fact that leases are not necessary on this estate, and also that there is a very considerable goodwill between landlord and tenant.

55,102. These figures that you have handed up do not seem to agree with the statement I have?—I should say it is brought up to a later date, to the end of 1893; that accounts for the difference.

Lord Kenyon.

55,103. You said the average tenancy was 18 years. Do you mean the average life of the tenant?—No, the average holding.

55,104. Of the whole family?—No, on the estate generally.

55,105. Taking one man as tenant?—No, the average number of years that the tenants of these 34 farms have been in occupation.

55,106. For one life or for more, do you mean?—Oh, for more, of course.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,107. You take the family as the tenant?—Exactly.

Lord Kenyon.

55,108. You said something about the custom of the country. Do you think there is any improvement to be made in that custom?—No, I think not. It seems to work very well. We have never had the slightest difficulty.

55,109. Have you had any cases under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, none.

55,110. In your agreements do you permit sales of straw and hay?—No, it is not permitted, but, as a rule, it is overlooked.

55,111. Do you permit that by private agreement?—Yes, by private agreement sometimes, or in the case of a good tenant we do not interfere with them if the general condition of the farm is good.

55,112. You have never had any complaints of that clause being put in your agreements?—Never.

55,113. I did not quite catch what you said with regard to tenant right. You said it would increase competition?—Yes, increase competition. It would put a false rent upon a farm.

55,114. Do I understand you to say that you would wink rather at tenant right. Would you repeat what you said?—I said there is no tenant right recognised as to tenants disposing of their interest in their holding.

55,115. Then you went on to add something?—I went on to say that it would create competition, resulting in unfair rents.

55,116. I beg your pardon. I thought I caught something more. You say the rates have a tendency to decrease?—Yes, the rates of the parish have decreased.

55,117. Have you any figures which will show that?—I have taken out the figures of the poor rates since 1853, and I find that in 1853 they were 1s. 4d. in the pound; in 1863 1s. 5d. in the pound; in 1873 1s. 6d. in the pound; in 1883 1s. 5d., and in 1893 10d. in the pound, and the highway rates have decreased in the same ratio.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,118. Has this estate been in the possession of the Biddulph family for some years?—Yes, for a great many years.

55,119. Is Mr. Richard Myddelton Biddulph lord of the manor of Chirk?—He is lord of the manor of Chirk.

55,120. There have been no courts held?—There have been no courts held in the manor.

55,121. Do you say that that has been the case within the memory of man, or do you mean in your own time?—Within my recollection.

55,122. Can you give us any documents by means of which we could see the rental of these 34 farms at the beginning of the century, say in 1815?—No, I have not prepared any details going back as far as that.

55,123. Nor in the forties?—No.

55,124. Do you say that the rents have not been increased within the last 40 years?—I speak from the year 1875.

55,125. Then you are not able to give us any information as to whether, comparing them with the middle of the century or the beginning of the century, rents have gone up or down?—No, I have not gone back as far as that.

55,126. With regard to clause 3 in the agreement which you have handed in, I see that the tenant has to repair, and is allowed proper timber, rough wood, and stakes in the rough, for the purpose, "but the carriage of such materials to be at the tenant's expense." Is there any complaint on the part of the tenants with regard to the carriage under that clause?—I never heard of any. They all seem willing to do it.

55,127. Are all the buildings in a proper condition now?—Yes, they are all in a very fair condition now.

55,128. Very fair?—Yes; everything that is necessary.

55,129. Are they in as good a condition as buildings in the neighbourhood generally?—Yes, better than they are generally.

55,130. I see that in clause 10 in the agreement there is a reference to the custom of the country. Would you mind telling us what the custom of the country is—what construction you place upon that term. I will tell you what is in my mind; in some of the books, say Dixon's Law of the Farm, the customs of some of the counties are given. I only wanted to verify from you what is there stated?—As to tenants' compensation upon outgoing?

55,131. That is exactly what I am seeking from you. You mentioned the words "custom of the country," and I want to know what is understood by the words "custom of the country" in this part of Wales?—The incoming tenant can enter upon the land any time after Michaelmas for cultivation; the outgoing tenant holds the house and boozy pasture until the 1st of May; the outgoing tenants are compensated according to a schedule which we generally attach to the agreement, which is fixed upon by the Shropshire Chamber of Agriculture. I would like to hand in a schedule of that compensation, as perhaps that is what you require. (The schedule was handed in.)

55,132. Is that the schedule approved by the Central Chamber?—That is the schedule approved by the Shropshire Chamber, which we attach to the agreement.

55,133. In your experience there have been no instances of any harm arising upon this estate under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?—None, whatever.

55,134. Has your attention been directed to that Act at all; have you had to consider it in reference to any other estate or any other property?—No, not at all.

55,135. Then it is not much use my asking you whether you think the Act can be improved or not?—No. It is practically a dead letter. I know very little about it. We have no cases under it.

55,136. With regard to clause 12—the game clause—in your recollection has the operation of that clause given rise to any difficulty at any time?—Never to any difficulty.

55,137. Farmers have never expressed a wish that they should have some right in the game?—I never heard of it. They are always pleased to find whatever game they can for the landlord.

55,138. With regard to clause 14, the insurance clause, is that a usual clause, by which the obligation of insuring the farm buildings is upon the tenant?—It is always usual.

55,139. In Denbighshire you think it is always the case?—I believe it so.

55,140. Have the farmers found any difficulty in paying their rents, so far as you know, during the last few years?—No; they pay them very well.

55,141. Then you do not think that the depression has been much felt in Denbighshire?—Well, you see, they have been met by the landlord to a very great extent. The depression, no doubt, has been felt.

55,142. Farmers have not, I suppose, been making money of recent years. They have not been saving money?—That I cannot say. They will be better able to answer that question themselves.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

55,143. Just going back to the game clause, is any of the shooting let by the owner?—Sometimes.

55,144. Has that given rise to any complaint from the tenants?—I may say that the shooting has never been let on the farms.

55,145. What do you mean then by saying it has been let?—The cover shooting is let sometimes.

55,146. Then no complaint from a tenant has reached you in reference to the conduct of any lessee?—Never.

55,147. I was asking about the condition of the farmers; do you think they have been saving money lately?—It is impossible for me to tell.

55,148. I suppose you mix with them a good deal, do you not?—Yes; but still one does not get to know their private means.

55,149. You do not talk to farmers about their position and financial affairs?—No, it is not part of my business to do so.

55,150. You are on friendly terms with them, I suppose?—Certainly—the best, I believe.

55,151. You do not have any conversations with them in reference to their business?—Not in reference to whether they are saving money or not.

55,152. With regard to the supply of labour, is the supply of labour in this neighbourhood and on this estate as great as it formerly was?—It is quite sufficient. There is never any difficulty.

55,153. Do most of the labourers live in cottages which they rent from different people, or are they housed and boarded by the farmers?—The labourers live partly in cottages, and are partly boarded by the farmers in the house.

55,154. What is the general rate of wages of a labourer living in a cottage of his own?—I am not prepared to go into the details of that question.

55,155. What is the rate of wages of labourers living in the farmhouse?—About 15s. to 18s.—it varies.

55,156. Is that higher than when you first knew this district?—Yes, it is; and I understand it is higher considerably than what it used to be.

55,157. Has the price of stock come down within your recollection during the time of your connexion with this estate?—I am not prepared with details as to that matter.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,158. You say that you are well acquainted with all the tenants on the estate?—Very well acquainted with them all.

55,159. Generally the applicants for the farms come from the surrounding neighbourhood; they do not come from other counties outside, do they?—Well, occasionally; not often.

55,160. Then, as a rule, you know what their religion and politics are when they come to apply for farms, and you do not require to ask them any questions?—I do not bother my head about it.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. W. PARKER.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,161. One question more. Is there any Welsh spoken on this estate?—Yes, there is Welsh spoken; but all the tenants know English perfectly well.

55,162. For their own purposes among themselves some of the tenants do speak Welsh?—Not as a rule.

55,163. But some do?—Some do.

Lord Kenyon.

55,164. It is rather a case of some can and some do, is it not?—Some can and some do.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,165. Have you any rule on the estate as to the amount of capital required on different farms upon taking possession of a farm?—No, there is no rule.

55,166. As to how much per acre, I mean?—No. One has a pretty good idea, though, as to whether the capital is sufficient.

55,167. You speak of wiping out some arrears. What has been the cause of those arrears?—I suppose they could not pay at the time by reason of the depression. There is no doubt about that.

55,168. Is not the land tax generally considered to be a landlord's tax. I see the tenants on your estate pay it?—Yes, the tenants pay it, and always have done so.

55,169. Then, again, you spoke of some farms which you have put into a higher state of cultivation. Why should you do so?—Because they have been partially neglected.

55,170. You could not get a tenant to take them?—No, it was not that. It was considered better to put them into a higher state of cultivation, and to improve them generally before letting them.

55,171. You have had some dairy lectures in the neighbourhood, have you not?—Yes, occasionally.

55,172. Have you had any lectures on poultry farming?—None.

55,173. Do you not think it would be a good thing?—Possibly it might.

55,174. Do you think that farmers, as a rule, know much about poultry farming?—Some do and some do not.

55,175. How do you account for the rates having decreased so much. We have found that in other parts the rates have increased?—I do not know whether I can say how it is.

55,176. Have you less poor in the neighbourhood?—Yes, I should say so.

55,177. Have you done away with the turnpike gates?—Yes, but our roads are very economically managed—uncommonly so, and they are in very good order.

55,178. Do you employ any keeper on the estate?—Yes.

55,179. Have you a home farm attached to this estate?—Nothing worth speaking of.

55,180. Then you are not in a position to say whether the abatements given to the tenants are sufficient to meet the present depression?—I have always considered they were.

55,181. But you cannot practically say?—No. It is from my general knowledge, as I am always amongst the farmers, and I know pretty well what is what.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,182. You say that you have received a special training for the office of agent; does that apply to office work alone?—Every branch of estate management.

55,183. And you have experience of farming?—Yes.

55,184. And know the value of land?—Yes.

55,185. You said that, in resuming the occupation of a field or plot out of a holding for the sake of planting, &c., compensation by arrangement is always given. Could you supply the Commission with any instances where compensation has been given?—I do not know that we ever have planted any ground in that way.

55,186. No, but there is an assumption in the reply which I have here, that ground has been planted?—Not for planting.

55,187. For any other purpose?—Yes.

55,188. What?—Railways and works of different descriptions.

55,189. In those cases compensation has been given?—Yes, always given.

55,190. And the rent reduced?—Yes.

55,191. Has any timber cutting taken place on the estate?—Yes, from time to time.

55,192. Has any damage been done?—Sometimes—occasionally—not often.

55,193. Has any compensation been given?—Always.

55,194. Have you any instance?—Yes, I can give you instances.

55,195. Will you supply them?—Yes.

The witness handed in the following statement:—

1885, December 12th.—William Williams, Werntower Farm. Damage done by Mr. Nuttall's teams in drawing out trees from paddock in front of house	1	10	0

1892, March.—John Hughes Pentre Farm. Damage done by Mr. Williams' teams in drawing out trees	2	0	0

28 August 1894.]

Mr. W. PARKER.

55,196. I suppose the tenants make up the gaps after timber cutting?—No, we make them up ourselves.

55,197. You say the usual rent of upland farms is from 12s. to 20s. an acre. Does that include mountain land?—There is very little mountain land—none worth speaking of.

55,198. Where would this land worth 35s. an acre lie?—In the lower part of the parish.

55,199. The Chirk parish?—The Chirk parish.

55,200. It would not be accommodation land?—No. These are all farms.

55,201. I suppose that would be about as good land as you would get in the county?—Yes, it is very good land.

Mr. Seebohm.

55,202. Arable or pasture?—Mixed.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,203. You say that, in accepting a tenant, proof of sufficient capital has to be produced. Do you ask what amount of capital the man has?—Not exactly. One finds out in different ways.

55,204. What capital would you consider sufficient. How much per acre would be necessary, do you think, for a man to stock a mixed farm?—You cannot lay down any rule; it varies.

55,205. Can you give me somewhere near it?—It varies considerably. I would not like to say.

55,206. You will not hazard an opinion?—You cannot lay down any rule.

55,207. In 1875 you say the rents of some of the farms were increased, but since then they have been considerably reduced. Have they been reduced to the standard of the years previous to 1875?—Considerably lower.

55,208. Lower than the rental before they were advanced?—Lower than the rental before 1875.

55,209. Have you made abatements on those reductions as well?—Yes.

55,210. Were the farms generally advanced in 1875?—No, not generally—in some cases only.

55,211. Was there a revaluation of the whole estate made?—A partial revaluation.

Mr. Seebohm.

55,212. You stated, I think, that no permanent improvements were made by the tenants?—Never.

55,213. Suppose that a new dairy house was required to be built upon a farm, what sort of arrangement would you make; would the landlord do the whole of it?—Entirely.

55,214. And there would be no haulage?—He would do the whole, haulage excepted.

55,215. How do you deal with the haulage. Supposing that a tenant died very soon after executing a considerable amount of haulage, how would you meet that?—He would be fairly dealt with, no doubt.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

55,216. I mean would he receive any compensation for it under the custom of the country?—No, not under the custom of the country.

55,217. You mentioned a schedule which is approved by the Chamber of Agriculture did you not?—Yes.

55,218. Would that apply to haulage at all?—No, it does not apply to haulage at all.

55,219. There is no item as regards haulage?—No.

55,220. Do you think it is right and just that there should be no mention of that?—I do not think it is necessary. We should have no difficulty with regard to arranging it.

55,221. But supposing that your estate was sold to a new purchaser, would the rights of the man who had just done the haulage be sufficient to protect him?—Possibly there might be some arrangement in that way.

55,222. You mean that under the existing custom he would not be protected, and he would be in fact at the mercy of the purchaser?—Yes, I suppose he would in such a case as that.

55,223. With regard to your farms they are mostly mixed, I think you said?—Yes, mixed.

55,224. Is there much difference made in the custom of the country as regards the rights of the pasture farms and arable farms?—No, the farms as a rule are much about the same.

55,225. Would you say that in a pasture country a different set of rules would be required as to the outgoing tenant and the incoming tenant as compared with arable farms?—Possibly, but I do not go outside this estate.

55,226. What was the Chamber of Agriculture which made this schedule. Was it a local chamber?—A local chamber—chiefly farmers.

55,227. Of the county?—Yes.

55,228. Of the whole county?—The whole county.

55,229. Was it considered that that was justly done?—Yes, I believe so. I have always understood so.

55,230. It commanded public consent?—Certainly.

55,231. And the farmers were represented, I presume, when it was drawn up?—Yes.

55,232. Does it differ much from other schedules in other districts?—It does differ perhaps in some instances, but there is no material difference.

55,233. Has nearly every district in this part of the world its own schedule which is settled by its Chamber of Agriculture, or is there a general schedule?—Yes, I think it is usual in most districts.

55,234. Do you consider that a certain amount of elasticity is necessary in a schedule. Do you consider that it is best for the schedule under the Agricultural Holdings Act to be cut and dried for the whole of the country, or do you think that does not meet the requirements for each particular district?—I believe it does not. It is always considered that the schedules which are used instead are more satisfactory.

55,235. Do you think that the Chambers of Agriculture in the different districts would be

28 August 1894.]

Mr. W. PARKER.

the right bodies to fix what the custom of the country was, or could you suggest any better tribunal for that purpose?—No, I should think that they are the best. They are the farmers' representatives and the landlords' representatives.

55,236. Supposing it were necessary, or thought desirable to make a change in this schedule, would there be any practical difficulty. Supposing, for instance, with regard to haulage, it was desired in this district that the haulage should be dealt with in a particular way, would there be any practical difficulty in that being included in the local schedules?—I should say not. I do not think it is necessary myself.

55,237. Would you approve, for instance, of such a suggestion as this, that if a local schedule was formed which met the justice of the case in a particular district it should in some way or other acquire the sanction of the law of the land, and be fixed bindingly upon landlord and tenant?—It might be, but I do not think that it is a grievance at the present time. I never heard of it being so.

55,238. Have you had any sales of estates in this district?—No, not in this immediate neighbourhood.

55,239. Not recently?—No.

Mr. Grove.

55,240. You say that you make abatements, and that you give notice of the abatements?—Yes.

55,241. What length of notice do you give?—It varies—about five or six weeks, probably, or a couple of months.

55,242. Do you think there is sufficient labour upon the land generally speaking?—Yes, I think so, as a rule.

55,243. And sufficient cottage accommodation for the necessary labourers?—Yes. I am speaking now of this estate only.

55,244. You think that applies to your estate?—Yes.

55,245. Do you think that it applies generally speaking to the district, so far as you know?—I am not prepared to say.

55,246. You said, I think, no waste land is being reclaimed?—There is none on the estate.

55,247. There is none with you?—No.

55,248. Are there any large pieces of waste land that you know of that have been reclaimed, or that could be reclaimed?—I am not prepared with any evidence as to outsiders.

55,249. The poor rate, you say, was 1s. 4d. in 1853, and it is now 10d. in 1893. Have you the total rateable value of the union that it is based upon?—No, I have not.

55,250. You have nothing but the rate?—That is so.

55,251. Have there been any large industrial operations in that particular union?—Yes, there have.

55,252. That would increase the rateable value?—That would increase the rateable value, and diminish the rate.

Mr. Grove—continued.

55,253. So that the chances are, that although the rate is less, the expenditure of the union may be more?—Possibly it may be, but I am not prepared with the figures.

55,254. Exactly. Have there been any sales of property recently, or within the last few years within your district?—None with which I have been connected, or that I know anything about.

55,255. If there had been sales, you would not know the details of them?—No.

55,256. But, as a matter of fact, have there been any large changes of property in the district lately?—Not to my knowledge.

55,257. You say the railways are not much used. Is it because they are placed inconveniently for the district?—No, not at all. I mean it is more convenient to use the roads.

55,258. But why are the railways not used. Are the rates considered too high. I mean do you think that the farmers prefer to keep away from the railway and use horses because of the charges of the railway?—Oh no. I seldom hear them complained about.

Sir John Llewelyn.

55,259. Has this scale of allowances proved satisfactory?—Always.

55,260. During 10 years' experience?—Yes.

55,261. It has not been much altered?—It has not been much altered.

55,262. Has it been altered at all?—Slightly I believe; not to any great extent.

Lord Kenyon.

55,263. You have in this country a light railway, I think?—We have, my Lord.

55,264. Do you find it satisfactory?—Oh, yes.

55,265. We have heard a good deal in other parts of the world, in Cardiganshire particularly, of applications for light railways. Do you think, from your experience of them in this neighbourhood, that they are good things?—There is no doubt about it.

55,266. Do the farmers use them at all for carrying their produce?—Yes, but not to any very great extent. It is more a mineral line, and not much used for other things.

55,267. It runs by the side of the highway?—Yes.

55,268. Does it frighten horses?—Not that I know of. I do not think so.

55,269. It has never been found to be an inconvenience?—It has never been found to be an inconvenience.

55,270. It was a private enterprise?—Yes.

Chairman.

55,271. I want to ask you one question. You told us that the expenditure on the estate was 8,026l. between 1880 and 1893. That is so, is it not?—Yes.

55,272. Will you kindly refer to your figures again?—Yes—8,026l.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. W. PARKER.

55,273. Then the permanent reductions were 3,429*l.*, is that right?—Yes, those are the figures.

55,274. And the abatements, that is to say, temporary abatements—?—Yes, temporary abatements—remissions in my time.

55,275. Temporary abatements, which, if things went better, would not be given next year?—No, they are only given from time to time to meet the depression.

55,276. They amounted to 6,240*l.*?—Yes, those are the figures.

55,277. Then of course you take out the expenditure, because naturally the estate must be kept up, or else it would bring in nothing; so that, taking out that 8,026*l.*, all that the landlord of this estate, so far as I can see, has lost is in permanent reductions, and in abatements, which come to 9,670*l.* added together—say 10,000*l.*?—Yes, those are about the figures.

55,278. In round numbers put on 400*l.* more, and it makes 10,000*l.* The estate brings in 5,700*l.* annually?—Yes. The farms.

55,279. From 1880 to 1893, in 13 years, the landlord has received from his estate 70,000*l.*?—Yes.

55,280. Then all that he has given back is 3,426*l.* in permanent reductions on the 70,000*l.*?—Yes.

55,281. And in abatements 6,240*l.* Then out of the 70,000*l.* practically the landlord has only lost in these very bad times 10,000*l.*?—Yes, but he has spent a good deal on improvements and repairs of one kind and another.

55,282. But you must put those on one side?—But a good deal of those are not necessary.

55,283. Well, of course if you do unnecessary improvements, that is your own business?—They are not absolutely necessary, I mean to say the landlord is not obliged to do them.

55,284. But the landlord keeps up his estate in a proper way, and, of course, if he does unnecessary improvements, that is his own lookout?—I do not say that the improvements are unnecessary.

55,285. You do not mean that?—But I say there were very considerable improvements made, which he was not obliged to spend money upon, perhaps.

55,286. No man is compelled to make improvements?—I mean beyond keeping it in repair.

55,287. There is no compulsion in improving the estate at all. He spent in 13 years, 8,026*l.* Then he has received from this estate 70,000*l.*, and in abatements and permanent reductions, he has returned 10,000*l.* Is not that so?—Yes.

55,288. In these bad times, he has received out of 70,000*l.*, 60,000*l.* Do you not make that out to be so?—Yes, that is about it, but he might have given them a larger percentage in remissions, and spent less on improvements on the buildings and so on.

55,289. I do not speak of what he might have done, or what he might not have done; I only speak of what he has done?—Yes. Those figures I gave you, are correct, they are the actual figures.

55,290. Then, we can take it from you that out of 70,000*l.* rental on the Chirk estate, 60,000*l.* has been received in 13 years, and 10,000*l.* has been given back?—Yes, in round figures.

55,291. You told us that there was 23 per cent. diminution of the rental, but then you put in the improvements and reductions?—The improvements and reductions amount to 22 per cent.

55,292. But the reductions and abatements only come to 10,000*l.* in 13 years, on 70,000*l.* rental?—Yes, that is about 14 per cent.

55,293. There is 14 per cent. reduction, and all the rest was spent on the improvement?—Exactly.

Lord Kenyon.

55,294. Would you say that this country has suffered as much from bad times as others?—No, I should say not. I should say that we are better off than a great many parts.

55,295. 14 per cent, you think, would be sufficient to meet the depression?—Yes, I think it is a very liberal allowance.

55,296. So far as I gather from you, Mr. Biddulph has spent more than was absolutely necessary to keep the property in repair?—Yes, exactly.

55,297. He likes to see his estate in rather better condition than others about?—Exactly.

55,298. He carries it on, not as a speculation?—Not as a speculation.

55,299. He does not want to get as much as he can out of the estate?—No.

55,300. But to have it in good order?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

55,301. Is it a wheat country?—Not to a very great extent.

55,302. That would be a reason, perhaps, why there has not been the usual amount of depression?—Yes, that helps.

55,303. With regard to these permanent improvements that have been made, you would deduct them, would you not, from the gross rental, in order to get the net rental. In deducting the 8,000*l.* odd, which you did before, that was in order to get the net rental, and it would reduce the net rental to 62,000*l.*, instead of 70,000*l.* in 10 years, would it not?—I do not quite understand you.

55,304. I was merely trying to get at what you meant by deducting the 8,000*l.* which you have spoken of that was spent upon repairs and improvements?—I wanted to show what the landlord was out of pocket really.

55,305. But his net rental was not 70,000*l.*, but 62,000*l.*, so that the 8,000*l.* odd was what he gave, plus the 10,000*l.* to his tenants?—Yes.

Chairman.

55,306. The following questions are handed in by Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones:—"You say that all "the farm houses and buildings on the estate are in a good condition?"—Yes.

55,307. "What about the house at Wern Tower. Is not this house in a deplorable condition, or have you lately repaired it?"—The late storms did considerable damage; but the repairs have been done. We had a great storm in the early part of the year, which did very considerable damage all over the property.

Lord Kenyon.

55,308. That was a storm in February?—In February; it did very considerable damage all through the estate.

Chairman.

55,309. That house has been repaired?—It has been repaired.

55,310. "Did the wall of the cowhouse fall down lately." I suppose the cowhouse was in the back part?—It did fall down some two years ago.

55,311. And it was repaired?—It was repaired; it was put up again immediately.

55,312. What state was the house in before the storm?—At Wern Tower.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

55,313. Yes?—It was in a fair state; it was an old house of course.

55,314. And as to the building before the wall fell?—Well, of course it must have been getting a little bit bad. The wall went down, and it was built up again.

Lord Kenyon.

55,315. Can you make any estimate of what that storm cost the estate?—No, I made no estimate; but it was a very considerable amount.

55,316. 300*l* or 400*l*?—Fully.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,317. Do I understand you to say that the house at Wern Tower was in a bad state before the storm damaged it?—Not at all; it is rather a bleak spot.

Chairman.

55,318. The following question is put by Mr. J. E. Vincent: "Were there not some good years in the period from 1880 to 1893?"—Yes, there were; times did improve.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. RICHARD EDWARDS called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

55,319. This is your evidence?—Yes.

55,320. You wrote it in Welsh?—Yes.

55,321. And it has been translated to you, and is accurate?—Oh, yes; quite.

[The following statement of the witness was read:—]

The evidence of Richard Edwards, tenant of Tyntwll, in the parish of Llanarmon Dyffryn Ceiriog, in the county of Denbigh, on the estate of Colonel W. Cornwallis West, Ruthin Castle.

The Relation between Landlord and Tenant.—I am 74 years of age, and have been a tenant of Colonel West, his brother, father and grandfather. My family have been living in Tyntwll for about 150 years. I have never heard any of my family mention, nor within my own memory have I known that any one has been compelled to leave his farm against his will. I believe that it is the desire of Colonel West that his tenants should be comfortable. He has at all times shown every sympathy towards them, and every desire for their success, and he is building and repairing on his estate as quickly as can be reasonably expected, considering the circumstances and the exposed nature of the country. Buildings will not last long in this part of the country, as the weather is so stormy. Notwithstanding this, the work might have been done earlier in the year.

Game.—In the part of the parish where I live we are not troubled with game, but I cannot say how it is in the part nearest the plantations. Before the passing of the Ground Game Act, 1880, Colonel West used to give his tenants permission to kill rabbits during two months of every year, and after the Act was passed it was adopted on the estate without delay, and we are under it to-day. Also when the Agricultural Holdings Act was passed Colonel West did not, although he had the power to do so, contract himself out of the Act, but I do not know of a single landowner of any importance in the surrounding neighbourhood who has done the same.

Rent.—As a rule the amount of rent is fixed by valuation, and I remember four different valuations during my tenancy. The first was that made by Mr. Aytes about 45 years ago. The probability is that that valuation was not adopted, inasmuch as an advance of 1*s.* 6*d.* in the pound was made on all without distinction. The second was the valuation made by Mr. Hill, about 38 or 40 years ago. After Mr. Hill's valuation all the farms remained unlet for 18 months, and during that period Mr. Hill worked a slate quarry at Blaen-y-cwm, at the upper end of the valley. He was therefore in the habit of travelling backwards and forwards along the valley during different periods of the year. He told me himself, during that period, that he was glad the farms were not let at his valuation, that he had seen the country during different seasons of the year, had noticed the great length of the winter, and also the two recent harvests, and that in consequence he had altered all his figures on all the farms. The third valuation was that of Mr. Jenkins, made about the year 1873. Mr. Jenkins came from the Vale of Clwyd, and I consider a person from a place like that totally unfit to value land in a country like ours. I have never in my life seen but few years together when the tenants were able to pay on this valuation, and I have no doubt whatever that his valuation has done harm to the estate, and to the circumstances of the tenants. In the course of a few years after this all the tenants made an appeal in writing to Colonel West for an abatement of 10 per cent. in their rents. This appeal was signed by all the tenants, and forwarded to Colonel West through an agent in Oswestry. After waiting long for a reply to this petition, I wrote a letter to Colonel West personally, to the same effect, and for a still larger abatement in the rent of one farm, as it was exceptionally high. An immediate reply was received, granting a general abatement of 10 per cent., and in the case of the above-mentioned farm an abatement of 18 per cent. This abatement was granted for some time. One of the tenants asked permission to appoint a valuer to meet the one appointed by Colonel West, for the purpose of valuing his farm. This was granted, and, as the tenants were unwilling to pay the old rent, Colonel West sent his own valuer, Mr. Williams Middleton, to value the remainder of the farms. Mr. Williams understood the nature and circumstances of the neighbourhood, having himself held a farm there. When at the office I asked to be allowed to see his valuation, but I was refused, although the copy was lying on the table before me at the time. Farming has become considerably worse since then, wages have increased, and we have been under the necessity of asking several times for an abatement of 10 per cent., which has been granted.

Politics.—The tenants on this estate have, as far as I can remember, enjoyed absolute political and religious freedom so far as the landlord is concerned.

The Land and the Church.—During the period over which my memory extends the matter which has been the source of the greatest discontent amongst us as tenants has been the influence exercised by the clergy of the Establishment over the agents of the estate. I am of opinion that this has been a disadvantage to us at the time when the alteration was made in the manner of collecting the tithe. According to the new method of collecting the tithe the average annual value of the tithe is calculated at 220*l.*, but we went around and collected all the several amounts of the tithe in the parish but failed to get them to more than about 180*l.*, and I attribute this to the influence of the clergyman upon the estate agent at that time. I never remember the tithe being collected in kind from Tyntwll, but I was in the habit of paying its value in cash, with the exception of the eggs which were collected at Easter. Its annual value on the average of a few years amounted to about 8*l.* or 9*l.*, but the first payments under the new system of collection amounted to nearly 13*l.* a year. In the adjoining farm, Blaen-y-cwm, no tithe was chargeable under the old system, but under the present it is subject to a tithe of 2*l.*

Notices to Quit.—Shortly after this the clergyman and the estate agents resolved to banish the Nonconformists from the country, and several of the tenants at this time received notices to quit their holdings, and among them one of the tenants of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn. These tenants failed entirely to get their farms, although they applied for them repeatedly, while their farms were constantly walked over by intending applicants. At this crisis they were urged to lay their case before Mr. Williams, chief solicitor to the late Mr. F. West, and two friends waited upon him for that purpose. Mr. Williams called the agent, the late Mr. Smith, there, and after hearing all the particulars he commanded him that night to send to all the tenants authorising them to proceed with the cultivation of their farms, at the same time warning the agent that if ever he interfered with the tenants in that manner again it would be reported to Mr. West, and that he (Mr. Smith) would know the consequences. In the meantime Sir Watkin's tenant had completely failed to get his farm back, which in fact had actually been let to another. At this juncture he was induced by a friend, Mr. David Williams, Pentrevern (father to Mr. Williams, Middleton, the person who had made the last valuation of Mr. West's estate), to go to Wynnstay to see Sir Watkin personally. This he did, while Mr. Williams accompanied him there. They met with a warm reception from Sir Watkin, and the tenant left with a command to proceed with the cultivation of his land, also a letter to the agent, the late Mr. Croxon. This latter gentleman did not retain the agency long after this occurrence.

Education.—Another instance of the same influence is to be found in the dissensions which have taken place in this parish in connexion with the matter of education. A great many years ago my father sold a place called Maengwyn to Mr. Wilson Jones, who was then owner of a few farms in the neighbourhood, and in the bargain he obtained a plot of land on lease for the purpose of erecting a plate to preach the Gospel, and to keep a day and Sunday school. The building was erected entirely through the voluntary offerings of the Nonconformists, while the monthly meeting of the Calvinistic Methodists for East Merioneth contributed 60*l.* towards the undertaking. The building was used for preaching and for holding a Sunday school on the Sabbath, and a day school on week days. During the lifetime of the then rector, the Rev. Mr. Williams, perfect tranquility prevailed. At his death, however, he was succeeded by the Rev. Morgan Davies. Sometime after his advent to this parish, the Rev. Morgan Davies and Mr. Smith, agent to the late Mr. West, discovered that the Nonconformist friends had neglected to obtain a proper lease on the place. After a great deal of agitation, it was ultimately taken from the Nonconformists, and transferred to the National Society, and a national school held in it. (I ought to have mentioned that the notices to quit previously referred to had been given the year after this event had occurred.) However, as the children who attended the day school were compelled to attend church on Sunday, and to learn the Church catechism in school, the parents kept the children at home, and the school had, therefore, to be closed. During this period the building went out of repair. After the death of the Rev. Morgan Davies, he was succeeded by the Rev. David Davies. On the condition that the school should be perfectly free and unsectarian, he prevailed upon the parishioners to repair the building. This was done, and, if I remember rightly, the whole cost, amounting to about 15*l.*, was contributed by the parishioners. For some time all went on smoothly, but another attempt was made to compel the children to attend church on Sunday, and to learn the Church catechism. The result was that the children were again kept home, and the school was closed a second time. About this time the late Mr. West visited the neighbourhood, and observing that his gamekeeper's children (Mr. Daniel Edwards) were at home, he inquired the reason. In reply, the history connected with the school was related to him. In reply, Mr. West said that the people must have their liberty, but he was afraid that he had allowed the school to go too far out of his hands to enable him to compel the rector to grant this liberty, but if he, the rector, refused, he, Mr. West, could build another school, and would do so. He requested Mr. Edwards to go around the neighbourhood on the following day to solicit promises, and he undertook to pay the salary of the teacher. The end of this was that the rector promised to grant the liberty sought, and the school was opened. In course of time, the rector quarrelled with the schoolmaster, because the latter refused to bring the children to church, and as a result, the schoolmaster left the church and came to chapel. After this, a school was held by the parishioners in one or other of the chapels just according to how they were able to obtain teachers. When the British and Foreign School Society was established an application was made to Sir Hugh Owen for assistance from that society, and in reply a copy of the minutes of the Committee of Council on Education was received (1843-44). This report shows that a school already existed in Llanarmon, and that the dimensions of the buildings were 32 x 45 feet, with a court in front, that the National Society had made a grant of 10*l.* towards it, and the Government 20*l.* As I stated before, the parishioners had collected a sufficient sum to defray the expenses of repairing and furnishing the schoolroom, so that this was the first intimation the parishioners had received that either the National Society or the Government had contributed anything towards the school. Moreover, the building remains to this day, and only measures 28 x 25 feet. The attention of the Education Department was called to the matter, and at the same time a detailed statement of accounts in relation to the repair and furnishing of the rooms, together with a list of the subscriptions from the parishioners. Correspondence also took place between the Department and the Rev. David Davies, who by this time had removed to Llanfair Caereinion. He supplied the Department with some accounts, and stated that he had destroyed the whole of his papers on leaving, that he had by this time become blind, and was therefore unable to supply them with any more information. This concluded the transaction.

Remedies.—Agriculture has arrived at a very low ebb, and some succour must speedily come. I believe that a land court would do good, but I would wish that freedom should be extended to the landlord and tenant to come to terms before bringing their case into the court, and that the court shall not be compulsory on any one, or I am of opinion that it will do away with that sympathy which ought to exist between landlord and tenant. Rating ought to be equalised in such a manner that instead of land having to pay the whole burden, as at present, other kinds of property such as trade, &c., should also bear a portion. I believe that a duty put upon foreign produce would harm the farmer, more especially the Welsh farmer, for instance, if a duty were put upon wheat, it would increase its cost to us, we would have to purchase it, as in the case of two out of every three harvests our home-grown wheat would be damaged by the frost before it could be harvested, and therefore would be unfit for our working men to eat.

Sir John Llewelyn.

55,322. Tyntwll is near Llanarmon, is it?—Yes.

55,323. Is that a place where some time ago there were some tithe troubles?—No.

55,324. It is not the same Llanarmon?—No, that is Llanarmon Ial.

55,325. Now I will come to the valuation of your own farm. What rent do you pay?—67*l.* I believe.

28 August 1894.]

55,326. Was that Mr. Williams' valuation or Mr. Hill's valuation?—I do not know what is Mr. Williams' valuation quite.

55,327. I thought you were satisfied with Mr. Williams' valuation and not satisfied with Mr. Hill's valuation?—It is a valuation of Mr. Williams'.

55,328. Mr. Hill came from the Vale of Clwyd, is that so?—No, Mr. Hill came from Oswestry.

55,329. Do I correctly follow you that you are not satisfied with Mr. Hill's valuation?—Mr. Hill was not so unreasonable at that period. Times went worse since then.

55,330. When you appealed to Colonel West, Colonel West did reduce the rent?—He made an abatement, but not a permanent reduction.

55,331. Was the reduction a permanent reduction or an abatement?—This was after Mr. Jenkins' valuation, it was a temporary abatement.

55,332. Has it been continued?—We had a valuation by Mr. Williams after that.

55,333. Is the rent now based upon that valuation?—I told you before in my evidence that they refused to let me see that valuation, but it is my opinion that it is not quite that valuation.

55,334. I will not trouble about that. Are you paying 67*l.* now?—I do pay 67*l.* now.

55,335. What were you paying before?—Mr. Jenkins had valued it up to 85*l.*, but we only paid 75*l.*

55,336. Has it come down then from 75*l.* to 67*l.*?—By valuation, sir. We had a man who understood how to value, not a man from another country.

55,337. Leave the valuation. I want to know the facts. Did you pay 75*l.*?—Yes.

55,338. And you pay now 67*l.*?—Yes.

55,339. Is that a permanent reduction or not?—That is the rent now.

55,340. Then I suppose you pay your rates upon that?—We pay the rates and the tithe ourselves.

55,341. Do you pay the rate upon that valuation? What are you rated at in the rate-book?—I believe the rateable value is about 60*l.*, so far as I remember.

55,342. It is a permanent reduction, and not an abatement?—It is a permanent reduction, according to the other valuation.

Professor Rhys.

55,343. I did not quite understand what you said about the two amounts of tithe just now, the 220*l.* under the commutation, and the 180*l.* which you were able to collect. Can you explain that?—The average on the clergyman's book for seven years was 220*l.*, and I thought it was not as much. We went round the country in order to find out how much every one paid.

55,344. And how much did you find it to be?—I found it to be 180*l.* We had nothing to say, but that the tithe was upon the land, and the agents were willing for it to remain so.

55,345. Making a sum of 220*l.*?—Yes. That stood.

55,346. You mentioned a school-room just now only 28 feet by 25 feet. How did it come down to that from 45 feet by 32 feet?—It did not become less. The building is there now. It never was as large as that, only in the idea of the clergyman when he made the application to Government.

55,347. The application to Government for what?—For money.

55,348. And the school never was of that size?—It never was, and it is not now that size.

55,349. Would he have a grant according to the size of the school towards the building of it?—I do not know that. It is beyond my knowledge.

55,350. How do you know about Mr. Williams warning the agent, Mr. Smith, in the way you described just now?—The two men who were with him said so.

55,351. What were their names?—Jones, Tŷ Gwyn, and Roberts from Llanrhiadr. The two went to Mr. Williams to lay their case before him.

Mr. Grove.

55,352. When a valuer goes over the land do you think he ought to see it once or twice at different seasons?—I do unless he understands the nature of the country.

55,353. Do you consider that a land court would be any good?—Taking the whole kingdom through I should think it would, but I am of opinion that the landlord and tenant ought to have an opportunity of coming to terms themselves before appealing to the land court.

55,354. But supposing they cannot agree, then you want a land court to bring them to proper terms one with the other?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,355. Mr. Interpreter, will you repeat the answer given by the witness in reference to the land court. You used the word "kingdom." I want to hear what word the witness used.

(The Interpreter.) Teyrnas—kingdom.

Mr. Grove.

55,356. We understand your view to be that the landlord and tenant should try to come to terms first?—Yes, I do say so, for the sake of good feeling.

office of the land court in your opinion?—I believe it would be an advantage to the landlord as well as the tenant, that either of them might appeal to the court.

55,358. After they have tried themselves to mutually settle?—Yes, of course.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,359. You say here that Colonel Cornwallis West did not contract himself out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, although the adjoining landowners all did so. To what Act do you refer, to the Act of 1875, or to the Act of 1883?—The Act that was first passed in the time of Mr. Disraeli. I simply mentioned that, in order to point out that the landlord, unlike most landlords, did not take advantage by contracting himself out of it.

55,360. You say that the tenants signed a petition to Colonel West for an abatement of 10 per cent., and that the petition was sent through an agent in Oswestry, and that they had to wait for a long time for a reply. Do you mean to allege that the agent did not send the petition at once to Colonel West?—I cannot tell. I say nothing unless I am pretty sure.

55,361. However, you received a reply immediately after you wrote personally to Colonel West?—Yes, within about four days, and he assented to my request.

55,362. What was the date of this petition—in what year was it sent?—I do not remember; I should think about 15 years ago; I do not know, indeed.

55,363. Was the abatement granted annually for some time?—Yes, they made an abatement for some years after this.

55,364. Without any application for it?—Yes. I think without asking for it, so far as I remember.

55,365. Do you mean to allege that the clergyman of the parish pocketed the difference between 180*l* and 200*l*, which was not really due to him?—Well, he received it, whatever.

55,366. Have you any foundation for this story, that the agent, Mr. Williams, sent to Mr. Smith, to send to all the tenants to proceed with the cultivation of their farms?—I have no foundation for it, with the exception of my memory. I remember the persons who had been with Mr. Williams.

55,367. And Mr. Williams had told them?—I remember John Evans was one; he came up that very night to say so.

55,368. Is Mr. Smith alive?—I do not know, indeed.

55,369. He is not in the neighbourhood?—He went to Ruthin from our place; I do not know whether he is alive, now.

55,370. Did he remain on the estate for any time after this?—Yes, for some years; he removed to Ruthin on the estate there. That lesson that he received from Mr. Williams altered him very much.

55,371. You contend that the tenants received notice in consequence of their action with reference to the school?—In connexion with religion, sir.

55,372. In what way?—Because they were Nonconformists, and he wanted to fill the parish with tenants who would attend church.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,373. Is it well that a valuer should be one from the immediate neighbourhood, and be well acquainted with the farm he values?—That is common sense.

55,374. Do you know of any instances on the estate where the Agricultural Holdings Act has been acted upon?—I never saw the necessity for it; I have never seen anyone leaving, nor anything of the kind.

55,375. Did Colonel West object to the tenants combining to ask for a reduction of rent?—I cannot say. No, I do not think that at all.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,376. Just to clear up the point about the tithes. Am I right in supposing that the complaint you make is, that the bargain between the parson and the agent with regard to commutation was not fair. Is that your complaint? I will put it in another way: Do you remember the time when the people were in the habit of paying the tithe in kind?—Yes, I do remember that; but as a rule we in our country used to have valuers. They used to come round and assess it, and we used to pay the amount.

55,377. Then this transaction in which the agent was brought in was a transaction in reference to commuting the tithe in that way?—The law at that time settled the average for seven years.

55,378. What I understood you to complain of was, that the agent and the parson made an unfair bargain. That is what I understood to be the meaning of your complaint?—My complaint is not that we had to pay in money instead of in kind, but that the demand in the parson's book was larger after the commutation than it was before.

55,379. Were you consulted in the fixing of the amount?—We held a vestry, and we sent people round to all the district in order to know what everyone paid. That only came to 180*l*.

55,380. Then what was the good of any further bargain, if the vestry arrived at that resolution?—The tithe was upon the land, and the agent consented to the 220*l*.

55,381. Then it really comes to what I say. You complained of the agent settling with the parson?—Yes, their influence one with the other.

55,382. Your farm is in the parish of Llanarmon?—Yes.

55,383. Llanarmon Dyffryn Ceiriog, or Llanarmon Mynydd Mawr?—Dyffryn Ceiriog.

55,384. Do most of the tenant farmers and the labourers in that parish speak the Welsh language habitually?—All.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. R. EDWARDS.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

55,385. Are they mostly Nonconformists in religion?—Yes.

55,386. Do you know a good many of the farmers in that parish?—I know them all.

55,387. During the last few years have they found it difficult to pay their rent even with the abatements and reductions that have been given?—Yes, they have—almost impossible to do so.

55,388. Are they worse off than they were when you were a young man, do you think?—Yes, they are, from wages and everything else having risen so much. It is very difficult to secure servants for a place like ours. Education will make it still more difficult for us to obtain servants, because it is far easier to carry a quill than to handle a spade.

55,389. What is the size of your farm?—I do not know the acreage of it, but it is mostly sheep land—grazing land.

55,390. In that case I will not ask you the question I was going to ask. Do you know whether any of the tenants in this parish have built or repaired buildings at their own expense?—Yes, a little, but as a rule the landlord does it.

55,391. Who does the haulage in that case?—The tenant does that.

55,392. Do you know Henry Hughes of Penybryn?—Yes, I do.

55,393. Has he repaired or built anything at his own cost?—I know nothing about his circumstances. I know the man.

55,394. Do you know Lewis Edwards of Llwythdir Issa?—I do; he is my brother.

55,395. Has he built any buildings or repaired any at his own expense?—I do not know. I cannot prove it.

55,396. Have you ever heard any complaints of the gamekeepers?—I do not know. If they have complaints let them come forward and say so. I am not going to say things of that kind. If they have any complaints let them come forward like men to say so.

55,397. After that answer am I to understand that you have never heard any complaints?—I cannot say that I have heard complaints that I can stand to. I do not listen to idle stories.

55,398. I did not ask you whether the complaints were well-founded, I asked you whether you had heard complaints or not. You have virtually admitted that you did, because you said you did not listen to idle stories?—That question has no connexion at all with my evidence.

55,399. No, not so far as you have given it, but you have given your evidence in chief, and it is now for the Commissioners to question you. It is hardly fair for you to give partial evidence and only to say what you like. I am asking you a very simple question; have you heard any complaints—I am not suggesting whether they are well-founded or not—and then I was going to ask you what kind of complaints they were?—The truth is that I have heard no complaints with any foundation in them in respect to the gamekeepers for many years.

55,400. You do not complain, yourself, at any rate?—No, indeed, I do not.

55,401. Do the tenants of this estate take advantage of the Ground Game Act of 1880?—We do. I think that everybody knows it. No one says anything against us. Perhaps I might be allowed to say a word in respect to the keepers. Our landlord told me, himself, that he would like to have a gamekeeper who would co-operate with the tenants, but the tenants are the gamekeepers.

55,402. Do you remember the circumstances under which the tenant of Tyhwnti'rafon left some years ago?—The husband died; I know nothing else.

55,403. What was the farm let at, when the tenant died, what was the rent?—I do not know.

55,404. Did the widow, or any members of the family, remain on the farm?—I am not sure whether they were there a year.

55,405. They ultimately went, did they?—They did leave ultimately.

55,406. Why?—I do not know.

55,407. But you told me at the beginning of your evidence that you knew all the parish very well?—I cannot tell what is the reason they left. I was not a trustee. If anyone has a complaint to make, in that respect, let them come forward themselves and say so.

55,408. Your mind seems to run upon complaints. I want to get at the facts. I am not talking about complaints?—Suppose I told you a fact, and then I could not stand to it?

55,409. Then your answer should be "no"?—I could say, in this instance, what was the opinion of the country, but how could I stand to that?

55,410. I will ask you what did you hear in reference to that?—I hear a great many things upon certain subjects quite contrary to one another.

55,411. What did you hear about this?—I do not write down what I hear. Unimportant trivial matters come in through one ear and go out at the other.

55,412. How long had the family been at Tyhwnti'rafon?—Scores, if not hundreds, of years. One of the families had warning to quit at the time I referred to in my evidence. The tenant of Tyhwnti'rafon had no children. I cannot tell whether any members of the family tried to get the farm or not.

55,413. I should have thought it was a matter of some interest, and I should have thought you would have taken sufficient interest in it so as to be able to give us information on the subject?—(No answer).

55,414. Do you know the rents of any of the farms before Mr. Jenkins' valuation? If I put the names of some of the farms to you, could you give us the rents?—I might be able to say.

55,415. Take Pentre?—I had taken Pentre at that time.

55,416. What were you paying?—I took it at

28 August 1894.]

Mr. R. EDWARDS.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

55,417. What alteration was made by Mr. Jenkins' valuation?—It had been valued at more, but they could not let it.

55,418. You were paying 55*l.* then before Mr. Jenkins' valuation?—That was the time I went in.

55,419. When you took possession of Pentre what rent did you, in fact, pay—never mind what it was valued at?—55*l.*

55,420. Did you have to pay more after Mr. Jenkins' valuation?—Oh, yes, 75*l.*, I believe.

55,421. Do you remember what the rent of Tyhwntirafon was before the valuation of Mr. Jenkins?—I do not.

55,422. Or of Blaen-y-cwm?—No.

55,423. Or Cwm Canol?—No, I do not.

55,424. Or Caellwyd?—Mr. Hill had valued Caellwyd at 34*l.*, and Mr. Jenkins had valued it at 54*l.*

55,425. Can you give us the figures of Llwythdir Issa?—I cannot.

Lord Kenyon.

55,426. How long ago was it you paid part of your tithes in eggs?—It was when I was a child. The parish clerk, or his servant, used to come round and count all the hens, and we had to give an egg for every hen, and two eggs for every cock.

55,427. When did Colonel West succeed to this property?—I do not remember.

55,428. Were these valuations made since he succeeded?—The last two. I am not sure whether Mr. Hill's valuation was in his time; I believe it was.

55,429. And Mr. Jenkins'?—Yes, it was.

55,430. So far as I gather from your evidence, you can get on very well when you can deal straight off first hand with your landlord?—Yes; the estate office at Oswestry is a very respectable office, and very different to what it was many years ago. Many years ago there was a kind of step ladder between the tenant and the office.

55,431. You get much nearer to your landlord through the present office than through the old one?—Yes, that is it.

55,432. Is it the office of Messrs. Longueville, Williams, and Co.?—Yes.

Chairman.

55,433. Colonel Hughes, do you wish to say anything with regard to this alleged eviction of Sir Watkin Wynn's?

(Colonel Hughes). No. I have handed in a question. I should like to know who the man was, and what year. The question has been sent in through Mr. Vincent.

Chairman.

55,434. There are some questions put in by Mr. Vincent: "What was the name of the tenant" "on Sir Watkin's estate who was evicted be-

Chairman—continued.

"cause he was a Nonconformist?"—He was not evicted. Sir Watkin protected him. His name was Richard Evans, Glas' Aber, and he lived there until he was within two years of completing his one hundredth year.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,435. Against whom did Sir Watkin protect this person?—Against the agent. The tenant received notice from the agent?

55,436. That is exactly what I want to know; what was the name of the agent?—The agent's name was John Croxen.

55,437. Whose agent was he?—Sir Watkin's agent.

55,438-9. What was the date of this "transaction"?—I cannot say the exact year, but about 50 years ago.

Chairman.

55,440. These are further questions by Mr. J. E. Vincent: "How long ago was the school you mentioned made a national school?"—From 1850 to 1852, all these troubles took place at Llanarmon D.C. It was a chapel before then, and no talk of a national school anywhere about. That is the time when, I remember, the Established Church did not concern itself at all with education in the parish.

55,441. Is the answer that the time was in 1852?—Yes, about that time.

55,442. "How long ago was the school repaired and re-opened?"—I do not remember the year, but it was not many years after. My evidence mentions the time that the grant was obtained from London.

55,443. "How long is it since the late Mr. West died?"—I cannot tell you, indeed.

55,444. "Did he die in 1862?"—Indeed, I do not know.

55,445. Mr. Vincent is anxious to be quite clear about the times, and asks, "Did you say that the clergyman collected 220*l.*, when 180*l.* only was due? If so, who was, or is he?"—The clergyman was the Reverend Morgan Davies. The only difference is this, the parish made it 180*l.* while the parson made it 220*l.*

Chairman.

Is the Reverend Morgan Davies in the room or in the neighbourhood.

Mr. R. S. Richards.—My Lord, I believe he is dead.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,446. This transaction about the parson and the agent is a transaction which took place about 50 years ago, as I understand?—Yes, surely not now—nothing now at all.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. R. EDWARDS.

Sir John Llewellyn.

55,447. Do you admit or deny that 220*l.* was legally due? The point is this—was it legally due. I will ask afterwards whether it was fairly due?—I am not going to decide who was right or who was wrong. What I know is that 220*l.* was the amount collected.

Professor Rhys.

He began by saying "It was legally due."

(The Interpreter.)—He says "It is legally due, but I am not going to decide. The amount collected was 220*l.*"

Chairman.

55,448. Will you say yes or no, was that sum legally due or not?—I state, as a matter of fact, that that was our opinion at the time, and that the tithe on my farm was advanced at the time, and the adjoining farm, upon which there was no tithe before, had the tithe assessed upon it, and you can form your own conclusion.

55,449. Answer this question: "Could that sum of money have been recovered by law or not?"—Yes, there is no question of that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,450. Were no valuers appointed by the Tithe Commissioners concerned in commuting the tithe in your parish?—Yes, but he was not to decide upon the amount that each was to pay, but to divide that amount.

55,451. That is to say he was to decide upon the apportionment for each field?—Yes.

55,452. Do I understand you to say that the total amount of the tithe in the parish was fixed at too high an amount?—We gave our opinion as such at the time, but there was nothing to be done. The steward had given his word that it was to be so because all the tithe was upon the land.

55,453. It really comes to this: the agent and the parson fixed the tithe for the parish at 220*l.*?—That is it.

55,454. And the vestry thought the amount was 180*l.*?—Quite right.

Chairman.

55,455. There is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you not think if a land court was established, the landlord would cease to take an interest in his estate and in the improvement thereof?"—If all went into court, the landlord would simply receive his rent, and you would not like that, would you?

55,456. Then there is a question by the Rev. E. James Evans on the question of tithes:

"Did the parishioners take action against the vicar?" That was when this 220*l.* was paid?—No, we did not; we dared not, because the parish was in the possession of Sir Watkin Williams Wynn and Mr. West, and we did not move in the matter.

55,457. Another question by the same reverend gentleman: "What is the commutation of Llanarmon?"—I do not know what it is at present.

55,458. Then there are some questions by Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones: "Do Colonel West's agents ever make a charge for a copy of the agreement?" Answer that, yes or no?—I think they do—with a new tenant, at least.

55,459. "Do you think they have received such a special training as to qualify them to act as land agents?"—My opinion is that an improvement is wanted. They are quite able to add up figures and to receive money.

55,460. "Who is now the owner of the school-room to which you referred in your evidence?"—It has been converted into a dwelling-house now.

55,461. Who is the owner of that dwelling-house?—A person of the name of Smith.

55,462. Is he the landlord of that house?—He has bought it from Mr. West.

55,463. "Who was the owner of the estate when Mr. Jenkins made his valuation?"—Colonel West.

55,464. "By what per-centage were the rents raised?"—I cannot say that. I do not know what was upon the estate.

55,465. "After Mr. Jenkins' valuation was the estate advertised for sale?"—I heard it was in the newspapers.

55,466. "Was Mr. Jenkins' valuation made at a time when prices were high?"—Yes, much better than now, and the wages much lower.

55,467. There are two further questions by Mr. Vincent: "Had not Colonel West granted a permanent reduction immediately before you petitioned for an abatement?"—No, not before that, but he made an abatement for several years after.

55,468. "Is not the sub-agent, Mr. Probert, a competent and efficient person?"—I beg your pardon, but who was the person who propounded that question? I would not take 100*l.* for answering it—who is the foolish man who put it?

55,469. You would rather not answer?—I cannot answer it without being legally responsible.

55,470. "Is he the gentleman with whom you have to deal?"—I cannot say that. I never saw anything of Mr. Probert but that he is capable.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. DAVID JONES.

Mr. DAVID JONES called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

55,471. Does this statement contain your evidence?—Yes.

55,472. It has been translated to you?—Yes.

55,473. And it is substantially correct?—It is.

Evidence of Mr. DAVID JONES, Rhydonen, Glyndyfrdwy.

I occupy a farm of 78 acres on the estate of Major Tottenham, Plas Berwyn. I propose to offer evidence with reference to the parishes of Llantysilio, Llansantffraid, and part of Corwen. The chief landowners are Major Tottenham, Sir H. Beyer Robertson, and Mr. Lloyd of Rhagatt. In entering a farm, possession of the land is given on the 25th of March, and of the house on the 1st of May. I do not know of any leases in this district. They are not asked for, as it is supposed that the terms of the lease would not be favourable. There have been considerable changes of tenants during the past few years, because the condition of agriculture is so bad, and because it is so difficult to get substantial reductions in the rent. It is often more difficult for an old tenant to get his rent reduced than for a new tenant to take a place at a reduced rent. I know of some cases of hardship which have taken place on this account. The farm of Rhydonen Isaf, on Major Tottenham's estate was occupied by one Mr. Ellis Jones, he paid 76*l.* rent, he asked for an abatement of 6*l.*, but this was refused. He gave up the farm, but stated his readiness to re-take it if he received the reduction he asked for. However, he left, and the farm was on hand for a year. It was then let to a new tenant for 60*l.*, and in addition this new tenant received 10*l.* yearly towards artificial manure. Pieces of land are taken from farmers for various purposes without proper notice being given to the tenant. Thus, on Glanyllyn farm, which consists of something like 40 acres, a piece of land was taken away for building purposes, without notice, but the rent was proportionately reduced. It is rare for the tenant to be paid for damage caused through the cutting of timber, and the carrying of it away. A great deal of timber was cut on the farm I occupy. If gaps are made in the hedges the tenant has to repair them. I have frequently done this myself. The branches are sold, the tenant receiving the first offer to buy them.

Several clauses in the agreement are considered oppressive, e.g. the clause whereby the tenancy is determined by six months' notice, the clauses restricting the tenant from ploughing certain fields, when to plough them would be advantageous both to the tenant and to the farm. In a farm called Penybryn, on Major Tottenham's estate, the tenant ploughed a field of about five acres. He subsequently received a bill from the agent demanding the amount of the fine, payable under the agreement. The tenant, however, disappeared from the neighbourhood, taking his stock and furniture with him. This happened about five years ago. The greater part of Major Tottenham's estate was purchased by his grandfather, who was a bishop, and who has a reputation for being a kind gentleman. His agent, however, raised the rents of most of the farms; in many cases it is said that he doubled them. The result was that many families were compelled to leave their farms. Since then the rents in many cases have been reduced, and the present owner makes an abatement of 15 per cent. A great many tenants have gone back in the world during the past few years. One farmer told me that he had only one shilling left after paying his last rent, and that he had nothing which he could sell for some weeks. This farmer has a family of eight dependent upon him. The game have caused a great deal of inconvenience and loss to the farmers in Llansantffraid. The game on the Rhagatt estate was let to a gentleman from Liverpool. Pheasants were reared to such an enormous extent that a large number of tenants had to leave, and their farms became vacant. Things are, however, better now than they were formerly. Tenant farmers have to work very hard as well as their wives. There is no more striving and thrifty class in the country. Nevertheless, they are unable to provide for their children when they start in life. Children have to work hard to help their parents.

I wish to state one more fact with regard to the hardship of the times. A person of the name of Mr. Shaw, who lived in Llandynan farm, received, about two or three years ago, notice to quit. The vicar expressed a desire to have this farm, and the vicar is now the tenant.

55,474. What is the vicar's name?—The Reverend John Samuel Jones.

55,475. What was the parish where this took place?—In the parish of Llantysilio.

55,476. Who is the landlord?—One of the name of Mr. Smith. He is abroad, but his brother lives at Wrexham.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,477. You say that it is not easy to get leases on advantageous terms. How do you account for that?—It is very difficult to get them.

55,478. Do you mean it is difficult to get them so that you may be able to pay for them?—It is easier for us to venture one year of high rent than to venture say 20.

See evidence
witness.

28 August 1894.]

MR. DAVID JONES.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

55,479. Would you venture if you had advantageous terms?—Yes, I would if I were in a position that I could venture them.

55,480. That is, the rent must be very low before you could risk taking a lease?—It ought to be about half of what we pay now.

55,481. Before you could undertake to take a lease?—Yes, that is so.

55,482. How do you mean that it is easier for a new tenant to get a reduction of rent than for an old tenant to do so?—The landlords as a rule refuse a reduction in rent until it comes to a point when they must—when it is compulsory for them, and when the farm goes into the market they are compelled to accept the best terms they can get.

55,483. Are farms let at a competition rent then?—Yes, so far as this. When the farm is to be let, a number of applicants walk over the farm, and, as a rule, the highest bidder or the best man gets it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

55,484. The highest bidder or the best man?—As a rule the best price that they can reach.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,485. Then landlords allow old tenants to leave, and choose fresh ones instead?—They have done so.

55,486. You give one instance, I think, where a new tenant took the farm at 60*l.*, and where the old tenant offered 70*l.*?—Yes, surely; and the new tenant gets a 10*l.* allowance towards artificial manure as well.

55,487. Can you give me the names of those tenants that you say have actually failed in farming?—Yes, some.

55,488. Was it through their own carelessness, or because the rent was too high?—To a great extent because the rents were too high.

55,489. Then with regard to this gentleman who took the game. Did he send food along with the game that he had reared in the covers?—Yes, he feeds them in the plantations.

55,490. Then if they are fed in the plantations they do not go out in the fields, do they?—Yes, they do go.

55,491. Then you consider they do not have sufficient food inside?—I cannot say that, but they will not stay in the plantations, and they are certain to go out to trespass upon the fields.

55,492. What became of that tenant whom you mentioned, against whom the penalising clause was enforced. Did he pay it afterwards?—He commenced ploughing the field, which in the agreement he was not allowed to do, and he received a bill for 80*l.* from the agent to Major Tottenham. He was unable, owing to his straightened circumstances, to pay that large bill, and he cleared away during the night.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

55,493. Was that meadow land on which they usually grew the hay that he ploughed?—It was not meadow land, but it was land that could be ploughed.

55,494. Had it been ploughed before in your time?—It has been ploughed after that.

Lord Kenyon.

55,495. I am sorry I did not hear all your evidence, but I heard you say that the landlords take the best price they can for the farms—they let to the highest competitors. Could you give any names of landowners who do so?—I believe that the largest proportion are like that—the largest number.

55,496. Can you mention any specific names?—A farm became vacant belonging to Sir Henry Robertson, in our neighbourhood. The old tenant paid 44*l.* He was distrained upon for the rent by his landlord. The best price that could be obtained for that farm afterwards, when it went to the market, was 20*l.*

55,497. Do you mean to say that he let it to the highest bidder afterwards?—I believe that the highest price offered for it was 20*l.*, and of course that man had it.

55,498. Do you seriously think that the majority of landlords in this district let at competition rents; or, I will put it, let to the highest bidder?—It is probable that the best tenant is taken into account, but notwithstanding that, there is no doubt that the highest price has got a great deal to do with it.

55,499. Then how do you account for the infrequency of changes?—With regard to Major Tottenham's estate, the rents were raised at the time that it was purchased, about 50 years ago, or more.

55,500. What has that to do with my question? I want to know how you account for it that there are not greater changes among the farmers?—I said there were a great many changes.

55,501. Perhaps you heard the evidence of Mr. Biddulph's agent?—I did not.

55,502. Mr. Biddulph's agent said that the average length of tenancy was 18 years on his estate. Would not that go to show that the rents on that estate were not excessive?—I can say nothing with regard to Mr. Biddulph's estate.

55,503. You have made a sweeping assertion as to the generality of landlords. I want to get you to give me an instance to explain that?—I give my evidence for our neighbourhood—Glyndyfrdwy and the neighbourhood.

55,504. Who was Sir Henry Robertson's tenant who left his farm which was afterwards let to the highest bidder?—The name of the old tenant was David Jones, of Bryniau. The name of the present tenant is David Williams Bryniau.

55,505.—How long has David Williams been in the farm?—He has been in the farm now about seven years.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. DAVID JONES.

Chairman.

55,506.—The following questions have been handed in by Mr. Richards, agent for Major Tottenham: "Where is the piece of land taken from Glanllyn which is not allowed for?"—Buildings have been erected upon that plot of land. One is a shop—Brynderwen shop.

55,507. "Was Mr. Shaw the tenant of Llan-dynan?"—He lived there, but I do not know whether he or a friend of his was the tenant.

55,508. "Was not the tenant Mr. John Jones?"—It may have been so. John Jones was a brother to Mrs. Shaw.

55,509. "Has not Major Tottenham made returns of 10 and 15 per cent. in his rent for

"periods extending over nine years?"—He has returned amounts of 15 per cent. for the last two years, and 10 per cent. for several years before then. I do not know the exact number of years.

55,510. "Has he made permanent reductions in the annual rents of some of the farms?"—He has.

55,511. "Who was the tenant against whom a claim was made by Major Tottenham for penalties for not carrying out the agreement?"—William Roberts, who has been living at Penybryn.

Mr. RICHARD SEPTIMUS RICHARDS called and examined.

Chairman.

55,512. You are agent to Major Tottenham?—I collect his rents only. I do not manage his estate.

55,513. You are rent collector?—I am rent collector to Major Tottenham.

55,514. Where do you live?—Llangollen.

55,515. What do you wish to say; do you want to rebut any part of the evidence?—Yes, about the question of the allowance for the land taken, part of Glanllyn farm. I have to say that a part of that land was taken for the purpose of building on. I have a letter here dated 29th August 1885 from the tenant to whom I had written with reference to an allowance to be made to him for the land to be taken. He writes my firm:

"Dear Sirs, In reference to the piece of land now in my father's occupation on which Mr. John Evans intends to build, No. 1896 on the schedule attached to the agreement, I beg to say, on behalf of my father that I am willing to take a reduction of 10s. per annum in the rent instead of the said piece of land, the reduction to commence after the 29th September next, up to which date I will arrange with Mr. Evans as to trespass, &c., your humble servant, Thos. L. Phillips."

The allowance has ever since been made. I do not know whether I am in order, but I want to put in, if I may be allowed to do so, an account of Major Tottenham's estate farms showing permanent reductions, yearly rents in 1880, dates of reductions, and the present yearly values. Perhaps I may be allowed to put that in.

55,516. Yes, you had better put that in?—At the foot of the returns there are the various abatements made to the tenants on account of the agricultural depression since the year 1885 down to the 25th of March last, with a statement at the end that the total amount spent for repairs from March 1879 to June 1893, was 3,115*l*. (See Appendix)

55,517. Two questions are handed in by Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones: "Was notice given to the tenant that the piece of land to be

"built upon was to be taken from him?"—It was mutually arranged. There was no question of notice about it at all; that is, to the best of my recollection; it is nine years ago.

55,518. "How long a notice was given him?"—I do not recollect if there was any.

55,519. You do not recollect if any notice was given?—No, I do not. I should think very probably no notice was given.

55,520. The land was taken away from him without notice?—Oh, no—by agreement with him.

55,521. He was informed of this land being taken away?—I should think so.

55,522. But you have no recollection of that?—No recollection; it is nine years ago.

Lord Kenyon.

55,523. There was the legal notice anyhow?—I do not think any notice was given at all or required.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,524. Was his rent reduced?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

55,525. May I ask, was there any complaint about it?—I never heard a word about it. I thought full justice had been done all round.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,526. Just let us see. You simply went to the tenant and said, "Now the landlord wants to take a portion of your farm for building, and I want to arrange the matter with you." Is that all that took place?—I wrote to the tenant, and that is his answer.

55,527. Who is Mr. John Evans?—He is the man who built the house and shop.

55,528. This is the letter addressed to you of the 29th August 1885?—That is it.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. R. S. RICHARDS.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

55,529. Had you written to him before?—Yes. He says: "In reference to your letter."

55,530. No, he says: "In reference to the 'piece of laud'?—I beg your pardon, but it was in answer to a letter. I think there is a note of mine across the top. "See my letter to Phillips, &c."

55,531. Yes, but that is two days afterwards. At any rate, what you say is, that even if no formal notice to quit was given you wrote to him to say that the land was required for building purposes, and then he writes this letter agreeing?—Agreeing, and he has had the 10s. a year ever since.

55,532. Was there any clause in the agreement that the landlord might take any portion of the land on any particular terms?—I have got the agreement here. I will look at it if you like.

55,533. Before you do that, I suppose his complaint is that he could not very well refuse—he was a yearly tenant, was he not?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. HUGH HUGHES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

55,539. This is your statement which has been read to you, and it is correct?—Yes.

(The following statement of the witness was then read.)

Evidence of Mr. HUGH HUGHES, Penrhewl, Tregeiriog, in the parish of Llangadwaladr.

I. Personal.—I am a freeholder, and occupy a farm called Penrhewl, in the parish of Llangadwaladr. I am a member of the Llansilin School Board, and was formerly for many years a member of the Llanfyllin Board of Guardians. My farm is 175 acres, high land, chiefly grazing, only 40 acres being arable land. I bought 92 acres of the holding (including the house) in the year 1873, paying 2,100*l*. for the place. When I bought the farm the rent was 80*l*., though it had been let previously for 60*l*. The higher rent was only paid for three years. When I bought this farm there was great difficulty in getting it, and this accounts for the high figure I paid. Of this sum I borrowed 1,200*l*. on mortgage at 4 per cent. The other portion of the land I now hold was mixed up with the other land, the fields coming alternately. I had verbally agreed to buy this other portion (called Ty'nycelyn) for 1,800*l*., but as soon as I completed the contract for the purchase of Penrhewl they demanded 2,000*l*. for Ty'nycelyn. I accordingly dropped all negotiations with the owners of Ty'nycelyn, but seven years afterwards, owing to the owners being compelled to sell, I was offered the place, and bought it for 1,570*l*. The mortgagee of Penrhewl had died in the meantime, and I paid his representatives the mortgage, obtaining a new mortgage for 2,500*l*.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,534. So that if he had refused you would have given him a year's notice to quit?—Possibly.

55,535. I have seen in some agreements that have been put in clauses saying that on certain terms land may be taken by the landlord for building or other purposes?—Yes, I have seen that too.

Lord Kenyon.

55,536. How much land was taken?—I think about 1,600 yards.

55,537. How big was the farm?—The rent is now 71*l*. 10s. The land taken is only a very small fractional part of a corner of a field.

Chairman (to Mr. David Jones).

55,538. Do you wish to say anything in reply to this?—I believe Mr. Richards and I are exactly of the same opinion. I said in my evidence that plots of land were taken without notice, but that allowances were made—reductions were made on that account.

Chairman—continued.

on the two properties. The rate of interest reserved in the mortgage deed is 4 per cent., but by an agreement with the mortgagee I only pay 3*l*. 16s. per cent. Since I bought the two farms I have spent fully 1,100*l*. upon various permanent improvements, such as draining (with pipes), building new outbuildings, repairing the houses, erecting water-wheel, fencing and ditching. When entering these two farms I spent as follows upon stock:—

Penrhewl (1873)	900
Ty'nycelyn (1880)	500
Making a total of	1,400

This represents the exact sum spent by me upon live-stock, farm-house furniture, and implements.

In October 1891 I made a careful valuation of my stock, &c., and I consider that 800*l*. would cover the whole of same, though my stock was then considerably better than when I bought the farms. Between 1873 and 1892 team horses had fallen 50 per cent. in value, and cattle about the same. In 1873 wool was selling for 16*d*. to 18*d*. per pound, but by 1892 or 1894 it would only fetch from 7*d*. to 9*d*. per pound. Butter is now from 3*d*. to 5*d*. per pound cheaper than in 1873.

I spend on an average 40*l*. a year upon artificial manure; last year I spent 60*l*.

I propose to give general evidence with reference to the parish of Llanarmon Dyffryn Ceiriog, and the portion of the Llangadwaladr Parish, which lies in the Ceiriog Valley. The chief landlords are Colonel W. Cornwallis West and Sir Watkin Williams Wynn. I am of opinion that these two gentlemen should be considered to belong to the best class of landowners, but the farms which they own in my district are not let at such rentals as to enable the tenants to deal properly with themselves and to till the land in the most husbandlike manner. The above district is above seven miles in length and two miles in breadth.

II. Landlords and Tenants.—(i.) The fact that the landowners of the district reside at a distance means that they are totally unacquainted with the circumstances of the district and of their tenants, and cannot possibly sympathise with their tenants in the present depressed state of agriculture.

(ii.) The ignorance of the landlord of Welsh leads to a certain estrangement between the tenants and himself, as they are unable to deal with each other, except through interpreters and third parties.

In former years many cases of hardship arose owing to religious and political differences between landlord and tenant, but during the last few years I do not think there has been any cause of complaint on this account.

(iii.) In some cases men act as agents who have no previous special training, while in other cases, competent and suitable men are chosen for this work. With reference to Sir Watkin's estate, I think that the condition of the tenants has greatly improved during the past few years, as the chief agent (Colonel Hughes) is a gentleman who has received a thorough training in agricultural pursuits, and is thus able to appreciate the way in which farms should be cultivated. On Colonel West's estate, on the other hand, the agents are a firm of solicitors at Oswestry. The sub-agent, who practically superintends the estate, has, I understand, not received any special training for the supervision of agricultural land. It is a serious disadvantage to the landlord as well as to the tenant that persons should act as agents who are in no way qualified for the work. Besides they should be acquainted with the language of the majority of the tenants, as otherwise it is very difficult for the tenant to get them to understand his views and desires.

III. Occupation.—(i.) March 25th to the land, and May 1st to the house and buildings. From year to year. The uncertainty attached to agricultural prices makes farmers timid to bind themselves to a high rent for a long number of years. In my district the tenant farmers have been fairly stationary, there have not been many changes in the farms.

I know of a case where a keeper's house was built on the corner of a tenant's field. No notice was given to the tenant, and his rent was not reduced.

With regard to the rent it is fixed as a gross sum.

On the same estate the rents are fairly uniform.

Excluding the sheep walks the rent in the district averages from 5s. to 1l. an acre.

No services are rendered besides the payment of rent.

(ii.) The landlord and tenant agree upon the rent, though the landlord may have in view a valuation made on his behalf.

I fear that the manner in which farms are let leads to the farm being let preferably to a tenant who is willing to pay the highest rent. Taken as a whole the rents of the district are too high, and this results from the way in which farms are let.

I believe that the landlords make inquiries with a view to finding whether prospective tenants have sufficient capital, but I know of many cases where tenants have taken farms without having sufficient capital to farm in a proper manner. These tenants are more reckless in taking a farm and are prepared to pay a higher rent than they should. I only knew of one case where the rent was settled, or re-adjusted by arbitration. On Colonel West's estate some few years ago a tenant, Mr. John Hughes, of Blaenycwm, complained that his rent was too high. It was agreed to refer the matter to arbitration of two arbitrators. The result of their valuation was to reduce the rent from 120l. to 100l. Immediately afterwards another tenant on the same estate complained of his rent, but in this case the matter was referred to a valuer appointed by the landlord or his agent. I understand the valuer reduced the rent from about 140l. to about 100l., but I am not quite certain as to the exact figures. This was the only valuation undertaken on this estate by this valuer (Mr. Whitfield, of Oswestry); subsequently the whole estate was valued by Mr. Samuel Williams, of Pentrevern.

(iii.) The rents have been raised both generally and in individual cases within the last 50 years.

There have been within the last 10 years both temporary abatements and permanent reductions.

The size of farms is from 50 to 200 acres. The average size would be about 120 acres. Not many holdings have been consolidated within the last few years. The consolidation of farms, as a rule, results in a decreased production, less labourers being employed, and in time it leads to a smaller rent being paid. In my district the population is stationary, and the inhabited houses are the same in number as in years gone by.

IV. Cultivation.—There is a scarcity of labourers in the district. Though the population has not decreased, the able-bodied men go to the various quarries, and it is difficult to get men to undertake agricultural work. Fences, ditches, &c., are not kept in as good order as in former years. The upland land is gradually going out of cultivation, as the produce received from this land does not repay for the labour expended upon it. There is no land in the district capable of profitable reclamation, if we consider the high rents paid and the cost of reclamation.

V. Agricultural Education.—The country is too high and cold for fruit culture and horticulture. No special attention is paid to poultry farming or beekeeping by farmers. I believe that they might be made a source of profit to farmers, especially in the case of bee-keeping. Owing to the distance of the markets, it is somewhat more doubtful whether poultry farming would pay. No instruction in butter and cheese making has been given in the district. Some field experiments have been made on my farm by the Agricultural Department of the University College of North Wales, with satisfactory results. Lectures have also been given upon the rearing and breeding of stock. The farmers of the district took great interest in the lectures, and eagerly availed themselves of the opportunity to hear them. I am of opinion that more attention should be paid in elementary and intermediate schools to agricultural education.

Agriculture in the district suffers considerably owing to the high rates and inconvenient arrangements of the local steam tramway, which runs along the public highway from Chirk to Glyn Ceiriog. If time permits I should like to make a full statement as to the way in which this tramway was laid in the district, and as to the effect upon agriculture.

VI. Proprietor Farmers.—There are not many peasant proprietors who have inherited their holdings, but there are a large number who have bought their holdings during the last 30 years.

Most of those who purchased their holdings were induced to do so because of the difficulty of getting farms, and also because they thought that by becoming freeholders they would be more secure and independent. In most cases an excessive price was no doubt given owing to the scarcity of land. Roughly two-thirds would be borrowed on mortgage, and in some cases the whole of the remainder of the purchase money was borrowed on personal security. The money was borrowed from various private sources at rates of interest varying from 4 per cent. to 5 per cent. I do not know of a single instance where any portion of the mortgage has been paid off. As a rule these freeholders are in more straitened circumstances than the yearly tenants in the district.

VII. Tenant Farmers.—Both tenant farmers and their wives take part in the manual labour of their farms, working harder than the labourers they employ. Some of the children work at home and others turn out to service. Those who work at home do not receive anything like adequate remuneration for their labour. Their position when settling in life or when getting married is not better than, if as good as, that of agricultural labourers.

55,540. Do you think you are better off as a freeholder or as a tenant farmer under a large landlord?—In one sense I consider myself better, because I happened to have in my possession the amount of the deposit money, but if I had to borrow all the money for my farm I should be worse off.

55,541. I suppose the principal advantage is the greater freedom?—I have greater liberty in the cultivation of my farm, and can make improvements, and that in the end results in a benefit to me, and to the labourers in the neighbourhood.

55,542. Would you like to see a system by which Government would advance money to those who have borrowed money on their land?—Yes, by all means they ought to do it.

55,543. I think if I follow you, you are now paying 3½ per cent.?
—3l. 16s.

55,544. That does not carry redemption?—No, that is only the mortgage.

55,545. Have you thought out what would be a fair amount to pay to Government?—As far as I can see the Government could with safety advance money up to 3 per cent., and that would be, I consider, a great advantage to the country at large.

55,546. I think you said in your evidence that the tenant farmers were accepted according to the amount that they were willing to pay for the farms—that the farms were let to the highest bidder?—That is the general opinion in the country—that given two men of equal positions and equal character, the farm will be let to the person who offers the greatest rent.

55,547. Can you suggest any way in which the highest bidder will not be accepted?—In the district to which my evidence refers very few changes indeed have taken place at all, but outside that district I could give instances where farms have been let to the highest bidder.

55,548. That I understand. I only ask if you can suggest any remedy?—I am of opinion that it would be better for the landlords, and for the tenants, and for the country at large, to have a land court.

55,549. But would not the land court accept the highest bidder when it came to the letting of land?—It would be expected that the court would take into consideration the actual value of the land when let.

55,550. I suppose the landlord does that now?—Not in every instance.

55,551. Is it not the fact that the landlord now generally looks to a good tenant?—I believe that the great majority of the landlords of Wales are gentlemen of that stamp—that they look for tenants who will do the best in every way for their farms—people who will venture to advance money to improve their holdings.

55,552. For their own interests they would be likely to do that?—For their own sakes, of course, it is very important that they should have good tenants, or else the farms would get out of cultivation in time.

Mr. HUGH HUGHES.

Professor Rhys.

55,553. How about labour in your valley, is it abundant?—For the district I speak of the population has neither increased nor decreased of late years, but the labourers have left their farms, and gone to work in the quarries in the neighbourhood.

55,554. What do you say about the rate of payment for labour?—I have been a servant man myself. Comparing the wages of farm labourers 35 years ago with what they are now, they have at least doubled.

55,555. What did you have as a farm servant when you were a farm servant?—I did not have much above 10*l*.

55,556. What was your work exactly?—Following the team, tending the sheep, and doing general work on the farm.

55,557. What would you have to pay a man like that now?—We cannot get that without paying 18*l*. or 20*l*.

55,558. May I ask if you made your money in that way, or did you inherit any money?—We were orphans, and our trustees thought it better rather than keep on the farm that we should all go to situations; we all went to situations, and the money that was apportioned to us was kept until we came of age, and with that money we began to farm.

55,559. Situations as farm servants?—We all went as farm servants, with the exception of one.

55,560. How many acres have you now?—175.

55,561. How many farm servants do you keep?—I employ nearly regularly four all the year round, but five occasionally.

55,562. Five servant men?—Three regular farm servants, unmarried men, and one married workman who comes occasionally.

55,563. Any servant girls?—One.

55,564. Where do you find accommodation for your three servant men?—In the house. The farm servants have stairs to go up by distinct from the servant-girl's.

55,565. That is in the farm house?—That is in the farm house, separate.

55,566. That sounds very proper. Is that the arrangement in other farm houses in your neighbourhood?—That is the custom of the country in our neighbourhood.

55,567. You have a separate part of the house for the servant men?—We have so, but I cannot say that they are similar in all parts of the district.

55,568. In some districts we have heard of the servant men having a room over the stable or over the barn. Is that usual in your neighbourhood?—There is not a single instance of that in our district.

Mr. Grove.

55,569. How many occupiers have bought their own holdings in this part?—In the lower part of the district which I refer to there are several freeholders.

Mr. Grove—continued.

55,570. If any system of advancing money by the Government were brought about what proportion do you think it would be fair for the Government to advance—what proportion of the value of the holdings, four-fifths, or three-fourths, or what?—With farms of about 50 acres in extent I should suggest that two-thirds should be advanced, but in cases of workmen who have no capital I should suggest that the whole of the capital be advanced to enable them to have a holding to keep a cow.

55,571. If those advances were made, two-thirds, we will say, would they like to have it over a long term of years so as to make the payments small, or would they like to have it over say 20, 30, or 40 years, and pay a little more per annum?—If the two-thirds were adopted I should suggest that the purchase money be payable over 20 years; if three-fourths, 30 years.

55,572. Would you not like to go beyond 30 years in some cases?—Yes, in some instances I would suggest that it should be even more where the repayment is very heavy.

55,573. You spoke of tramways; do you mean light railways?—I have a report prepared (I am sorry I have not it with me) of the history of the introduction of the tramway into our district, and the harm done to agriculture through its introduction.

55,574. The harm done?—Yes; the connexion of that light railway with the lower part of the valley doing harm to the rural population of the upper part of the valley.

55,575. Can you send in that statement to the Secretary, so that we might read it when we get back to London?—I can.

55,576. Perhaps you will explain what you mean by harm. Tell us shortly?—The present tramroad has been laid down along the side of the highway. When they obtained permission to lay down this tramway they promised that they would convey all materials at a reasonable price and extend their tramway three miles higher up the valley than they have done. They promised to cart all materials for 10 miles at 1*s*. per ton. By that means they persuaded us to sign a petition in favour of the tramway. When the Act was passed it was passed in different sections from 1 to 4. They did that in order to advance their own interests with regard to the quarries in the district. At present they have laid down a tramway along the side of the highway, and that is a source of a great deal of danger to us when we are going to Chirk for the coal and lime, whereas the charge for freightage for six miles is 2*s*. 6*d*. a ton. We made a representation to the Board of Trade on these matters, but we received a reply to the effect that they were sorry that we did not take steps at the proper time, and that we were now too late.

55,577. Just this one question. If the promise, as originally made, had been carried out, would you consider that the tramway would have been a benefit to the district?—It would be a great advantage if they charged reasonably for the freightage, and if they brought the railway three or four miles further than they do at present, to the upper part of the valley, it would not have been necessary for us to send our teams down to Chirk for lime or coal or anything else.

Mr. Seeborn.

55,578. If the Government were to lend money to purchase a farm at 3 per cent., would it not increase the competition and raise the price?—It would certainly increase the competition for farms, but at the same time I do not consider it would do any harm, because it would create a great deal more interest in the matter than before.

55,579. But you think it would increase the price?—Under the present state of the law I should not like even for an Act to be passed to advance this money. First of all a law must be passed so that it would be impossible to charge more for the land than its actual worth.

Sir John Llewelyn.

55,580. May I interpolate a question? That would not apply to those who are now freeholders, would it?—I consider that many freeholders are now in a very bad state, and I should suggest that the law should be even applied to them as well.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,581. How long has the agricultural depression lasted? When did it commence?—It commenced 18 years ago, but it has been felt very heavily for the last 10 years. It has been very oppressive for the last 10 years.

55,582. It commenced in the year 1876. Is that so?—Yes.

55,583. And it has been of course more acute in some years than others?—Yes, by a great deal.

55,584. Your good years were about the years 1890 and 1891?—We had better prices for our cattle in the years 1890 and 1891. Our country suffers a great deal from bad harvests because of the situation. It is a high country.

55,585. Do you think that one of the causes of the depression is the unfavourable seasons?—No doubt it has had a great effect in that direction, but the condition of land in our neighbourhood has for many years been in a very bad state.

55,586. What do you mean by saying that the condition of the land has been in a wretched state?—Two parts out of every three of the land in our neighbourhood is mountain land—enclosed land. For many years this has been cultivated to such an extent that it now has ceased almost to grow anything, and also the manure from the farmyard is not applied to such land.

55,587. What you say is, that the land has become impoverished?—Certainly. Comparing it with 25 years ago, it is not of the same value or nearly what it was then—the nature of the land is such.

55,588. Why do not the farmers manure it?—I believe the position of the farmers does not enable them to cultivate the land and to manure it as they have done in former years. For many years the estate of Colonel West, in the neighbourhood, was offered for sale—it was in the market—and that had such a depressing effect upon the tenants that they did not carry on the cultivation of the land as they ought to have done.

55,589. Then you think that in order for a tenant to make the best of the farm, he should have security of tenure?—That is certain; it is impossible to get the present tenants to advance the capital for the improvement of their farms on the security they have at present.

55,590. Is there any other cause that you can assign for the depression?—The high rate of wages in our neighbourhood has militated as much against the farmer as the high rents.

55,591. Do you consider that the working expenses of a farm are higher now than they were, say, 15 or 20 years ago?—I should say, compared with 30 years ago, they are as high again, and they are much higher than they were 20 years ago.

55,592. You think that the landlords have not recognised this fact in making abatements or reductions of rent?—I do not believe they do.

55,593. What is your opinion with respect to the cropping clauses that we find in the agreements?—I believe there ought to be some clauses to prevent tenants from impoverishing the land. I believe at the same time, that if the land was let with greater security of tenure, that would do away a great deal with the necessity for those clauses.

55,594. Do you think, supposing a landlord let a farm to a man of good character, that there would be any necessity for a cropping clause in an agreement?—I consider that the laws relating to land at present are so harsh that they almost compel the landlord and the tenant to be opposed to each other, and they create a spirit of competition between the two.

55,595. How would you rectify that condition of things?—I should suggest that a court should be established whereby a landlord, if he found that the tenant was not doing his duty to the farm, and on the other hand, the tenant if he considered that his landlord was not doing his duty to him, could appeal to this court, and that the court should decide between them, instead of allowing them to quarrel with each other about the matter.

55,596. What you say is this, that one of the functions of a land court should be to settle all disputes between a landlord and a tenant?—To examine carefully and decide upon the actual value of the land, and also to decide disputes between the two.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. HUGH HUGHES.

55,597. To settle the question of rents as well as to settle disputes?—Yes.

55,598. What do you mean by a land court?—I should suggest a court something like the proposed district council, I mean courts consisting of persons who are practical men, and who know the value of land in the immediate neighbourhood. I should suggest a court composed of persons of that kind, something equivalent to a district council.

55,599. Do you mean that the district council itself should act as a court, or that the district council or any other public body should nominate the court?—No, I would not suggest that the district council should be the land court, inasmuch as persons may be on the district council that have had no practical acquaintance with land; but I should propose that the district council should have something to say to it—that they should have a portion of the power of nominating others in conjunction, perhaps, with the county council.

55,600. The important thing, if I understand you aright, that you advocate is that men who have local knowledge of the districts should determine the question of the rent between landlord and tenant?—That is what I want.

55,601. Would you rather allow a public body such as the council to appoint the persons or person, or would you allow the Government to appoint the officials?—If the Government were to select practical and experienced men, I should have no objection to that. The only reason I suggested the district council or the county council was because they would have more personal knowledge of the persons.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,602. Did I understand you to say that it was a disadvantage to the tenants in your neighbourhood that the landlords and agents lived a long way off?—It is a great disadvantage that the landlords do not associate more with their tenantry, and inquire into the condition of their holdings, than they do at the present time. I consider it a greater detriment to our interest than anything we have in connexion with farming.

55,603. Then you say that if they only knew your position they would deal more leniently with you?—There is no doubt about that, in my opinion. If they could only once believe that the depression is as acute as it is there is no doubt in my opinion that they would come to see things as we do.

55,604. Does not Colonel Hughes come to see farms that are to let in your neighbourhood when they are to let. He is a very competent man?—I have stated in my evidence that Sir Watkin's estate has improved in a wonderful degree simply from the fact that a competent gentleman like Colonel Hughes had been appointed agent to the estate.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

55,605. What class of labourers generally go into the quarries; are they able-bodied men or aged or young?—Many of the lads go there to practice sett-making, but many of them prefer going there as labourers rather than remaining on a farm.

55,606. Then do they get higher wages than you can afford to pay them?—I believe they have higher wages and they have also a great deal more time for themselves.

55,607. Then with regard to the accommodation you spoke of in answer to Professor Rhys. Did you find that accommodation upon the farm when you bought it or did you make the accommodation yourself for the servants?—In my farm when I went there the young men labourers, the servants, slept outside. I did not like the arrangement and I altered it.

55,608. Should not we infer from that if all tenants were freeholders they would have better accommodation for their servants than that which is given by the landlords?—I have not the least doubt but that if some scheme were adopted to make the present tenants freeholders it would be far more advantageous in every respect.

55,609. Why are you in favour of workmen keeping a cow?—As a rule these workmen have large families, and it is my firm belief that by keeping a cow and having plenty of milk, which is the most nutritive element they can possibly get, it is a great advantage to them in rearing their families.

55,610. Does it not also make a man more attached to his home?—It would not make much difference in that respect in our country; but I think it would be a great blessing for them to have a plot of land to look after rather than idle their time.

55,611. Do you consider that a man who keeps a cow can give you a week's notice, and leave you the same as a man who is only a hired labourer in a cottage?—It makes no difference yonder. There are a few of that sort in our neighbourhood, but very few, and we do not find them more inclined to roam about than others.

Chairman.

55,612. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent. "Are you not aware that Mr. Probert has had agricultural training"?—He does not prove that whatever, in his behaviour and transactions.

55,613. "Has not Mr. Probert farmed some farms for Colonel West"?—So far as I am able to see, Mr. Probert does not pay the least attention to the state or condition of the land, but simply to the buildings.

55,614. "Has not Mr. Probert been sub-agent for 16 years"?—I cannot tell you how long he has been sub-agent, but he never comes to our country unless it is something in connexion with the buildings.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. HUGH HUGHES.

55,615-6. The following question is by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you mean to say that "because a railway does not come close to you "you think it is of no benefit to have it somewhere near?"—There is not such a great deal of agricultural land in that portion of the valley through which the line passes, but it is in the portion of the valley where I reside in that the agricultural district lies, and to them there is no advantage, or very little.

55,617. The following questions are by Mr. Richards: "Have not the small proprietors "during the last 30 years sold their properties "to several large landowners in the district?"—I know that in several instances small holdings have been sold, but the large estate owners have been able to give a larger price than others for them.

55,618. "Are not farmers under landlords far "better off now than freeholders with mortgage "interest to pay?"—I have said before that small freeholders in my district are worse off than the others, because of the present state of the law with regard to land.

55,619. The following questions are handed in by Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones: "Have you heard "any complaints in your districts as to the "working of the game laws?"—If I reply to that question am I to consider that I am merely stating my opinion—what I have heard in the district about this question.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,620. Make a general statement.

Lord Kenyon.

55,621. If you make a random statement you will very likely be asked to give instances?—I will say that as I go on, I have heard of two.

Chairman.

55,622. Two complaints with regard to game? Yes.

55,623. Will you state them?—This is a case which took place 40 years ago.

55,624. We need not go into that?—Then this is a case nearer home. A man told me of it the week before last. He took it for granted that I was appearing before the Commissioners to-day. He asked me whether I would not make the statement that I am about to state now:—A few years ago gamekeepers in the employ of Mr. West took some hampers containing pheasants into a field belonging to one of the tenants and let them loose during the absence of the tenant in the market. He was in the market and the field was a field of corn.

55,625. This question is also by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "What was the name of the farm?"—Penybryn.

Chairman—continued.

55,626. And the name of the tenant?—The tenant at that time was a Mr. Richard Hughes. It was a brother of Mr. Richard Hughes who told me this.

Lord Kenyon.

55,627. May I ask, how long ago this took place?—It may have been from 10 to 12 years.

55,628. What time of the year was it?—They were removing the pheasants from the place where they were hatched to put them into the plantations.

55,629. How far from the plantation was it?—The plantation was the other side of the field.

Sir John Llewellyn.

55,630. Was any compensation paid?—I cannot tell whether any compensation was paid, but the tenant went to Mr. Evans, the agent, and Mr. Evans told him that such a thing should never occur again.

Chairman.

55,631. Mr. Llewellyn Jones' questions continued: "Do you know whether a house was "built on a portion of a field belonging to one "Lewis Edwards?"—A portion of a field was bought from a farm for the purpose of erecting a house for the gamekeeper, who had retired, and so far as I am able to know no notice had been given of this land, and no reduction made in the rent on that account.

Sir John Llewellyn.

55,632. How large a piece of land was it?—So far as I can ascertain, about a quarter of an acre; it may be more.

55,633. What was the size of the farm from which this was taken?—I am not certain, but I should say it would be about 80 acres.

Chairman.

55,634. The following questions are by Mr. Vincent: "What was the name of the keeper "who turned out the pheasants?"—The name I had from David Hughes was John Jones, the person who erected the house I recently referred to.

55,635. Is he alive now?—He is.

55,636. "Do you know whether any damage "was done or any claim made for damage at "the time?"—The brother did not know whether he had compensation at all, or whether the pheasants did any damage.

55,637. "How have you ascertained the facts "about the land being taken for a cottage without "notice?"—The tenant told me.

The witness withdrew.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. J. JONES.

Mr. JOHN JONES (Nant) called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

55,638. Is this your statement which has been read over to you, and is it correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was then read]:—

Evidence of Mr. John Jones, Nant, Glyn-dyfrdwy, quarryman. About 20 years ago (1874) I took a farm called Cwm Tydi on the estate of Col. Tottenham. The farm was 60 acres, including a sheep walk; rent, 48*l*. He promised me 5*l*. a year abatement for three years, as the farm was in a poor condition when I entered. When I entered I had a good deal of stock, and was entirely free from liabilities. I was on this farm for nine years. I went on to the farm without a written agreement at all. Some eight years after I entered, they tried to get me to sign an agreement binding me to certain things which I objected to. The landlord thereupon served me with notice to quit. At the end of the year in which I was served with notice, I sold everything except the sheep; and I tried to sell the sheep to the landlord, but he would not consent to take them. The landlord failed to get a tenant for that year, and I continued for another year, myself giving notice to quit at the close of the year. The succeeding year they managed to let the farm. I then was persuaded to take a farm called Tynllwyn, near Glyndyfrdwy. Its size was about 55 acres, rent 40*l*. I entered this farm when things were beginning to go back, and borrowed 50*l*. to help me. I was on this farm for five years, and myself gave notice at the close. I sold all my stock, &c. The prices when I left were so low that I lost something like 250*l*. The landlord refused to take the sheep off my hands, and I was thus compelled to sell them at a loss. I can mention the names of other farmers who have gone back in their affairs, and some of them now compelled to give up farming. I can hand in a list if required. A very large number of changes have taken place in the last 20 years; on some farms two or three changes. I can hand in a list of these also. I understand that when the railway was made through Glyn-dyfrdwy, the rents of the various farms were reduced somewhat; but that subsequently they were increased to the old rate. I remember the case of Ty'nywern, a tramway was made up to the hill, the rent was first of all reduced by 2*l*., and subsequently raised to the old rent."

55,639. Have you got the lists referred to in the statement?—Yes.

"Plas Issa farm (the same farm) was let at 50*l*. rent previous to the farm having been sold to Col. Tottenham. It has been let for 120*l*. after Col. Tottenham purchased the farm, up to a recent time.

"The following persons have been reduced to labourers on Col. Tottenham's estate: William Roberts, Penybryn, Glyndyfrdwy; Thomas Davies, Aberddu, Llantysilio; and Cadwaladar Williams, Alltycelyn, Glyndyfrdwy (deceased)."

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,640. Do you mean to say that these tenants failed in farming, or what?—It is very likely that that is the reason they gave up.

55,641. Then do you consider the farms were too dear?—As a rule that is the complaint.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,642. Were these people, who were reduced to the position of labourers, industrious and thrifty men as tenant farmers?—They were.

55,643. Do you contend that these people were reduced to that position entirely owing to having to pay high rents?—In all likelihood—there is every probability of it.

55,644. What were these certain things in the agreement which you object to?—There are several clauses in it.

55,645. What are some of them?—The tenant is compelled to leave the produce upon the farm, without having any compensation for it.

55,646. How was it when you entered the farm; was there any produce on the land when you went in?—That is as it should be; you have the produce when you enter.

55,647. Had you any produce on the land when you entered?—I had not.

55,648. And yet you were expected to leave produce on the land when you left?—Yes.

55,649. You said that there were no crops on the farm when you entered?—I cannot say that. It had been grazed, the greater portion of it, and the manure had been sold the first time I went.

55,650. Was that selling of the manure contrary to the custom of the country?—I cannot say that.

55,651. What is the custom on Major Tottenham's estate between an incoming and outgoing tenant with respect to the produce on the farm?—As a rule the incoming tenant makes an arrangement with the outgoing tenant for the purchase of whatever he has on the farm which he requires.

55,652. When Major Tottenham asked you to sign this agreement, which provided, as you say, that you were to leave the produce on the farm, was he trying to establish a new custom on the estate?—There had been no agreement.

55,653. You never signed the agreement?—I never signed the agreement at all.

55,654. But I suppose there would be a certain custom on the estate which would be observed, independent of any agreement?—The custom on the estate is to consume it upon the farm.

Chairman.

55,655. I have some questions sent up by Mr. R. S. Richards: "Were the tenants who became labourers persons who were labourers before, and borrowed their capital for farm"ing?"—I do not know of that borrowing, but I know that some of them had capital.

55,656. "Please give the tenant's names of 'Plas Issa for the last 15 years?'—The first was a widow lady of the name of Jones.

Mr. RICHARD SEPTIMUS RICHARDS re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

55,657. What have you to say?—I only wish to give you, with reference to Plas Issa, the particulars of the changes of tenancy during the last 15 years. Thomas White was tenant in 1880 at a rent of 120*l.* per annum. He left because he would not sign the usual form of agreement on the estate. He was succeeded by John Jones, who occupied till 1889 from 1882, and I believe he fell into a state of ill-health, and died, either before he left, or very shortly after he left. Then the third tenancy commenced in 1889, to the present tenant, who is now in occupation. That is all I have to say.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,657*a*. Who drew up this form of agreement?—Will you let me look at it first? [The agreement was handed to the witness.] Major Tottenham usually draws out his form of agreement, but this is a copy of an agreement drawn out by one of our clerks.

55,658. Who drafted it in the first instance?—Major Tottenham, I think.

55,659. Is that the signature of John Jones?—No, it is a copy.

Lord Kenyon.

55,660. Did he sign any agreement?—Yes.

55,661. Is that your signature as witness?—No, this is a copy of my signature. This is a copy of the agreement.

The witnesses withdrew.

Mr. JOHN JONES (Plasnewydd), called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

55,672. This is your evidence and it is correct?—It is correct as far as I am able to understand it.

[The following statement of the witness was read:—

Evidence of Mr. John Jones, Plas Newydd, Bryneglwys, Corwen.

I occupy my own farm now, being an encroachment from the common made some 70 years ago. It is only about seven acres, but I have built on it. I intend to give evidence with respect to Tanyfoel, a farm on the Rhagatt estate. It is about 76 acres, arable land. My father and I lived there about 75 years. When my father entered I believe he paid 50*l.* rent. When my father took the farm it was in an uncultivated state. Mr. Lloyd, of Rhagatt,

Chairman—continued.

I think that the next tenant was William Evans. I do not know the name of the English family who came subsequently. It was "Purchase" or something of that kind. Mr. White followed and then John Jones.

55,662. Did John Jones sign the agreement?—Yes, certainly, he must have done. This is a copy of it.

55,663. Was that the last witness?—Yes, the last witness.

Chairman.

55,664. Two questions are handed in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "What was the rent of 'Plas Issa before 1880?'—120*l.*

55,665. Before 1880?—Yes, paid by a man named Hutchinson or Aitchison, I think.

55,666. "Was it 50*l.*?"—Oh, no; nothing of the kind. It has never been 50*l.* It has never been less than 95*l.*, and 95*l.* is paid now.

55,667. Then it is not true that he left the farm because he neglected to sign the agreement?—Who.

55,668. John Jones. He says so in his evidence?—Yes, but you are referring to another farm. He occupied a farm on the other side of the river from Plas Issa.

Lord Kenyon.

55,669. Was that the same agreement, or the same form?—The same form, yes.

55,670. Then he signed it in the one place and neglected to sign it in the other?—No. He had the farm of Cwm Tydi on the other side of the river. He signed an agreement, but it was for another farm on the other side of the river. This is another John Jones, not this man at all.

55,671. I see; there are two John Joneses?—Oh, yes, we have a great many John Joneses.

the then landlord, promised that if my father took the farm neither he nor his descendants would be disturbed. My father lived there till he was 91. After my father's death my brother took the farm and he held it for two years. At the close of this period I was offered the farm. This would be about 35 years ago. I held it for 20 years. Mr. Williams, the agent who let me the farm, died, and Mr. Reed came instead of him. The state of the house and buildings was very bad. They took part of the roof of the house off, and left it so for nearly two years. I frequently went to the agent to try to get him to complete the work. I finally complained to the landlady, Mrs. Lloyd, and she ordered the repairs to be completed. Mr. Richard Wynne then became agent. Within a month after he became agent I received notice to quit. He had never been near the farm. I thought it was with a view to raising the rent. After a time I went to Corwen to see Mr. Wynne. I met him and I could get from him no reason for giving me notice. At last he told me that he would not let it without seeing me again. I soon afterwards heard that he was about to let the farm. I went to Mrs. Lloyd. She promised to speak to the agent, and to try to let me continue in the farm. On the next rent day I saw the agent, and he allowed me to continue in the farm. Next year again I received notice to quit. I again went to Mrs. Lloyd. She declined this time to have anything to do with me. Some friends of mine then tried their best to get the agent to let the farm to me again, but with no effect. The farm was let to a person who was formerly a Wesleyan, but who went to Church subsequently. I sold all the stock, but was unable to come to any agreement with the new tenant for the purchase of the manure, growing crops, &c. They refused to pay anything for them. I subsequently consulted Mr. Swetenham, of Chester, and found that the notice was bad. I then stuck to the house, and remained there for a year. That year the agent compelled me to pay the two rents at once, contrary to custom. I claimed 50*l.* damages for unlawful entry on the farm, but did not receive a penny. I received another notice, and when the 25th of March came, I locked every gate in the farm, and some men came to remonstrate with me. No one sowed any crops that year. On the 30th May they sent to ask me to come to Denbigh with a view to arriving at some arrangement. An arrangement was eventually come to. They tried to compel me to give up the land now in my occupation, which is land encroached from the common by my father and myself. The result of my ejection from Tynyfoel was the death of my wife and one of my sons, who grieved over it. Before I left I had bought 20 gates and left them there for the succeeding tenant. I was thus turned out without a house, and for a short time put up in a neighbour's farm. Mr. Wynne saw the son of this neighbour, and remonstrated with him for taking me in. I then left and was for some time at the Wesleyan Chapel House. Richard Wynne reduced the rent from 50*l.* to 40*l.* for the new tenants, and repaired a cottage for them so that the tenant got 8*l.* for that cottage.

Lord Kenyon.

55,673. Had you any quarrel with your landlady?—No, I was a great favourite with the lady. She gave me 5*l.* as a present.

55,674. Then you had a quarrel with the agent, Mr. Wynne?—I had.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS JONES re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

55,675. Where do you live?—Brynmelyn, near Bala.

55,676. You have been good enough to come forward in order to give some evidence as regards amendments in the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

55,677. Will you kindly tell us what you desire to state?—Stock sheep on upland farms differ much from ordinary stock of a farm, for a stock that has been inured and accustomed to a certain hill, if once removed cannot be replaced for years, and it is beneficial to the landlord, as well as the tenant, that they should not be sold off. The great difficulties in re-stocking are:—

(1st), difficulty in getting suitable sheep.

(2nd), expense of inuring and accustoming new sheep.

(3rd), no drafts could be made for three or four years, and in the case of ewes for from five to seven years.

It is the custom for the new tenant to take the sheep at a valuation, and the price they fetch is about one-third more than the price they would bring if sold off. But instances have occurred, to my knowledge, where the landlord, in cases where no tenant is forthcoming, has refused to buy, to the great loss of the tenant. I would advise making it compulsory on the landlord to buy at a valuation in cases where a tenant is not forthcoming. In other words, I would make this custom compulsory. This could be done by adding a clause to Part 3 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, to the effect that where a tenant is leaving a farm with stock sheep on unenclosed hills, and in case no new tenant is forthcoming, the sheep shall be taken by the landlord at a valuation. No sheep but those reared on the hills and inured and accustomed to their sheep-walk to be so valued, and no greater number than the sheepwalk can bear. I believe these views would meet the approbation of the majority of sheep farmers.

Lord Kenyon.

55,678. You would stint the sheep-walk, too—you would limit the number of sheep?—Yes, I would make a limit, for I have known cases where a man has bought to swell the stock, which is unfair to the buyer.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,679. When we were down in Carmarthenshire, I think some of the landlords there had a clause in the agreement providing for a fixed price on the sheep. You disapprove of that?—Yes, I do. I disapprove of that. I know of some cases in the county of Monmouth in the south-western part that have the same clauses, but it is not general.

55,680. What would be your objection against that provision?—Well, it is disadvantageous to the tenant. I do not believe it would be such an incentive for him to improve his flock.

Mr. T. JONES.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

55,681. No encouragement?—No encouragement to improve his flock.

Mr. Seebohm.

55,682. Would there be difficulty in defining what class of farm this clause applied to?—No, I do not believe there would be any difficulty in that, because it would only apply to farms where there are uninclosed hills—sheep-walks.

55,683. And the sheep walk must be on the uninclosed hills?—Yes, the sheep must be those that are reared and inured and accustomed to those hills.

Mr. Seebohm—continued.

55,684. It would not apply to sheep-walks where a common had been divided amongst several tenants?—No. I know of two instances this year where the landlords have bought the sheep themselves—they could not find a tenant.

Chairman.

55,685. You wish that to be compulsory?—Yes.

55,686. In all cases?—In all cases.

55,687. Where the land is not re-let, that the landlord should be obliged to buy the sheep at a valuation?—Yes, because otherwise it is a national loss.

55,688. You are aware that that is the law in Scotland?—No, I did not know that that was so.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EVAN JEFFREYS called and examined.

Chairman.

55,689. Is this a statement of your evidence which has been read over to you, and is it correct?—Yes, but there are two things which I have forgotten to insert in it.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

The evidence of Mr. Evan Jeffreys, late of Dolydd farm, near Cefnmawr, Ruabon.

I became tenant of Dolydd farm, the property of Mr. J. C. Edwards, Trevor Hall, Llangollen, in the beginning of the year 1891. The rent was 135*l.* a year, subject to an allowance of 10*l.* a year for two years. At the time I took the farm I asked Mr. Edwards to let me see the agreement. Mr. E. Lloyd Edwards, the son, was the only other person present at the time. In reply, Mr. Edwards said, "Go there and take possession, Jeffreys, that will be the best agreement you can have." When he was showing me the farm, I pointed out to him that several new buildings were required. Everything I asked for at the time he promised to do, and John Jones, foreman carpenter, in his employ, took the dimensions of some of the buildings which were to be made. He promised also to build a house on the farm to be ready by the following June; but as this was not ready for occupation till December, I was compelled to live at Argoed, the house I previously occupied, and carry the milk there, a distance of about three quarters of a mile. This new house was not perfectly completed during the three years I was tenant. The buildings promised were never made, and I was compelled to use the parlour as a granary, while my carts and other implements were rotting in the weather, for want of a proper shed. Having no suitable buildings, I was compelled to fit up the cart house for the young cattle during winter. On rent days and other times, I invariably called attention to the state of things, but each time the answer invariably was "You shall have the buildings as soon as we can." I was allowed the 10*l.* in the rent for the first two years, after which I was told that, in future, I was to pay the full rent. I paid the full rent (135*l.*) for the last year I was there.

On the 22nd March 1893, a messenger came to Dolydd, saying Mr. Edwards wanted to see me at the office, but he did not say what for. I was from home at the time. In the course of the same day a message came to say Mr. Edwards wanted me at the office, to sign the agreement. Further on in the day, two persons came in the yard, just as I was arriving home from Oswestry, and gave me a copy of the agreement, with strict orders to come to sign it in the office the next day. My wife had previously told them that I would not go to the office until I saw what was in the agreement. I read the agreement that night, and found it contained clauses which I could not agree to, and therefore I did not go to the office. I considered it a harsh and arbitrary agreement all through. On Saturday, March 25th, I received notice to quit. After this, I saw Mr. Edwards many times in reference to this matter. I pointed out to him that I was losing money there, and asked for a reduction in the rent. This, however, he refused to make. After several interviews with him and his bailiff, he said he was willing to release some of the clauses, and make certain concessions in regard to manure, hedging, and allowance in rent. On my requesting him, however, to insert these concessions in the agreement, he wanted me to place confidence in him, that he would do everything right, and expressed his surprise that I should doubt his word. Having been disappointed with his promises in respect to the farm buildings, I told him that I would have it all in black and white, so that when he bound me, he would at the same time be binding himself. I arranged for the sale at Dolydd to take place on the 2nd of March, Mr. Frank Lloyd, being the auctioneer. As soon as the placards were issued, the auctioneer received a letter requesting him to keep back from the sale money the amount of rent which would be due for the current half year, and also prohibiting the removal of the produce. On the morning of the sale Mr. Lloyd received a letter to the same effect. He, however, took no notice of the letters and handed the money to me. I left the farm on May 1st last. I consider that as the farm in every way was in a very bad condition when I took it, and as I have expended a great deal of labour and capital upon it, I am a loser to the extent of about half the total rent of the whole period of my tenancy. On August 18th last, I received a letter threatening to treat me as a trespasser if I took the necessary steps to harvest the fields of wheat which I had sown on the farm.

Mr. J. C. EDWARDS called and examined.

Chairman.

55,694. Where do you live?—Trevor Hall.

55,695. You are the landlord of the last witness?—Of the Dolydd farm.

55,696. Do you wish to say anything upon his evidence?—Yes. He stated the case pretty fairly, with the exception that he commenced his tenancy on the 25th March 1891, and it terminated in 1894, this last March. The rent is, as he states, 135*l*. That includes the tithe, which I pay.

55,697. What is there that you wish to rebut. You agree upon all that?—I will go on if your Lordship will permit me. When he took the farm there was no house at the time.

55,698. Did you promise to build him one?—I did, and I built him a house at a cost of about 450*l*.

55,699. When was that house built?—I am not quite sure when it was ready for occupation. He says in December. I think it was not so late as that, but I am not able to say exactly.

55,700. The house was not ready for occupation till December. Is that so?—It may be so, but I am not able to say.

55,701. Where did he live up to that time?—He lived at his former farm. During the time I was building the house I allowed him 15*l*. towards the rent. I allowed him, as he states, 10*l*. a year for two years, and I also allowed him an abatement of 10 per cent. for one year, amounting to 12*l*. 10*s*.

55,702. You agree upon that. He says: "I was allowed 10 per cent. for the first two years," but after the first two years was anything allowed to him?—I allowed him 10 per cent.

55,703. For two years?—No. I allowed 10*l*. a year for two years, and I allowed him 10 per cent. afterwards for one year. That was 12*l*. 10*s*. His tenancy only existed for three years.

55,704. How about the buildings. He says: "The buildings promised were never made, and "I was compelled to use the parlour as a "granary." Is that correct?—With regard to buildings, I promised to build him a granary and a cart-house underneath. That would have been done in due time. I may state that I have only had this property for about three years.

Lord Kenyon.

55,690. Have you got the agreement?—I have a copy (handing same).

55,691. What were the parts of the agreement that you considered arbitrary?—I consider it harsh and unjust all through; but there are some clauses which I especially object to.

55,692. Which are they?—There is one clause which compels the tenant, if a wall comes down, to put it up at his own expense to the wall plat—that means the wall of the building. That is how I understand it—every wall.

55,693. Do you mean this clause, that he has to leave the buildings, except the roofs, in good and tenantable repair?—I refer to that.

Re-examined 45,730.

55,705. I want to keep you to rebutting evidence, please. You agree that there was no granary built?—I wish just to explain the reason why the granary was not built as soon as he wished it. I have only had this property for three years, and during that time I have spent in building new farmhouses and new buildings, and repairing the old buildings, over 4,000*l*. There were other things more pressing, and his granary would have been built in due time.

55,706. There is nothing between you up to now. There is no rebutting evidence as far as I can see. You are agreed so far?—He omitted to state that I allowed him 15*l*. towards the rent of the house, when the house was being built. He omitted also to state that I allowed him 10 per cent. abatement for one year in addition to the 10*l*. a year further.

55,707. On the 22nd March 1893, did a messenger come and say that you wanted to see him at the office?—It is very probable.

55,708. You do not deny that?—I cannot deny that.

55,709. Did two persons come and give him a copy of the agreement. Do you know that?—I do not know that at all. I do not know that it was, necessarily, two persons. Very likely some one person gave him a copy of the agreement.

55,710. Then he says he did not go to the office to sign it. He considered the agreement harsh and arbitrary. That is his opinion. Then he says that on Saturday, March 25th, he received notice to quit. Is that right?—Yes, no doubt.

55,711. After that did he see you many times?—Yes. I tried in every way I possibly could to meet him and conciliate him. I did not wish the man to leave.

55,712. He says he pointed out that he was losing money. Did he tell you that?—He stated that, no doubt.

55,713. And he asked for a reduction of rent?—Yes.

55,714. This, however, was refused. Is that right?—Yes.

55,715. Then he says there were several more interviews. Is that right?—Probably. I should meet the man occasionally.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. J. C. EDWARDS.

Chairman—continued.

55,716. And that you made some concessions as regards manure, and hedging, and allowance in rent?—I had promised that if he would remain on the farm I would meet him in the rent if the times kept bad. I also promised him that I would lay all the hedges, at a cost of about 15*l*.

55,717. You told him that you would make everything right?—No doubt.

55,718. Did he request you to insert these concessions in the agreement?—I do not recollect that he did. He may have done so. I have no recollection of his doing so.

55,719. You do not deny that he might have done?—He might have done.

55,720. Did you ask him to place confidence in you?—Yes, I very likely did.

55,721. And say that you would make everything right?—Yes, I had every disposition to meet the man in every way I could.

55,722. Then he gave you notice to quit?—I gave him notice to quit.

55,723. Did the sale take place on the 2nd of March?—Yes, I think so.

55,724. Did the auctioneer receive a letter requesting him to keep back from the sale money the amount of rent which would be due for the current half year?—Yes, very likely.

55,725. And also prohibiting the removal of the produce?—Very likely.

55,726. In what condition do you consider the farm was when he took it?—It was in a fair condition. It was not in good condition, and on that account I allowed him the 10*l*. for two years.

55,727. He says he expended a great deal of labour and capital upon it?—I do not agree with him there, because he had only one man working upon the place.

55,728. Did he receive a letter on August 18th threatening to treat him as a trespasser if he took the necessary steps to harvest two fields of wheat?—Yes; the letter has been put in, I think.

55,729. Then all there is between you is that you gave him 10*l*. a year for two years, and in addition 10 per cent. for another year?—May I explain a little further, if you will allow me. When he came to the farm he had the hay and straw from the outgoing tenant at a consuming price, that is, two thirds of the market value; and not only that, there was a stack of hay there which he would not take to. He declined to take to that stack of hay. I took to it, and paid the outgoing tenant for it. Some time after that he came to me and said he would like to have that stack of hay. I said, "Well, you cannot have it now, Jeffreys, because I have expended a part of it for myself, but you shall have a portion of it—you shall have one third." He had one third of it, for which he paid nothing. When he was leaving the farm he sold off all the hay and straw, although I gave him notice that I should expect him to leave the hay and straw there, and be paid for it at a consuming price, the same as when he entered the farm. In spite of that he sold it, and in fact my bailiff bought a stack of hay to the amount of 31*l*. 5*s*., I believe, or something like that, at the auction. Then with regard to the agreement which he has put in, I do not know exactly what that agreement is. I should like to be allowed to look at it. [The agreement was handed to witness.] This is the agreement which I wanted him to sign, actually (handing in another agreement). I may state that the basis of that agreement is the same as the Chirk Castle estate. He mentioned several clauses in that agreement to which he objected. I explained to him that they would never be acted upon—that they were usual things in agreements, of that kind. In fact, I myself farmed under the same agreement. I have a farm on the Chirk Castle estate on exactly the same conditions, but I have added clauses here which I consider are favourable to the tenants. I wish to make the agreement as fair and as reasonable as possible. With regard to the notice I served him with in respect of the wheat crop, that wheat was not sown in proper time. It was sown in this year. The custom of the country is, and I am so advised by Mr. Samuel Williams, whose name has been mentioned several times to-day, that if the wheat is not sown in the old year, the old tenant has no claim to the crop but I did not wish to take any advantage of him. I was quite prepared to pay him for the seed and the sowing and the ploughing, and I told him so in the notices I sent him. I do not think I have anything more to state. I think I have rebutted all his points.

55,738.

Mr. EVAN JEFFREYS recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

55,730. Do you wish to say anything in reply?—Do you want to ask me questions, or shall I make a statement?

55,731. You can contradict anything in which you allege your landlord is wrong?—Mr. Edwards, I understand, stated that I had 15*l*. allowance for the house before it was built. That is not correct. I had an allowance of 7*l*. or 7*l*. 10*s*.

55,732. You had an allowance of 7*l*. or 7*l*. 10*s*., and not 15*l*?—Not 15*l*. He refused to pay me for the seed clover, which he ought to have done, and for the water, and he owes me for that yet. I was compelled to pay for water for the supply of my stock. I have nothing more to add.

55,733. Did you sell the straw off the farm and refuse to leave it at a consuming price for the incoming tenant?—I sold all that was left. I had used the greater part of the straw.

55,734. And you sold what was left?—I sold what was left.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. EVAN JEEFREYS.

Chairman—continued.

55,735. When you came to the farm, did you take the straw at a consuming price?—I did not understand that I took the straw at the consuming price. I only received the portion of the stack referred to at the consuming price; it was one-third of the hay.

55,736. But when you came to the farm, did you take over the straw and hay at the consuming price?—They say that I did; but now we go on to Mr. J. C. EDWARDS recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

55,738. I have some questions which have been handed up by Mr. Llewellyn Jones. The first is: "How many tenants on your estate signed the agreement in the original form?"—I cannot exactly say. I think three or four of them did; but I modified the whole thing to some extent. I added the new clauses that I have spoken of. They have all signed now.

Professor Rhys.

55,739. That is to say, they have the agreement in a modified form?—I inserted one or two clauses.

Chairman.

55,740. "When was the agreement taken to the various tenants for their consideration and signature?"—I can hardly say when it was.

55,741. "Was it two or three days before the 25th March, the day on which notice was to be given?"—Probably it was. I did not anticipate any refusal.

55,742. "Was notice served on several tenants who refused to sign it?"—Yes, it was.

Lord Kenyon.

55,743. Did they leave their farms?—Oh, dear, no—some of them did—Yes, two of them did.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS HUGHES called and examined.

Chairman.

55,748. Are you bailiff to Mr. Edwards?—Yes.

55,749. Are you acquainted with the terms of Mr. Edwards' agreements?—Yes.

55,750. Do you know that in the agreement there is this clause—"And further to leave thereon for the landlord, to whom the same shall belong, all such straw, chaff, colder, turnips, manure, compost or ashes, hay, grass or grasses, tares, vetches, roots, vegetables, or other green crop, or hedgebote, as may remain unconsumed at the end of the tenancy, without compensation, and that whether the tenancy ends by forfeiture, or by notice to quit, or otherwise." Are you aware of that?—I am aware it is stated in the agreement that the tenant is to be allowed compensation for all hay and straw left at the end of the holding.

55,751. Do you know that all that is to be left to the landlord without compensation.

Chairman—continued.

I thought at the time that it was full valuation for it. I did not understand that it was the consuming price.

55,737. This question is handed up by Mr. Vincent: "Did not Mr. Edwards tell you that when you paid for the hay and straw he would pay you for the water and clover?"—No, he did not mention that to me.

Professor Rhys.

55,744. Two, including this gentleman?—Three, including this gentleman.

Chairman.

55,745. "Do you think it a fair clause in your agreement that the tenant should leave all unconsumed crops to the landlord without compensation?"—It is not in my agreement. It is provided to be paid for at the consuming price. Then, my Lord, the tenant has denied one thing here; but I have my bailiff present who can prove if necessary what I have stated.

55,746. I think we would sooner have the landlord's testimony than the bailiff's?—But he has given my statement a blank denial; and I can prove by my bailiff, who is present, that what I stated is correct.

55,747. You mean to prove that it was 15*l.* instead of 7*l.*?—No. He raised a question of my not paying him for the water and the clover. I sent word to him that if he would pay me for the hay and straw which he sold wrongly, I would pay him for the clover and the water. The fact of the matter is that he got 10*l.* over and above from me.

Chairman.

We will have the bailiff if you like, but his evidence must be confined to that question.

Mr. Edwards. There is another agreement.

Chairman.

This is the agreement given to the tenant of which he complains.

Mr. Jeffreys. I never saw the other one before.

The Witness. I quite understand this.

Chairman.

55,752. Now what do you want to state?—The reason that Mr. Edwards objected to pay for the water and the clover seed was because the tenant when leaving, sold all the hay to go off the premises. I bought the hay there on sale, and the tenant would not allow Mr. Edwards to have it at the consuming price. The hay was bought for about 31*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.*, and Mr. Edwards paid the full amount—whereas the tenant was overpaid about 10*l.*, and that is the reason Mr. Edwards objected to pay for the water and the clover, because he was already overpaid.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. T. HUGHES.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Jeffreys. I understood when I took the place that Mr. Edwards did not require any agreement, and I was to do the best I could with it as accommodation land.

The witness withdrew.

Mrs. ELIZABETH JONES called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

Chairman.

55,753. Was there any agreement signed between you and your landlord?

Mr. Jeffreys. There was not.

55,754. Is this your evidence?—Yes.

55,755. Has it been read over to you, and is it correct?—Yes.

[The following statement of the witness was read:—

Evidence of Mrs. Elizabeth Jones, of Tai Draw, near Bala.

An old relative of mine had raised a house on the common land at Llanuwchllyn more than a hundred years ago at his own cost. No one asked him rent or taxes for it. They then took four acres of land, not near the house, from Sir Watkin Wynn, for which they paid rent as shown in the receipts which I still have. On the common not near the fields or the house they raised a cowhouse. My mother made a will devising the dwelling-house to me. She came to live in her old age with me, being too old to live by herself in the house. Sir Watkin's head agent came to my mother and wished to have the house to add it to the fields. Her answer was that her daughter was to have it after her. When my mother died they offered me 50*l.* for the house, and I refused to accept this sum for a place worth 200*l.* An action was entered against me for my own property. I was taken to the assizes at Dolgelly. I knew no English, and it was all English there. I understand that they did not speak of the dwelling-house, treating it and the cowhouse as one thing. As the cowhouse had been raised a second time with timber given by Sir Watkin, my mother made no devise of it, but she expected some acknowledgment for it. Sir Watkin had never spent any money on the dwelling-house. My mother died in her 82nd year, and nobody had ever asked rent during the whole time she lived there. The loss of this place ruined me. I believe that if Sir Watkin and Colonel Hughes knew of the great injustice I suffered, they would not let my house be taken from me.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

55,756. What was the date of this action at the assizes?—About 24 years ago.

55,757. Did you have a solicitor or attorney?—I do not know what he was.

55,758. You had a lawyer, did you not, to act for you?—Yes, as far as I know, he was a lawyer.

55,759. Did you have a barrister—counsel—to appear for you?—I do not know. I do not understand English. They did what they liked.

55,760. Did you attend the trial at Dolgelly?—I did. Sir Watkin's steward had sent to us to come down to settle about the house. They were offering 50*l.* for it.

55,761. Did the jury find against you, or did you settle the action?—I asked him to settle that time, but he would not.

55,762. Did the jury give a verdict against you?—I lost the trial.

55,763. How was it that you did not set up at the trial that you had been in possession more than 20 years?—I did say so.

55,764. Did your lawyer tell you what the judge said about that. When your counsel said you had been in possession for 20 years; what did the other side say?—They said nothing to me. They were talking English.

55,765. Very likely, at the trial; but you had a lawyer who spoke Welsh, did you not?—I cannot say indeed what he could do.

55,766. What was the name of your solicitor? The same lawyer that made my mother's will.

55,767. Was it Mr. Davies Hughes, of Corwen?—Yes.

55,768. He can speak Welsh, can he not?—He was a Welshman, but he sided with them.

55,769. He told you that you had no good case in law, I suppose?—He did not tell me that the law was against me; other people said so.

55,770. Did not Mr. Hughes tell you why you had lost the case?—He did not. I did not speak to him after the trial. They had offered 50*l.* for it, and I refused it; it was too little.

55,771. Did he not tell you this, that it was evident you had been paying rent to Sir Watkin?—He did not say that, and we never did pay for the house.

55,772. You say you did not pay for the house, but you admit you paid for something or other. Are you quite certain that the rent did not include the house?—I paid for the land. We erected the buildings ourselves, and we paid for the land.

55,773. Very likely; but did you ever buy any bit of the Common?—No.

55,774. After the action was lost were you turned out of occupation?—I was not there. My mother let the house. They did turn us out, but I was not living there.

55,775. Had you let the property?—Yes, to John D. Morgan.

55,776. Was John D. Morgan turned out after the action?—He went out of his own accord. He had heard that he was about to be turned out.

55,777. Who has the property now?—Sir Watkin.

28 August 1894.]

Mr. E. DAVIES.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

55,778. Did Sir Watkin or his agent ever give you, or anyone representing this little estate, any compensation for the building of the dwelling-house and other buildings?—No, never.

55,779. Did they enforce the payment of the costs of the action?—They did.

55,780. Do you remember how much you had to pay?—I do not. It had murdered me almost. I do not remember. I had five little children.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD DAVIES called and examined.

Chairman.

55,783. Are you a tenant of Sir Watkin Wynn?—Yes.

55,784. Your farm is about 130 acres?—Yes.

55,785. What do you want to tell us?—I want to give evidence with regard to my own farm, in the township of Eglwysegle.

55,786. Then will you please do so?—I am Edward Davies, Dergoed, tenant farmer. Acreage of holding is from 120 to 130 acres with right of sheep run. Owner, Sir W. W. Wynn. I wish to give evidence about my own farm, which has been held for many generations by relations of my family. Also for the township of Eglwysegle. There are no recent enclosures in my district. I do not think there is any unenclosed land which could be cultivated with profit. We pasture as many sheep as we can without stint. And I consider the effect good. The rents of farms with sheep-walks are always considered by the new tenant and the landlord. I think matters are managed best on large estates. Politics, religion, or language make no difference whatever between me and my landlord. I can understand his English. The usual time for entering on a farm in the district is February 2nd. There are no leases in my district. I never heard of a single case in which tenants have asked for leases and been refused. I think tenants are quite as safe under agreements as under leases under good landlords. I never knew an owner using the stricter clauses in the agreements against good tenants. Tenants can obtain a copy of their agreements. A tenant must be very ignorant if he takes a farm without understanding his agreement. Rent is fixed at a lump sum. I believe there is uniformity in the rents of land of "similar quality" on the same estate. Rent of small holders not generally larger in proportion than that of large farmers in my district. There are no services whatever other than the payment of rent rendered by tenants. Holding is not let to the highest bidder. My rent has not been raised. I have received an abatement of 15 per cent. the last two years, 10 per cent. from Lady-day 1885 to Michaelmas 1889, and 5 per cent. for the half-year ending Lady-day 1890. Local rates have increased by about 40 per cent. and the increase paid by the tenant. There has been consolidation. The land has produced more through it. It has caused more labour to be employed. I think large farmers are the best farmers, and that they provide best for their families. There is no subletting. Rent is postponed. The farmer that borrows money to pay his rent must be a very poor class of farmer.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

55,781. Had you been brought up at this house?—Yes, and my mother as well. It had been erected on the Common. We enclosed four acres of land to it. The house and the out-buildings belonged to that.

55,782. Who began the building about 100 years ago; was it your grandfather or your father?—My grandmother in some way erected the building—that is, the person who brought up my mother.

Labourers are not scarce. There is no land going out of cultivation or insufficiently cultivated as far as I know. There is no waste land capable of being reclaimed profitably. Arable land has been laid down in pasture, because pasture pays better than ploughing. Root crops have increased, because they pay by fattening cattle and sheep. Fallowing has fallen into disuse because it will not pay double rent. Improvements generally made by the landlord; buildings for stock, tanks for preserving liquid manure, protection from river encroachment, gates and posts. There is no co-operation in improvement, to my knowledge. I am not acquainted with a case of improvement partly or wholly effected by a tenant. I am aware of the existence of the Agricultural Holdings Act. I do not know of a case of agreements contracting out of the custom of the country. The landowner buys the sheep at a valuation. There has been no trouble as to game after the Game Act came into operation. There are no freeholders living on their own farms in my district. Rents could be paid if the sons of tenant farmers did not work on the farms. I know of farmers without sons who have managed to pay their way, and I know of farmers who have set their sons up in business or on other farms and who have given portions to their daughters. My opinion as to the establishment of a land court is, that the landlord and his tenant would be strangers and not friends. I would like better to deal with the landlord and his agent than to have my business transacted in a court. I believe the causes of the present low prices to be foreign competition, a very dry summer, and the miners' strike.

Chairman.

We are very much obliged to you for your evidence.

Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. WILLIAM CHARLES HUGHES called and examined.

Chairman.

55,787. You are agent, I think, for several estates?—I am.

55,788. Will you name them?—I am agent for Mr. Phillip Yorke, Erddig Park, Captain Godfrey, Bryn Estyn, Mrs. Girardot, Rose Hill, and I have recently been appointed agent for the Trevalyn estate, close to Rossett. The proprietors are Capt. Griffith Boscawen, Mr. Trevor Parkins, and the trustees of the Rev. J. S. Darvell.

55,789. Do you give evidence for this district?—Yes, for the whole of this district.

55,590. What acreage do you represent?—About 6,000 acres.

55,791. Have you prepared a statement?—Yes, I have a statement following the form of the syllabus.

55,792. If there is anything in it that we have had over and over again, perhaps you will omit it. There are several matters with regard to which we have had a great deal of repetition, and which have taken up a lot of time, so if there is anything you know we have had before us already, perhaps you will leave that out, and give us anything of special interest?—I have been farming all my lifetime, and farming my own farm. I am well acquainted with all branches of farming and its associations in this district, and the different conditions and other matters affecting farming. With regard to rights of pasturage over sheep runs, the Ruabon Mountain is unfit for cultivation; it is only used as sheep runs, over which there are rights of pasturage for those who have land adjoining it, without stint, and no payment is made or demanded for this right of pasturage. The general condition of sheep farming is certainly an improved one from times gone by. With regard to the difference of language, politics, or religion between the landlord or agent and the tenant, I may state that language, politics, or religion have not in any way influenced the choice of tenants. The questions are never asked what their politics or religion may be, and there has never been any difference made, whether a man is Conservative or Radical, or Churchman or Nonconformist. With regard to the special training of agents, when agents are employed I am of opinion that they should be experienced in farming and thoroughly know farming in all its branches, and have also experience and tuition in estate management. Without that I do not think an agent has the qualifications for knowing how land should be farmed, or whether it is farmed properly, or whether tenants are deserving consideration. As to the question of the usual date of entry in this district, the possession of tillage land is generally given up to the incoming tenant in November, and the tenancy commences on February the 2nd, but the house and premises are not taken over until the 1st of May. With regard to the demand for leases, I may say I have never been asked for a lease, and so far as I am concerned I do not think they are at all desirable. When a tenant is under a good landlord it is to his advantage to have an ordinary yearly agreement. As to whether changes in tenancy have become more or less frequent than in former years, my experience of changes of tenancy, covering a period of 14 years is that they are simply owing to farmers retiring or old age. I have not had occasion to have any unpleasantness in any shape or form, or occasion to give notices to quit. I could give several instances on the estate which I represent where changes of tenancy have taken place, where farmers have taken larger farms. I could give an instance of where a farmer has been in possession for 200 years, and where farmers' sons have also established themselves on the same estate and other estates, and where tenants' sons have succeeded their parents for generations past. As to the question whether, if any mining, brickfields, quarries, or other industrial operations have been commenced on land, has the rent been readjusted or compensation granted in consequence, I may say rents have always been adjusted. With regard to copies of agreements being given to the tenants, I may say I always furnish them with a copy of the agreement, and I have never asked them to sign it without their having had every opportunity of perusing it. With regard to the fixing of rents, it is, as a rule, a gross sum, and there is a general uniformity of rents in the district. The rents of smaller holdings are, as a rule, larger than the rents of larger holdings, for the reason that there is a greater claim on the landlord to maintain the premises. The lowland farms let better than the higher ones, for the reason in this district cheese-making is the general mainstay of farmers, and the higher lands are not so adapted for cheese-making. The rents are generally fixed by private treaty. With reference to the question whether farms are let to the highest bidder, I may say I have never had a system of competition, and the farms are never given to the man who bids the highest. In fact I may say this: I have been offered more rent for farms, and I have never even thought of accepting it. I have even had tenants applying for farms and offering more rents than that which is now paid. On the Erddig estate the rent roll is lower now than it was 50 years ago. In 1885 the rents on the Erddig estate and Bryn Estyn estate were reduced 10 per cent.—a permanent reduction—and I furnished the tenants with certificates to produce before the Assessment Committee so that they might have their assessment for poor rates reduced. On the Trevalyn estate I find reductions of 10 per cent. were permanently made on some of the farms in 1887, and 10 per cent. allowance has been made upon some of the other farms from that date. The rents are generally collected about two months after they become due. The tithes have been paid over by me since 1887—previous to the passing of the Act—and then collected from the tenants, and I may say this: they have always paid them most promptly and no word of dispute has ever arisen on the subject. Since that date, and previous to the passing of the Act, I have always let the farms tithe-free. The average size of farms in this district would run from 100 to 130 acres, in round numbers; some would be rather less perhaps, but that would be about it. The cultivation is chiefly that of dairy farming. Labourers are scarce, for the very reason that they flock to the brickworks, colliery, and other works, and therefore it is a very serious item for the farmers when they have to compete and pay wages at a higher scale than what has been the case before. Their fences, ditches, and watercourses are not perhaps attended to as they would have been owing to this. They have not got the money and cannot spend it, and they have so many calls elsewhere. Land has been laid down considerably in this district, sometimes by the tenant and sometimes by the landlord, and the landlord very frequently pays for and supplies the seeds. With reference to fallowing, I do not think there is any land under fallow in the parish of Wrexham or the adjoining parishes now, owing to the low price of cereals. The state of the premises is very much improved and is being improved, the tenants carting the materials for so doing, and the landlord very frequently supplies pipes gratuitously to the tenants, they doing the labour themselves. In some cases the drainage is done by the landlord, and the rate of about 5 per cent. is charged for so doing, which rate is mutually arranged beforehand between the landlord and the tenant. Old buildings are taken down, repaired, and more conveniently constructed by the landlord wherever it is necessary to do so. I may say on the Erddig estate this has been very largely carried out since I have been agent. The tenant agrees to undertake the haulage of material, and in some cases there has been an arrangement between the landlord and the tenant. The tenant is anxious to pay interest upon the amount expended upon the work, but he has never been charged haulage. He will undertake the haulage himself; at the same time that would not be taken in account according to the question put here in the syllabus. They very frequently offer to do other work most willingly, if called upon, although it is not in the agreement that they should do anything of the kind, except the haulage of the material to their premises. With regard to whether they contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, I may say only so far as Section 33 applies, and that is with reference to the notice to quit, the six months instead of the 12 months. With regard to farmers applying to the landlord for written consent for specific improvements, I may say I have never received one. The allowance to outgoing tenants in respect of growing crops as a rule runs as follows: Wheat after clover by half share; wheat after fallow, two-thirds, but as I have said before, there is very little fallow now, therefore that following the last remark would scarcely apply. I have a copy of the agreement here if anyone wishes to see it. (Handing in agreement.)

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,793. Is the agreement the same on the different estates that you manage?—Yes, the whole of them. I may also say that they are very similar on other estates as well.

Chairman.

55,793a. Then, with regard to compensation for improvements?—With regard to compensation for improvements, I do not know of any case to my knowledge. In regard to the questions of right, recognised as belonging to the tenants, to dispose of their interest in their holdings to any solvent tenant to whom the landlord shall not have any reasonable objection, I may say this, that if a tenant desires to retire, and he is anxious to appoint a successor, I have never had any objection to his doing so, provided, of course, he was an eligible man, and had sufficient funds to stock the farm. I have an instance, which I could name, in which the outgoing farmer desired to appoint as his successor a friend of his; his references were perfectly satisfactory, and he succeeded him, and is now in the tenancy. Then with regard to the custom as to the sale of the sheep on sheep farms by an outgoing tenant to an incoming tenant, or to the landlord, I may say the incoming tenant, as a rule, takes the sheep at a valuation conducted in the usual way. Fruit culture is not very much carried out in the Wrexham district, but there is a good deal at Holt. There is not much gardening here. There have been instruction classes in butter and cheese-making in this district, and they have been very well attended by the farmer's daughters, who have had considerable benefit by attending them. There was a class for cheese-making only this last July upon a farm on the Erddig estate, and it was attended, I believe, by 12 or 14 pupils. The farmers co-operate very much about here in farming operations, helping each other in threshing, harvesting, sheep shearing, and so on. The farmers fully insure their property. Then, with regard to tenant farmers, and their wives taking part in the manual labour of their farms, I say the husbands assist in the outdoor work, the wives and daughters take their part in the interior, in cheese-making, butter-making, and the general requirements of indoor work. Some of the sons and daughters are in receipt of wages, while others receive remuneration. As to the question whether provision is made by the parents on marriage or independent settlement in life, they are started in life financially in whatever undertaking they may choose. On the other hand, very frequently, if one or two sons only are at home, they remain on until their parents retire, in which case they succeed to the farm and the stock, which would be theirs. As to the question whether present rents could be maintained if wages were paid in respect of the children's labour, I say certainly they could. I can scarcely say what proportion of farm labour is hired as compared with that rendered by the members of the household. The hired labourers would be in the proportion of about one-half on the farm premises, and one-half in cottages. The wages of the labourers run to about 18s. per week. About 50 years ago, from old papers which I have in my possession, wages were then 12s. compared with 18s. now. Sleeping accommodation, from my own personal investigation, is better provided for now. The sleeping accommodation is very clean, well ventilated, and comfortable, and they are properly divided, the males from the females. There is an improved state of cottage accommodation in this district, and cottages invariably have their gardens, excepting, of course, in the town. Proprietor farmers are not so good as tenant farmers in this respect. There has been a migration of farm labourers to the collieries and brickworks from other districts. I would suggest, with regard to improving the profits from land, first, a reduction of local taxation; second, the labelling of foreign meat and products; third, an impost upon foreign manufactured articles of food, such as margarine, and so on, and the profits devoted to old age pensions. This would enable the farmers to compete then with foreign competition. The agricultural labourer would have something then to look forward to for his future. On the Erddig estate we have spent between 15,000*l.* and 20,000*l.* upon improvements during the last 14 years, in building new premises, re-instating others, and putting them in such a state that the farmer can make the best of his product. With regard to how many and what cases we have on the estate of families having held the same farms for generations, if you will allow me, in the first instance, I should like to mention my own case. On my mother's side the family have been on the Plas Power estate for an unbroken period of very nearly 200 years. My mother was the last representative of the family. The family on my father's side have been tenants of Fennant, where I now reside, since 1776. It was then part of the Chirk Castle estate.

55,794. Who is the owner of the Plas Power estate? Thomas Lloyd Fitz Hugh, Esq. My great grandfather came in 1776 to our present abode. Then he was succeeded by my grandfather. They were all farmers, bear in mind. Then my father succeeded him, and now I have succeeded my father. This property afterwards came under the Ruthin Castle estate, owing to the marriage of Catherine Myddelton, and was then the property of Colonel West, of Ruthin Castle, who sold it in the year 1873. We then purchased it.

55,795. You are living on your own land at the present time?—I am living on my own land at the present time, and farming my own farm.

55,796. You are a freeholder?—I am a freeholder.

55,797. How big is that farm?—One hundred and four acres. It used to be larger, but some land has been taken away from it. I may mention that we have several tenants on the Erddig estate, who have succeeded their fathers and grandfathers. I only know one instance where we have had occasion to take unpleasant steps with any tenant. I can speak of them in the highest terms. They always pay their rents most punctually, and a very good feeling exists, I think, between them and the landlord, as has been frequently displayed. When the late squire, Simon Yorke, attained his 80th birthday, they presented him with a very handsome Bible, and showed other tokens of their esteem. I may also state that I have a list of applicants for farms, even although there are no farms likely to be vacant, from good reliable men—men whom I should be glad to have as tenants, and men of ability and capital. So far as letting the farms is concerned, I have no trouble whatever. I think that the district of Wrexham has not felt the depression as other districts have, for the very reason that it has a large mining district around, where the consumption is considerable, and also that dairying is the chief backbone of their occupations. There are several other tenants on the other estates of which I have the management. They have been there for, I should be afraid to say how many generations. I cannot speak perhaps as fully with regard to the Trevalyn estate, for the reason that I have only recently had it—about six months ago. The same good feeling exists there as on the other estates. On the Bryn Estyn estate there are tenants who have been there for some considerable time, and also on the Rose Hill estate. I do not think I have any other remarks to make.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,798. Do you consider the right of pasturing when you let farms adjoining the mountains?—Well, to a certain extent, I do, but I may say I think I have only two or three that would be affected by that right of pasturage.

55,799. Then you find no difficulty. Do the sheep all run together?—All run together, and then they have a specified day for all the farmers around to meet together for sheep-shearing or for drafting, as the case may be.

55,800. Have they a general shepherd, or does each farmer have his own shepherd?—No, they would do it all themselves personally, or their sons.

55,801. Are you able to speak Welsh yourself?—Very little.

55,802. You understand Welsh, I suppose?—I understand a little, but I should be afraid of transacting business in Welsh, for fear I should make a mistake.

55,803. You do not find any difficulty of that kind?—Not the slightest. Those farmers who do speak Welsh speak English equally well.

55,804. Do you think there is much improvement in the cheese-making and butter-making of the neighbourhood since you established classes?—Well, the cheese-making classes have only been held this last July, but, as far as the cheese-making goes, it has improved tremendously in say, the last 10 years.

55,805. Do they adopt the principles they are taught, in most of the farms?—Yes, they have to do so, so as to compete in the market. They would be out of date if they did not.

55,806. I suppose you do not encourage tenants to come and offer for farms when there are farms to let?—Most certainly not.

55,807. But with all that they will come and make offers?—I may say this, that I scarcely come to Wrexham market without I have an application for a farm. I was there on Monday week, and I had three applicants for a farm on that day—men of capital—men I should be very pleased to have on the estate if I had a vacancy.

55,808. When you have a re-valuation, do you do the valuation yourself, or do you employ a valuer?—I do it myself.

55,809. And satisfactorily to both parties, no doubt?—Oh, you mean as between landlord and tenant. Well, in a case of that kind, I may perhaps seek the advice of another person, but I have really so seldom had occasion to decide a point of that kind.

55,810. It is generally settled amicably?—Always amicably. I have never had any trouble.

55,811. Do the landlords of all these estates assist the tenants in laying down land for pasture?—In some cases we have done so.

55,812. In very few cases you have not?—In fact I have only had about four or five cases under my notice. It was in two changes of tenancy: there was more land under tillage than the tenants desired, and the landlord agreed in all those cases to supply seeds after I was satisfied that the land was thoroughly clean.

55,813. Then do you bind down the tenants that this land should not be ploughed?—Yes, it is their desire that it should not be ploughed.

55,814. The land must be pretty good, then?—Well, the tenants are only anxious to lay more down if I could possibly meet them, but we have sometimes to draw the line.

55,815. Then you have sometimes charged interest at 5 per cent. on drainage expenditure, and so on. Have you any period of exhaustion for such work?—No, I have no period.

55,816. Do the tenants generally keep the mouths of these drains open very well?—Yes, they are very good for that.

55,817. Because otherwise drains will be of very little use?—I may say this, they are very anxious to do it themselves, and they do attend to it. I have never had occasion to remind them. I have visited the places occasionally to see that they are opened, and I have always found them well attended to.

55,818. Then I understand you allow an outgoing tenant to choose a successor?—I have done so.

55,819. Does any money pass between them, do you know?—I do not think so; I should not be a party to a thing of that kind.

55,820. Still a tenant may have occasion to leave a farm when he cannot carry away his improvements with him?—Yes; but I do not think in the instances I have come across that any money did pass.

55,821. You have never seen it?—I have never seen it, no; at least I could almost be certain that it has not been the case, because the incoming tenants would have told me.

55,822. You have no claims for general improvements on the farms, I suppose?—No.

55,823. Have you much poultry farming in this neighbourhood?—Yes, the farmers' wives do it, but they do not make it a speciality.

55,824. More could be made of it?—Well, I do not think so, not with their system of farming. I do not think it would answer so well here; the land is almost too good. They would be more for cheese-making and dairying, but many farmers do have a large number of fowls I am aware of that, and they do pretty well by them.

55,825. And cottagers as well?—Cottagers as well.

55,826. They are more able to look after them?—Yes, but a good deal of money is made by the farmers' wives; I am aware of that.

55,827. Have you sufficient cottages for the labourers in this district?—Well, we are rather short of cottages, and it would be to the advantage, I must say, of landlord and tenant to have more cottages, but the tendency is for the men to get to work in the towns.

55,828. Do any cottagers keep cows?—Yes, several do.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. W. C. HUGHES.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

55,829. How do you find them do, as a rule?—Well, I think it is better, because the tendency is to make the labourer more contented.

55,830. And he is able to maintain his family?—Able to maintain his family.

55,831. And bring up his children better?—Yes.

55,832. And those children, we have found, become more useful than they would otherwise do?—Very much more so, because they are initiated into the work of their future lives. They know the management from their childhood—how cows and whatever other things they have should be attended to.

55,833. Then you are of opinion that it would be better for all farm labourers to have a bit of land to keep a cow?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,834. You say you think that every agent ought to have a practical acquaintance with agriculture?—Most certainly.

55,835. Have you a diploma?—I have not.

55,836. What training have you had?—I have been on a farm all my lifetime. I know all the work on a farm, and I can do it myself.

55,837. You have never been at an agricultural college?—I have not.

55,838. Are there any Welsh tenants on the estates which you manage?—Yes.

55,839. But I suppose they know sufficient English to make themselves understood?—Oh, yes; they always transact their business with us in English, and, in fact, I may say they nearly always transact their business with other people in English. They may possibly as well do it in Welsh, but really around here it is nearly all conducted in English, more so than Welsh.

55,840. Speaking from the practical experience which you have had as an agent, is it your opinion that it would be desirable for an agent to know Welsh in order to manage a Welsh estate?—For this part of the district I should not think it would be necessary.

55,841. But on an estate, say, in Merionethshire, in a Welsh neighbourhood?—Probably then it would be desirable.

55,842. It would be a desirable thing?—It would be desirable there, certainly.

55,843. All the farms have Candlemas takings?—Yes.

55,844. You have none at Lady Day?—None at Lady Day.

55,845. And I suppose you would recommend Candlemas takings?—Yes, it is the custom of the country round here, so as to give an incoming tenant a chance of tilling any land which might be dirty—he would have a chance to get it in the proper form in the spring, so that all the work should not come upon him at once.

55,846. It is far better to have Candlemas takings than Lady Day takings?—Far better, because when the spring comes the man is far better able to do all the work to his satisfaction; if he has taken possession of the land in the winter, and it is a favourable winter, that will be of assistance to him in the spring, and he will have a better chance of making it pay him in the first year of his tenancy.

55,847. I am quite of the same opinion as you are in that matter. Of course, all the hay and straw is consumed on the premises?—On the premises.

55,848. Are there many instances of farmers retiring on the estates you manage?—Yes.

55,849. Having made a competency sufficient to keep them?—Yes, and then they retire.

55,850. And when they retire they go to a town?—Yes, or go perhaps to live with a relative, and perhaps their sons would follow them on, or they may make other arrangements, I am in a position to know many who reside with their sons, and their sons carry on the farm—they live with their sons.

55,851. Have you had many instances where you have let farms to persons other than relatives of the former tenants?—Yes.

55,852. What is the course you generally adopt to let a farm?—In what way do you mean?

55,853. When a farm becomes vacant, and there is no relative of the former tenant?—I should pick the best applicant, the man most desirable as a tenant—a man I should know. I may say I know the district pretty well, and I know most of the people round here, and then if I found one who was financially satisfactory I should choose him. The great thing is to get a tenant farmer who understands farming, a man who is thoroughly competent, a practical man, a man who can put his hand to whatever may be going on on the farm. Those are the sort of men we ought to have as farmers.

55,854. You find that there is a good supply of this kind of farmer in the neighbourhood?—Yes, there is.

55,855. There is never any difficulty in letting a farm to a competent man?—No.

55,856. Do you consider that the working expenses of the farm are higher now than they were say 15 or 20 years ago?—Yes, they are.

55,857. A good deal?—Yes.

55,858. Do you think that is taken sufficiently into calculation by the landlords in making a reduction or an abatement in the rent?—Yes, it is.

55,859. You say that the farmers in this neighbourhood have not felt the depression so much, inasmuch as they are contiguous to good markets, Wrexham, Oswestry and other market towns?—They have not felt it so much in this district, no.

55,860. Then you contend, that really the tenants benefit, and not the landlord?—Well, it is natural that the landlord and the tenant would not feel it so much.

55,861. But you would not go so far as to say that the tenant benefits entirely by the fact of the farm being in a good neighbourhood: the landlord benefits to some extent?—No. I do not think the landlords would any more, because our rents are lower than they were 50 years ago. My rent roll is lower than it was 50 years ago.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. W. C. HUGHES.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

55,862. Then you represent, of course, that the tenants benefit entirely?—Well, they certainly do benefit, there is no question about that, more so than they would perhaps where the land is all under tillage.

55,863. I suppose it is grazing land chiefly that pays?—Chiefly grazing.

55,864. What did you say with respect to hauling to buildings?—I did not quite catch what you said?—For repairs do you mean?

55,865. Yes?—The tenants very frequently undertake the haulage of material for the repairs, and are only too anxious to do it, free of charge.

55,866. You have no provision in your agreement for compensating a tenant when he hauls to a building, suppose he left in the following year?—Yes, there is a clause; we should not ask the tenant to do the repairs during the last year of his tenancy. That clause is in the agreement.

55,867. Suppose he did the hauling in the year before he left?—Oh, I should certainly compensate him. I should meet him favourably on the subject. It is only fair to an out-going tenant. I mean to say, suppose, for the sake of argument, the tenant died this year, and perhaps last year he had done considerable haulage to the farm; if the family were not succeeding on there I should make arrangements with the widow or his representative.

55,868. You would have no objection to having a provision to that effect put in the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Most certainly not. It would be unfair to think of it, because perhaps he may be inconvenienced during harvest time.

55,869. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act operative in this district?—Yes.

55,870. Does it work satisfactorily?—There are several clauses there, I think, that could be improved.

55,871. Are the schedules satisfactory?—Yes.

55,872. There is no desire, then, to enlarge the schedules, to have any additional items in them?—Speaking off book now, I do not think so.

55,873. Do you think that there should be any provision made for the general improvement of a farm, that compensation should be given for general improvements on a farm?—Well, that would be embodied in the Act of 1883.

55,874. No, there is no provision made for general improvements?—Certain improvements are in the Act.

55,875. Yes, certain improvements, but not general improvements?—Well, according to our agreement there is provision allowed for the tenant.

55,876. Yes, for certain specific improvements?—Yes, certain specific improvements.

55,877. But I mean the general improvements of a farm?—Well, it entirely depends.

55,878. What do you mean by that?—If you will kindly pass me my agreement I will tell you. (Agreement handed to witness.) With regard to the consumption of cake and corn, the outgoing tenant would receive certain compensation under that agreement; that would be an improvement on the farm.

55,879. Quite so; but supposing that a farmer goes into a farm which is in a filthy state, and he cleans that land well, and improves generally the state of the farm?—Yes; well, probably he would take it at a lower rental, and it would be to his interest to do so.

55,880. Yes, but he might be disturbed in some way or other?—But I do not think the landlord would take advantage of a tenant in that way in this district.

55,881. But you have to provide against emergencies of that sort?—Yes, and so we have to provide where tenants leave their farms in a very dirty state.

55,882. That is quite true; I think the landlord should be protected as well as the tenant?—Quite so.

55,883. But there is no provision made, you see, in the Act for a case of that kind?—Well, I certainly think if a tenant does improve a farm he should be compensated, but I have never had an instance of the kind.

55,884. Still an instance might occur?—Possibly it might.

55,885. You say that proprietor farmers are not in such a good position as tenant farmers?—No.

55,886. What do you mean by that?—I mean the proprietor farmers are not so well off as the tenant farmers. That is a clear reply, is it not?

55,887. Do you mean not if he had sufficient money to pay for the place?—No, for the very reason that he has his premises to maintain, and those premises are maintained and kept in repair by the landlord. I know plenty of instances in and around this district where proprietor farmers are not so well off, in a manner of speaking, as the tenant farmers, on account of the charges upon his land in maintaining the premises.

55,888. Of course you will admit that there is a certain amount of advantage in being a proprietor farmer; the tenure is secure?—No, I do not admit it at all.

55,889. But, under the present condition of things, the tenant farmer cannot say that his tenure is perfectly secure, though it may be on some estates?—Speaking of around here I do not know whether a tenant is better off by being a proprietor than he would be by being a tenant farmer.

55,890. Then there must be something very exceptional?—Well, we are very exceptional, I must say.

Mr. Grove.

55,891. As to your last remark, have there been any recent sales of estates in this district?—Not of estates, but properties have been occasionally sold.

55,892. Then you do not attach so much importance to what is known as security of tenure?—No.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. W. C. HUGHES.

Mr. Grove—continued.

55,893. You speak of the Agricultural Holdings Act. You have not had any notice, I think you said, under that Act, or only one or two?—I am not very sure if I have not had one, but I will not speak positively.

55,894. You seem to be well acquainted with the provisions of that Act yourself; do you think, as a rule, the farmers are well acquainted with it?—No, I do not think they are so well acquainted with it, because they rely a good deal on the custom of the country here.

55,895. There are, of course, agricultural societies and farmers' clubs in the county?—Yes.

55,896. And you think that those clubs do not take up the consideration of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I believe in Shropshire there is a good deal of discussion there.

55,897. But not so much in this district?—Not so much in this district.

55,898. You have given us instances of what we might call successful farming?—Yes.

55,899. Do you think that that applies at the present moment in the same degree as it did years gone by?—I think so. I have no occasion to think otherwise.

55,900. Then generally speaking you do not think there is so much depression in agriculture at the present time?—Certainly, there is depression compared with what we had in years gone by.

55,901. But serious depression?—Yes, especially in growing cereals. The markets will speak for themselves.

55,902. I think you gave us the total acreage of your estates as about 6,000 acres?—About 6,000 acres.

55,903. How many farms would that represent; that is, roughly speaking, how many tenant farmers would you have?—I think from 100 to 120, perhaps, speaking off book.

55,904. As to your suggestions with regard to old age pensions, of course you mean pensions applicable to old age in all parts of the country; not merely the farming interest alone?—No, to cover all.

Sir John Llewelyn.

55,905. Does your experience go into the Welsh part of the county?—No, only for this district really. We have certainly a good deal of Welsh about the county.

55,906. I know you said so, but some parts of the county are especially Welsh?—Yes, some parts of Denbighshire.

55,907. Have you any experience in those parts of the county?—I have not.

55,908. I think you told us that the farms of which you have cognizance are from some 100 to 120 acres, or about that size?—There are a great deal larger than that, and some smaller.

55,909. Some larger and some smaller, but that is about the average?—That is about the average, as near as I can speak to.

55,910. About what would be the average rent of those farms per acre?—The best farms would be about 30s. an acre.

55,911. Those are principally, I suppose, grazing land?—Yes, dairy farms. There are of course, some under 1l. an acre. I have some under 1l. an acre.

55,912. I think the time of the greatest depression in this country was the time of the rhinderpest?—Yes.

55,913. It was very severe then?—Very severe then.

55,914. In fact, I think the adjacent counties felt it as much as any part of England and Wales?—Oh, yes, it was very severe in 1865 and 1866.

55,915. Could you tell us anything about the education of farmers' sons?—They are certainly taking every advantage, where they possibly can, of giving them a very good education, as far as their means will allow them.

55,916. We found in many parts of Wales that the sons of farmers have been brought up to the learned professions, to the law, to medicine, and as preachers of the Gospel. Is that the case here?—Yes.

55,917. And some sons are brought up to the specific industry to which their fathers have been attached, that is the land?—Yes, very frequently the eldest son will remain at home with his father, to manage the farm, and the younger sons will take up professions or other undertakings in the district.

55,918. So that you find the education of farmers' sons is maintained at a high level?—Oh, certainly. It has improved.

55,919. Do you consider that there are any differences in the customs between this part of Wales and the adjacent parts of England?—Yes, there are, in several cases that I am aware of.

55,920. Would you tell us what they are?—In one case, the taking over of the tillage land. That does not apply in some parts of the country.

55,921. Are your customs written or unwritten?—Unwritten customs.

55,922. Because we have heard, I think, in another part of the same county that they have adopted the Shropshire custom?—I have never seen a written custom of the country here.

55,923. Do you know the Shropshire custom?—I know a few of them, but I have not studied them.

55,924. That, at all events, is not adopted as a written custom in this neighbourhood?—No.

55,925. Then do you consider that the agricultural labourers are in an improved condition now from what they were?—Yes.

55,926. Are you in a position to tell us, with regard to their thrift, whether they put by in the savings banks in any increasing proportion?—I am a manager of the Wrexham Savings Bank, and I know that a good many do put money into the bank.

55,927. In any increasing numbers?—I could not say as to increasing numbers.

55,928. In a healthy proportion?—Oh, I think so.

55,929. Taking into consideration their numbers around here?—Yes I think so, because we are obliged to pay labourers fairly well otherwise we could not obtain them.

Mr. W. C. HUGHES.

55,930. But do they take advantage of the savings banks, that is what I mean?—I should think they would do.

55,931. The majority of them?—The majority of them.

55,932. Did you put in the list of those farmers who have been for a very long period on the estates with which you are connected?—I have not put them in.

55,933. May we see it?—I have not a copy here with me.

55,934. You have such a copy?—Yes, I have a copy at home.

Chairman.

55,935. Will you send us in a copy of it?—I could possibly do so, yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

55,936. Do the smaller farmers, as well as the agricultural labourers, take advantage of your savings bank?—Yes, I think they do, because they would, perhaps, put their money together there to await a rent day or any other charges which may be coming; others deposit a good deal in the local banks here.

55,937. Do you take any interest in the friendly societies?—I have not taken very much interest in that way, but there are a great many friendly societies around here, and many do subscribe towards them.

55,938. Then you spoke about the letting of farms. You told us that now, since you had been agent, you have let all the farms for which you had new tenancies tithe free?—Tithe free.

55,939. Is that after adding to the rent what the old tithe was, or not?—We have taken the basis of the present amount of the tithe, the commutation.

55,940. Was that added to the old rent or not?—Yes; they would pay their rent to the landlord, as was usual, and then pay their tithe to the tithe owner.

55,941. In respect to the sheep walks with which you have experience, I think you said that the sheep were turned out on commons without stint?—I believe there is a margin for every farm, but it would not be to their interest, perhaps, to put the full number on, because they would not thrive on the mountain. They would be overstocked.

55,942. Who would be the authority who would decide as to the overstocking or otherwise of the mountain?—Well, they would use their own discretion, I think.

55,943. And you also said, I think, that the borderers only turn out on the common?—The borderers only.

55,944. Then again, who is the authority who decides whether people are trespassers on the mountain with their sheep or not?—The farmers adjacent to the mountain would soon do that.

55,945. Have they any authority in the matter?—I think they would all combine together.

55,946. Can you tell us what the combination is?—No; I do not think there is combination, but naturally the farmers would object to anyone wrongfully putting sheep on.

55,947. That I can quite understand, but how would they put their objections in force?—Well, they would simply drive them away, I presume, but I have never heard of a question arising owing to that.

55,948. Do you consider that the commons are, in your own opinion, overstocked or not?—No, I do not think so. Of course they have to vary them according to the seasons—such a season as last year and this season, for instance.

55,949. You are not aware that the farmers are asking for any greater protection than they have now?—No.

55,950. They are capable of protecting themselves?—I have never heard the question broached.

55,951. I think you told us that, so far as your own experience is concerned, you have to do with about two farms?—I have four farms.

55,952. But with regard to those farms, you have not heard of any complaint?—None whatever.

Mr. Griffiths.

55,953. You say you made no abatements?—Yes, we made a permanent reduction. The late Mr. Tench, who was the former agent to the Erddig estate, made a reduction of 10 per cent. in the rent, I think, in 1878, in those wet seasons. I succeeded in the year 1880, and I continued it for two or three years. Then I ceased making that allowance. Then we made a permanent reduction in 1885 of 10 per cent. on all the farms, every one, without any other arrangement.

55,954. Why I ask is that I know the depression has not been felt so much in dairy farming?—Yes, dairy farming has certainly been the mainstay of especially the Cheshire farmers.

55,955. Pigs have been selling pretty fair, but other things, cattle and sheep, have not been selling so well?—No.

55,956. Are labourers as efficient now in this neighbourhood as they were formerly?—No.

55,957. They are not as efficient?—They are not as efficient.

55,958. I see in the Report of the Labour Commission Mr. Owen Slaney Wynne expressed the opinion that the labourers here, that is in Denbighshire, are not nearly so efficient as those in other parts of Wales?—I will not say in other parts of Wales, but I know they are not as efficient as they used to be in this district—speaking of this district only, I mean.

55,959. The young men do not pride themselves on their work?—No, they do not, no doubt.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. W. C. HUGHES.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,960. You say there is no attention paid fruit culture, or horticulture, or to poultry farming, or bee keeping?—Not particularly as to poultry—not more than I have told you before, but in the district of Holt there is more attention paid to horticulture than there is in any other part of Denbighshire, strawberry growing and general gardening.

55,961. Do you think the climate here is suitable for horticulture and fruit culture to such an extent as to make them reliable sources of income?—No, for several reasons. We should be overrun with trespass to start with. You would grow your produce very well to a certain pitch, and then, owing to the population around here, you would not be able to gather very much of it in. You have to have extra provision made with regard to fruit growing owing to that obstacle.

55,962. So that you would not say that the farmers are dull to their own interests because they neglect these branches?—No, because I think that dairy farming would pay them better. The land is better adapted for dairying generally than it is for fruit growing; but, as far as Holt is concerned, of course the climate is very suitable there, and so is the soil.

55,963. We so often see farmers recommended to try these things?—I call it a farce.

55,964. You say that when children work at home they are remunerated?—Yes.

55,965. In what way are they remunerated?—Well, suppose for the sake of argument, there were several sons, the sons who did not remain at home would be started in life in whatever undertaking they chose.

55,966. So that although they do not get any wages while they are working at home, they would be started in life?—Well, they would be financially started in life, or else, if they were farmers, their fathers would stock their farms for them.

55,967. And you think that that is as good an equivalent as having wages?—Equally so, because they are all working for the common profit.

Chairman.

55,968. There are two or three questions that have been put in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Do you not think six months' notice to quit somewhat inadequate in view of the fact that tenants have to do haulage free?"—I have already said that suppose a tenant left he would be allowed for any haulage he might do during the last year of his tenancy.

55,969. "Are these applicants for farms on the estate you represent at the present moment tenants on other estates?"—Some are. Most of them have sons for whom they are desirous of applying; they apply on behalf of their sons.

55,970. Not on account of themselves?—Not on account of themselves.

55,971. "Are the small farms let at a higher rental owing to their being applied for by men working in mines and collieries?"—Not so much.

Chairman—continued.

55,972. "Is not the estate you manage considered to be one of the best estates in the district?—I do not think it is more so than others.

55,973. "Do you think that the relations between the landlords and tenants on all the estates in the district are as satisfactory as on the Erddig estate?"—Equally so.

55,974. "How would you propose to reduce local taxation?"—Well, the poor rate is a very heavy charge, but at the present moment I could scarcely go into that question. I may say that on my own farm I have the receipts for the poor rate close upon 100 years ago, when it was 30s. a year, and now it represents about 25l.

Sir John Llewellyn.

55,975. That does not all go to the relief of the poor; it goes to a number of other things besides?—Yes, but still it comes under the poor rate.

Chairman.

55,976. There are some further questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Did you purchase Fennant by private treaty or at a public auction?"—That will require a little explanation. In the first place the person who bought the farm paid a deposit, and he had not the money to complete the purchase. He offered it to us afterwards. It was too dear, we thought, at the time. The purchase money was 5,600l. It was withdrawn at the sale at 4,500l., and my brother was the highest bidder. This man afterwards offered 5,600l. for it. He paid a deposit, but was unable to complete. My mother was at the time very much upset about leaving the place, inasmuch as we had been there for so many years. It affected her health to such a degree (I may say my sisters and myself are the proprietors of the farm—I should have said that before) that rather than she should suffer we agreed to take over the farm from Mr. Thomas Jones, who was the purchaser.

55,977. "Were you not compelled practically to pay for your own improvements?"—No.

55,978. You consider not?—No; because if we had not purchased it we should have had to have gone elsewhere. Our money could have been invested in something else.

55,979. Still I understand you to say that you bought the farm 1,000l. too dear?—Yes, simply for the sake of my mother and the old associations.

55,980. And you spent a certain amount of money on the farm?—Certainly. We had to do a lot of draining.

55,981. You had done the farm well?—Yes, the farm had always been well done.

55,982. And you had spent money on draining, and so on?—Yes.

55,983. Hedging and fencing?—Yes, a good deal. Still, we were quite satisfied.

55,984. And still you had to pay 1,000l. more than you considered the farm was worth?—Yes, rather than leave the old home.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. W. C. HUGHES.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,985. Do you think that feeling is general in Wales—that people buy their old homes out of a feeling of sentiment of that kind?—Well, I must say, as far as I have read in the papers of the sales in Anglesey and Carnarvonshire, many farmers have bought their own homes, and done very well by doing so.

55,986. They have not done very well if they have paid more than the farms are worth?—Oh, I do not say that. I beg your pardon; I did not understand the question.

Chairman.

55,987. Mr. Llewellyn Jones further asks: "Have you any objection to stating what the rent of your farm was at various periods during the century." Can you give us that?—Yes. In the year 1776 the rent of the farm was 10s. an acre. There were some improvements done. I really could not quite tell you the date now, but the rent was advanced to 30s., or something like 35s. altogether. I think 32s. was the rent when we left.

55,988. Was that date 1865?—1873.

55,989. The rent in 1873 was what?—About 32s. an acre.

55,990. And at the end of the last century it was 10s. an acre?—10s. an acre.

55,991. And it had been in your occupation the whole of that time?—The whole of that time.

Mr. Richard Jones.

55,992. The question I asked you was this, whether you thought there were many Welsh farmers who had bought their holdings from a similar feeling to yours, that is to say, to secure their old home?—I do not think so.

55,993. You mentioned cases in Anglesey?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

55,994. What prompted those people to buy their holdings?—They simply bought the farms rather than that others should buy them. Some bought them as an investment; they had their money and thought, "Well we may as well invest in land; it will be as safe, perhaps safer, than some other undertakings, and we will rather put our money in the land which we shall till."

55,995. Do you think they paid more on that account?—No, I do not think so, because they would not have purchased it to throw their money away.

55,996. I do not know that. According to your showing you have given 1,000l. more?—Yes, not for the sake of living there, on account of my mother's health. I did not say we had given 1,000l. too much for it.

55,997. You gave too much?—We gave too much for it.

55,998. It is very possible that many Welsh farmers have done the same in order to secure their homes?—No, I do not think so. And another thing, it suited our convenience to buy the place, because we had other land adjoining the place where we lived which we owned before.

55,999. Do you think that a farmer would be desirous of buying his holding if he felt perfectly secure against any disturbance?—No, I do not think so. I may say that this Mr. Jones had threatened to turn us out. When he bought the farm he gave us notice to quit. We asked him to treat, at least we treated with him for a continuation of the tenancy, and he refused us point blank, and that was the reason.

56,000. So that every estate is not conducted the same as the Erddig estate?—Unfortunately, there are some people who do not know how to manage estates.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. CHARLES DAVIES called and examined.

Chairman.

56,001. You are a tenant farmer, and you live at Cox Lane, Rossett, and the owners of the farm are the representatives of the late George Boscawen, Esq.; is that right?—Yes. I should like to make a statement, if you please.

56,002. Yes, that will be convenient?—The acreage of my holding is 26 acres, without sheep run. There has been no recent enclosure of waste land in the neighbourhood. There is no unenclosed land. There are no rights of sheep walk in the district. Politics, religion, or language make no difference whatever between my landlord and myself. There is no Welsh spoken here. Date of entry: February 2nd for land; May 1st for house. Agreements are the most common. I know of no cases in which tenants have asked for leases and have been refused. I think with landlords like mine, tenants are quite as safe under agreements as under leases. I do not object to my agreement.

Chairman—continued.

I have not heard of any owners using the stricter clauses in agreements against a good tenant. I have not heard of any tenants being refused a copy of their agreement. I should think a tenant would not be likely to take a farm without understanding his agreement. Rent is fixed at a lump sum. There is uniformity in the rents of lands of similar quality on the same estate. Rent of small holders is generally larger than that of large farmers in proportion. There are no services other than payment of rent rendered by tenants on this estate. Holdings are not let to the highest bidder. We stay on the farms for generations. My rent has not been raised, and I have received 10 per cent. abatement for several years. Local rates have not increased. There has been no consolidation of farms upon this estate. Small farmers are the best farmers. Small farmers provide best for their families, and I think small farmers can stand out the longest against depressed prices. Farmers do not sub-let. Rent is due February and August, and time of payment postponed to April and October. Labourers are not scarce. There is no land going out of cultivation. There is no waste land capable of profitable reclamation. Arable land has been laid down in pasture, because milk selling and dairying is more profitable at the present time. Root crops have not decreased, because farmers must have root crops to produce milk. Fallowing has fallen into disuse, because farmers have better implements to clear their land with, and green crops are more profitable. Improvements are generally made (i.) by landlord: buildings for stock, protection from river encroachments, gates and posts; (ii.) by tenants: fences, manures, and seeds. I do not know as to compensation, as tenants are on the farms from father to son, the same family remaining upon the same farm. I have heard of the Agricultural Holdings Act, and understand that it is binding. There is no trouble about game in the district. I do not know of any freeholders in the district, only those that are capable of living without farming, I may add that. There are some farmers that farm, but they are capable of living without farming—not for a living. I know there are families who all work upon the farms; I cannot say if they receive wages. I know of farmers without sons who have managed to pay their way. And I know of farmers who have set up their sons in business, and some on other farms. As to a land court, there is none needed on our estate. I believe that the food coming from abroad is the cause of the present low prices. That is my evidence.

Sir John Llewelyn.

56,003. Have you laid down any arable to grass?—No, we do not plough any.

56,004. It is grass land?—It is grass land.

56,005. You say you have had an abatement of 10 per cent. for several years. Have you been able to get any abatement from the Assessment Committee in your rates?—No.

56,006. Have you tried?—No, I knew it was no use trying until I got a reduction in rent.

56,007. On a permanent reduction you would get your rates reduced?—Yes.

56,008. But not upon a temporary abatement?—No.

56,009. Even, although it has gone on for several years?—It has gone on for very nearly 14 years.

56,010. Do I understand you rightly, that your local rates have not increased?—They have not.

56,011. You are in a happy position then?—I may say the rates in this district have decreased the last five years.

56,012. Perhaps you are a guardian?—I am assistant overseer.

56,013. Although the local rates have not increased I suppose the price of labour has?—

Yes, the price of labour has a little with us. We are not so near the works as they are in this neighbourhood.

56,014. I suppose there is a great migration of the labourers to the works?—Yes.

56,015. When you say that the farmers do not re-let, do I understand that that applies to others besides yourself?—No, I am only speaking for the Trevalyn estate; on that estate alone.

56,016. There is no sub-letting?—No.

Mr. Grove.

56,017. You say that politics and religion make no difference between you and your landlord?—They do not.

56,018. Do they make any difference in any other part; have you ever heard of any differences?—Not on that estate. I do not believe my landlords would interfere with anyone for that reason.

56,019. You have not heard of differences with anyone?—It is a matter I have not given any consideration to.

56,020. Have there been any recent sales of properties that you know of?—Very little in our neighbourhood; only an odd house or two.

56,021. Do you consider at the present time there is a great depression in agriculture?—Yes, I do.

56,022. You say that local rates have decreased?—Yes.

56,023. Has the total rateable value of the union increased in consequence of the industries?—Yes.

56,024. The total expenditure in the union, perhaps, has been more than it was previously, but the rate has come down because the rateable value has increased?—The increase has been some years, say 14 or 15 years, since the increase in the railways and other things that come in to be rated—I should think it is 15 years ago from memory—and since then the rates, within the last five years, have come down. Take the whole of the five years, they are less now than they were.

56,025. Then it is not so much in the increase of the rateable value the last five years as in economy of managing the affairs of the union?—That I believe; it is economy somewhere. The rateable value has come down within the last five years. Fifteen years ago, say, it was at a certain standard, and since that it has been gradually coming down, with the owners lowering the rents continually all the while, year after year.

56,026. You say your enclosed land is 26 acres?—Yes.

56,027. Will you give us the rent?—I think my rent is 52*l*.

56,028. Then you have, of course, a sheep run?—No, I have no sheep run.

56,029. You have an agreement with your landlord?—Yes.

56,030. You are satisfied with the clauses of that agreement, are you?—I am satisfied with

29 August 1894.]

Mr. C. DAVIES.

Mr. Grove—continued.

my agreement in this way: My family has been on that estate for, I think, five generations, and whatever the agreement is I know that my landlords will not remove us. I am satisfied about that, whatever the agreement is on the estate.

Mr. Richard Jones.

56,031. You say that your rent has not been raised. How long have you occupied that 26 acres?—I have occupied it about 32 years.

56,032. And the rent has not been raised during that time?—No. I have not 26 acres under the representatives of the Boscawen estate. I hold land under others. I have meadows under other gentlemen, but the whole of my holding is a small holding.

56,033. You hold under different landlords?—Yes.

56,034. You pay on an average 2*l.* for the land?—I have my house and something like 13 acres of land under the representatives of the Boscawen estate for 25*l.* 10*s.* I pay 2*l.* an acre for the meadows.

56,035. So that we could not regard you as a typical farmer?—Not quite.

56,036. In your capacity as assistant overseer do you find that farmers are ready to pay their rates?—Well, I have always collected the rates, but I know that, speaking for the farmers, it is not a very easy matter for them to pay in these days, whereas it was easy for them 20 years ago. It was a great deal easier for the assistant overseer to collect the rates 20 years ago than it is to-day.

56,037. Have you had any occasion to bring cases before the magistrates to enforce payment??—Never with respect to a farmer. I have had some that held other property that I have had to bring up. I have had, I think, about seven cases in 25 years.

56,038. Do you find that farmers are more conscientious in paying their debts than other classes of the community?—I have never had any trouble with anyone who was born in that neighbourhood; but those who have not come out of it have very often wanted to go away and leave me.

56,039. That is your experience. You find it more difficult to get the rates now than you did 20 years ago?—Yes.

56,040. Are you satisfied with the profits which you make from these 26 acres of land?—Do you mean to say if all I was getting was the profits from it?

56,041. Are you satisfied with the profits which you make from those 26 acres?—Oh yes, I am, and I will tell you why: I keep two horses as well as cows, and I must have something to keep them on, and if you buy everything for your horses, that is not very wise.

56,042. Which do you find more profitable, collecting rates or farming?—Well, I think that on the whole the collecting is most remunerative. I do not only collect rates, but I collect rents. I do a little road surveying, and collect the taxes, too; so that I am really a general collector.

Mr. Griffiths.

56,043. Have you a copy of your agreement?—Yes.

56,044. Will you hand it in?—Yes. (Handed.)

56,045. Is it the same as that which the last witness handed in?—I expect so; it is from him.

56,046. He is the agent of the estate under which you hold?—Yes.

56,047. In his evidence he told us that tenant farmers were rather better off than labourers. You state that most freeholders are able to live without farming?—Yes, they are.

56,048. That is rather a different statement, is it not?—Those that have farms of their own in our neighbourhood have had somebody born before them that had got that money; they have not got it by their own farming. We have not any farmers that are simply buying the farms and trying to live upon them. We have people who have had fortunes left them.

56,049. You do not consider the tenant farmers are better off than those people do you? I should like to try the other.

Mr. Richard Jones.

56,050. You say that you think small farmers are the best farmers?—Well, I will go as far as Mr. Hughes has gone, and say that I do not call 220 acres a large farm, but I think you may call a farm a large farm when it has 300 or 400 acres.

56,051. Do you think a farmer on a farm up to 200 acres is more skilful than a man who farms 400 or 500 acres. Is that what you mean?—Yes, and not only that, he can get his labour more easily. He does not require so much labour. He does not require so much of everything. In some instances there are sons who help on the farm, and there is very little labour required, and then all the profit stops at home.

56,052. There is this to be considered: On a large farm it would pay a farmer to employ machinery which would save a great deal of the labour bill; there is more scope for machinery on a big farm?—Quite so, but they do not plough by machinery with us; it is done with horses.

56,053. They reap and mow with machinery? They reap and mow with machinery.

56,054. Do you think there is much difference in the skill of farmers?—I think that the man who has the less land looks after it the best. That is my opinion.

56,055. He is able to pay more attention to it?—Yes.

56,056. You think that he thrives better than the large farmers?—Well, he does the most himself.

56,057. He takes a greater personal supervision?—Quite so.

56,058. Of course, in the interests of the community generally you would consider

29 August 1894.]

Mr. C. DAVIES.

that it is advisable to have farms varying in size from 10 to 120 acres?—Yes, 10 to 120 acres in different sizes to suit different people—and the country would then become richer.

56,059. Do you know of any sons of small farmers who go out as servants?—No, I do not.

56,060. What do the small farmers put their sons to?—Take a farm of 40 or 50 acres; I know some of the small farmers' sons are joiners, or doing something in the different works. There are works in our neighbourhood that the farmers' sons go into, and they go into offices and places of that sort. There are not many small farmers' sons, I think, that go as labourers.

56,061. Do you think that farmers, say of 50 or 60 acres, would object to their sons assuming the status of labourers?—Yes, I should, without they were labouring on their own farm.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. NATHAN PERRY called and examined.

Chairman.

56,067. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

56,068. Will you tell us where you live?—At Brymbo Hall Farm.

56,069. Who is the landlord?—Sir Henry Robertson.

56,070. Sir Henry Robertson appeared before the Commission at Bala?—Yes.

56,071. Will you tell us what you wish to say?—I hold about 300 acres of land. There has been no waste land recently enclosed. I think there is no unenclosed land in our district which could be cultivated with profit. There are no rights of sheep walk in our district. The large estates, I think, are managed better than the small estates. If there is a good landlord it makes no difference whether the landlord lives on the estate or not.

56,072. Your landlord does not live in this part of the country?—No, my Lord. I think politics, religion, and language make no difference at all. I can understand the English language middling.

Sir John Llewelyn.

56,073. Are you Welsh?—Yes, but I can understand my landlord. The time of entering a farm is the 2nd of February for land and May the 1st for house and boosey pasture. There are no leases in our district. I do not know of any case in which tenants have asked for leases and have been refused. I think tenants are quite as safe under agreements as under leases. I have my agreement with me (handing). There is nothing to object to in the agreement. I understand mine well enough. The rent is so much an acre.

A 86439.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

56,062. Then, it would be hardly right to say that the small farms serve as a sort of nursery for servants for the big farms?—Quite so.

56,063. It is otherwise in different parts I know—the small farmers' sons go out into large farms as servant men?—Well, it is not the case with us. I may say before I go, that my reason in coming forward to give evidence here, was to bring before the Commissioners the respect and esteem in which the landlords on the Boscawen estate are held by the tenants. That was my motive for coming here.

Mr. Grove.

56,064. Do you speak on behalf of the tenants generally?—The whole.

56,065. Have they asked you to do so?—No, they have not.

56,066. That is your own individual opinion?—That is my opinion, and I believe that every tenant will agree with what I have now said.

Chairman.

56,074. Is the rent of the smaller farms higher than that of the larger farms?—Yes.

56,075. The rent varies, I suppose?—Yes.

56,076. No services are asked for except haulage?—Except carrying material for repairs.

56,077. Are the holdings ever let to the highest bidder?—Never.

56,078. Can you tell us whether your rent has been raised or reduced?—There has been no alteration.

56,079. For how many years?—I have been there six years last May.

56,080. You have been on the farm that time?—Yes.

56,081. Are the local rates increasing or diminishing?—Well, the school board and the sanitary rates are very high—they have increased.

56,082. You do not agree with the last witness, who said that they were decreased. You think there is an increase in the local rates?—Yes, there is an increase in mine in the township of Brymbo. Twenty-five years ago the rates were 2s. 10d. in the £, and this year they are 4s. 6d., and they have been higher than that—as much as 5s. 9d.

56,083. You complain of the rates being too high?—Yes.

56,084. I shall not ask you anything about consolidation; but there has been no sub-letting?—No sub-letting.

56,085. You are allowed two months after the rent falls due before it is asked for?—Yes.

56,086. Are the farmers well off in this neighbourhood or not?—Some are. There is a different quality of them. Some are pretty well off.

56,087. Some have lost a great deal of money?—Yes.

G

Mr. N. PERRY.

Chairman—continued.

56,088. Then farming has not been very profitable?—Not this last season.

56,089. Not for the last how many years?—Well, there have been three or four very bad years.

56,090. Have the rents been reduced in consequence of those very bad years?—Not with me.

56,091. Do you think rents ought to be reduced in consequence?—It depends upon the times. If the times are good the rents are right, but not if the times are bad.

56,092. Under the present circumstances you think the rents are too high?—Well, I think there ought to be a reduction, but I believe the burden of our township is the rates.

56,093. Then we can take it from you that you think the rents are too high in this part of the neighbourhood?—Well, I cannot answer for other people—only for myself.

56,094. You think your rent is too high?—Well, I am satisfied, if the times are right.

56,095. If the times do not go right you think your rent is too high as it is?—Yes.

56,096. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—None.

56,097. I suppose pasture pays better than corn-growing?—Yes.

56,098. What improvements have been done by the landlord, and what improvements have been done by the tenant?—The landlord has provided the drainage and irrigation, buildings for stock, tanks for preserving liquid manure, protection for river encroachment, fences, gates, and posts.

56,099. What do you do yourself?—Look after everything.

56,100. Keep everything in repair?—Yes.

56,101. And if any building is done on your farm you do the haulage free?—Carrying the materials—but the landlord does it.

56,102. The landlord gives you the materials, and you have to drag them there?—The landlord makes up the building.

56,103. And you have to take the materials there?—Yes.

56,104. Do you get any compensation for hauling?—No, it is the custom of the country.

56,105. It is always enforced?—Well, if I am very busy with the teams he does not require me to carry anything.

56,106. Then the landlord would do it himself?—Yes.

56,107. If you are not busy with the teams you would be expected to draw the timber?—Yes.

56,108. And bricks and sand, and everything wanted?—Yes.

56,109. You know that there is such an Act of Parliament as the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes.

56,110. Is it ever enforced? Is it of any use?—Yes, it is enforced, but I do not know that anyone would break the law.

56,111. No one is much better for the Act of Parliament?—Not that I know.

56,112. What allowances are made to outgoing tenants in respect of growing crops?—

Chairman—continued.

The outgoing tenant gets half the wheat crop, manure, and so on, according to agreement.

56,113. Are you allowed to sell straw on your farm?—Yes.

56,114. You can sell all the straw and hay?—Yes, but I ought to bring some manure instead.

56,115. You may do that if you choose?—Yes.

56,116. Now tell us about game. Is there any trouble on your farm as regards game?—None.

56,117. Have you any opinion about the establishment of a land court?—Well, I think the rent can be best settled by a friendly contract. That is my opinion.

56,118. Would you go further than that? In the event of the rent not being settled by a friendly contract, do you suggest anything?—No, I will leave it as it is.

56,119. Will you tell us what you consider to be the cause of the present low prices?—Well, foreign importations and bad trade caused by strikes, and so on.

56,120. You have had some severe strikes in your neighbourhood?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

56,121. Are the landlord and the agent on your estate able to speak Welsh?—My landlord has not got an agent.

56,122. It is not a very large estate, is it?—Yes, it is a large estate, but the agent has died. I cannot say how long ago: two or three years ago.

56,123. There has not been another appointed?—No, I think not.

56,124. Are there any Welsh tenants on the estate?—I believe there are in Merionethshire.

56,125. Do they find any difficulty in treating with their landlord, do you know?—I know but very little about them.

56,126. In case the tenants should not be able to come to terms with the landlord with regard to the rent, what do you recommend?—Well, if they cannot pay for the farm—

56,127. They must go?—Certainly, that is quite right.

56,128. Are there plenty of farms around that they can have?—Sometimes.

56,129. Are there many farms vacant in the neighbourhood?—Not so many in our neighbourhood—no, none.

56,130. Then it is rather hard lines for a tenant to have to turn out with his family, is it not?—There are different qualities of farmers. Farmers will strive on.

56,131. You think there are no cases in which a farmer cannot pay his rent?—I do not know of any.

56,132. That is rather different to what we have heard elsewhere?—But trade might be bad sometimes—worse sometimes than others—I must say that.

Mr. Richard Jones.

56,133. Do you take any land from Sir Henry Robertson without any agreement?—I think these two agreements represent 168½ acres?—Yes, I have three farms, and there is an agreement for every one. The agreement is the same for the three. You have two agreements there, have you not?

56,134. Yes, you have handed two up. Is the other one under the same company—the Brymbo Company?—Yes.

56,135. Is the other agreement a copy of these?—The same.

56,136. What is the nature of the farming pursued by you; it is mixed farming I suppose?—What do you mean by “mixed”?

56,137. Arable—and you also graze?—Yes.

56,138. Are you near any works?—Yes.

56,139. Do you find that the smoke of the works does any damage to the land?—Well, it might cause a little damage this time. There was some fire yonder on some hillocks.

56,140. Do you mean this year?—Yes; this year. I do not find they have caused damage before. I believe there has been some this year.

56,141. Does it do damage to any great extent?—Well, I cannot say to what extent; until I have the corn in I cannot say how much.

56,142. Of course you contracted with respect to the rent with the Brymbo Company on the understanding that the smoke would do no damage to the land which you farm?—Yes, but this last year the hillocks I mentioned got on fire, and then the smoke was worse than ever—it is more in the middle of the land.

56,143. Have you had any abatements during the six years?—No.

56,144. Were the farms reduced when you entered?—I cannot say as to that.

56,145. You do not know what the old rents were?—No, I do not.

Mr. Grove.

56,146. Will you give us the rent of your farm?—I pay 24s. per acre for two farms and 28s. for the other.

Mr. Griffiths.

56,147. Do you consider that the farmers adjacent to these works are in a better position to pay their rents than those living in the country places?—No, I cannot say as to that.

56,148. Do you sell any milk for the supply of people at the works?—Yes.

56,149. And butter and cheese and all that sort of thing?—Yes.

56,150. You have not felt the depression so much as the others that are farther up?—Well, it is better close to the works.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Dr. E. PAN JONES called and examined.

Chairman.

56,151. You have some evidence to lay before us, I think, have you not?—Yes.

56,152. Will you kindly tell us where you live?—Permit me to make one personal explanation. It would have been more agreeable to me to appear at Holywell, in the district where I live, but having an engagement in Glamorganshire next Saturday, when you sit there, I wrote to the Secretary to ask him to grant me the favour of coming before you here. Hence I am present.

56,153. Where do you live?—Mostyn.

56,154. And what are you by profession?—Congregational minister.

56,155. Will you kindly tell us what you wish to say?—I am a native of Cardiganshire, the son of a small holder. The land has been occupied by members of the same family for over 200 years. My sister lives there now. It is not quite 7 acres; the rent, as I first remember it, was 9*l*. It is now 14*l*., while the holding is now of less value than it was then; as there was a cottage on it at that time, from which my grandfather used to get 2*l*. a year rent. I came to Mostyn in 1869. The parish is owned almost entirely by the Earl of Denbigh, who is an absentee landlord, and Lord Mostyn. The Mostyn estate was at that time managed by an agent, who acted with such a high hand that most of the tenants were trembling under his rule. This stewardship may be marked in the annals of the parish as the revolutionary period, for under his rule the parish was greatly depopulated. More than 20 cottages were demolished and seven or eight small holdings were consolidated. One of those holdings was occupied by a widow of about 70 years of age. She was born in the old house, so also her father, who in his spare time had added to it by enclosing pieces of the surrounding common. Many others did the same thing. When she was forced to remove to another home she became dejected and soon died. There are now seven more cottages on the Mostyn estate closed, ready to be erased. That will bring up the total number of dwellings done away with to 36. The agent tried to drive another tenant away from his holding, but he was so attached to his old home that he determined not to go away alive, and one day, in consequence of the threats of the agent to remove him by force, he attempted to commit suicide. Then he was left alone, and there he is still. But fortunately things have greatly changed for the better under the present Lord Mostyn and his agent. The demolition of cottages and the consolidation of small holdings have not been carried on to a very great extent on the property of the Earl of Denbigh. I know of only a few cases, and those happened before the time I am speaking of.

Sir John Llewelyn.

56,156. When was the time you were speaking of?—I came to Mostyn in 1869.

56,157. Then it was prior to that?—Prior to that on the Denbigh estates.

The cottages which have been demolished were in quite as good a condition as those now standing. Some of those cottages contain only one room, some two rooms, and very few three rooms, and I know of instances where whole families, father, mother, and seven children, both sons and daughters, used to sleep in one room, 5 by 3½ yards. Scarcely any of these cottages have a back door. Only two plots of land have been sold in the district in my time, or at any time. The one was a segment formed by a curve in the road alongside the railway, which, in the middle, measured about 16 yards across. This came to the market in 1872, and it was soon covered with cottages. But around these cottages there is neither a garden nor a space where a man could hang up a pocket handkerchief to dry. The other plot, which was not quite 3 acres, was sold by the late Earl of Denbigh, in 1883, to the Nonconformists of the district for a cemetery for the sum of 220*l.*, which, together with the expenses of the transfer, ran up to 300*l.* I am not in a position to speak from experience as to the relation of landlords and tenants, and the tenants themselves, though they often complain to me of their hardships, of the stringent and cruel clauses in their agreements; are not prepared to come forward to give evidence. I can only say that the tenants are, through fear of notice to quit, all their lifetime subject to bondage, and not one of those most oppressed will, I believe, come forward, in Holywell, to give evidence. The owners of the whole parish, with but trifling exceptions are, in religion, either Episcopalians or Roman Catholics, and in politics Conservatives, while the people, with few exceptions are, in religion, Nonconformists, and in politics Liberal, but at the elections very few of the tenants are strong enough to declare themselves. I do not mean to say that the people are either intimidated or threatened, but when those who are in some way or other closely connected with their Conservative landlords go about canvassing and stating that their landlord is very favourable to a certain candidate, and that the ballot is not safe, the people tremble, and a promise to vote as desired naturally follows. The game is a source of unpleasantness throughout the district. There was, up to a recent date, a small farm in the parish surrounded by the Mostyn estate, occupied by a hardworking man, who, I was told, paid his rent regularly, but the agent of the Mostyn estate thought he was disturbing the game (whether that was correct or not I cannot say), and did not rest until he succeeded in removing him from his old home and demolish his house.

See 22,794. Lord Penrhyn, in his evidence given at Llan-gefni, October 14, 1893, referred to me and put before the Commissioners a translation of a letter of mine which had appeared in the 'Celt' newspaper, February 27th, 1885, but unfortunately omitted to state the circumstances under which it was written. The following appeared in the 'Liverpool Daily Post,' February 11th, 1885:—

"The Bethesda Poaching Case.

"It will be remembered that last month two quarrymen, named W. M. Jones and Robert Hughes, who were employed at Lord Penrhyn's quarry, were severely fined by the Bangor magistrates for salmon poaching and assaulting a constable and river police in his Lordship's employ. In addition to the heavy punishment inflicted by the justices upon these men, they were summarily dismissed from the quarry and turned out of their homes. This caused the quarrymen employed in the Penrhyn quarry and the inhabitants of Bethesda generally to forward to Lord Penrhyn a memorial praying that the men should be reinstated. The Hon. G. S. D. Pennant, his Lordship's eldest son, declined to accede to the prayer of the memorial, and he gives, in the following letter to Mr. A. Wyatt, chief manager of the quarry, his reasons for doing so.

"Wicken Stoney, Staffordshire,
"DEAR MR. WYATT, January 13th, 1885.

"THE memorial addressed to Lord Penrhyn, and forwarded by you at his request, for my decision thereon, having been carefully considered by me, I cannot help feeling regret that so many persons should have expressed sympathy for the perpetrators of what at the trial (vide report in 'North Wales Chronicle') was described by Mr. Louis, the counsel for the prisoners, as a most 'dastardly offence.' I deeply regret that men employed in the Penrhyn quarry should have been capable of an offence which included not only ingratitude to their employer, but savage brutality to those appointed to see that respect for the law was enforced. The men who have been found guilty of that offence may either not have considered, or else have chosen to ignore its possible consequences to themselves and their families, but that is no extenuation of their fault. For the benefit of those who think that the fine imposed by the magistrates is a heavy punishment in the case, I commend to their notice the report in the London daily papers, January 10th, 1885, of the trial of the previous day at the Surrey Sessions, when the prisoner (who had his arm broken in the struggle) in a somewhat similar case was sentenced to 12 months imprisonment for assaulting and causing bodily harm to the police in the execution of their duty. In this case I feel convinced that I am only studying the real interest of the order-loving and law-abiding portion of the community in declining to comply with the terms of the memorial.

"Yours truly,

G. DOUGLAS PENNANT.

"A. Wyatt, Esq.,

"Tanybryn, Bangor."

Now, having read his Lordship's letter, and finding that the men had to suffer such triple punishment, (1) a heavy fine, (2) deprived of their living, and (3) turned houseless into the street, though the house out of which Robert Hughes was turned had been up to a short time before that incident a leasehold property of his father, I felt it was my duty to point out the unchristian and even inhuman spirit that pervades that letter. What I then wrote is the letter of which Lord Penrhyn complains. His Lordship in his evidence stated, (1) that I had a very large chapel at Bethesda, near Bangor; (2) that I was in the employment of the Land Nationalisation Society; (3) that he does not know what that society is; (4) that I had misrepresented the landlords to the utmost of my ability; (5) that I absconded to America to avoid the libel action brought against me by his father. But, unfortunately for his Lordship, there is not a particle of truth in either of the two first, nor in either of the two last statements. As to the third statement, viz., that he does not know what the Land Nationalisation Society is, I am ready to accept that as correct. I have never in my life lived at Bethesda three days in succession. I never had a chapel anywhere except the one at Mostyn, where I have lived nearly 25 years. I have never been for one day in the employment of the Land Nationalisation Society. I simply volunteered my service in connexion with the van he spoke of, and many other land reformers did the same thing, both in England and Wales. I have never said an unkind word of any man because he was a landlord. It is not against landlords, but against landlordism, we are agitating. As to the alleged misrepresentation on my part of the late Lord Penrhyn, I cannot see that the facts stated in my letter of February 27th, 1885, differ in any way from those admitted by the present Lord Penrhyn as to the punishment of the men, dismissing them from the quarry, and evicting them from their homes. As to my absconding to America, the contemptible idea of absconding never entered my head. I always write to the Press under my own name, and am always prepared to take the consequences. The facts are these: The Mostyn collieries having been flooded, July 1884, I decided at once to visit America in the spring of 1885, with a view to perfecting my 'Year Book of the Welsh Churches,' and in due time prepared forms to collect information, made some other arrangements, and formed many engagements which I could not easily cancel, so that when served with a writ in the street in Liverpool a few hours before I embarked, I made up my mind not to be thwarted by his Lordship's lawsuit. I received the first letter from Lord Penrhyn's solicitor April 3rd, 1885, to which I replied April 6th as follows:—

"Mostyn, April 6, 1885.

"H. Barber, Esq.

"SIR,

"I have received your letter dated April 2. Permit me to ask you to point out what in the article I have written you consider 'libellous.' If there is any false statement or exaggeration contained in it I am ready to withdraw it at once, as I should not wish to wrong Lord Penrhyn in any way. I further beg to state that the Celt Company knew nothing of the article till it appeared in print, and the whole responsibility rests with me.

"I am,

"Your obedient servant,

"E. P. JONES."

The solicitor, it appears, was not satisfied with the reply, so I wrote to him again the following letter, April the 9th:—

"Mostyn, April 9, 1885.

"H. Barber, Esq.

"SIR,

"I have arranged months ago to visit the United States, and intend returning in July. As matters have not been settled between your client and myself before leaving, I hope you will not consider me as shirking them by leaving Wales for a foreign shore for three months, as my intended visit to the States was advertised in the papers weeks ago.

"I am,

"Your obedient servant,

"E. P. JONES."

It will be seen from these letters of mine that I offered at once to make Lord Penrhyn what amends I could, and when my offer was declined, I hastened to inform his solicitor by return of post of my going to America. Thus it appears that Lord Penrhyn was as ignorant of the facts of the lawsuit as he was of my connexion with Bethesda. My intention of visiting America in the spring of 1885 was made public long before the poaching case happened; the forms for collecting information in America were printed about three weeks before the letter complained of was translated and published in the 'North Wales Chronicle.' So that the idea of absconding must fall to the ground, and I firmly believe that had I been at home to instruct my solicitors the case would have been dismissed. But landlordism in Wales is, at best, in my opinion, doubly demoralizing in its influence; it demoralizes the tenant by crushing his manliness and independence, and reducing him to the level of an abject slave, cringing at the feet of an individual in whose hands his destiny is held. The Small Holdings Act is a dead letter, and the Ground Game Act is worse than useless. Tenants in Wales, especially those who are strongly attached to their homes, cannot afford to dispute matters with their landlords. Besides, land is a limited quantity where freedom of contract is all one side, so that the only remedy to the evils of the present state of things is, in my opinion, the nationalisation of the land. No Land Bill can be of much benefit to this country unless it will be a Bill to restore the land to the people and the people to the land, and until that has been done no reform can be carried in this country, because landlordism will always block the way. Landlordism in some shape or other is ever present cankering every trade at the root. Landlordism has been the cause of the ruin to many a happy family. I remember an incident in 1870. An old neighbour of mine wrote to me that he having been turned out of his home for voting in opposition to his landlord in 1868, was going with his family to America. I met him, his wife, two sons, and one daughter, in Liverpool. The tale of the eviction was told, mixed with many tears. On the voyage the three children were taken ill of the small-pox; they were confined to the hospital on board, and from there removed to the hospital on Long Island, where in a few days the three died, and there buried unknown to their parents, who when they were informed of the fact returned broken-hearted to Wales by the first vessel.

Chairman.

56,158. That is the whole of your evidence?—That is the whole.

Lord Kenyon.

56,159. You do not seem to have a very good opinion of the Welsh farmers. You call them slaves?—They are made slaves.

56,160. Who makes them slaves?—Those that govern them.

56,161. And why is the Ground Game Act worse than useless?—Well, it is ambiguous in some cases; the tenant does not know whether the landlord is willing for him to kill the game or not.

56,162. It puts it very plainly, I think, does it not?—Oh, yes, the Act says plainly enough, but the landlord does not say plainly enough.

56,163. Which landlords are you referring to?—I am not going to name any one.

56,164. Why not?—Well, I want to live on good terms with everybody, if I can.

56,165. You have used some rather strong expressions about landlords, in papers before, have you not?—Oh, I have often—not about landlords—about the bad use they make of their powers.

56,166. Will you point out any who do make bad use of their power?—Lord Penrhyn, for example, was one.

56,167. When?—The case I read just now.

56,168. I am sorry I was not here when you read it. Was that the case of the fishing?—That was the case of the salmon poaching in Bethesda.

56,169. And was it not the fact that Lord Penrhyn preserved those fish for the miners themselves?—It is not that. It is turning the men out for poaching.

56,170. Yes, but the fish they poached were preserved by Lord Penrhyn for the benefit of the miners. Was that not so?—I never knew that. I thought they were preserved for his own use.

56,171. Perhaps you had not looked into the circumstances?—I took the matter as it appeared in the reports, or the report at the time.

56,172. Lord Penrhyn stated that the watcher was put on for the support of the miners?—I read Lord Penrhyn's letter.

56,173. Did you read Lord Penrhyn's evidence before this Commission?—Yes, now.

56,174. Did he not state something of the kind that I have alluded to?—He does not say that in his letter.

56,175. But did he not say it in his evidence?—I have only got his letter. Do you refer to the Llangefni evidence?

56,176. Yes. I will look it up, and deal with it further presently. See 56,237.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,177. You are well acquainted, I suppose, with many of the tenant farmers in North Wales, are you not?—Perfectly. I am perfectly well acquainted with them.

56,178. Do you wish the Commissioners to understand that the sentiments and the desires that you have expressed in your evidence are shared by the large majority of the tenant farmers of North Wales?—With respect to what?

56,179. Generally. I will repeat my question. I cannot put it more clearly. Are the sentiments and the desires expressed in your evidence shared by most of the tenant farmers of North Wales?—Yes, my sentiments as to the game.

56,180. But not, for instance, as to the nationalisation of land?—Well, a great many of them are of the same opinion, but they do not like to express it.

56,181. But observe what I ask you. I ask you, are we to understand that the sentiments and the desires that you have expressed are those of the majority of the tenant farmers of Wales?—I cannot say the majority. A great many of them. I will give you an instance. I asked a farmer to attend a meeting. He said, "No, I dare not, but I will give you 10s. to pay the expenses." Now, I took that to imply that he was in sympathy with my opinions. And I can refer you to another instance at Llanfyllin. I was invited down there by an anonymous letter to hold a meeting, six or seven years ago. I went. I was instructed to go to the hotel to stay, and the hall was paid for. I could not get a chairman, but the place was crammed; all my expenses were paid, but the people were afraid to come forward to show themselves.

56,182. What was the occasion of your visit?—To explain the principles of land nationalisation.

56,183. Then do you think that many tenant farmers, suffering from legitimate grievances, hesitate to come forward to give expression to those grievances before this Commission?—Yes.

56,184. Can you give me any specific instance, without mentioning names, which supports that opinion which you have just expressed?—Well, I will give this as an instance. Hundreds of our papers are taken on the quiet, and distributed among the children, both in English and Welsh.

56,185. Which papers?—Oh, the papers we print to explain this land question; for example, "Land and Labour," that is one paper, and a Welsh paper as well.

29 August 1894.]

Dr. E. PAN JONES.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

56,186. Are those documents issued in connexion with any political association?—It is not political at all. We are both Tories and Liberals. We are only land reformers. We do not join any political party at all.

56,187. What is the name of your Land Reform Association. What is it known as?—The Land Nationalisation Society.

56,188. That is not distinctively Welsh, is it?—No, it has its headquarters in London.

56,189. Then do you mean you have actually known cases in which tenant farmers obtained, or wished to obtain, copies of the documents of the Land Nationalisation Society secretly?—Yes, hundreds of them. I will give you another instance to prove the same thing. Three years ago I took a tour, to which Lord Penrhyn refers in his evidence, with the van in Wales, and in most places, when there was any uphill we had two or three horses always ready to help us to go up the hill, and a quiet word, "God bless you." I took that as a proof that their sympathy was with us, though they did not express it in so many words.

56,190. What you wish us to understand, I take it, is this, that you and your land-reforming friends are very popular with the farmers?—No, I mean to say that the principle is accepted.

56,191. I was going on to put that; and the principles that you are inculcating are very popular among the tenant farmers?—Well, it must be so. They would not go against their will, I suppose. We travelled right through from Newport to Aberystwith, up to Mold, and we never experienced any difficulty (except in one place) as to provision for the horse and help to go up any hill free of charge.

56,192. Did you pass through Cardiganshire?—All through.

56,193. Did you find that the land nationalisation scheme was popular with the freehold farmers?—Well, not with the freehold farmers. Oh, no; with the tenant farmers, and the smaller the tenants the more earnest they were.

56,194. Then what you really wish us to understand is this, that there is a general dissatisfaction with the existing system of land tenure among the small tenant farmers?—There is all through Wales. I know every county minutely.

56,195. Now, putting aside the question of land nationalisation, and great and far-reaching changes such as that phrase indicates, what are the other and special points which you gather from the tenant farmers they complain of?—Uncertainty of tenure is one, and the danger of raising the rent, and the interference of the agent much more than the landlords themselves. If the agents could be kept away from the tenant farmers, there would not be much grumbling.

56,196. Have you studied the Bills that have been brought into Parliament by certain Welsh members—Mr. Thomas Ellis and Mr. Bryn Roberts?—Yes, but I do not think anything of them at all, nothing whatever. I have spoken against them several times in their own meetings.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

56,197. Is that because the Bills do not touch those three points you have mentioned, uncertainty of tenure, the danger of rent being raised, and the interference of the agents, or is it because those Bills do not adequately or fully carry out your principles?—That is it.

56,198. Which, the second ground?—The second, yes.

56,199. Then I gather you do rather think that those Bills would fairly meet the actual practical grievances of the moment?—Well, it would help bridge it on for a few years; that is all. We Welsh people are very quiet when we get small blessings.

56,200. May I ask what you mean by land nationalisation?—Yes, to have the land controlled on the same principle as the Post Office is controlled, or the telegraph, controlled under the Government, either to have governors appointed in counties, or by the Government itself.

56,201. Would you be satisfied if the land were managed as well as the Post Office?—Yes, quite. There I can post a letter for 1d., and the landlord must pay 1d. for a letter as well, and if I could get an acre of land on the same terms as the landlord I would be quite pleased.

56,202. But your observations were based, it seems to me, upon this fact, that the land was so limited in quantity?—Limited in quantity, just so. If the landlord pays 100l. for 100 acres, let him have 100 acres; and if he wants to post 100 letters, let him post them; and if I want to post only one, let me post that one.

56,203. I do not quite see the analogy, I confess, between a carrying business like the Post Office and the business of managing the whole land of the country. In a sense all government might be described as the management of the land of the country?—Take the Suez Canal, that is another thing.

56,204. That is a method of communication again?—Well.

56,205. Am I to gather this, then, that what you mean is that the whole of the land of the country should be re-vested in the State?—In the State, that is it.

56,206. And let out by the State for public purposes?—Yes.

56,207. The whole management of the business being entrusted to a public department?—Yes.

56,208. Or a series or a hierarchy of public departments?—Yes.

56,209. Now, how do you propose to bring that change about?—Do you mean with reference to money matters?

56,210. I mean supposing you had a majority in the House of Commons—I only want your method; I only want to know how far you agree with the schemes that have been promulgated from time to time by Mr. Russell Wallace and other gentlemen?—I expect this will be the leading question of the election after next. The next election is disestablishment, the second will be the land question, and when we have a majority in the House we will reclaim the land, and we will not want to reclaim it without compensation. Wherever there has been purchase money passed between buyer and vendor, return him the purchase money honestly, but where land has been enclosed, as thousands and thousands of acres have been, without any payment at all, we claim that without payment, only for the improvements on it; we are ready and willing to pay for improvements.

56,211. Of course, you see we are sitting here as practical men, going round from county to county, and we hear different tenant farmers complaining of different things. Do you see no middle way between leaving things exactly as they are and the extensive political scheme that you are suggesting?—No, I do not see any cure for the evil. It may be cropped for a short time, but it will grow up again. We do not want to rob anybody.

56,212. If I may put the thing in, I was almost going to say, a pedantic way, your pre-suppositions or your postulates are rather different from those of the other witnesses who have come before us. That is what strikes me. You start with certain definite propositions concerning land tenure, and you say that the land ought to be reclaimed by the State. Of course, those are pre-suppositions that have not been advanced before us by tenant farmers at all so far?—At Cardigan you had a witness to that effect.

See 43,472.

56,213. Possibly we may have had one or two witnesses who suggested it.

Sir John Llewelyn.

There certainly was one; I remember perfectly well.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,214. Was it Dr. Rees Jones?—Yes, Rees Jones.

56,215. What I was on just then was this. I am not sure how far what you complain about is not to be called the logical consequence of admitting private property in land and not a practical complaint referring to the exercise of rights by private owners?—We go in for principle, and entrust the practical part to the representatives in the House to carry it out. We go in only for principle.

56,216. But supposing you carried it out. Supposing the whole of the land in the country is vested in the State, and managed by a public department. Supposing I were tenant of a farm, say Tygwyn, and I had been in the habit of paying to the private owner 100*l.* a year rent; you have caused your change to come about; I take the farm again from the State, this time at 100*l.* a year rent. Is that rent to be fixed in perpetuity?—Oh, no. Take a valuation every five years or so. That we leave entirely to Parliament, to the Senate.

56,217. Then I should not have got rid of the danger of rent being raised?—No, certainly. The Members of Parliament, or the County Council, or any body that be elected, would have to regulate the rent, and you would elect the best men for that work. I would have more faith in 20 or 40 than I would have in one.

56,218. Then, as far as that aspect of the case is concerned, the danger of raising rent, I am inclined to think that if I were in the position I have indicated, I should just as soon be a tenant of a private owner, with a right to go into a land court, as a tenant having to trust to a vote of the County Council. I am not sure that I should not feel a bit more secure if I had a public official occupying a judicial position to assess the rent from time to time?—No, but there is one other point.—

56,219. But what do you say to that?—Well, I have no objection to a land court, but we object to private property in land in toto for this reason. Here a railway has been opened. The land 10 years ago was not worth 5*s.* an acre. The railway has been opened that way: the land is now worth 30*s.* an acre. That goes entirely into the pockets of a private individual, while we maintain that it ought to benefit the whole community.

56,220. That is, you are complaining of what was called by Mr. John Stuart Mill the unearned increment?—Just so, yes.

56,221. Would not a proper system of taxation meet that?—Those that own the land generally are at the root of taxation. They arrange their own taxation very often.

56,222. I do not know. That is a bold proposition. Our franchise is not absolutely democratic yet, but it is approaching a democratic ideal?—If a tenant farmer or two will be in the meeting, he would not rate his landlord very high.

56,223. He would not rate his landlord very high?—No, he would not assess his landlord very high. So we want that unearned increment to go to benefit the whole community.

56,224. Yes, but a great many people are of that opinion, who see different methods of compassing that end without going to so extreme a position as you are going to. I am only anxious to ascertain what your ideas are, so forgive me if my questions appear to be unduly pressing. I am only anxious to see on what grounds you formulate your scheme. Then I am not sure, again, in the case of a tenant under the County Council, or under the State, that uncertainty of tenure would be got rid of. Would you allow the individual citizen to have an indefeasible right to remain for his whole life on the holding?—Oh yes, and for the life of his children as well, if they pay the rent.

56,225. Then you develop a new aristocracy, namely, the aristocracy of State tenants?—Well, whatever they be; let them be aristocrats. I would like as well to see a farmer an aristocrat as any other.

56,226. Yes, but the present landowners are in theory of law mere tenants of the Crown?—But the farmer must pay his rent annually. The landlords do not pay rent.

56,227. Supposing that the population in a particular place has increased in the course of, we will say, 200 or 300 years; then the mass of the people will find themselves at a disadvantage compared with the descendants of the happy

29 August 1894.]

Dr. E. PAN JONES.

man who happened to take the holding at the time when the Land Nationalisation Bill became law?—Families die away very often, and the land might be divided then in a case like that, when the family become extinct, or they might emigrate, or anything of that kind.

56,228. Would the State preserve no control over the user by the tenant. Would the State preserve no right to dictate the user of the land?—Certainly, it will be only the difference that the agent managing the estate would be under the Government, and not under private individuals.

56,229. Now come to the third point, interference by the agents. I am looking at the whole matter from the point of view of the tenant now argumenti causa—the man who is actually farming the land. I have suggested to you that the danger of raising the rent remains the same; and that the uncertainty of tenure will remain much the same; now comes the interference by the agent. Do you think that the interference of a Government agent would be more acceptable than the interference of the agent of a private owner?—Oh yes, if he would not do his work properly, you would agitate by the next election, and dismiss him, whereas you cannot dismiss the agent of the landlord. We want the land governed by the people for the people.

56,230. It appears to me that the scheme as unfolded by you would really mean the government by the people for the benefit of a select class, namely, the holders of land from the State?—No. The land would be held by the State, which I take to represent the nation. I claim that I have a share in the Post Office, or the canal, or the telegraph, as well as anyone in the State.

56,231. In the profits made, you mean?—Well, I mean I am a shareholder in the State. I can give my vote to dismiss the Postmaster-General, or my vote goes as far as it is worth to control the whole affair, and so it would be in the land question.

56,232. Now may I put this point to you. It is only carrying logically your views a little further. Do not you think that a land nationalising scheme might be formulated by a better plan than yours, namely, that each county, for instance, should run its own farms?—Well, if they can do better, right and well.

56,233. But would they?—What I want is to enlighten the people to see what I see, and if they go so much further, right and well.

56,234. Your scheme only comes to this after all; for a collection or aggregate of tenants paying their money to private owners, both of them being taxable and rateable by the State in its different capacities, you propose to substitute a body or aggregate of tenants paying rent directly to the State?—No, there is another thing, the unearned increment. That was the great point.

56,235. I quite agree, but could not the unearned increment be dealt with without the far-reaching change which you are suggesting. I mean, cannot the grievance which may be felt in regard to the unearned increment be dealt with otherwise than by so far-reaching a scheme as the one you are suggesting?—We have no objection, provided someone will put it forward, but we have not seen one yet.

56,236. But you told me that you could not suggest any middle course yourself?—I cannot, so if anyone else could I would consider it.

Lord Kenyon.

56,237. I want to correct my statement just now. I find it was not in evidence that Lord Penrhyn stated that the fish were preserved for the benefit of the miners. It must have been privately to me, because certainly that was the impression on my mind?—I read the evidence through, and I did not see it.

56,238. It was not in evidence, and you were quite correct. Now, I heard you say in that interesting dialogue you have had with Mr. Brynmor Jones, that you would pay those who had bought their land compensation?—Yes.

56,239. Where would you put the limit of payment?—Arbitration, certainly.

56,240. I mean how long ago must they have proved that they had bought their land?—The Land Nationalisation Society goes on this principle, wherever land has been bought this side of the Deluge they are quite willing to pay compensation.

56,241. Yes, I see, but according to you one has got to prove more than one's title: one has not only got to prove when one became possessed of that title, therefore would it not be rather a hardship on those who could not produce their bills and receipts?—Well, we have not entered into those particulars, my Lord.

56,242. It seems to me to be rather an injustice?—We go on principle only, and shall pity those that have been unfortunate to lose their titles.

56,243. Supposing I could produce the receipts for the payments by my grandfather or great-grandfather for rents in this neighbourhood, and suppose you had land in this neighbourhood, and could not produce your receipts, although your grandfather might have bought the land, would not you think it rather an injustice if you did not receive compensation?—Well, that is a very peculiar case.

56,244. I do not think it is at all a peculiar case. I think you will find that very few people have taken the trouble to keep those sort of receipts. They keep the title, which is all the State requires them to possess?—Yes. Well I cannot say what the wisdom of the Commission appointed to treat matters would be then, whether they would be kind enough to grant me some compensation. I do not know, but I think everyone ought to keep the receipt for what he pays.

56,245. From this day forth, no doubt, after hearing your scheme, people will do so?—I should like it to be understood thoroughly that we say nothing against landlords. It is not against landlords that we say anything; it is against landlordism as it is misused.

See 56,175.

29 August 1894.]

Dr. E. PAN JONES.

56,246. You will admit that there are some landlords who do not misuse the system?—I would not wish a better landlord than Lord Mostyn, my neighbour, nor his agent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,247. Did you agree with Mr. Ellis's speech in the House of Commons, a speech that attracted a great deal of attention?—I have not read it. Which was it?

56,248. I think it was a speech delivered in 1891?—You mean before the Commission was appointed?

56,249. Yes, before the Commission was appointed?—Really I do not remember the particulars of that speech.

56,250. But what strikes me is that Mr. Ellis there, making a statement which he repeated before us at Bala, did complain of others?—There are some very bad.

56,251. You said a few moments ago that you were not complaining of landlords at all?—No, it is not against landlords as such, but against the bad landlords, not because they are landlords, it is because they make bad use of their power.

Mr. Griffiths.

56,252. At the commencement of your evidence you spoke of some 36 cottages that had been demolished?—Yes, 36 cottages and seven small holdings which had been done away with.

56,253. Is it not to the landlord's interest to keep up the houses on his estate?—That agent never studied the advantage of the landlord. The estate was at the time in Chancery, and he was acting for the Court of Chancery.

56,254-5. Had he any object in view in doing so?—Yes, making the country, well, like a plain; he did not want to see any cottages anywhere on the land.

56,256. Did he wish to depopulate the whole neighbourhood?—The whole of the estate, which is the greater part of the parish.

56,257. You spoke of some very indifferent cottages?—Yes, there are some now.

56,258. Are there some of them still standing?—Still standing, yes. I could name the cottages right through the parish.

56,259. What parish are they in?—Whitford.

56,260. Is there an inspector of nuisances for that parish?—I suppose so, but he does not do much of his work.

56,261. I suppose he takes care to have his pay?—Well, he is paid, but he never rectifies matters. I have often complained to him of nuisances, but he never rectifies things.

56,262. What is your reason for thinking that the tenant farmers are afraid to come forward to give evidence?—Because they have told me so. I do not expect there will be half a dozen at Holywell, though they have been complaining for some time. They are afraid to come forward.

56,263. Why?—Well, I suppose I need not say why. I do not want to offend the steward nor the landlord. It is not Lord Mostyn, nor the Earl of Denbigh. I have no cause of complaint.

56,264. But you think there are some landlords who would not like their tenants to come forward to give evidence?—Yes, I know. Lord Mostyn has reduced the rents and given abatements annually.

56,265. Then you mentioned just now that you are in the habit of going round the country to lecture on this scheme?—Yes, I am going this week down to Morriston.

56,266. Is it the fact that you did not know who paid your expenses in these places?—No, I do not know up to this date who paid them at Llanfyllin.

56,267. Then you take it as the feeling of the neighbourhood that they are afraid to express their opinion?—I was up on the bench (I suppose you know it) in that hall, and the hall was crammed. I asked them, "Is there anyone that will take the chair?" They shouted like this through their hands, "Our principles will take the chair, go on." I could not get a chairman there.

Professor Rhys.

56,267a. I think you said that you did not get much encouragement from the small freeholders?—Oh, no, none at all.

56,268. How do you account for that?—Oh, they think that we are going to rob them.

56,269. Have you taken any steps to explain to them that you are not?—Yes; but they are surrounded by big landlords, who desire them not to join us, and they would not listen at all; they say—"We have bought our land and don't you come here to rob us." That is the way they treat it.

56,270. Some of them have been complaining that they are very hard up, having to pay heavy mortgages on the land that they have bought?—Yes, and I know some of them would like to get rid of it now, especially down in Carmarthenshire.

56,271. Get rid of the land?—Get rid of their farms, but they cannot get the money that they paid for them.

56,272. What would you say to the suggestion that has been made to us more than once, that the Government should advance money at a low rate of interest to enable them to pay off the mortgages?—No, I do not approve of that.

56,273. You do not approve of that?—No, we have plenty of landlords already. We want to reduce them, not to increase them.

56,274. I think the contrary has been suggested now and then, that to have more owners of land is the cure for the difficulties?—Oh no. We, as a society go direct against that principle. We want to reduce the number, not increase it.

56,275. But suppose that each farmer owned his farm; or suppose that each of the present farmers was able to buy his farm. What is your objection to that?—Well, I do not believe in private property in land. According to that principle of private property in land, one man could buy the whole county, and there would be no chance for anyone to live.

56,276. You are going beyond the supposition I mentioned. Suppose each farmer was able to buy up his own farm?—Well, we are against that.

56,277. Would you tell me in what way practically that would be objectionable, as it is no use speaking to me of great principles of political economy; for I am afraid I do not understand them. But could you say to what objectionable result that state of things would lead? In France a great part of the community own their own land?—Yes, but that would be private property in land with one farm as well as with 100 farms, so we are against that altogether.

56,278. But why?—Oh, for the same reason as we are against a whole country being in any one man's hand.

56,279. But do you think that objection applies?—That is one objection, and the unearned increment. We want that to go to benefit the whole community, and not to benefit individuals.

56,280. But that would go to benefit a larger number than under one landlord?—Yes, but we want it to benefit the whole community, the nation.

56,281. But I do not clearly understand your objection supposing each farmer owned his own farm?—Then he would be taking the unearned increment. I cannot say it plainer than that.

56,282. Anything else?—Yes, we object to the principle altogether.

56,283. You say you object to the principle, but I am sure you can explain it to me in a more concrete form than that?—Is not that enough—to secure the unearned increment.

56,284. Oh, yes, you mentioned that before?—Well, that is the first thing, and suppose there was one farmer owning his own farm; that farm would be for ever in the power of the family or the descendants, although there might be 10 or 12 in that parish that had not a foot of land. Now, in such a case if the State owned that land, the farm would be divided.

56,285. But I understood you, in answer to Mr. Brynmor Jones just now, to say that your scheme would give permanency of tenure to a family?—Yes, but sometimes if a man has a son, he may be a banker, or he may be a solicitor, who does not farm at all. We would not permit him to hold the farm unless he was cultivating it.

56,286. That would be a restriction, no doubt, but would your scheme as you have propounded it be necessary in order to ensure such a restriction as that? Could there be no intermediate position between the two?—What I hear generally is this. Something must be done to improve the state of things. We have been waiting to hear and see what that something is. We have never seen it yet, and we have proposed that something in the shape of land nationalisation. If anyone will bring a better system, I am ready to adopt it, and drop this system.

Mr. Grove.

56,287. Do you think that the security of the Ballot Act is misunderstood at the present day?—Oh, to a great extent.

56,288. You think so?—To a great extent.

Sir John Llewelyn.

56,289. In going to this question of the nationalisation of the land, who do you propose should provide the money for the purchase of the land?—Well, we have two schemes for that. Let the money remain as Consols, and let the State pay interest. That is one.

56,290. What is the other?—Well, borrow the money, that is another way.

56,291. Then you would pay over in cash to the existing owners?—Yes.

56,292. And that would be at the cost of the British taxpayer?—At the cost of everybody, then.

56,293. Have you taken any steps to ascertain the feeling of the British public upon the subject?—Well, I am doing it now.

56,294. That is through the Welsh press?—I am going through Glamorganshire on Friday to try it.

56,295. You have been there before, I think?—Oh, yes; and I am going on Friday again.

56,296. Do you not think it would be the duty of the agent for the State to get the highest possible rent?—I do not, and neither does the society intend to dictate to the agents. We leave that entirely to our parliamentary representatives.

56,297. I think you said at the beginning of your evidence that in your old home in Cardiganshire there had been some cases of cottages being demolished and holdings consolidated?—No, I did not say as to Cardiganshire.

56,298. Where was it then?—At Mostyn. The rent was raised in Cardiganshire.

56,299. But the 36 cottages which were demolished—that was at Mostyn, was it not?—Yes.

56,300. Who did that?—The agent of the Mostyn estate, during the time the estate was in Chancery.

56,301. But when it was in Chancery surely it was in the hands of London officials?—The name of the agent was Mr. St. John Charlton.

56,302. He was the agent of the estate at that time?—Yes, under the Court of Chancery.

56,303. Would not that be an example of State ownership?—Well, I do not think it. Nobody had any power over him except the Court of Chancery, and the voters in Flintshire have no power in Chancery.

56,304. Anyhow, it is not an example of landlordism in Wales?—Well, in some places in Cardiganshire it has been so, but not in my old home.

56,305. You mentioned an instance of a game grievance just before the salmon question. I was going to ask you this. You stated that it was from information you had received. A tenant had been, I think, evicted from his farm?—Yes.

29 August 1894.]

56,306. Was that on the Mostyn estate, did you say?—Oh, no. I do not think Lord Mostyn has ever evicted a tenant.

56,307. Then it was upon some other estate in your neighbourhood?—That was a small farm right in the middle of the Mostyn estate.

56,308. That is where I came to the wrong conclusion?—It was surrounded by the Mostyn estate, I said.

56,309. Was the tenant evicted from that farm?—Yes.

56,310. Is he alive?—He is alive.

56,311. Why does not he come forward to state that himself?—That happened 18 years ago. He is an illiterate man, and he did not know about the Commissioners. I asked him, "Are you going to give evidence, Jonathan Hughes, before the Commissioners?" "What is 'Commissioners?'" he said. He did not know at all.

56,312. He did not know anything about it?—No.

56,313. Anyhow, if he chose he might come forward and give evidence?—Yes, he might.

56,314. That was 18 years ago?—About 18 years ago.

56,315. Then what you know of it is from hearsay?—I know the man very well, and I knew the farm. I was at his house hundreds of times.

56,316. He is not afraid, at all events, to come forward, because he is no longer under that estate?—No, I do not think he is, but he is quite uneducated.

Chairman.

56,317. I will only ask you one or two questions. I have listened to your evidence. What I understand is that what you wish to see is the land the property of the State. That is so?—Yes, my Lord.

56,318. You would not allow, under those circumstances, any land to be sold by the State, if the State were landlord?—No.

56,319. But you would be willing that the State should grant leases for a certain number of years, provided that certain conditions were fulfilled?—Just so.

56,320. Then at the end of this term the land would revert to the State again, with those conditions fulfilled?—Yes.

56,321. And there would be no compensation for improvements?—No, and the farms might be divided, in the case of the population having increased.

56,322. Then would the man who took the farm have the right of sub-division?—He would sell whatever improvements he had made, but the State would divide the farm.

56,323. You would make the State pay for improvements?—No, the incomer. I would let the man sell the improvements. Suppose the State would offer him 50*l.*, if he could sell it to the incoming tenant for 60*l.*, all right and well.

Chairman—continued.

56,324. You are aware that this custom exists at the present time in New South Wales, to the great advantage of the community?—Yes.

56,325. But if this system was introduced into this country, would not the difficulties and the expense be enormous?—Well, I cannot say.

56,326. What I want to ask you is this: Has your society thought out seriously any practical scheme; have they considered what this plan of yours would cost?—We have a great many members in New South Wales.

56,327. But have you ever thought what it would cost?—Yes, they have made the calculation.

56,328. What is your calculation?—Really I have not got the figures with me, but it is an enormous sum, I know.

56,329. Have any public bodies in this neighbourhood bought land to let to labourers for small holdings or allotments?—No, I do not think; I do not know of any.

56,330. Are you aware that that has been done in Lincolnshire?—Yes, and in Cheshire, I think; but we are against the buying altogether.

56,331. And the payment is put over a certain number of years?—Yes.

56,332. At the end of that number of years the land becomes the property of the county council or of the district council. That might be called the nationalisation of the land to some extent?—On a small scale.

56,333. Then your system has, to a certain extent, been adopted by the law of the land?—Just so, on a small scale, locally.

56,334. You think that the thin end of the wedge?—We feel so, and we look forward hopefully, too.

56,335. Now I have some questions handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Are you aware that Lord Penrhyn withdrew and apologised for the 'mention of you in connexion with Bethesda?'"—I am.

56,336. "Did you find nationalisation of land popular everywhere?"—No.

56,337. "Can you tell us what happened at Pentre-Voelas?"—Yes, I can. A certain Mr. Williams, from Carnarvon, a Tory, an editor of "Gwalia," I think, or an ex-editor, at all events, came there in order to enter into a discussion, and began to make noise, but in 10 minutes the crowd threatened to pitch him into the river, and he skedaddled and left the place.

56,338. That is what happened at that place?—Yes.

56,339. "Did you write in the 'Celt' of the 27th February 1885 Welsh words to this effect: 'My Lord should be thankful that he 'does not live in Ireland. The Irish, fair play 'to them, are able to settle such points as these 'with much facility, and there is but little 'doubt in my mind but that they will before 'long succeed in teaching the Welsh the same 'lessons?'"—I have no objection to the translation put upon that letter by Lord Penrhyn, which is in English. It is in the minutes. I have no objection to the translation, only one word.

See 22,794

Dr. E. PAN JONES.

Chairman—continued.

56,340. What word is that?—That I would not be sorry to see that house “beaten” into dust; that is not the word. I applied the term used to Jericho.

56,341. Those words are not here?—He says “beaten,” and I am happy to tell you that the house has never been inhabited since.

56,342. The question of Mr. Vincent is “What lessons did you mean?” You say “that they will before long succeed in teaching the Welsh ‘the same lessons.’” What lessons did you mean?—I meant to have suggested good members in Parliament that would take the matter in hand; a few lines further down I referred to Mr. Rathbone. The Irish had elected members that roused the House in their favour when anything like that happened, and I wanted the Welsh to do that, and in fact they have done so.

56,343. Then you had no intention of advocating outrage whatever?—Oh, no, my Lord.

Lord Kenyon.

56,344. Do you remember the rest of that letter. What was your correction? “Beaten into ashes” was the expression?—In ashes, I would say.

56,345. The letter goes on: “remaining with ‘no one even to repair them, and I trust that ‘every Welshman will look upon them in future ‘until the dawning of the Resurrection as void ‘places under the curse of God. And if there ‘be any Welshman whose humanity is so degraded as to take one of the two houses to ‘live in, let the inhabitants of Bethesda be ‘manly enough to take away from such that ‘they receive him not into their houses, neither ‘bid him God speed. Before the workmen can ‘fight effectually with the lords they must be ‘faithful to each other’?”—Yes, that is my letter.

56,346. You say that that letter contains no sort of wish to outrage, or anything of that sort?—Oh, no.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,347. Did you not advise that the case should be brought to the notice of the members of Parliament immediately afterwards?—Yes, and I wanted Mr. Rathbone to bring the case before Parliament.

Chairman.

56,348. The way your letter ends is, “Let the case be laid before one of the members of Parliament, Mr. Rathbone, and let him call the attention of the Senate to the occurrence, so that it may bring shame to the lords’ face. If Mr. Rathbone will not do that, remember there are those who will do so, and that without any demur.” That was signed “E. Pan Jones”?—Yes, that is the letter.

Lord Kenyon.

56,349. Then, with reference to beating it into ashes, what was that—merely a phrase?—There has been no tenant there ever since.

56,350. That was merely a phrase?—It is falling into what I said in the letter.

56,351. It is merely a figure of speech, do you mean?—Certainly it is.

56,352. Or is that what you wish actually to happen?—Yes, and it is so.

Chairman.

56,353. Then instead of ashes you meant ruins?—I meant that it should not become of any value after that, and it has never been tenanted since—that is for 10 years. The people look upon the house as an accursed spot.

Lord Kenyon.

56,354. Then in your reference to the Irish fair play, you intended only to refer to Irish members of Parliament, and not to Irish methods?—In Parliament.

56,355. Only in Parliament?—Only in Parliament, yes.

Chairman.

56,356. There are some more questions by Mr. Vincent: “In what passage of his evidence did Lord Penrhyn say you had ‘absconded’?”—At Question 22,795 he says, “Dr. Pan Jones, as was explained by his counsel, had found it convenient to be in America,” but at the top of the page there are in italics the words, “but ‘absconded to America before trial came on.’”

56,357. But that is in your own letter?—No, it is not.

56,358. Is not that a portion of your letter?—No, it is not my own letter.

56,359. Yes, it begins, “Here is landlordism with a vengeance”?—That has nothing to do with my letter. That is a misprint.

56,360. I think those words, “libel action brought against Dr. Pan Jones” must have been interposed by Lord Penrhyn there?—Yes, it is not in my letter.

Chairman.

56,360a. The Secretary will send this to Lord Penrhyn, and ask him how that it is?—It could not have been my letter. It is a misprint that ought to be corrected. See 74,32
—74,344.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,361. Is there a shadow of foundation for the suggestion that you absconded to America to avoid paying the costs of the libel action? Is there a word of truth in it?—Oh no, not the least. I could show you the printed forms I had. Here is the first letter of Lord Penrhyn’s solicitor to me (handing a letter). That will show you the date. The second letter I have lost.

29 August 1894.]

Dr. E. PAN JONES.

Lord Kenyon.

56,362. May I ask, to clear this up, were you in America during the trial?—I was in America in 1870.

56,363. Were you in America during this trial?—Yes, I was in America. I read the report in New York before coming over.

56,364. Were you away when the trial was instituted?—I was served with that writ in Liverpool two hours before I boarded the vessel. My things were in Liverpool—my luggage was all in Liverpool ready to go.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,365. Do you mean to say you were served personally with the writ, instead of its being sent to your solicitor?—Yes.

56,366. Though you are so well-known a man in those parts?—Yes. The writ was served on me on the 9th. I had announced that I was resigning the editorship of the paper on the 20th March, so that it was well-known that I was going to America.

56,367. And you mean to say that the plaintiff actually caused his solicitor to serve you on the steamer before you went out?—On the street going to the vessel. I was coming out of the offices of the Inman Line, and the man jumped to me on the road.

56,368. It is a most unusual course in the case of a well-known man?—I knew nothing of it.

56,369. He never even sent you a letter before action?—Yes, that letter that I handed in.

56,370. The writ and the letter came together?—No. The letter came on the 3rd, and I replied that I was ready to withdraw any false statement or exaggeration. The writ came then.

Chairman.

56,371. Do you wish this letter to be read or not?—As you please.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It is hardly worth while having it on the notes.

Chairman.

56,372. Very well. Now there are some more questions by Mr. Vincent: "Do you say that Lord Denbigh and Lord Mostyn are both absentees"?—No, only the Earl of Denbigh.

56,373. You say that Lord Denbigh only is an absentee?—Yes.

56,374. "What instructions do you say that you could have given to your solicitor which would have altered the verdict of the jury?"—I could have produced the "Liverpool Daily Post," on which I had founded my letter, and that was never produced in court.

56,375. "You were represented by counsel, were you not?"—No, I was not. Someone employed a counsel, but I did not know anything about him.

56,376. "Lord Mostyn lets you land for your chapel, does he not?"—No. The chapel was built in 1826 on a 199 years' lease. That was Sir Edward Mostyn, I think, at that time.

Chairman—continued.

56,377. Lord Mostyn's ancestor?—Well, one of his ancestors.

56,377a. The predecessor of Lord Mostyn?—Oh, no, three generations ago.

56,378. What term did you say?—199 years.

56,379. And at what rent?—10s. 6d. We do not complain of Lord Mostyn at all.

Lord Kenyon.

56,380. I see at the end of this letter the solicitor of Lord Penrhyn says: "In addressing the 'Celt' newspaper on this subject I have asked for an apology, which should, of course, come from yourself as well as them, and which, if mutually agreed upon, will save a recourse to the legal proceedings which I am otherwise instructed to take against yourself and the company." Did you offer an apology? I thought I heard you say you did?—I suppose I read it too rapidly. Here is the letter I wrote: "Sir, I have received your letter dated April 2nd. Permit me to ask you to point out what in the article I have written you consider 'libellous.' If there is any false statement or exaggeration contained in it, I am ready to withdraw it at once, as I should not wish to wrong Lord Penrhyn in any way. I further beg to state that the 'Celt' Company knew nothing of the article till it appeared in print, and the whole responsibility rests with me." I could not write a more courteous letter.

56,381. Did you receive no further communication from them?—Yes, but that letter I have lost, and the writ came the following day.

56,382. What did the other letter contain, do you remember, the one you have lost?—It did not refer to my letter at all, but the writ came on the following day.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,383. I observe that Lord Penrhyn said in his evidence that the "agitation upon the Welsh land question was unreal in its origin, and had not its source in any genuine sense of grievance on the part of the agricultural community." What is your opinion upon that?—The same as my opinion about the correctness of his statements as to my connexion with Bethesda.

Chairman.

56,384. Then I have some questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "It is clear that all your American arrangements were made before the libel action was commenced"?—All.

56,385. "Even before the solicitor's letter was written to you"?—Yes. All these forms were printed, which cost me some time to prepare. That (handing a document) was printed on March 2nd, and the first letter was written on April 2nd. These are the forms (producing same) for the information I was collecting towards a little book that I publish every year. That is the book (producing same).

56,386. "Were all the plaintiff's costs paid by you"?—All the plaintiff's costs; all the costs amounted to over 4,000*l.*

29 August 1894.]

Dr. E. PAN JONES.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,387. I think you are accused by Lord Penrhyn of having misrepresented the landlords to the utmost of your ability. Did you, in your lecturing tour for the Land Nationalisation Society, attack any individual landlords at all?—Never, except some bad action like punishing those men at Bethesda.

Chairman.

56,388. There is one more question by Mr. Vincent: "Did not Mr. Barber, the solicitor, in his second letter ask you to name a solicitor"?—No, he did not.

56,389. Are you quite sure of that?—I am perfectly clear of that.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. R. T. WICKHAM called and examined.

Chairman.

56,390. You are a land agent, and a member of the firm of Townshend and Barker, of Chester?—Yes, I am now the junior partner, since Mr. Townshend's death last summer.

56,391. And you are agent for various estates in North Wales and in Cheshire?—I am.

56,392. You are prepared to give evidence for the district of Wrexham, Denbigh, and part of Flintshire?—Yes.

56,393. Will you tell us what estates you wish to refer to?—Sir Robert Cunliffe's estate, which is about 2,200 acres; my own, which is the late Mr. Townshend's, it is marked in my summary, I think, as about 1,000 acres; then Mrs. Rasbotham's, 400 acres; also the estate of Mr. Charles William Townshend, but I do not know so very much about that; we work it partly in this district; and the Caerwys Hall estate, which I also was agent for, for a short time, up to two years ago. Beyond that, of course, I have a good deal of experience as to the adjoining county of Cheshire, and some as to Shropshire, but I did not propose to go into that.

56,394. You travel about a great deal, I suppose?—A good deal.

56,395. And you are in touch with the farming interest?—I think so. Then, I have worked out my evidence according to the syllabus, and I can run through it pretty quickly, if you will allow me.

56,396. We do not want to go into every detail which we have heard all about so many times, but just what you consider important?—So far as I can I will, but so far as regards some things that I think may be of interest I will go through my statement.

56,397. Yes, anything that is of interest to the public and the Commission we shall be very glad to hear?—I have no evidence to give till we come to the question about enclosures. I may say, speaking of some of my own farms, near Derwen, the Clegir Mountain was formerly an open sheep walk, but many years ago it was divided between farms, and lately the stone fence has been supplemented by a wire fence, and I believe without any charge whatever it was put up by my uncle, Colonel Hughes, and the tenants declare that this is a most valuable improvement, as they can now keep their sheep separate. That is the only evidence I have to give as to sheep farms. Then you ask what is the effect on the rents of adjacent farms. I say there is in this case no effect. Then, as I have said, it is an advantage to the tenants that they can keep their sheep separate, and they can improve them. Then, as to management, "where land is held by small or large, by absentee, or resident owners, in consolidated or scattered estates." Where I have managed for the Court of Chancery or for a landlord residing elsewhere, I have always been allowed to spend as much money as I thought right. A landlord residing on the spot will often question the necessity of some small improvement which an agent has seen the advantage of. In any case I think the tenant is quite as well cared for under a good agent as under a resident landlord. I do not know whether it is of any interest, but Dr. Pan Jones referred to that question just now. Speaking for a tenant of an estate which we have not the management of, but in which we are called in very often (the landlord there is his own agent) the tenant said to me the other day, "A good agent makes a good landlord," and he hoped that we should soon be the agents of the property. If you wish the name I can give it. It is not in Wales. It is just on the border.

56,398. Then your opinion is that it is not a necessity to have a resident landlord, but that men can be very comfortable on an estate where the landlord resides at a distance?—That is it. Then as to the question whether there is any difference in language, politics, or religion, my clients, I think, are all Churchmen, all Unionist or Conservative, and, I think, in no case talk Welsh with the exception of the trustee of the Caerwys Hall estate. On Segrwyd, Mrs. Rasbotham's, and Caerwys, I believe all the tenants are Nonconformist, Radical, and several talk but very little English. I do not think any of those I am acquainted with want a change. On Sir R. A. Cunliffe's estate, politics and church matters are about equally divided. None, or very few, can talk Welsh, and none do so habitually. I do not think I ever asked a tenant his opinion in politics, but I often talk to them openly about all sorts of things—politics included. As far as my qualifications are concerned, when I left school I went to Messrs. Townshend and Barker's at Chester. I was there for three years. I was just working out what we are agents for. We are agents for about 18,000 acres in Cheshire and this district. I was there for three years. Then I was from 1881 to 1882 on Lord Lilford's estate of 8,000 acres; we had 2,000 acres in hand,

29 August 1894.]

Mr. R. T. WICKHAM.

Sir John Llewelyn.

56,399. When you say 18,000 acres in Cheshire and Wales, is most of that in Wales or in Cheshire?—There are about 6,000 in Wales.

Chairman.

56,400. How much did you say in hand?—On Lord Lilford's estate about 2,000 acres. Then I was five years acting manager on the Condover estate in Shropshire, 5,000 acres. I was a short time under Colonel Hughes, my uncle, and during the last six years I have been junior partner with Messrs. Townshend and Barker, of Chester. I have farmed 400 acres, and am farming 160 acres for Sir Robert Cunliffe. The dates of entry Mr. Hughes has already given you. As to leases, there is no demand for them. The tenants think they are as safe as if they had them. Then a question is asked, "Do tenants readily accept leases?" All the tenants on the Acton estate were offered leases some years ago, and they all refused them, and events have proved their wisdom, inasmuch as several tenants have had considerable alteration and reduction and things of that sort since. If you want the names I can give you them. Then as to the condition of leaseholders, and whether their farming is superior to that of yearly tenants, the only case of a leaseholder that had come under my knowledge at the time I wrote this was that of Mr. Bewley, of Stanny Grange, in Cheshire. He lost his money, and his widow was glad to surrender the last four years of the lease. The farm was not left clean, and is now let at a lower rent. The landlord has been put to great expense in repairs, therefore it counts against the landlord as well as against the tenant.

56,401. Where was that?—Just beyond Chester, a large farm.

56,402. In Cheshire?—Yes, it is nearly 700*l.* a year rent—just the other side of Chester. Then as to changes of tenancy, I think they have been less frequent lately. Landlords now would rather meet a tenant than risk a change. Changes are troublesome, because we get all sorts of people. If you want the particulars of reductions of rent in connexion with that, I can give several. As a case of hardship I may mention this. I had a case that I thought in preparing my notes the other day I might mention as a case of hardship to the tenants. It was on the Caerwys estate, but the tenant told me the other day that when he came to put the matter into his solicitor's hands he was able to settle it satisfactorily, and he would rather not have his name brought up. I only bring it in now to show that the law is capable of settling a question when there is a difficulty. On the landlord's side, I think in more than one case you might call it a question of hardship, where a landlord has treated a tenant well for a long time; for instance, as in one case I have here, trusting to the tenant's word, giving him time, and then finding, when he has had given him every opportunity to make his rent, that there is absolutely nothing. I think in several cases I could show where at any rate it is a little hard on the landlord. Then as to re-taking possession of a field for planting and so on, I do not think in any case I know of that has been done without notice; indeed, it is illegal. My experience is that in a matter of this sort, if a field is taken it is allowed for at the value per acre of the very best field on the farm. I can give instances of that. One instance that I might note was that of a large farmer down below here. I offered him 2*l.* an acre for a field away from his farms in plough, after beans, and in a dirty condition. I wanted to put it into a cottage holding to improve it. He declined to part with it. His farm is let at about 25*s.* through. In the matter of damage to land, the tenant generally gets quite ample compensation in the matter of fencing, and odd bits of timber and that sort of thing that he gets; and it is also usual, in our case at any rate, to insert in the sale form of timber a clause whereby all damage to crops, &c., is paid for by the buyer of the timber. I have no evidence as to brickfields being taken, so as to do the tenant any damage. In a mining lease agreed on last autumn, the clause to give full compensation to the tenant if wanted was inserted, and I believe this is usual; in that case it was paid, the take note having fallen through. I have got an agreement for the different estates.

56,403. Perhaps you will kindly put them in?—I will; and I have also the agreements that we have worked out in the last year or two and improved. This agreement which has taken the place of older ones pretty well throughout the properties we manage (handing in agreements).

56,404. Do you think this agreement a pretty fair one. Are there any penalising clauses, or anything objectionable?—Last year one of the largest tenants down here, Mr. Fearnall, of Ruyton, whose sons farmed under Sir Robert Cunliffe, and, I believe, under Mr. Peel, of Brynypys, and under the Duke of Westminster, had occasion to renew the lease for his son, to put the son in his own place. He read through the agreement, and he said it was most fair.

56,405. You will kindly hand these agreements in?—Yes. This is the agreement on Sir Robert's estate which has been cancelled. It came to an end last year, but they show just the small alterations that might be made in any clause as the thing went on. These are the old agreements on the properties, if you would like to have them, 15 or 20 years ago.

56,406. We do not want those. You have handed in the present agreement?—That is practically the present agreement. I have an amended form here, if you would like it.

56,407. That is the one we should like?—This is it (handing), and this is the small holding agreement (handing).

56,408. Do I understand you to say that the agreements are modified to suit circumstances?—Yes.

56,409. You said, I think, that they were subject to small modifications?—Yes, to modifications. Take the case of a tenant who would like to be paid for manure instead of being paid for cake and corn consumed, or the case of a tenant who would like to have a half year's notice instead of a year's.

29 August 1894.]

56,410. Modifications of various kinds?—Modifications of various kinds. You will find in the one I have put in a modification as to manure. I have mentioned it here. Mr. Fearnall expressed himself much pleased with the agreement. As to penalising clauses, all penalising clauses, except as to selling off, are practically a dead letter. In a yearly tenancy cross-cropping does much harm. I could give an instance of a field in my own occupation, at least, in Sir Robert's own occupation, which I cross-cropped last year, and the effect is very marked in the oats this time. Therefore some such penalising clauses are necessary, and the more a man knows of modern manuring I think the more it is necessary.

Then as to rents. I have given these lists:—Sir Robert Cunliffe's estate, the acreage is 2,200, and the rent is 3,215*l.*; Mr. Townshend's estate is 1,300 acres, and the rent is 1,270*l.*; Mrs. Rasbotham's estate is a little under 400 acres, and her rent is 350*l.*, tithe free; the late Mr. Townshend's is about 1,000 acres, and the rent is 840*l.*, tithe free; Caeuwys estate was about 800 acres, and the rent about 600*l.* The rent is generally fixed by valuation. I have here—I do not want to put it in as permanent evidence—particulars of farms on Sir Robert Cunliffe's estate, and of some of my own and others, showing how the estate is valued and how the rent is fixed. Then generally having made up our own minds what we want, we ask for it. Similar land, I think, fetches similar prices nearly all over the country. It is governed, of course, by special conditions as to roads, nearest markets, &c. As to the rent of the smaller tenantry being higher than on larger farms, that is entirely a matter of circumstance and the peculiarity of the holding. As to the average rents of the district that I know, they run from 1*s.* an acre for grouse moor grazing to 3*l.* an acre for accommodation land. I have some holdings let at 3*l.* an acre. I have no evidence as to rights of common. The only service, I think, is the service of the carriage of material that we were talking of before. I do not think it is irksome in a case where the tenant is likely to have the benefit of the building put up. It is a very small proportion of the charge, and it costs him but very little. The rent is fixed by valuation, as I have explained. I think that the effect is fair rents, but we do not bind ourselves to take the highest bidder, or the lowest, or anyone else. We generally find we are very glad to take about the first man who is a suitable man, and who comes up to some where near the rent we are asking. Mr. Hughes, I was glad to hear, had plenty of tenants wanting farms, but we do not find that there are a great number. In connexion with that, a change of tenancy is so expensive that it is very much to our advantage not to have one if we can help it. I notice here that in small farms one change cost 150*l.*, another 180*l.*, and another 60*l.*, and another 80*l.*, being nearly our full year's rent. Then I will put in lists of rents showing the different allowances we have made on different properties. I will just read out the amounts. First of all, here are particulars of Sir Robert Cunliffe's estate, showing the rental, showing that we have made permanent allowances. We have also made 10 per cent. allowance in different half years, the permanent allowance amounting to 264*l.* 5*s.*, and the 10 per cent. allowances in different half years amounting to 646*l.* We have spent on repairs 4,946*l.* in the last 10 years, exclusive of our ordinary estate labour, in extra buildings. We have allowed seeds in different cases amounting to 99*l.* up to now, and I have just made arrangements to do so again. The gross rent in 1883 was 3,227*l.* 15*s.* Then I add to that some land purchased coming to 137*l.* The gross rent in 1892 was 3,215*l.*, being a permanent reduction of 149*l.* Then I just give a note of certain permanent reductions, but that I can put in. I need not read them all. In the little property belonging to Mrs. Rasbotham we have spent a great deal more. It is a different class of property. The figures here relate to hill property above Mold, between here and Mold, and relate to little farms of 42, 55, 73, 47, 33 acres, &c; in all, 335 acres. The rent in 1884 was exactly 1*l.* an acre; the rent in 1893 is 313*l.*, a reduction of 36*l.*, and tithe is now paid by landlord.

56,411. You gave us that rent as 350*l.*?—I did originally, but we have been reducing all the while, and I give in this statement the years in which the reductions have been made. The repairs over the same period of 10 years on that little property have cost 535*l.* We made a lot of allowances in manure, trying to get these smaller tenants to improve their farms a little, and to take a bit more interest in things. They are an unhappy little lot, somehow, but they are all satisfied that we do our best to meet them, but it is very poor land. The allowances have come to 246*l.*, and in addition, during the same years, we have paid 92*l.* 19*s.* 10*d.* for tithe. The whole estate is now tithe free in addition to the reductions of rents. So that it comes to this: the average rent over this time is 320*l.*, the average out-payments exclusive of any management is 120*l.*, so that we are spending a little more than a third of the value of the property. Since 1884 the rents have been reduced. The landlord also allows about 30*l.* per annum, and in addition pays the tithe, making a total decrease in the rental, when you put the tithe and all on, of 82*l.* per annum. That affects that little property.

In the case of the Caeuwys Hall estate, it was about 800 acres. There were 25 tenants. In 1886, when I took the agency, the rental was 835*l.*, and they were 523*l.* in arrear. It was in Chancery, and that was the statement of the widow of the late owner. In 1887 the rental was reduced to 710*l.*, and a large quantity of arrears were written off, and from that date to 1890 the rental was further reduced to 641*l.*, and there were at that time only about 42*l.* in arrear. The estate payments over that time came to 623*l.* I summarise that, that the rents were reduced by 189*l.* per annum, and we spent 120*l.* a year in repairs, &c. The property was sold in 1891, and all the books and papers were given up to the chief clerk, so that I have not got the agreements and things of that sort to put in now. I put in those papers, if I may. Then, as far as regards settlement of rents, each is taken separately. We have to consider every case. In the same way with valuations. We make the valuation by the agents. I do not think I have had a case where there has been any trouble about that, and it is very much cheaper, because the tenants do not pay as they would have to pay if they had a valuer of their own. Then the rent is usually paid three or four months after it becomes due in the Wrexham district, and about six months after it becomes due in the Denbigh district. Then, as to the effect of the preferential claim for rent on the position of tenants generally. I have one case in which it was of very great advantage to the tenant. It was a tenant in Shropshire. He was in trouble. He owed 350*l.* to his landlord, and he owed about 70*l.* or 80*l.* besides. He had signed an agreement giving us the power to distrain in advance, and with his own consent and with the advice of his solicitor we distrained. The sheriff was put in against him, and we distrained and put him in possession of his own things, and kept him in possession till the end of the year, and enabled him to make the best of his bargain. Then, when he went out we made him a present of 100*l.* for being his own caretaker. He is now doing well. That man otherwise would have been a bankrupt. If we had been obliged to go for the rent in the ordinary course against the other creditors, I think that man would now have been bankrupt. Then, as to payments. The tithe is paid by the landlord (by Act of Parliament), in old holdings we claim it from the tenants, new holdings are tithe free. Land tax is paid by the tenant, chief-rent by the landlord, local rates by the tenant, income tax by the landlord. Then as to local rates, except, as Mr. Davies said, where there are school board or special sanitary rates, in our district they are about the same, or a little lower, and Mr. Davies collects a good deal of the rates of the property for which I am agent. It should be noted that a farm tenant pays rates on his own income or more, while a tenant of a furnished house pays on his house only.

56,412. I think we have had that sufficiently? —Well, it is important as to how we are to make things meet afterwards. As to the average size of farms, they are all sizes up to 400 acres. I have them from 10 acres, at 3*l.* an acre, up to 300 acres paying 70*l.* a year.

56,413. There is no consolidation?—None.

56,414. No sub-division allowed?—No.

56,415. Then, as to large and small holdings, which do you think pay the best?—For the landlord and for the food production of the country, undoubtedly the large ones. You cannot go over Mr. Roberts' farm at Saltney and not know that.

56,416. You are in favour of large holdings? —Not in favour of all large holdings, but I say, undoubtedly, there is more result from the outlay on a large farm, with adequate capital and good farming, than there is from a small one. I believe a small tenant can often tide through a time which a big farmer who has not capital enough would have a great deal of trouble over. Then as to the ability of farmers to provide for their families, we have a great many cases where large farmers and small farmers have both taken farms for their sons and have set their sons up. One is a veterinary surgeon in Wrexham here, and so on. They take to their business and they do well. With the small farmers up in Wales, if they have got large families and the farm is not big enough for them all, the sons go out and work for themselves, and find themselves a trade if they can. Then as to cultivation, on the Denbigh side it is sheep and barley, and a modified four-course system of land capable of being tilled coming into corn land in turn. At Wrexham, on the Borras side, it is much the same. At Pickhill it is all cheese dairying, with practically no plough land. On this side, I think, we are practically exactly the same as an English county. Anything over here that applies to us should apply equally well to any district on the west side of England that I have had any acquaintance with. There is a considerable scarcity of labour about here. They go to the collieries, the brickworks, and that kind of thing. I find that unless the landlord does a good deal in estate labour the fences are very much neglected. The only successful fences I really know are on Lord Lilford's estates, in Northamptonshire. The landlord there keeps something like 20 men employed on woods and fences alone. They are real fences. In our district a great deal of land has been laid down in pasture. In the cheese districts the tenants have found it worth their while. In some places the landlord has found seeds, and in some places he has found manure to start with. I can give evidence there of certain fields. There are no cases of fallowing here. As to the cause and effect of such changes, I take it that the low price of corn and the increased value of cheese have caused the land to go to grass, while the cheapness of artificial manure has made it possible to grow more green crops than there were. The whole of the improvements or increase of houses and buildings are taken by the landlord. Alterations and improvements to brook banks, rivers, or water-courses, are done by the landlord, if at all. The above are done without any repayment or interest whatever. The landlord also buys pipes for draining, and often does the labour. He often finds bones for grass land, and it is quite exceptional for him to get anything in return. The tenants do alterations to fences if they think it will pay. They find the labour for draining and boning and the carting of materials for alterations and repairs. If carting for materials is done for a farm not the tenant's, or for the Hall, I think in every case we pay for it. As to drainage, all these things again have been largely done by the landlord. In fact, I think the whole of these matters under this paragraph have been done by the landlord—drainage and irrigation tanks for preserving liquid manure, repairs to buildings, river banks, fences, and so on.

56,417. I think we may take it that the landlord does everything and the tenant keeps the things up?—That is what it is really. If the tenant will keep it up, it is as much as we can ask, and more than we mostly get. The only improvements that a tenant ever helps with—the landlord and tenant combining—are boning, draining, and hay barns. In these we often do half each. The tenant, as I said, gets the benefit, and the landlord does not get much in return. I do not know of any case of contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, except in the matter of the six months' notice in some few cases. The custom of the country is much as you have heard before. Mr. Hughes gave it to you.

Sir John Llewelyn.

56,418. May I ask upon that if this is the custom of the country in your schedule?—It is adopted by the Cheshire Chamber of Agriculture.

56,419. That is just the question I was going to ask. The schedule for compensation, which is embodied in your agreement, appears upon this paper. Is that adopted from the custom of the country?—Partly from the custom of the country and adopted by the Cheshire Chamber of Agriculture.

56,420. This is the one. This is an exact copy?—An exact copy as far as those things go.

56,421. A copy of what has been adopted by the County Association?—That is it. The only thing I would mention with regard to that agreement is that you will find that, contrary to most agreements, we allow a certain amount of selling off, under a clause to bring back half the value in manure.

56,422. Does that depart from the custom which has been adopted by the country?—The custom of the country does not allow anything. It is practically honoured in the breach, and not in the observance, only we adopted it as bringing our agreements in accordance with what is really the custom, though contrary to the latter custom. As to the rest of these things, about the custom as to outgoing crops, we allow for clover seeds the value of a fair root, and for wheat half or two-thirds the value of the crop; for ploughing, about 10s. an acre. As to manure and produce remaining at the expiration of tenancy, the old custom is for manure to be left without charge and the produce to be left at consuming price. In the new custom the manure and all the cake and corn is paid for. You cannot have both.

Chairman.

56,423. Does that apply to the whole of these estates that you are agent for in Cheshire, or, not?—To the whole of them that have come under new agreements those two agreements apply.

56,424. Whether in Cheshire, or in Wales?—Whether in Cheshire, or in Wales. I let a farm on the top of a hill above Corwen the other day, on the smaller one of those two agreements. As to the right of the tenants to dispose of their holdings, our opinion is that it is unfair, as it is unnecessary with a good tenant, because he will not be disturbed. He does not leave, and he gets plenty of compensation for what he does as to improvements. If he has a permanent improvement, a building or such a thing as that, he will probably have writings and his compensation. But as far as general improvement of the farm is concerned, we do not know of a great deal of it. As far as regards being paid by an incoming tenant, it hampers the selection. You might have to take a practically poor man, inasmuch as he had made a bold bid for the tenant's improvements, and it hampers his capital. One of the reasons why on the Condoval estate, where I was manager for some years, we altered the custom as to manure, was that it being a bullock country, there were very large stocks of manure on some of the farms, and as much as 500l. and 600l. were paid by the incoming tenant for manure alone. In the case of a farmer coming in there the other day I know it was 500l. that was asked from the incoming tenant. Now that was too heavy a thing to ask tenants in these times to lock up to the end of their tenancy on the chance of getting it back again. In this case the manure has been bought by the landlord and the landlord now asks for the manure to be left without compensation. That is the only objection I have to the tenant paying for the manure. So far as regards the Agricultural Holdings Act, we have had one or two arbitrations in Cheshire under it. We find we can make it work, but it is very much cheaper and very much pleasanter to work with a couple of neighbours and an umpire if they cannot agree without. It is not a much more expensive process than law or any other. As to game preservation, rabbits are killed down or left to the tenant; hares hardly exist, winged game is preserved for the benefit of the tenant, as preventing trespass. In the case of the Pickhill property I may say that the other day I mentioned that it was possible we were going to put a keeper on. The tenant said, "the sooner he comes the better." The fact is that with the new railway coming down there there is constant trespass, and a keeper will keep the place quiet. Tenants often have the game in many parts, and either let it or shoot themselves. When they shoot they preserve very keenly. One of my own tenants asked me to shoot this season, and I had a very good day with him. Tenants do use the Ground Game Act if there are any rabbits, but there are mostly none. Where there is damage done by game to the tenants, they are mostly paid what they ask without question. As an instance in point, on Sir Robert's property the other day I measured a field of barley exactly as the tenant wished me, and I paid him at the rate of 7l. an acre. I took what was over to put in the covers for the pheasants, but at his own request and his own price, and I could show you the figures for other years in the same sort of way. We have always made a point that if there is damage it must be paid for. Sport must be paid for as such. Game preservation has no effect on cultivation. Moderate preservation brings the landlord and the tenant together and engenders good feeling. The public generally profit by it because they get game for less than it costs. Then as to these small forms of farming. Last year I sold three bushels of green gooseberries for 3s. 6d. and it cost me 2s. 6d. to gather them and 1s. to bring them into Chester. The other day I sold two bushels and a half of pears from my own garden for 6s., and it took my own man all day long to get them. I do not think the tenant wise where he has good grass land to trouble himself much about orchard work. Last year I had a large garden to part with, and all the wall fruit and everything in good order and the best I could get for the lot was 50s. The other day Lord Kenyon's agent took a house just near Wrexham here. The garden was full of fruit. He is just going into it now. He asked a dealer in Wrexham whether he would buy the fruit. The dealer said it was too much trouble to walk up there. That does not speak much for fruit, except strawberries and a special class of fruit growing in that way.

Sir John Llewelyn.

56,425. Does not that depend on the quality of the fruit very much?—Well, green gooseberries are a marketable commodity in Liverpool on all occasions, and it was early in the season.

56,426-7. Are not apricots worth growing in this country?—Certainly, but the best apricots would not grow. The Moor Park fails in three years, and second-class apricots are only good for jam making, and there you have to compete with Jersey and other countries. In the matter of forestry, if it took its proper place, there would be much less land in Wales for tenants. For instance, on some of the hill land on the borders of Shropshire there were 100 acres of wood planted in the last generation. A timber merchant bid 8,500l. for 100 acres. It is not worth 3s. an acre to let. The owner will have his 8,500l. when it is cut out, and have the land to let again. It is a very much better thing to have it for a matter of 50 or 60 years in larch than it would be to let it to tenants, as far as I can make out. So far as I am concerned, I fancy if I was to do away with the tenants on my hill farms up above Corwen, and plant them, my successors would be better off. I should be no worse off, for the cost of keeping buildings in repair has been so heavy that I get very little out of the rents. As to poultry farming, I think the poultry farming papers are sufficient for that. They all say at once that it is a fad; it is a very good thing for the wife of a farmer to have a few poultry if she can run them on a stubble field, but my poultry this year cost me 1s. 9d. a piece, and they are selling in Wrexham at 3s. a couple. I sold a lot on market day. Then, as to instruction. Mr. Hughes spoke to that, and as to experiments, Mr. Roberts, of Saltney, carried out a lot which are described in "The Royal Agricultural Gazette." I do not think I need go into those. Dairy schools are going on all over the country, as you, I think, have heard. There has been hardly any co-operation. Landlord and tenant have joined one another in buying manure at times. Basic slag has proved a success on the Pickhill estate in that way, but up at Tryddyn the manurial experiments were a failure.

Mr. Grove.

56,428. What would you give for basic slag?—1l. 15s. to 2l.

As regards freeholders there are very few; I think they are decreasing every day. They are willing to sell their farms. They find the death duties and troubles of that sort cut into a small holding more than they can do with. The death duties take the best part of a man's income the first year, and how is he to stand it? Take my own case. I have just come into these 1,000 acres of land. The death duties in my instance have come to 740l. last year, and the three years before 500l. was paid, and that is on a rental of 840l. If that was to go on, and anything happened to me now it would take a big slice out of the money available for keeping the place in repair if it does not do it from the income. On the Caerwys estate, when we sold it, three or four tenants bought their own farms. I hear of two cases where they are doing well. The other cases I have lost sight of. The date of the purchase was 1891. The price paid was about an average of 22 years' purchase on the rental. In the case of Mr. Lloyd, of Tynycelyn, I offered more myself. I thought it was a good speculation. There is nothing to show—at least we have no accounts to show—how a freeholder does as compared with a tenant. We know he must pay the expenses which fall on the landlord in the other case. Then as to the wives and families of farmers. I think you know that the children work at home to a certain extent in Wales, and they do very well. I do not consider that children learning their business for life, receiving board and lodging, should receive any wages. I paid a considerable sum to learn my profession, and I did the work of a clerk without pay, and any other fellow in starting in life in a business that is to bring him in anything like the proportion of income that a farmer expects to get, in proportion to his capital, has to do likewise, and I cannot see why a young fellow learning his business, coming in, as he does always, afterwards to succeed his father, or being helped in nearly every case to start a business, should get paid for his services if he does not go away and pay a premium. I can give instances of farms being taken by sons or sons being taken into partnership. I can also give instances of farmer's sons being set up in other businesses, and daughters being very well set up in house furniture, and those sort of things on their marriage if they are necessary. Then there is the question—

29 August 1894.]

Mr. R. T. WICKHAM.

Mr. Grove—continued.

"What proportion of the farm labour is hired as compared with that rendered by members of the household?" I do not know how to average that. On 150 acres I farm for Sir Robert, I have three men, a bailiff, and a bailiff's wife. On 150 of my neighbour's, there are two sons and no hired labour. On 300 acres of a tenant of my own there are four sons and no hired labour. So that it is almost impossible to average, unless you can take the circumstances of a farm. As to the amount of wages, I pay a horseman 18s. a week, a cowman 18s. a week; they have to work on Sunday. I pay labourers 15s. to 17s., and they all get harvest money. As to the nature of accommodation, farmers have a large working kitchen for the servants. In some farmhouses there is a messhouse for the men. In all large farmhouses there is a large bedroom, generally over an outbuilding or the back kitchen, lean-to, or something of that sort, approached from the back kitchen, for the men, and another bedroom for the women, approached from the inside of the house. I think in every case that we have of any farm of any size, where they would expect to have labouring men, they have all that accommodation or cottages. There are not quite so many cottages now as formerly. A labourer's cottage and garden costs about 150*l.* to 200*l.* to complete, with pig-stye, privies, &c. A labourer cannot afford more than 5*l.* a year. Repairs will cost on an average 2*l.* So that it is hardly a profitable investment.

Chairman.

56,429. 5*l.* a year for a labourer's cottage?—Yes, it is as much as a labourer will pay.

56,430. That is 2s. a week?—Yes, it is as much as a farm labourer can afford, and it is more than a farm labourer pays for cottages in the midland parts of England. About 3*l.* to 3*l.* 10s. to 4*l.* is what they pay there; but here they are a little dearer. It is the most a man can afford to pay, though they have to pay more. They are both scattered about on the farms and in villages. They are improving every year in condition and construction. Landlords are spending time and money on their poorer neighbours. Almost all country cottages have good gardens. Labourers working for farmers can always get potato ground. As to ownership and tenure, whether held of the owner or a tenant farmer, they are let both ways. They are let with the farms, and also let direct to the cottagers, but there is no restriction in tenure. In the case of those held from the landlord direct, they are held either on a half-year's or a quarter's tenancy. In the case of those held from the tenant the notice is one month, going with the employment. As to the general state of comfort and so on, one can answer this only by taking individual instances; you had better go and see them. Most farmers will do you very fairly if you go in unexpectedly; they will give you a fair meal, even in the poorest parts of the hills. There has been migration into Cheshire 10 years ago, but nothing very considerable. I am afraid that there are very few diaries and very few farming accounts kept. I think the depression commenced in 1877 or 1878, and has been getting worse since; but in 1890 and 1891 Welsh farmers did well, and throughout the cheese districts farmers have farmed at a profit till last year and this. I think the depression is caused very largely by the importation of foreign food. In our district we feel the malt tax; the fact that foreign grains are used for malt very considerably affects us. Then the next case is the frozen meat trade, then the depression of the iron trade caused by cheap imported goods from Belgium, &c. The labourers are better off now than they were. I cannot see any improvement that can be brought about, except some form of protection. Whether it is possible or not I cannot say. One point, however, in which real help can be given to tenants, would be fairer adjustment of the burden of taxation on land as against personal property. Speaking in connexion with coal mines—I have connexion with coal mines and being a farmer here in Wrexham, I know that expansion in trade in coal and iron is at once followed by better agricultural prices in the Wrexham market. We can sell our things directly if they get a full week in the coal trade—well, a full week will almost do it, but a fortnight will quite do it. As to relations between landlord and tenant, they are most friendly where a landlord and tenant are not too near neighbours, but where the landlord visits his tenant sufficiently often, especially where their visits are made for shooting, &c., or some other reason not connected with management of the farm, a tenant really likes to see and entertain his landlord if he can. I have put in lists in reply to some of the supplemental questions, and I can give information about rents and things like that further if you want it. I think that is the extent of my general evidence.

Sir John Llewelyn.

56,431. There were two statements you made which I thought were rather at variance. Did I understand you to say that the labourers can get gardens in this part of the country?—Oh, yes.

56,432. Did not you give an instance in the early part of your evidence, of some difficulty with a farmer about giving up land?—I did. In the case of a small tenant holding one, that I mentioned in another part of my evidence as being 10 acres at 30*l.* a year, I wished to increase that by a field of 10 acres adjoining it, making it into a nice little holding. It is only to show that the farmers still will hold to the land, and that it is difficult for a landlord, even where he would, to do much in the way of improving and increasing small holdings.

56,433. Then you think the farmers are unwilling to give up their land for adding a field to each cottage?—In a great many cases in Cheshire, where the big landlords like Lord Tolemache, Lord Egerton, and the Duke of Westminster, have done so, farmers have found

Mr. R. T. WICKHAM.

themselves compelled to give land to a labourer, because they cannot get a good man without, but there is undoubtedly a considerable wish not to do it.

56,434. There is an unwillingness?—Yes, and you can very well understand it. In the case of my own head woodman, when I am very busy working the barking of oak or something of that sort, the man wants to go off to his hay, and it is very natural. Then there is the feeling (I am afraid we do not always trust our neighbours perhaps as we should) that a man who has access to meal for the cows will take some little home for himself.

56,435. You spoke of Lord Tollemache and Lord Egerton's example as having been of benefit to the country in inducing the farmers to give up land?—Undoubtedly in Cheshire. Up here we have not got so much of it, because we have such a large number of small holdings where the men do not work regularly on one farm, but rather cadge about.

56,436. Is the reason of that that most of the cottages have got land attached to them?—Almost all in the country have either a good garden or a small field.

Mr. Griffiths.

56,437. Are you able to speak Welsh?—No, I am not.

56,438. Do you find any difficulty in treating with your tenants?—None whatever. My own people can understand me. Some of them are not very good, but they are not the least afraid of me, and we can always deal without any difficulty. To take a case, there is a man up in my place who talks but very little English, but we had no difficulty in settling the question that I was to repair the house, and should pay half of the new hay barn the other day, and that he was to have no 10 per cent. allowance this year in consequence, if I paid that half, but that it was possible that I might give him the other next year if I gave him no allowance. He perfectly understood that. Afterwards his daughter, who speaks English, wrote a letter to agree to those terms, without my being present, showing that he thoroughly understood how we got on together. I have lived amongst them all my life, and I have no difficulty at all.

56,439. We have found elsewhere that there has been a great complaint that tenants have to leave their farms, and the incoming tenant has the rent reduced?—Yes?

56,440. The rent is not reduced to the occupier at the time, but the following tenant gets the rent reduced?—Yes?

56,441. But I thought you spoke rather against changes of tenancy?—That was so, if we go back a few years, before I think we any of us thoroughly realised the effect of the depression, but now that we have realised the effect of the depression, I do not think that we will let a tenant go at anything like a fair rent, not if he is a decent man, but of course sometimes you get a fellow who will give you notice, or you give him notice, and then he asks to go on at a lower rent, but you may have some other reason, and I think fairly, to part with him.

56,442. It is an advantage to thoroughly understand whether the land is let reasonably or not, is it not?—Very much so. Would you like to see the sort of way in which we value a field.

56,443. It would be a very good thing. Time is very short, but I should very much like to see that?—I cannot leave these papers because I want them.

56,444. I should like to have a look at them before you leave the room?—I have no objection to your seeing them at all.

56,445. I find also on your estate that you assist the tenants to lay down the land in pasture, more than we have found to be the case, I think, so far in any district, and I think that is very proper. Do the lands readily come to pasture?—Yes, but what about this? A fellow comes and asks me (as one did last year just behind here), to find him seeds, and he wanted to be allowed to plough them up again in four years. I asked him was I to farm his farm for him and let him have the profit?

56,446. Do you find any marked difference between the English farmer and the real Welsh farmers in this district in their habits and mode of living?—No, I think not, if you take the same class of men. I think we have got on the Cheshire side what I might call the black-coated tenantry, and on the Welsh side we have not. There is a certain amount of that. The Cheshire farmer before the agricultural depression kept a brood mare and rode a hunter. He does not do so now much.

56,447. Then you spoke of the preferential claim. What became of the tenant whose case you quoted?—I am afraid that he, having got our land, and being in a position to farm it down as he was, we had to take care of ourselves first. Had we allowed him to go on selling we should have lost all the hay and straw for that farm. If we had not been able to make a preferential claim for the last half year we should have lost all the hay and straw, all the manure made, and we should have had to have our farm let at a depreciated rent in consequence. It not being within our power to control the tenant in getting into debt, I think it should be within our power to at any rate take care of our farm when he has done so. In that particular case he eventually, as I said, paid his creditors—he is a good fellow—and I believe he is straight, but the effect of our taking proceedings then has undoubtedly been to save him, and he is one of my best friends at this present moment.

56,448. How many years do you consider that a farmer's son should remain under his father?—It depends how much he is coming into it and how much he is gaining by it.

56,449. A young man might commence at 17 and might be kept out till he is 37?—There are hard cases in it of course, as there are in all things, but if he is coming into the improvements he is getting his board and lodging, he is getting

29 August 1894.]

Mr. R. T. WICKHAM.

his keep, and he is coming into a good thing afterwards; if there is a farm perhaps stocked with a couple of thousands coming to him at his father's death, and he has his living, I do not see that he has so very much to grumble at.

56,450. But there may be many more in the family outside who would require a share of that as well as he?—Oh, yes, you mean the younger branches. I think the younger branches who are not coming into the farm should consult their own convenience when they have learnt their trade.

56,451. We have found several young men, three and four in the same farm, in many cases?—I can give you instances of that if you like.

56,452. You have mentioned some to-day?—Yes.

Chairman.

56,453. There is one point I want to be quite clear about. Is this what you mean, that farmers are not willing to give up land to labourers, but in consequence of Lord Tolle-mache's action in Cheshire they are obliged to do so, as they cannot get a good man without a piece of land is attached to his cottage?—Yes, I think that is the effect of it.

56,454. Then I may take it from you that Lord Tollemache's action has been very beneficial to the labouring classes?—Oh, yes, and further, the best farmers, the best class of men, gladly do it, because they get a better class of labourer, but taking the ordinary British farmer, who rather runs along from hand to mouth, he does not always like it.

56,455. Mr. Llewellyn Jones has put in a few questions which I must ask you to answer: "When you say that the changes of tenancy are expensive, do you mean that the landlord will

"execute certain improvements for a new tenant which he would not do for an old one, such as new buildings, &c."?—No. I mean that a tenant having gone on for a very long time has to a very great extent damaged his holding. You will never get a holding left in your hands hardly but that a big lot of work is necessary which perhaps would have done for the old tenant, but a new man likes everything spick, span, and new, and he will not take it without.

56,456. "When you stated that Welsh farmers did well in the years 1890 and 1891, what parts of the principality did you refer to"?—I referred to here, in Denbighshire. I do not say that they did as well as they may have done in the old times, when wheat was at 60s. That is a long time ago; but they did better.

56,457. "Do you know of any cases where tenants had left their holdings owing to their being unable to pay the rent"?—Yes.

56,458. "In these cases have the farms been ever let to new tenants at a lower rent"?—No, more rent.

56,459. A higher rent?—Yes.

56,460. "Is it not the fact that in many cases the tenant is unable to pay wages, and is thus compelled to rely on the unpaid labour of his sons and daughters"?—I do not think that.

56,461. "Are not farms let preferably to tenants who have families to assist them with their labour on the farms"?—Oh, we naturally look to two or three strong sons coming up, but I can give instances in which men who have been lucky in having good strong working lads have worked up. I can give a case of one on this property, of Mrs. Rasbotham's, where a man has worked up from an 18l. a year farm till he is now farming a 300l. a year farm, and he is perfectly satisfied with that. I should be glad to get more of the same sort.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

We have on our list the names of Mr. Robert Harrison, Mr. Joseph Davies, Mr. John Pugh, Mr. Job Lea, and Mr. Lewis Jones. They are all tenants of Sir Watkin Wynn. It would be a convenience I think if we took first the evidence of one of these gentlemen, and heard what he had to say, and then the others might corroborate it if they see fit, and say anything further that they would like to add.

MR. ROBERT HARRISON, MR. JOSEPH DAVIES, MR. JOHN PUGH, MR. JOB LEA, and
MR. LEWIS JONES, called and examined.

Chairman.

56,462. (To Mr. Robert Harrison.) You are a tenant farmer?—Yes, my Lord.

56,463. And you hold under Sir Watkin Wynn?—Yes.

56,464. What is the extent of your holding?—180 acres.

56,465. How long has your family held the farm?—Over 80 years.

Chairman—continued.

56,466. Have you any unenclosed land which could be cultivated at a profit, or any rights of sheep walk?—No.

56,467. Is it your opinion that matters are managed best on estates on which the landlord lives, where there is a resident landlord?—Yes.

56,468. And is that the opinion of the other gentlemen?—Yes.

29 August 1894.]

Messrs. HARRISON, DAVIES, PUGH, LEA, and LEWIS JONES.

Chairman—continued.

56,468A. Politics, religion, and language, I take it, make no difference with you?—Not the slightest.

56,469. What is the date of entry?—February the 2nd for all the tenants.

56,470. And the 1st of May following for the house and buildings, as we have heard to-day?—Yes.

56,471. Are you on annual agreements or leases?—All on agreements.

56,472. Will you kindly put in the agreement. We will take one as a sample of all?—They are all alike. This is mine (handing in agreement).

56,473. You are just as safe under Sir Watkin Wynn's agreement as you would be under a lease?—Oh, quite.

56,474. Is there any part of the agreement that any of you gentlemen object to?—No.

56,475. You are all satisfied with it?—Yes.

56,476. And can obtain copies of your agreements?—Yes.

56,477. Are the agreements explained?—Yes.

56,478. All the tenants quite understand the conditions under which they hold?—Yes.

56,479. You fix the rent at a lump sum?—Yes.

56,480. What services are rendered to Sir Watkin by the tenant?—Only the haulage for repair, but that is not irksome at all.

56,481. You do not object to that?—Oh, no.

56,482. And I suppose you walk a puppy for Sir Watkin?—Yes.

56,483. There is nothing in that, of course?—Oh, no, we think nothing of it.

56,484. And the holdings are not let to the highest bidders?—No.

56,485. Has the rent been raised during the tenancy of you gentlemen?—No.

Mr. John Pugh.—Mine has been lowered.

Mr. John Davies.—My rent was reduced when I took my farm.

56,486. And it has not been raised since?—It has not been raised since.

56,487. (To Mr. Harrison.) Now, will you give us particulars of the abatements you have had?—I received the following abatements:—10 per cent. from Lady Day 1885 to Lady Day 1889; 5 per cent. for the year ending Lady Day 1890, and 15 per cent. for the last two years.

56,488. It was the same all round?—Yes.

56,489. Now, about local rates. We have been told that they have diminished; do you think that they have diminished or that they have gone up?—They are about the same in our neighbourhood.

56,490. Mr. Joseph Davies.—Local rates have increased, and it is wrong that they should; we are fully entitled to have them lowered.

56,491. (To Mr. Joseph Davies.) Do you think the rates have increased?—Yes.

56,492. Then you do not agree with what we have heard, that they have diminished?—No, I do not agree with that at all.

Sir John Llewelyn.

That will vary with each parish.

Chairman.

56,493. (To Mr. Harrison.) Do you gentlemen sub-let?—No.

56,494. The rent is not paid on the day it is due?—No, two months is allowed. Lady Day and Michaelmas rent is not paid till June and December; we get two months.

56,495. Are labourers scarce or not?—Oh, no, not scarce.

Mr. Joseph Davies.—They are scarce in good times.

56,496. (To Mr. Harrison.) There is no waste land which could be profitably cultivated?—No.

56,497. Arable land has been laid down a good deal?—Yes, there has been a lot laid down.

56,498. Because it pays better to do so?—Yes.

56,499. Root crops have increased?—Yes.

56,500. Now, about the improvements; will you tell us what improvements are done by the landlord?—Drainage and buildings for stock, and gates and posts.

56,501. According to your agreement you get compensation in case of improvements partially or wholly effected by the tenant?—Yes.

56,502. Except the hauling?—Yes.

56,503. Do you know anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act? Is that any use to you?—Well, no, I do not see that it is.

56,504. It is practically a dead letter?—Yes.

56,505. It is not much used?—No.

Mr. Joseph Davies.—The Agricultural Holdings Act, in my opinion, is of more benefit to the lawyers than the farmers.

56,506. (To Mr. Joseph Davies.) You do not consider it of any practical use to farmers?—Not at all.

56,507. (To Mr. Harrison.) Now about game: Have you gentlemen any trouble about that?—No, we have not much game.

56,508. There are no freeholders that you know of?—No.

56,509. I suppose your wives are very industrious, and the children help on the farm?—Oh, yes, the wives help in dairy work.

56,510. And the children help?—Yes, certainly.

56,511. Of course, the sons are of great use on a farm?—Yes.

56,512. But farmers without sons have managed to pay their way?—Yes, I have known some.

56,513. And you have known, I have no doubt, farmers who have set up their sons very creditably in life, in business?—Oh, yes.

56,514. Numerous cases?—Well, there are some.

56,515. But would you say a good many cases?—There are some that I know.

56,516. You do not think that a land court will be of any use to you personally?—No, not a bit; I think it is best left to the landlord and tenant.

56,517. Under a good landlord there is no necessity for a land court?—No, I do not think so.

Messrs. HARRISON, DAVIES, PUGH, LEA, and LEWIS JONES.

Chairman—continued.

56,518. Would you kindly tell us what you think the cause of the present low prices?—Foreign competition, I should say, my Lord.

56,519. Nothing else?—Foreign trade in competition with our free trade.

Mr. Job Lea.—That is the main cause, I think.

Mr. Joseph Davies.—I never knew a Liberal Government to prosper; money goes into the pockets of the speculators, and then, of course, stagnation of trade follows, and very low prices. That is my opinion of the cause of low prices.

56,520. (To Mr. Joseph Davies.) You think the Liberal Government being in power is the cause of the present low prices?—Yes.

Mr. John Pugh.—I do not think that.

56,521. (To Mr. Joseph Davies.) Have you any other ideas?—Then with regard to the land court, I think the landlords are too good for us to require a land court, and my opinion is that when we go against our landlords we go against the best friends we have. I consider they are doing the best they can to help us in a time of need, and if such a thing as a land court should be established there would be taxes to follow. It is time that landlords and tenants should try to put a stop to the new laws. The land is now too heavily burdened with taxation to pay its way.

56,522. Then what is your opinion about the state of farming. Is farming in a depressed condition. Is it in a low condition?—Well, of course, it is no grand work, that is certain.

56,523. But is there a living to be made at it?—Yes; there is a living to be made if we stick to it, but there is not if we do not stick to it.

56,524. You can tell us all you have to say about that?—I have known cases of farmers borrowing money to pay their rents from convenience, and of cases of borrowing from poverty, but it would not be right to give particulars. I knew of a case in my district, of a farmer who owned his farm, and by some means he ran himself into debt, and was obliged to borrow money to pay his way. He carried this on for a few years, until the money-lender had lent the value of the farm, so then he was obliged to pay rent, and did so for years afterwards. Also I knew a farm that many tenants had tried their best to make a living out of, but all failed. Another farmer took it, and being a persevering man, and by spending a little capital on the farm, he soon had his returns, and saved a good sum of money by the farm. Also another case under the same landlord. By perseverance and making the best of everything, the farmer saved thousands, and I knew of three farmers go to the same farm afterwards. Two were sold up who could not go on any longer, and the other overran his landlord and left his rent unpaid. So it reminds me very much of those that ask for the land court. They are something similar to those I have first spoken of. They want their living brought to them instead of seeking it.

56,525. Have you got a large acquaintance among the farmers in Wales. Do you stay at home or do you travel about?—Well, I have been living in Wales, but I will tell you what I was told when I was speaking to a farmer not far from Ruthin last May fair. He told me he had taken a farm and he had bought stock very cheap. There was a sheep run on his farm. He had paid for the sheep in October, and he had sold enough to pay his half-year's rent; his rent was 42*l*. I said, "You have got a cheap farm." "Well," he said, "middling." "Well," I said, "you are like this: if you had it for nothing it would only be middling." "Well, no," he said, he thought it was middling. Then afterwards I said, "Sheep are selling well just now." He said, "Well, they are selling middling."

56,526. Your opinion is that the tenant farmers of Wales are pretty well satisfied?—They are quite as well now as they were 25 years back.

56,527. You think the condition of tenant farmers in Wales is just as good as it was 25 years back?—Yes, the grain makes no difference to them. They never grew much grain. Stock is selling very well. Sheep have been selling very well now for some years, and that is the principal thing. The grain does not make any difference to them.

56,528. Do you think the farmers, as far as you know, are satisfied with their rents?—According to what was told me, I thought it was a very cheap farm.

56,529. That is that individual farm; but generally speaking, in Wales, do you think the farmers are satisfied with the rents that they pay the landlords now, or do you think that they fancy they are too high?—Well, I think they ought to pay the same as what we have to pay down here in this part. When the farmers in Wales got the 25 per cent. off the tithe, I suppose they said to themselves, "We will have the whole of it." I think if the landlords were to absolutely give them the farms they would want something for farming them.

The witness withdrew.

PRESENT:

LORD KENYON in the Chair.

Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
Professor RHYS, M.A., LL.D.

Mr. FREDERIC SEEBOHM, LL.D., F.S.A.

The Honourable GEORGE T. KENYON, M.P., called and examined.

56,530. You are Member of Parliament for the Denbigh Boroughs?—Yes.

56,531. You wish to give evidence with regard to the Holt Town Trust?—Yes.

56,532. I think you have a statement?—Yes.

56,533. Will you proceed with it?—I am chairman of the trustees of the Holt Town Trust, regulated by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners made under the Municipal Corporation Act, 1883, on the 3rd April 1891. The body of the trustees consists of the following: Three Coöptative Trustees appointed for a term of seven years, one Representative Trustee appointed by the Governors of the Holt Endowed (or Free) School, appointed for a term of five years, and five Representative Trustees elected by the Vestry of the parish of Holt for a similar term. The following are the names of the present trustees: The Hon. G. T. Kenyon, M.P., representing the Governors of the Holt Endowed Schools; Mr. William Harrison, grocer Holt; Mr. Samuel Dale, farmer, Holt; and Mr. John Thomas, farmer (Coöptative Trustees); Mr. George Clarke, farmer, Holt; Mr. Edward Roberts Bellis, farmer, Holt; Mr. James Oliver Jones, the Academy, Holt; Mr. James Tomlinson, farmer, Cornish Hall Holt; Mr. James Parry, farmer, Castle Street, Holt (Representative Trustees). The trustees are the successors of the dissolved Corporation of the Mayor and Burgesses of Holt, and manage the property formerly under the control of that body. That was until the passing of the Municipal Corporations Act.

56,534. Which Act are you referring to?—The 1883 Act. The property included in the schedule to the scheme of the Charity Commissioners as having belonged to the Corporation of Holt consists of the Town Hall (now in a ruinous condition), a piece of land known as "The Church Green," comprising about 2 roods, the Cross Bank, upon which the Town Cross stands; Smithfield Green, comprising about 1,800 square feet; and a large tract of land known as Common Wood, comprising about 185 acres, and situate about one mile from the Town Cross. In the latter part of 1891 the Commissioners of Woods and Forests made a claim to the Town Hall and Church Green as belonging to the Queen or Lady of the Manor of Bromfield and Yale. I have been in communication with the Commissioners of Woods and Forests with reference to these properties, and after protracted negotiations terms have quite recently been arranged with them whereby the user of the Town Hall is secured to the inhabitants of Holt, subject to certain conditions as to use of the building by the steward of the Lord of the Manor. The trustees intend to take steps without delay to rebuild the Town Hall. With regard to the Church Green, which is claimed as being part of the waste lands of the manor, the Commissioners have agreed to grant a lease of the property to the trustees for a term of 31 years at an annual rent of 1*l.*, conditionally on the property being drained and maintained as a recreation ground for the benefit of the inhabitants, and steps are now being taken to carry out the necessary work. I produce the sketch plans. They are not at present approved by the trustees. It is also intended in the immediate future to carry out certain improvements to the Cross Bank. Holt has within the last few years become a favourite holiday resort and its inhabitants are fully alive to the necessity of improving the appearance of their town as far as possible, and the trustees are most cordially supported and encouraged in their proposed works of improvement by the inhabitants. As I have before stated, the Common Wood consists of about 185 acres of land, situate about one mile from the centre of the town. It is specifically referred to as follows in the charter granted to the Burgesses of Holt, in the 13th year of the reign of King Henry IV., which was confirmed in the 5th year of Queen Elizabeth. I produce the original Elizabethan confirmation and the translation of the charter (see Appendix). These words refer to the Common Wood, and perhaps I had better read them: "Also we have granted to the same our aforesaid burgesses, their English heirs, and assigns, and their tenants that they may have common of pasture in a certain parcel of land called the Common Wood for all their cattle within our town aforesaid, levant and couchant, with free ingress and egress for the same to hold to our same burgesses their English heirs and assigns and their tenants in severalty at all times of the year without the contradiction of us or our heirs or of our ministers whomsoever for ever. Also we have granted to our same "burgesses their English heirs and assigns and their tenants, that it shall be lawful to them and every of them to take all foreign or strange cattle depasturing within the pasture aforesaid, and to drive the same to common pincfold of our town aforesaid, and the same there to retain until due amends shall be made to our same burgesses for such trespass and depasturing committed in their pasture above said." From the time of the constitution of the borough of Holt down to the passing of the Enclosure Act, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 118, the Common Wood property continued to be managed by the mayor and burgesses of Holt in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of Incorporation, the burgesses of Holt enjoying the privilege of free pasturage of the property.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,535. This 185 acres is called Common Wood, but it is not wood; it is all pasture?—There is no wood at all.

Lord Kenyon.

56,536. You might explain that it is not pasture now?—It is not pasture, or very little of it is pasture now; it has been broken up since. I will come to that later on in my statement. I should think it had been a wood at some time, but, like many other places, it has changed since. Persons who were not burgesses, and were not therefore entitled to the pasturage on the common wood, sometimes used the same to pasture their cattle, and from time to time entries appear in the books of the dissolved Corporation where unauthorised persons have been fined for allowing their cattle to trespass on the common. It was the practice twice in each year for the burleymen of the borough to make secret visits to the common and drive into the parish pincfold all cattle found grazing thereon. Each burgess was entitled to graze one horse and one cow on the property, and if upon these visits a larger number than he was entitled to graze was found on the common a fine was imposed upon the burgess so offending, and if any cattle belonging to other than burgesses were discovered on the common on these occasions the person to whom they belonged was subjected to very severe penalties. Where a burgess did not possess any cattle of his own it was customary for him to sell to some other burgesses his right for 12 months to pasturage on the common. Disputes between burgesses and non-burgesses constantly occurring, it was thought desirable in 1843 to petition for an Act for the enclosure of the common, and the following is a copy of a resolution of the mayor and burgesses passed at a meeting convened for the purpose:—

"Wednesday, 2nd January 1843.

"Meeting of the Resident Burgesses of Holt.

"Due and regular notice having been given, it was unanimously resolved that we forthwith prepare a petition to both Houses of Parliament for a Bill or Act for the enclosure of Common

Wood, and that the intended petition be prepared by the 17th day of January 1843, at two o'clock in the afternoon, in order to be signed by the burgesses.

"RICHARD PARRY,

"Mayor."

Nothing seems to have been done in the matter for some time afterwards, but a provisional Order for the enclosure of the common was made on the 29th January 1846, and the enclosure was duly authorised under the provisions of the Act, 8th and 9th Victoria, chapter 118. Under the award of George William Chaloner (the valuer appointed by the Enclosure Commissioners), dated the 2nd November 1848, a copy of which I produce (see Appendix), the common was divided into 64 allotments, and the allottees were to hold each allotment as tenants to the trustees for the time being appointed under the award. The first trustees appointed were John Davies, of Cacca Dutton, farmer, and John Roberts, of Borrass, farmer. In addition to the 64 allotments already mentioned, a piece of land in the said Common Wood, containing 2a. 1r. 6p., was set apart for the trustees, the rent of which was to be applied towards the defrayment of incidental expenses connected with the management of the said Common Wood. This piece of land was at that time and still is known as Allotment D. (The witness produced plan.) That is a plan showing the enclosure, and there is Allotment D. (pointing). This is the main road from Wrexham to Chester; it goes through Holt.

56,537. These are mainly fenced now, are they not (pointing)?—They are partially. Those are nominally fenced. The names of the 64 burgesses who were provided with allotments under the award are shown by the list which I hand in. I do not think I need read those. There is the list (handing). No record exists as to what particular allotment was given to each of the original allottees.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,538. Was there not a schedule of the names?—Yes, of the names, but not of the particular portion of ground allotted to each.

Lord Kenyon.

56,539. How many were there originally?—Sixty-four. It appears that at an early date after the coming into operation of the award, certain questions arose as to the interpretation of various clauses of that document, more particularly as to the right of a resident burgess to nominate a successor to his allotment subject to the approval of his fellow burgesses, and at a meeting of the resident burgesses held in June 1847 the following bye-law was passed:—

Extract from the Minute Book of the Burgesses of Holt, dated June 1849.

"We, the resident burgesses of the borough of Holt, do hereby unanimously enact the underwritten byelaw, namely, that each resident burgess of the borough of Holt aforesaid may nominate a successor in his room and stead and possess or occupy his respective allotment of land on Common Wood after his decease, and to hold such allotment as a burgess of Holt aforesaid, such person so nominated must be a resident and continue a resident of such borough on his taking possession of the said allotment and be subject to the approval of the then mayor, bailiffs, and a majority of burgesses then present, and in case of such neglect on the part of such burgess to nominate a successor it shall be lawful for the surviving widow of such burgess or representatives thereof to nominate a person as burgess to succeed the deceased in the said allotment and for the purpose of creating such burgess as aforesaid it shall be lawful for any burgess to propose his successor at any of the said Court days of the said borough, and if such person be accepted by the mayor for the time being and a majority of the burgesses then present, such nominee or successor as aforesaid shall pay into the hands of the then mayor of the said borough previous to his being created a burgess the sum of five shillings the third and last day of his nomination, and it is further enacted and agreed that in case of death or removal of the nominee or successor from the said borough of Holt aforesaid, such burgess shall have the privilege of nominating a successor again and the first, if removed, shall be struck off the Court Rolls of the said borough, and the last nominee shall remain on the Court Rolls for the purpose of enjoying such allotments on Common Wood aforesaid, and all such hereby called burgesses when elected shall sign the said Court Rules of the said borough of Holt aforesaid, and shall be subject to the said rules, regulations, and restrictions as those of his predecessor and in conformity with this byelaw.

(Signed) JOHN JONES,
Mayor."

From that time to the date of the dissolution of the borough in 1886 it was the invariable practice for the nominee of a deceased burgess to occupy his allotment, and at the last mentioned date several widows were in actual occupation of the allotments formerly held by their deceased husbands. On the death of the trustees mentioned in the award, the Rev. Ebenezer Powell, of Holt, and Mr. Moses Steven, of Holt, were respectively appointed to succeed them. The latter gentlemen, however, never acted, leaving the duties to be performed by the former. Mr. Powell continued to act as trustee till the year 1874, when Mr. J. Oliver Jones was appointed and held the office down to the time of the dissolution of the Corporation in 1886. Mr. Oliver Jones is a trustee under the present scheme. Various interpretations being put upon the various provisions of the award which were thought by many of the burgesses to give them vested interest in their allotments, dealings began in connexion with the allotments, many were sold at their full market value as freehold land and were considered as good, the practice being for the seller to nominate the purchaser as a burgess and to sign an acknowledgment that he had parted with his interest in his allotment. It is therefore not surprising that on the passing of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1883, desperate efforts were made to exclude the Common Wood from the operations of any scheme dealing with the corporate property of Holt, and so convinced were the inhabitants that a grave injustice would be done to the burgesses if the Common Wood came under the jurisdiction of the Charity Commissioners, that at a public meeting of the inhabitants held on the 18th February 1886, the following resolution was unanimously passed:—

"That this meeting of the inhabitants of Holt being of opinion that it would be unjust to the holders of allotments on Common Wood to interfere with their rights, begs respectfully to submit to the Charity Commissioners the desirability of not taking any further steps under the Municipal Corporations Act, 1883, with respect to them, and this meeting is also of opinion that it will not be beneficial to the inhabitants of Holt generally to interfere with the allotments."

There was a tremendous row about that; it went on for a long time. However, the usual inquiries under the Municipal Corporations Act were held at Holt when the most strenuous opposition was made to the inclusion of the Common Wood property, but the Charity Commissioners decided that it did come under the provisions of the Act, and intimated that they would prepare a scheme for the future management of this and the other property of the defunct Corporation. It may be mentioned that at the date of the coming into operation of the Act of 1883, namely on the 25th March 1886, certain persons were in the possession of allotments as resident burgesses. I hand in a long statement of those which I will not read. (Handed.) The trustee of Common Wood was at this time in possession of allotment (No. 6), formerly held by a burgess named Richard Williams, who had gone abroad, and whose address was unknown. Williams had, however, disposed of his interest in his allotment to a man named Charles Price, a non-resident who was nominated a burgess, but was not elected in consequence of his residing out of the borough.

It will be seen that this time all the original allottees were dead. In addition to the resident burgesses a number of persons or their nominees were on the 25th March 1886, in occupation of allotments of deceased relatives who had been resident burgesses. (Witness handed in list of names.) Acting on the advice of the late Sir Evan Morris, the then solicitor to the burgesses, those persons or their nominees were (notwithstanding that the period within which any new burgess should be elected had expired) enrolled as burgesses, and active measures were taken with a view to induce the Charity Commissioners to treat them in the scheme they were then preparing for the future management of the corporate property as burgesses elected before the passing of the Act, which is dated the 3rd

The Hon. G. T. KENYON, M.P.

April 1891. I produce a copy for the inspection of the Commissioners. This is under the confirmed scheme. That is the scheme in which you will follow the distinction between these two classes of burgesses (handing in document). It will be seen that the "old burgesses" are permitted to hold their allotments for life under the same conditions as those laid down in the award of the 2nd November 1848, and they had the privilege of nominating a person to whom the trustees under the scheme should offer a lease of his allotment for a period of 21 years, at such a rent as they (the trustees) should fix. The 17 persons elected as burgesses subsequent to the 25th March 1886, are also permitted to hold their respective allotments for life or so long as they shall continue to reside in the borough of Holt, but are subject to the payment to the trustees of 2*l.* per annum in respect of each allotment. It will also be seen from clause 24 of the scheme that provision is made for the letting of an allotment to Edward Parry, who was admitted a freeman of Holt in 1830, and who had until within a recent period resided beyond the boundaries of the borough. Mr. Parry made a formal application for an allotment, and the trustees being then in possession of allotment (No. 6.) gave possession of it to Mr. Parry, who continued to occupy it till the month of April 1893, when he died. He was the last freeman.

56,539*a*. I remember him?—At the present moment there are a number of resident burgesses in possession of allotments, and their names will appear from the list which I hand in (handing).

56,540. How many are they in number?—Thirty-seven resident. It will be seen from the lists already handed in that since the date of the scheme ten burgesses have from various causes (death, non-residence, &c.) ceased to occupy allotments. Each burgess, however, before death or removal from Holt nominated a person to whom the trustees should under clause 19 of the scheme offer a lease of the allotment so rendered vacant, and this is a list of the present lessees with the numbers of their respective allotments. Of these there are ten. (Witness handed in list.) These lessees each pay a rent of 1*l.* 10*s.* per annum in respect of their allotments. In addition to the above-mentioned burgesses and lessees, the 17 persons referred to in clause 25 of the scheme are in occupation of allotments at an annual rental of 2*l.* each. Their names will appear in this list (handing in list).

56,541. That brings it back to the original 64?—Yes, that brings it back to the same number. Then this is under the allotment D. the allotment D. referred to in the award (that was the piece that you remember which was to provide the expenses of the matter) is subdivided into four parts, and is let to four persons at a rental of 1*l.* per annum each. I hand in the names of the four persons (handing). I have handed in then a list of the persons at present on the burgess roll, together with a list of the

17 persons referred to in clause 25 of the scheme, and a list of the lessees and of the tenants of allotment D.

The net income of the trustees arising from the Common Wood amounts at present to 53*l.* per annum, and will go on increasing as the allotments of the burgesses fall in. It should be mentioned that some years since three burgesses built houses on their respective allotments. The land is a stiff clay, but is found to be suitable for fruit growing, many of the allotments being under cultivation for the growth of strawberries. There is a large demand for small allotments in Holt, and as soon as an allotment falls vacant so that the trustees can deal with it, it is intended to subdivide it into three or four parts for the benefit of the poorer classes of inhabitants of Holt.

That I think completes what I have to say in chief. I may mention that the two maces belonging to the defunct Corporation, both of which were made by order of the burgesses in the reign of King James I., are in court and can be seen.

Lord Kenyon.

56,542. I should like to see them very much. (Produced.) May I ask with regard to those maces—those were not apparently included in the property of the Town Trust?—Yes, they belong to the Town Trust.

56,543. Were they included at the time?—I think you will find them in the schedule to the scheme. Here is the list of the furniture of the town hall, and two silver maces are mentioned.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,544. Do you know the age of them at all?—They were made in the reign of King James I. There is no doubt about that one, I think. There is an entry in the minute book with regard to the repair of that one in 1606.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,545. What arms are those—the borough arms?—I suppose they are the borough arms.

Lord Kenyon.

56,546. They are the arms of Holt—no, those are Royal arms?—The arms of Holt are supposed to be a lion. Nobody seems to know exactly why, but it was originally called Lions, not Holt. Lions was the old name of Holt, I believe. It is very often called Lions in the old deeds.

56,547. Is that the origin of the Lions of Holt that we hear about?—It may be.

Professor Rhys.

56,548. In this document it is always either "Villa mea Leonum, juxta villam meam" "leonum," or "Apud castrum meum Leonum." It is the same "leon" that you have in "Urbs Le(q)ionum" or "Castra Le(gi)onum"?—Yes.

29 August 1894.]

The Hon. G. T. KENYON, M.P.

56,549. And out of that leonum you think they have got lions?—I should think it is very likely.

56,550. And also put the lions into the coat of arms?—I should think it is very likely.

56,551. How old is that coat of arms, can you tell me?—I cannot tell you, I am afraid.

56,552. The question suggests itself to me whether this is not the original site, whether the name “Caer Lleon” (=Castra Legionum) which is now the name for “Chester” in Welsh, was not first of all the name of Holt; it is a question as to the position of the ancient Deva.

Lord Kenyon.

56,553. I see in your new scheme you have perpetuated the Lions of Holt?—Yes, they have roared so often we thought they should roar again.

56,554. Is the Town Trust settled yet?—It has not yet been submitted to the trustees yet. It will be submitted at their next meeting.

56,555. Under this scheme the Town Trust will have to bear the expense of laying out this?—Yes, we tried to get a contribution from the Woods and Forests towards the expenses of it, but they declined to pay.

56,556. Two pounds an acre is quite a sufficient rent for land about here—for that bit of waste?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,557. I presume that this is put in evidence rather as information than as likely to lead to any discussion?—I think so. I have had the privilege of reading what Mr. Sowray said in the evidence he gave in London, but I do not see any point in it that I wish to controvert in any way. I think it is a satisfaction perhaps to the people of Holt, and it is as well that this should be put on record, because there has been a good deal of talk and a good deal of dissatisfaction with regard to the making of these schemes, and with regard to the action of the Crown about the property. Perhaps it would set it all at rest.

56,558. There is no charge or anything of that kind for the individual burgesses?—No. We thought it was rather hard of the Crown that they did not make any claim to these properties at all until after the scheme had been passed and received the assent of the Queen.

56,559. And you complain, I suppose, of the delay?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,560. What is the acreage of the Common Wood?—185 acres.

56,561. You have not referred to the Act of Parliament which has been handed to me, the 13 Vict. c. 8., which confirmed the award made in the matter. I only refer to it in order to get upon the Notes the full legislative history upon the matter. That is the Act of Parliament under the Enclosure Act, is it not?—No, it says: “And whereas in the matter of the enclosure of Common Wood, situate in the parish of Holt, in the county of Denbigh, the Enclosure Commissioners for England and Wales did on the 12th of March, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and forty-six, give notice of their intention to proceed with such enclosure: And whereas the award of the valuer in the year of the said enclosure was on the sixteenth day of November one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight confirmed by the said Commissioners, and a part of the said lands were sold by the said valuer: And whereas doubts have arisen whether the land, the subject matter of such enclosures were the stinted pasture or lands subject to rights of common which might be exercised at all times of every year for cattle levant and couchant upon other land.” Then it goes on to set at rest all doubts, and to confirm the award by the authority of this further statute. I thought I mentioned that.

56,562. Very likely you did; I have not noticed that you mentioned it?—Yes, I think I said that doubts had been thrown upon it.

56,563. The remainder of the Common Wood was divided, as I understand it, into 64 equal allotments?—Yes.

56,564. Has any litigation arisen in reference to any transactions upon which burgesses who were allottees have entered?—Not that I am aware of. Such sort of questions have generally been settled by mutual arrangement and accommodation.

56,565. Did the allottees affect to treat their allotments as their own in any cases that came under your notice?—Yes, they attempted to do so.

56,566. You say that the acreage is 185 acres, and in a letter which has been sent to the Commissioners by Mr. Palmer, the acreage in 1843 is said to be 204 acres?—A portion was sold for the purpose of paying the expenses of the enclosure.

56,567. Then the discrepancies are accounted for by the sale under the award?—Yes, by the sale.

Lord Kenyon.

56,568. Has any burgess been allowed to have more than one allotment?—No.

56,569. Either by renting or otherwise?—I think not—not within the knowledge of the Trustees.

56,570. On the smaller mace I see the date is put of 1606?—Yes, that is the date of that one.

The witness withdrew.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. W. T. PARKINS.

Mr. WILLIAM TREVOR PARKINS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

56,571. You are Chancellor of the Diocese of St. Asaph?—I am.

56,572. And you reside at Gresford?—I do.

56,573. You wish to give evidence with regard to the common of Gresford?—I was asked to bring the tithe map here, and to give evidence with regard to the common of Gresford that formerly existed.

56,574. Have you any statement prepared that you would like to read?—I have prepared a short statement.

56,575. Will you read that, and then we can ask you questions upon it. You wish to give evidence with regard to the common at Gresford?—I was requested to give evidence. I have brought the tithe map.

56,576. Will you put in that tithe map for examination?—Yes. It is rather bulky.

56,577. Kindly give us your statement first, and then we can go into the matter of the tithe map?—This is a very brief statement. I have not gone into it much in detail. The tithe commutation was made in 1843, and confirmed in 1845. In the Schedule, No. 312 is described as pasture, 1a. 1r. 10p.; No. 329, also pasture, 2a. 3r.; No. 328, pasture, 1r. 24p.; No. 335, pasture, 1a.; No. 333, pasture, 38p.; No. 374, water, 3r.; making altogether, 6a. 1r. 32p., and all that is described as common. No. 374 is a pool, some distance from the rest, which is known as the Lake. The five other parcels of land lie on the slope of the hill below the village. The railway runs through No. 329, and part of 312. These two were, I believe, enclosed long before the commutation, and have ever since been retained by the occupiers.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,578. Long before the date of this map, do you mean, that is to say, the tithe map?—Yes, before the date of the map.

Lord Kenyon.

56,579. Have you any record of their enclosure?—No, I have not. There have been some disputes, I believe.

56,580. Has it ever been the subject of litigation?—Not of litigation, but I believe there has been some controversy.

56,581. It has never come to a practical head?—No. The three other pieces, Nos. 328, 335, and 333, nearly correspond with two pieces of land which were conveyed in 1881 by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Woods and Forests to the vicar and churchwardens of Gresford, in trust for the inhabitants of the parish, for the purposes of a public recreation or pleasure ground for the use of the inhabitants, and such other persons as the vicar and churchwardens shall permit. This is the deed of conveyance (handing in a document). 50*l.* was paid to the commissioners, and the cost of the conveyance was five guineas. This sum of 55*l.* 5*s.* was defrayed by subscriptions given by a few persons who were desirous that the Green and the adjoining bank should be secured for the use of the public, and placed under proper management. This recreation ground is beautifully situated, and it is a great benefit to the inhabitants and to strangers who visit Gresford. The parish council will shortly succeed the churchwardens in the management of it. The railway occupies a very considerable portion.

56,582. Did the railway pay for their severance?—I do not think the railway did, but I do not know. I think they did not pay.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,583. Do you mean that they took land without paying for it?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

No, for the severance damage.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,584. Did they not pay for the land?—I do not know. The railway took the land, I believe, but a sufficient title to it was never made out.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,585. Have they not paid the purchase money into court in that case?—I cannot tell you really—I do not know.

56,586. Which railway company was it?—The Great Western Railway Company. It was originally the North Wales line going first to Ruabon, afterwards to Shrewsbury, and then it became the Great Western line.

56,587. In which parish is this?—This is in Gresford.

Lord Kenyon.

56,588. Who was the valuer under the award of 1843, do you know? Have you a copy of his award?—No, I have not. I have only the tithe map.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,589. At what date did the Railway Company take it?—I think the railway was constructed about 1846. This, my Lord, is the ordnance map (producing a map).

56,590. Where is the land on the slope?—That is the water (pointing on the map). That shows the land as it always was.

Lord Kenyon.

56,591. Here is the church is it not?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,592. All Saints' Church?—That is so.

56,593. Which is the land marked "common" now; which was marked "common" on the tithe map? What is the stream that runs down there (pointing)?—The Alyn.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. W. T. PARKINS.

Lord Kenyon.

56,594. Shall we see this better on the tithe map?—Yes, I think if you will kindly look at the tithe map it would be better.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,595. Is it enclosed now?—One piece of it is enclosed. Here is the water, and this is the road which runs under the station from here (pointing on the tithe map).

Lord Kenyon.

56,596. This was made prior to the railway I take it?—The railway runs through No. 329 and part of 312.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

46,597. The railway runs through a part of a plantation, so far as I can see?—It is very hilly ground. The railway runs through there. This is a road which now goes down to the station. This No. 328 has been enclosed for a long time, and has been used for the meetings of the Gresford Ladies' Club. The club has met and held its dances there during a great many years.

56,598. Who has enclosed the land higher up than the railway, between the stream and the railway?—The common never extended so far as this (pointing). This is a large meadow which belonged to the vicar.

Lord Kenyon.

56,599. Which is the recreation ground?—These numbers, 328, 335, and 333, correspond very nearly to the ground which has been bought for recreation ground.

56,600. For the sum of 50*l.*, was it not?—50*l.* was paid to the Commissioners. It is as nearly as possible the same, it is not quite the same.

56,601. For practical purposes it is the same?—Yes, I think it is the same, practically.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,602. What has become of this?—That is a private wood.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,603. The point seems to be: How the land described as common land in the tithe map has now passed into private hands?—I cannot help you as to that, I am afraid.

Mr. Seebohm.

It has passed into railway and private hands.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Yes, railway and private hands.

Lord Kenyon.

Without apparently any benefit.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

And, apparently, this very parish has had to pay 50*l.* to the Commissioners of Woods and Forests in order to get this recreation ground.

Mr. Seebohm.

Is it the Tithe Commissioners or the Commissioners of Woods and Forests?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,604. The Commissioners of Woods and Forests. Kenneth Howard conveys on behalf of Her Majesty?—We thought that as the land was there somebody might possibly have squatted down there, and built a house upon it, and we thought it better, perhaps, to preserve the land for the inhabitants, and I and six other people subscribed the money and bought it.

56,605. In which lordship or manor is it?—The Lordship of Bromfield.

56,606. That is a Crown manor?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

56,607. Sir Robert Cunliffe is the steward?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

So that the freehold may be in the Crown.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

That may be an explanation.

Lord Kenyon.

56,608. Do the Woods and Forests exact any rents in Gresford Manor?—I do not think so.

Mr. Seebohm.

The 50*l.* might be for the enfranchisement of it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,609. Yes, of course it might?—So far as the commoners' rights go, the piece of land was never valuable; it was on the slope of a bank, and hardly good for anything.

Lord Kenyon.

56,610. It is planted with trees, is it not?—No, it is not planted. There are one or two trees on it, but it is not planted.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,610*a*. The minerals, are reserved?—The minerals are reserved, and the vicar and churchwardens are required to give all facilities to people to use the ground.

56,611. It is "Subject, nevertheless, to such rights of pasturage and other commonable rights, and to all such rights of way and other public rights as the said land may be legally subject to." So that it ought, still, to be common land?—I do not know that any rights are exercised over it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,612. I notice that the land is conveyed to the vicar and churchwardens?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

As trustees.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. W. T. PARKINS.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,613. As trustees for the public, so that it would come under the operation of the Local Government Act, 1894, now?—Certainly.

56,614. Then this is only a part of the whole?—This is a part of the whole land mentioned in the Tithe Act—only a small part of it. I should say that No. 328, I believe, was enclosed a great many years ago, and some persons claimed the ownership of it, but the right to it was disputed, and had to be relinquished.

Lord Kenyon.

56,615. You have not given the acreage of these three that were conveyed?—The acreage of the conveyance is 1a. 2r. 19p., and the other three pieces amount to 1 acre 2 roods and 22 perches.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,616. The other two pieces are not touched by this conveyance, are they; it is only one acre and a bit that is conveyed?—The three pieces, these are 328, 335, and 333, in the tithe map are conveyed.

Mr. Seebohm.

I presume that the railway have not paid any rent, or anything of that kind—there has not been any acknowledgment which would keep up the right.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Oh, no. Of course it may be before the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and, therefore, their rights would depend upon their own Special Act.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,617. Do you not think it might be worth while for you to inquire of the railway company whether there is any fund paid into court, or how they did acquire possession of the land. You might get enough to purchase more for the use of the parish?—There is no more to purchase.

56,618. Then with regard to Rossett?—Yes, I have brought the tithe map of Allington.

56,619. Have you any further statement to make as to Rossett?—What is called Rossett Green seems to have extended on the east side of the Wrexham and Chester road. I think that is about the situation of it (pointing on the map).

56,620. Is it the triangular bit?—No. I rather think all this was part of the original Rossett Green, extending down to somewhere about here.

56,621. Is that now enclosed?—It is all enclosed now, only I am not quite sure whether that piece of water is enclosed. Part of that piece of water is.

56,622. Do you know under what circumstances it was enclosed; was there an Act of Parliament?—There was no Act of Parliament. I have here a conveyance to Mr. James Boydell in 1832 (see Appendix) who lived there, of

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Nos. 1, 2, and 3, and these other numbers appear to have been, and I should think in all probability were, conveyed by separate conveyances at the same time. It looks as if they were.

56,623. This is from the Crown again?—It is from the Crown.

56,624. Let me see it, in order that we may know whether it contains the same words. It is, "We, the Right Honourable John Wm. Ponsonby," and so on, "do by these presents grant unto the said James Boydell all the estate for ever." There is no saving of common rights in it?—No. I think at that time they were all enclosed, and they are no longer commons.

Mr. Seebohm.

That is an enfranchisement.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Yes, complete. This is a conveyance from the Crown as lord of the manor or of the lordship of all rights, except sporting rights, and was done for 3*l.* 16*s.*

Mr. Seebohm.

It does not convey the land, but all the rights of the Crown in the land. It is not "all that piece or parcel of land." I should think that is the common form of an enfranchisement, is it not?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,625. Clearly. It is exactly what I think one would expect it to be from the Lord of the Manor of Bromfield. I was speaking from the point of view of policy, that is all. It seems to be a singular thing to have sold this for 3*l.* 16*s.* It was land by the side of the road, too, was it not?—Well, it was a very objectionable piece of ground. A long time ago it was the practice to gibbet people, I believe, on that very piece of ground, and I am told that a long time ago the freeholders were very glad to have the land enclosed and put in good order. I am satisfied that it was done with the consent of several leading freeholders.

56,626. How far is this from the village?—It is in the village of Rossett.

56,627. Then it really was a kind of village green before?—I suppose at some time it was, but I take it that at the time that deed was executed somebody, whoever it was, had appropriated the ground. I find that in the tithe map a good many of the small numbers are marked; 221 is called an encroachment, 223 is called enclosure of outlet, 234 enclosure to garden, 235 croft enclosed and 211 is called encroachment on green. Then 220 is called three new enclosures for gardens.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. W. T. PARKINS.

Mr. Seeböhm.

This conveyance is a conveyance of the Crown's interest in the encroachment in the Lordship of Bromfield and Yale, so that they had been enclosed apparently out of the common, and then the Crown enfranchised them.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,628. It looks as if it were a kind of compromise in some way of some rights that were disputed. Is it the case that one Thomas Snellson had 20 perches also conveyed to him?—There is a list of them here. There is James Mercer, William and George Mercer, John Tilson and Mary Cooper, and the trustees of the club. Those are the names.

56,629. I see that they have the pieces from No. 4 to No. 9?—I only got that deed this morning, and I have not had the opportunity of comparing it carefully with the tithe map.

56,630. But, as I understand it, you think that before this conveyance to BoydeU there had been enclosures made by encroachers?—Yes, I am satisfied that there had been.

Lord Kenyon.

56,631. Is there any house built on that portion?—No, not on that portion.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,632. I think you said that there was no common land now in Allington?—At the time that was fixed the waste in the township was 3a. 0r. 36p.; I fancy those were small bits of land, but I cannot follow them on the map.

56,633. In the House of Commons returns for 1874 of commons and common field lands remaining unenclosed in the county of Denbigh, we find the total area of the township of Allington is given as 3,053 acres, and the area of common field lands as 46 acres. These returns are based, as I understand, chiefly on the tithe map too?—I do not know whether that is so.

56,634. "The whole of the tithe map" says, the Commissioner, "agreements, awards and apportionments have been examined"?—What was the date of that?

56,635. This is 1874?—It is possible there might be other portions of land in portions of Gresford parish, but what I have given evidence about to-day is in Gresford township.

56,636. The area of Gresford township is put down as 1,000 acres. Rossett is in Allington, is it not?—The whole extent of the green at Rossett cannot be very large. My belief, I may say, is that Mr. BoydeU got the title of his neighbours secured as well as his own. I believe that was done. I believe he got conveyances from the Crown for them as well as for himself. I think that is so.

Professor Rhys.

56,637. I should like to ask you, Mr. Trevor Parkins, as you are well known as an antiquarian, how far you can trace the name Rossett. Is the name Rossett or "the Rossett"?—That is the proper name, no doubt: the Rossett.

56,638. Have you got the old Welsh name anywhere. I have seen it stated that the name is "Yr Orsedd."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,639. Mr. Palmer suggests it as Yr Orsedd Goch?—Yes, I have heard that is so. I have no evidence of it. It is always called "the Rossett," and as you know, there are a great many Rhoses in this neighbourhood.

Professor Rhys.

56,640. I thought at one time that it was Rhosydd, the plural of Rhos, a moor, but I have been told since that the old name was "Yr Orsedd." This in modern Welsh would mean "the judgment seat," or, "the tribunal." In mediæval Welsh it would have meant also a mound, whether an artificial or natural eminence. Is there anything of that kind in the village?—There is no mound of any sort or kind.

56,641. Is there no tradition as to it?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,642. But I think you said that it was formerly a place of public execution?—A place of gibbeting. I believe the remains of the old gibbet were in existence in the memory of people to whom I have spoken.

Professor Rhys.

56,643. You have no tradition of any mound, artificial or otherwise, or of a meeting place of any kind?—No, none whatever.

56,644. As to "Yr Orsedd Goch," which has been suggested, you have not met with that in books or in documents?—No, I have not.

56,645. But you have heard that was the name?—Yes, I think I have heard Mr. Palmer suggest that.

The witness withdrew.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. A. N. PALMER.

Mr ALFRED NEOBARD PALMER called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

56,646. You live at 19, King Street, Wrexham?
—Yes, my Lord.

56,647. You wish to give general evidence with regard to some of these commons?—I have been requested to do so, my Lord.

56,648. You have a statement. Will you proceed with it?—It struck me that before I began it might be interesting to put in a survey of Holt of the year 1620, the town survey, which I have here. (See Appendix.)

Mr. Seeborn.

56,649. Is that Norden's survey?—Yes, John Norden's survey.

Lord Kenyon.

56,650. Are there any particulars that you wish to give from that survey with regard to Common Wood, or anything else?—The Common Wood is mentioned as an ancient pasture.

56,651. As the property of the burgesses?—Yes, for the use of the burgesses.

56,652. Have you any record of the burgesses of that date?—No, none at all.

56,653. It does not say how many there were?—No, it does not; it simply describes what belonged to the Crown and what had been granted by the Crown within the liberty of the Holt.

56,654. Does the Crown property tally with the Crown property as stated in this last award?—It is very difficult to say. It recites the rents mostly of the burgesses. There is a list of the burgesses given with the several rents which they had to pay. (The witness produced list.)

56,655. It does not state the acreage for which they paid these rents, does it?—No, you can calculate that by the statement that 1s. is to be paid for every acre of burgage land, and 2s. for every acre of ancient demesne.

56,656. That makes 64?—Yes.

56,657. I see there are a number of Cheshire names among these, more Cheshire probably than Welsh?—Yes, it was essentially a Cheshire town, although situated in Denbighshire. I sent in a statement to the Commissioners, and perhaps it would be as well for me to follow the order contained in that statement.

Professor Rhys.

56,658. Are you now leaving the question of Holt?—Yes.

56,659. Perhaps I might put one antiquarian question or two?—Yes.

56,660. Is there a mention of a wood there?—Common Wood?

56,661. Yes, what about that?—I believe in the charter which I have carefully transcribed it is described as a pasture, and I have several times found it mentioned incidentally as a pasture.

56,662. What does Holt mean?—Holt means a wood.

56,663. And the modern name Holt seems to continue that idea?—Yes.

56,664. When can it have been a wood, do you think?—I think it must have been a wood at a very early date, probably when the Earl of Arundel came into the lordship, the first English Lord of Bromfield.

56,665. How far back do you trace it as a pasture?—I cannot trace it any further back than the charter.

56,666. Of Queen Elizabeth?—No, of Henry IV.

56,667. It was a pasture then?—Yes, but I ought to say that in—I cannot give exactly the date now, but I believe it was 1620; yes, I am sure it was—there was a survey which I have at home of the manor of Burton which includes Allington, Gresford, and so on, and therein there is a statement of two parcels of land, one called Bushey Land, aforetime parcel of Common Wood, so that there were bushes at any rate.

56,668. You heard the surmise which I suggested, rather than put positively, about the name Villa Leonum and Castrum Leonum?—Yes.

56,669. What do you say to that?—I have never been able to come to a definite conclusion, but I am inclined to the opinion which you suggested, that it is an extension of the old name of Chester—Caer Lleon—to a large district outside it.

56,670. Let me suggest to you the contrary view: I am inclined to think that the editors of Ptolemy's Geography find a difficulty in placing Deva at Chester, because he placed it further south. Is not that so (I am speaking entirely from memory)?—That is so, but on the other hand, we have considerable Roman remains at Deva, whereas there are none at Holt.

56,671. But, it is possible that the name belonged first to Holt and only later to Chester, as it grew in importance?—Yes, that may be so. I have always considered that Holt or Farndon might have been an outpost say of Chester, and that therefore Holt acquired its Welsh name. That has been the opinion which I have formed in my own mind. I cannot say that I can prove it.

56,672. Then you are not favourable to the idea that the name belonged to the outlying place first?—Well, it may be so. I never thought of that before.

56,673. The Welsh name would now be understood to refer to Chester?—Certainly.

56,674. How far is Holt distant from Chester?—It would be about eight miles.

56,675. If the Roman station was there before Chester, the name would possibly refer to Holt before it referred to Chester?—Yes.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. A. N. PALMER.

56,676. That is only a suggestion; do you think that agrees with the fact?—Yes, I think it very likely.

56,677. But you have not thought of it?—I have not thought of it in that way. I considered it rather an extension of the name from Chester to the outpost.

56,678. But if the ancient mentions of Deva would seem to place it on the Dee, miles away from Chester, that would rather seem to suggest the contrary view?—Yes. Then with regard to Yr Orsedd Goch.

56,679. Have you anything to say as to that?—Yes, in this survey of 1620 of John Norden of the Manor of Burton, in the Lordship of Bromfield, it is continually mentioned. In 1620 it is continually called in this survey Yr Orsedd Goch, and there are some five or six place names in this neighbourhood which I have found by consulting old deeds to have been formerly “Yr Orsedd,” which are now called “Rossett.”

56,680. That is a feature of the dialect: in the transition of language you think that “Yr Orsedd” becomes “the Rossett”?—Yes.

56,681. Would you say that the Goch (red) refers to the red sandstone about there?—Well, the soil is reddish.

56,682. Or would you say that brings us back to execution or gibbeting?—There was a gibbet there. I have known persons who have seen the gibbet—very old persons.

56,683. You have never heard of there being anything like a small mound or anything of that sort?—No.

56,684. You have, perhaps, never inquired?—So much has been enclosed.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,685. But you would take the fact of the gibbet being there as rather confirming your view?—Yes. The last man gibbeted there I have been told was some one of the name of Jeffreys.

Professor Rhys.

That is a well-known name down here.

Lord Kenyon.

56,686. With regard to the castle, have you traced that back at all?—Yes, there is a very full description of the castle in this survey.

Professor Rhys.

56,687. Is there any distinction between Villa Leonum and Castrum Leonum?—Yes; the Castrum itself was the castle and its precincts; the villa included the town and its liberties—“franchise” it is called here.

Lord Kenyon.

56,688. I know it is traced to some time before the wars of the Roses, but how much earlier can you trace it?—I really do not know. My time has not allowed me to go into it much.

56,689. I thought you turned your attention to it before?—I have been intending for a long time to turn my attention to Holt more thoroughly.

56,690. It occurs to me that it is on the natural high road between the strong positions of Beeston and the natural passes of Wales. It would be on the roadway as opposed to the sea way?—The left side of the Dee opposite Chester was formerly a great marsh, and therefore Holt would probably be a better place of passage over the water than Chester. That is another point in favour of the suggestion of Professor Rhys, and tends to bear out your Lordship's suggestion. I have a lot of memoranda about Holt, but I have not been able to look them up.

56,691. Now we will go on with your general evidence?—I will take out of the general statement, unless I am asked a question about it, the matter with regard to the common fields in the first paragraph.

56,692. You leave that out?—Yes, I leave that out, because they were not really common in the sense that we use the word common now.

56,693. But they are still unenclosed fields, I think?—Yes, but in a very straggling state, and in the last stages of decay. There were no common rights over the common fields. As to the Enclosure Acts, the first that I mention in my memorandum is the Enclosure Act of Minera.

56,694. You are dealing with the county of Denbigh now?—Yes. An Act of Parliament was passed in 1808, 48 George III. c. 16, for enclosing the waste lands (480 statute acres) of Minera. These lands were wholly allotted, with the exception hereafter made, to owners of land in the township. The exception, however, is important. You will see in section 12, I think, that the exception occurs. A portion of the waste was ordered to be set aside to be enjoyed in common by the allottees “for getting “limestone” ———

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,695. You mean the section marked “allotment for getting materials”?—Yes, I have not marked it. It was “for getting limestone, “building-stone, gravel, sand, earth, marl, and “clay to make bricks for the use, benefit, or “improvement, of such buildings, lands, or “hereditaments, situated in the said township” —then I have left out a few unimportant words —“and also in the repairs of the highways, “private roads and paths, which now are, or “hereafter shall be made within the said township, provided always that such stone, gravel, “sand, earth, marl, or clay . . . shall not, “directly or indirectly, be sold or disposed of “to any person or persons whomsoever, or "conveyed out of the said township under any pretence whatever, under the penalty of 20s. for every ton weight so sold or conveyed." The exception goes on to say, it was to be paid to the overseers of the poor, in aid of poor's rate of said township. It was also required "that springs and pools and other watering places for cattle and beasts, within the said township, upon the said commons and waste lands," should be set apart "for the common use and benefit of all owners, or occupiers of messuages, tenements, or hereditaments within the said township." So far as I can discover, that restriction has not been observed.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,696. Where is Minera; is it close by Wrexham?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

56,697. Do you mean to say private individuals have taken advantage of it, or it has been sold?—Sold outside the township.

56,698. For the benefit of private individuals?—So I understand.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,699. It is a very valuable right, because apparently if one were to purchase a bit of land within that common one would have a right to repair one's house with stone from this public quarry?—Yes. I merely bring this before the Commissioners, not because I know for certain that stone and marl and so forth are sold, but in order that that provision of the Act should be known.

56,700. Is there a bit allotted?—Yes.

56,701. Because the words are: "He is hereby required to set out and allot such parts or portions of the said commons and waste lands in the said township of Minera not exceeding in the whole 12 statute acres in such place or places as he shall judge most convenient?"—Yes.

56,701a. I will read clause 12 in order to get it upon the notes. It is as follows: "And be it further enacted that the said Commissioner by this Act appointed shall and he is hereby required to set out and allot such parts or portions of the said commons and waste lands in the said township of Minera, not exceeding in the whole 12 statute acres in such place or places as he shall judge most convenient to be used and enjoyed for ever thereafter by the respective proprietors of buildings, lands, or hereditaments within the said township, who shall be adjudged to be entitled to any allotment or allotments of the said commons or waste lands, and ultimately award the same by virtue of this Act in common for the purpose of getting limestone, building-stone, gravel, sand, earth, marl, and clay to make bricks for the use, benefit, or improvement of such buildings, lands, or hereditaments situate in the said township, in right of which any allotment or allotments hath or have been made, as well as for the use, benefit, or improvement of such allotment or allotments, and the getting of such stone, gravel, sand, earth, marl, or clay, to be got up for the purposes aforesaid, and the labourers to be employed in getting the same shall be and are hereby declared to be subject to such regulations and restrictions as the said Commissioner by this Act appointed shall in and by his award direct or appoint, and also in the repairs of the highways, private roads, and paths which now are or hereafter shall be made within the said township. Provided always that such stone, gravel, sand, earth, marl, or clay, or any of them shall not directly or indirectly be sold or disposed of to any person or persons whomsoever or conveyed out of the said township under any pretence whatsoever, under the penalty of 20s. for every ton weight so sold or conveyed out of the said township, and so proportionally for any greater or less weight or quantity to be paid for such person or persons so selling or disposing of such stone, gravel, sand, earth, marl or clay to the overseers of the poor of the said township of Minera for the time being, and to be by them accounted for and applied in aid of the Poor's Rate of the said township; and the said Commissioner by this Act appointed may, where occasion shall require, set out and appoint springs and pools and other watering-places for cattle and beasts within the said township upon the said commons and waste lands, and for the common use and benefit of all owners or occupiers of messuages, tenements, or hereditaments within the said township."

Lord Kenyon.

56,702. Who are the owners of the land to whom the first was assigned?—I think I can tell you that; James Topping, Esquire, William Lloyd of Plas Power, Esquire, John Jones of Caemynydd, Esquire. I think those are all that are mentioned in the Act, but they are recited at the beginning.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,703. Was this clause altered by a subsequent Act of Parliament?—No, except so far as saving the rights of the Grosvenor family is concerned, not to my knowledge.

56,704. Meredith is one?—Meredith of Plas Gwyn.

Lord Kenyon.

56,705. You do not know what the area of the whole is?—Yes, my Lord, 480 statute acres.

56,706. Yes, I see that is so?—I think the portions set apart were ordered to be not over 12 acres, but there may be someone here who will be able to give information upon that point.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. A. N. PALMER.

[Continued.]

Lord Kenyon.

We shall be able to look at the map presently and that will help us.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,707. You do not know whether that Act was repealed, or what was done with it?—No, I do not know whether that Act has been repealed or not.

56,708. Can you tell me in whom were the quarries vested?—No, I cannot.

56,709. You have not looked at the award?—No, I have not looked at the award.

56,710. I should think to carry out section 12 in the award the Commissioner would have to vest the part set aside for getting materials in certain trustees, would he not?—Yes, I should say so. There are two Commissioners mentioned in the Act.

56,711. I mean the Commissioners to carry out the Act?—Yes, but I have never come across the names of any trustees. In the tithe map I remember noticing the common quarry.

56,712. In 1845 I think there is a bit described as township quarry, is there not?—Yes. The Vicar of Minera is here, and can speak with regard to that, I think.

Lord Kenyon.

56,713. Yes, I think we will ask him whether he can give us some information upon that presently?—The next point is as to the Holt Common Wood which has been fully dealt with by Mr. Kenyon.

56,714. Have you any remarks to make upon Mr. Kenyon's evidence?—No, I have not. I think Mr. Kenyon said pretty well all I intended to say.

56,715. Do you think that the rights of the Burgesses of Holt have been recognised by the Crown now?—I really have not gone into the matter lately.

Then as to the point of the waste lands in the Ruabon and Esclusham parishes. I thought it desirable to bring those before the Commissioners, but I have not any very exact knowledge of it, except that in one of the books published by the authority of Parliament in one of the Reports of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests which I read several years ago, and which I copied into my pocket book at the time and which I have referred to, I find that in 1853 the Crown sold to the late Sir Watkin Williams-Wynn its right over them. (For copy of this conveyance, see Appendix.)

Mr. Seebohm.

See 56,884. 56,715a. Was it 1853 or 1857?—1857. I believe it was in 1853 that the agreement was made, but the sale was effected in 1857. The Crown sold to the late Sir Watkin Williams-Wynn its rights in the soil of 2,774 acres of waste land in the parish of Ruabon, mineral and sporting rights excepted, and of 2,991 acres of waste land in the township of Esclusham for 208*l.* 11*s.* 10*d.*, being a fourteenth part of their estimated value.

Lord Kenyon.

56,716. What happened to the other 13 parts?—I ought to say that this is merely an abstract of what I read in the Reports, but all the figures are right I am quite sure.

56,717. He also bought the sporting rights, did he not?—The sporting rights he also bought, and gave 2,000*l.* for them, but the common rights were reserved.

56,718. Did the Crown raise any contention?—Yes, the Crown contended that by the custom of this lordship it was entitled to a third part instead of a fourteenth part of all lands enclosed; but was unable to prove its contention. Therefore as I imagine the bargain was made, the whole area for the fourteenth part. But there is no doubt at all that the Crown is entitled to a third part by ancient custom of this lordship of all lands enclosed, and I have here a Parliamentary survey of this lordship in which that right is asserted. (See Appendix.)

Mr. Seebohm.

56,719. Is this Norden's survey also?—No, it is the survey of 1649. This is the whole of the paragraph. "The enclosures before mentioned, and all the rest of them that are within the Lordship of Bromfield and Yale fall to the lord of the soyle because inclosed with out licence, for, although by their"—that refers to the tenants—"fee farm estates they may challenge freedom of commoning, it is by the covenant of the grant as formerly and anciently was accustomed without any power of inclosing so that they must take a new grant of all except some old inclosures which are included in their fee farms which is the custom of the lordship, and if they should inclose all their comons yet the lord would have a third p'te."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,720. That transaction in 1857 that you referred to seems to be a portion of a considerable transaction between the Crown and Sir Watkin Williams Wynn in the year 1857?—Yes, I believe it was, but I was not interested in that; I was only interested in my own district.

56,721. Still, it is an instance which we are very glad you brought forward. The Crown parted with its interest in several pieces or parcels of waste land and certain encroachments thereon, and it appears that it parts with 23,639a. 2r. 31p. for 6,331*l.*

Lord Kenyon.

It is a most extraordinary bargain.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

The 23,000 odd acres were waste lands and encroachments, and to one-third of those, upon enclosure the Crown was by custom entitled, as I understand it and parted with its rights including one-third for 6,000*l.* odd.

29 August 1894.]

MR. ALAN PALMER.]

Lord Kenyon.

It is all mountain top.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,722. Probably, but it did not reserve the minerals there I fancy, did it?—Yes, minerals and sporting rights.

Lord Kenyon.

56,723. Are not the minerals in this particular case which you have mentioned the property of the Grosvenor family?—Yes, all the minerals in the Lordship of Bromfield and Yale belong to the Grosvenor family, unless they have parted with them, as they have done in certain cases; sometimes they have sold the minerals of certain districts.

Mr. Seeborn.

Do we not understand that that sale was made subject to the common rights, and that the right to the one-third was only if they were enclosed without licence, that is according to the survey I think.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,723a. I think not?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

If all the common lands are enclosed there according to the custom of the lordship, the lord takes a third part.

Lord Kenyon.

56,724. You say that the Crown contended that by the custom of the lordship it was entitled to a third part instead of a fourteenth part of all the land enclosed, but then the Crown Officers were not able to prove it, and then the matter dropped?—The lands were actually sold for that sum, so that the late Sir Watkin was absolutely entitled to them. They were actually sold for that sum because the Crown Officers could not prove their contention, but if the Crown had a steward of its own who knew his business and looked after the interest of the Crown, that would not have happened, but this happened at the time that Sir Watkin Williams-Wynn himself was the steward.

Mr. Seeborn.

56,725. Could you tell me whether Sir Watkin has himself claimed the third on enclosure or the fourteenth?—No, I could not tell you.

Lord Kenyon.

56,726. Is there not still a certain amount of common right exercised on these hills in the way of cutting heather for brooms?—I think I have seen it done. I cannot speak positively. If you will allow me I will read what the common rights are in the survey of 1620 over these lands. "In the survey of the Manor of Esclusham made by John Norden, they say" (that is, the jurors, there were 20 jurors, all men of note in the township), "The commons in and about this manno' doth yeild turfe, furse, heath, and fearne, wch the tennaunts and inhabitaunts of this and other mannors adioynge doe take and vse for fuell as they neede, and thinke ye same doe belong to them as appurtenaunces to their landes and leases."

Mr. Seeborn.

56,727. Are those leases the 40 year leases?—Yes, the 40 year leases, but of course there were plenty of freeholders in the manor at the time. The jurors go on to say that on the mountains and commons in and about this manor "do breed mooree-cockes and growes which gentlemen of ye countrey of Cheshire and other places do hawke and take them at some seasons of the year." Then they say that they are inter-commoners with the Manors of Minera, Esclusham, and Yale.

56,728. Then you are not in a position to say whether those rights of common are still enforced?—No, I am not.

Lord Kenyon.

56,729. I am certain that they still do it. I have seen them do it many times.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,730. Do you know whether the encroachments were very numerous there in 1857?—As to the encroachments on the commons in 1857 I only know by hearsay.

56,731. The deed seems to deal with waste lands and encroachments. Of course we have not got the deed?—I only know by hearsay that there were a great many small cottages built, but I do not know of my own knowledge.

56,732. And the effect of the deed was that the management of any squatters' cottages that were there was transferred from the Crown to Sir Watkin?—Yes. I have been told, but I do not know of my own knowledge, that it was done, that the cottagers who had squatted on the waste, and thought they had a right to their cottages, found themselves tenants of Sir Watkin. I have only been told so, and I really do not know whether it is so or not.

56,733. Do you know whether even now there are people who believe that by the custom of what they call Ty unnos, as it was called at Bala, they acquired a right?—Yes, or Hafod unnos.

56,734. Yes, or Hafod unnos. My question is whether such people still exist, and up to what time that belief was maintained in the district?—I have heard many and many a time of the custom Hafodau or Tai unnos. I should say it remained in existence until the commons were all enclosed. (For a note on this subject by the witness, see Appendix.)

29 August 1894.]

Mr. A. N. PALMER.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

56,735. So that these people were people who so far as you could judge were acting honestly under the impression that they had got the right to do this, and that they were not simply stealthy encroachers?—So I have been told, but I do not know of my own knowledge. I have been told so at various times by various old people.

56,736. We had one definite instance at Bala, of the thing being done according to the approved custom of the manor?—Yes. I cannot give definite evidence of that myself, but I have been told that was the case.

Professor Rhys.

56,737. Do they use the term "Morning surprise" for that sort of thing in English here?—No, I have never heard of that.

56,738. That is what we had somewhere in Radnorshire, I think, the translation of "Morning surprise" for "Ty unnos" or "Hafed unnos"?—Yes, it is not a bad rendering. I have said in the memorandum I sent to the Secretary, and I should like to say it publicly, that all the statements I make here are based on official documents either printed, or, if not printed, accessible to whomsoever will be at the labour and cost of consulting them, and if the Commissioners make this memorandum a basis for examination, I claim in justice to myself to have it acknowledged that I have made use of no private documents to which, as an antiquary, I have been permitted to have access. I have also made a preliminary statement in my notes, which I have here, a little amplifying that, which I should like to read if you will allow me.

Lord Kenyon.

Certainly.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,739. Are you going to another topic now?—No, it is upon the same point.

56,740. I was going to ask you a question about the quarries of lime?—Yes.

56,741. Do you know anything about the quarrying now, or how the quarrying since 1857 has been carried on?—No, I do not, well, I know by hearsay, but I have never made any special inquiry into it. I think some inquiry ought to be made but I do not like to say anything that I am not prepared to prove.

56,742. I think on the same survey it says this, does it not: "Also there is within this 'manno' quarreys of lyme w'ch are taken vpp and carried by the Prince his freeholders and the tennautes of Bromfield for the bettering of their groundes without restraint or paying anything for the same"?—That was in the manor of Esclusham.

56,743. That was comprised, I suppose, in this grant of 1857?—No, it would not be comprised in that grant.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

It was in the larger transaction, I think.

Mr. Seebohm.

Tenants of Bromfield.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,744. The transaction of 1857 clearly covers waste lands in the parishes of Ruabon and Wrexham, and in divers parishes in the county of Merioneth?—Oh, yes, I only consulted that part of the statement which referred to my own district which I was interested in. This is my statement with which I ought to have opened really. I should like to say, first of all, that I appear here, not on my own motion, but at the sole request of the Commission itself, and secondly, that I speak wholly as an antiquary and student of the history of the district whereof Wrexham is the centre. My only desire is to help the Commissioners in their inquiries, and to call attention to some facts, not now generally known, which I have met with in the course of my studies, even though I may not be able to give a full history of these facts, or a history up to date. However, I should like to have it understood, as I have already mentioned, that in whatever evidence I give I make no use of private documents.

Lord Kenyon.

56,745. Of course, we clearly understand that?—It is very important for my reputation that that should be understood.

56,746. Yes. Of course; possibly you could not get access to those private documents so easily if it were thought you were making an improper use of them, and I am sure everybody will understand that?—Then as to the next point. I do not know whether it is worth while going into that. It is as to the vast area of the commons in the two lordships of Bromfield and Yale, say 200 years ago, because they have all been enclosed so very long, but in every township almost I find there was formerly a common. I will only go into those that have been enclosed of late, that were open commons within say 50 years. There is one point here which I have made a note of—about the fishery, and I think that is rather an important point to deal with. I am not a fisherman myself. I never fished in my life, but that comes under one of the heads of my statement, and I do not know whether you would allow that to be gone into.

56,747. Certainly; but are you sure you are exact about that statement?—I have it here in the survey of the manor of Abenbury. The manor of Abenbury included the townships of Abenbury, Erbistock, and Eyton in Bromfield. I will hand in the survey. It is of some interest. It says: "They say" (that is the jurors) "there 'belongeth to this manno' ye fishing of the 'whole water of Dee, and Jerrard Eyton, Esq., 'payeth therefore yearlie to the Prince xx'."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,748. Is the Dee navigable at that point or tidal?—No.

Professor Rhys.

It is navigable for coracles. I have seen them afloat.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. A. N. PALMER.

[Continued.]

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I mean navigable in a technical sense, rather.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,749. Is it navigable for fishing?—Yes, and very valuable for that. I have heard many piteous tales from poor men at Bangor Isycoed, and elsewhere, who have made their living by fishing there, as their fathers and ancestors, and predecessors had done before them, and now they are precluded from doing so, and they have to take out a licence for the fishing.

Lord Kenyon.

56,750. I think the Dee is now managed by a board of conservators?—Yes.

56,751. And the fault, if any, lies with the board of conservators, because they have the control of the fishing. The poor fishermen at Bangor, with whom I sympathise very much, suffer because the fishing at the mouth is so excessive by reason of the stake nets at the mouth preventing the fish coming up?—Yes.

56,752. I do not think the fisherman suffer from riparian owner's jealousy. It is from the fisherman at the mouth catching too many fish so that there are not enough to spawn?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,753. This is a Crown manor, is it not?—It is a Crown manor.

56,754. And the Crown has not parted with any of its rights there, has it?—Not as far as I know; but many old fishermen have told me that they used to fish all up the Dee as far as Llangollen, but they are not allowed to do so now.

Lord Kenyon.

56,755. At one time it was very much overstocked with coracle nets, and they had to take out a licence for them?—I do not know all the rights or wrongs of the case.

Lord Kenyon.

There was a case a short time ago in court, and you may have noticed it.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,756. Your point is that contrary to what is the usual state of things in a tidal river, here the lord of the manor had an exclusive right of fishing as against tenants and all?—That is the statement in the survey of 1620.

56,757. Can you suggest what title the riparian owner there has to exclusive fishing?—I do not think he has any title. The Crown has allowed these men to fish there for generations.

56,758. Do you mean the inhabitants of the manor or the public at large?—The inhabitants of the manor—well, really, the people at large who come there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Then I suppose that they could prescribe for it, could they not?

Lord Kenyon.

It is a question that is quite worth looking into, but I think you will find it is because of the board of conservators.

Mr. Seebohm.

And not the lord of the manor?

Lord Kenyon.

Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I hardly think the board of conservators would touch this question, because I presume they have only statutory powers to regulate the fishing; they cannot give a man who has not a right to fish a right to fish. I mean to say, if I were a riparian owner here, and I had the exclusive right of fishing to the middle of the Dee from this point, the conservators could not prevent my exercising my right, nor could they confer a right adverse to mine upon anyone else.

Lord Kenyon.

56,759. But they could regulate the fishing, and that is what they do now. They regulate it?—People are obliged to take out a licence.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,759a. That is another point again—the taking out of a licence. Of course for all salmon fishing under a special Act of Parliament a licence must be taken?—Yes, or any kind of fishing.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Of course for any kind here.

Lord Kenyon.

There were no doubt constant disputes, and it was with a view to settling those disputes that the board of conservators was appointed.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,760. There is one suggestion I must make by way of qualification of what I have stated, and that is that there may be an Act of Parliament with regard to it?—Yes, there may be.

56,761. And of course an Act of Parliament can alter surveys or anything else?—To be sure.

Lord Kenyon.

56,762. What is the date of that survey?—1620. I mentioned it because I have found there is a great deal of feeling amongst many people, and I mention it, although I am not a fisherman myself. I found this entry, and I thought it right to bring it forward.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,763. Do you think there has been a conveyance of the rights as to fishing to the conservators of the Dee from the Crown?—I do not know. As I said before, all my statements are not quite up to date; I live more in the past than in the present, and I know better where John Jones of 100 years ago lived than John Jones of to-day.

Now we come to the third class of commonlands, namely, those which were recognised as commons about 50 years ago. All these statements are based on schedules to the Tithe Commutation Survey. In the tithe map schedule of Bersham, made in

Mr. A. N. PALMER.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

1840, the lands described as "common" still amounted to nearly 20 acres.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,764. Is it described as "Green Common"?—No, as "common," I think, so far as I remember. I am sorry I cannot tell you whether these are all still commons or not. That is Rhos Bers (pointing on the map); this is now enclosed. Here is an area mentioned as "common"—No. 233—containing seven acres, which are now enclosed. I know it is enclosed; I often walk that way. I do not know by whom it was enclosed.

Lord Kenyon.

56,765. You do not know whether it was enclosed under Act of Parliament or not?—No, I do not. There are several others.

56,766. That was in 1840 you say?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,767. Is that a Crown manor?—That is a Crown manor. All the manors are Crown manors in this lordship.

56,768. This is a manor in the Lordship of Bromfield and Yale?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,769. It lies along the river, does it not?—Yes, and I have been told there are several Hafodau un nos along there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,769a. We can find that from documents already before us. We have a list of enclosures in Wales?—Yes, it was not enclosed in 1840.

Lord Kenyon.

See 56,810.

56,770. That is all you have to say about it?—That is all I have to say about it. Then we go back to Minera, the township quarry. I think the Vicar of Minera is here, so that I will leave that.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,771. You simply inquire whether it is still public?—Whether it is still public. Then as to Overton, you will get evidence to-morrow as to that, I think, probably.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,772. Do you mean at Hanmer?—Yes, but I will read the extract if you like.

56,773. Please do so?—"The whole quantity of common land"—this refers to Overton parish—

Mr. Seebohm.

56,774. This is from the survey?—This is from the survey: "The whole quantity of 'common land, subject to tithes within the 'said parish is by estimation 30 acres or thereabouts, being open waste and used by the 'adjoining inhabitants for depasturing cattle 'and sheep; the right in the soil is vested 'in Philip Lloyd Fletcher, Esq., as Lord of the 'Manor."

Lord Kenyon.

56,775. Perhaps we had better have the map while we have the point in our minds. Do you know the district with regard to this?—Yes, I can find it.

56,776. Is it Lightwood Green?—It is Lightwood Green.

56,777. I think this was enclosed something under 20 years ago, was it not?—Yes, something like that. I do not know the circumstances at all under which it was enclosed.

56,778. It was enclosed under the Act, I know, and half of it was sold to me, and the other half to some one else?—There it is (pointing on the Parish of Overton map).

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,779. What is the number?—It is Lightwood Green, No. 1,198.

56,780. The road goes straight through it?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

We passed through this yesterday.

Professor Rhŷs.

It is where we saw some gipsies cooking their supper as we drove along.

Lord Kenyon.

56,781. Yes. The gipsies were on, I suppose, what is left as waste, and the rest of it is all enclosed?—Then with the piece of pasture and waste land in the parish of Gresford, Mr. Parkins has already fully dealt. I do not know that it is worth while going through the next paragraph, that is, as to the enclosure of the lane. I am quite willing to do so.

56,782. Anything you wish to deal with, please go into?—As to Rossett Green, I have spoken at various times to old people who remember it, and from the tithe survey of Gresford Parish, it would appear as though it was only about 1½ acres or a little over. There was an acre and a half claimed by Mr. John Boydell, and 20 perches by Mr. Thomas Snellson, but as a matter of fact there had been encroachments on it at a much earlier date, that is to say, it was much larger at the beginning of this century than it was in 1843 when Mr. Boydell enclosed it, and I know several people who bought their encroachments on Rossett Green of the Crown. Rossett Green was formerly a place where bull baiting and cock fighting and even bear baiting, I have heard, were carried on, and there was a gallows, as Mr. Trevor Parkins has said, and I have been told also that the gallows is still in existence, but not in situ.

56,783. (Mr. Trevor Parkins.) A gibbet, not a gallows. (Witness.) Yes, a gibbet, not a gallows. It was not in situ, but it had been taken to the Golden Lion, if I remember right.

56,784. (Mr. Trevor Parkins.) I have heard of someone having the stump of the gibbet. (Witness.) Yes. It was a very important green at one time, but there were a great many small squatters who first of all filched various parts of it, but so far as I can make out, they all had to purchase their land of the Crown, and there was no question then raised as to thirteen-fourteenths or two-thirds."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,785. That seems to be an ordinary case of squatting, and as against the Crown they had no title, or practically no title, because you may disregard the Nullus Tempus Act for this purpose?—That is so. It seems to me that the Crown has been very hard generally on the small people. There is only one other thing that I wish to say, which may be interesting to Professor Rhys, and that is that there used to be a custom acted upon in this district that a widow was entitled to a moiety of her husband's personal estate, whatever the disposition of her husband's will might be. The last instance of this claim which I have met with that has been made, and apparently acted upon, took place in 1714, and was the case of Dame Dorothy Jeffreys, the widow of Sir Griffith Jeffreys, of Acton, Knight.

56,786. To what origin do you trace that custom?—I cannot trace it at all. It is claimed as the custom of North Wales.

56,787. Not the custom of a manor or lordship, but the custom of North Wales?—Yes, the custom of North Wales.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

There were peculiar dispositions in the old Welsh law books about the rights of a married woman and the rights of a widow. I should think you would probably find it mentioned there.

Mr. Seebohm.

Where they had lived together more than seven years, I think the property was to be divided equally, was it not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,788. Yes, that was on parting—on divorce. It made a good deal of difference in the case of divorce, whether it took place before seven years after marriage or after seven years?—Yes. Another case in which a similar claim was made, and apparently allowed, was during the Commonwealth; I do not exactly remember the date, but it was somewhere about 1653.

Professor Rhys.

56,789. Where did you get the reference to that, do you remember?—Yes, I found it in some deeds that I examined. Of course, that does not bear on tenure.

56,790. Then as to Rossett Green, is that about the place of Yr Orsodd Goch?—Yes. There used to be a chapel there called the Chapel of St. Peter. It was called the Rossett Chapel.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,791. I would ask you simply this question. You have stated, I think, two or three times, that the common field system of arable farming existed in Wales as well as in England. Was there any distinct difference between the Welsh and the English systems?—Yes, I should think so. In the first place, there were no common rights at any time of the year over any of the common fields. There were no rules relating to crops, as to how crops were to be grown. Everyone could cultivate as he pleased, and there were many other differences. A man could sell his portion,—his "purpart," as it is called in the legal documents I find—a man could sell his purpart in the common fields.

56,792. Under recent customs?—Yes, since the time of Henry VIII., at any rate.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,793. That indicates a somewhat later development of the common field system than that to which Mr. Seebohm is referring?—Yes.

56,794. Because if a man could sell he practically gets the sole remaining right which makes up the complex right of property?—Yes. I can go farther back than that, and I should like to show to Mr. Seebohm a whole lot of deeds relating to an estate at Stansty, which I have at home, and also relating to Stansty Isaf Estate, which is now absorbed in Stansty Hall. The first of those really began in the time of Edward II., and it begins with a statement; it gives the names of all the holders of land in the township, liberi et nativi, and it states their dues, a heriot of 7s. 6d. on the death of a holder, amobr on the marriage of a daughter, and the going to war with the prince; those were the three dues to which they were liable.

56,795. Heriot, amobr, and military service?—Heriot, amobr, and military service, but in 1291 or 1289, I am not quite sure now which it was—I think it was 1291—three sons of a liberus—of a freeman—applied to the court at Wrexham, and notified that their father had died since the last session of the court, and they paid in 7s. 6d. as a heriot, whereupon they were granted full possession of their father's rights.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,796. Like an English copyhold?—Yes, but he was a freeman.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,797. Where was this property that you are now referring to?—Stansty Isaf.

56,798. Yes, but where does that come in. Is it in Yale?—No, it is in Bromfield.

Lord Kenyon.

56,799. Is there anything more that you wish to draw our attention to?—No, I think not, my Lord.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,800. The common field system you are describing is one in which the same plot of land was permanently allotted to the persons entitled in the township?—Yes.

56,801. As you say, it was not used for pasture purposes at any time of the year; he did what he liked with it all the year round?—Yes, just as he liked, so far as I can see.

29 August 1894.]

Mr. A. N. PALMER.

Mr. Seeborn.

With regard to that there was often a custom in English manors that a man could enclose strips if he gave up the right of pasture over the rest, and having done that he could sell them. It possibly might be the same thing there.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,802. This looks as though it were a kind of intermediate stage between a man having definitely enclosed in that way and the original common field system?—It must have begun very early in Wales, because I find that they had arrived at the stage of these saleable strips very early.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

I am very doubtful whether it is a common field system in the sense in which Mr. Seeborn uses the term. I am not at all sure that it is.

Mr. Seeborn.

I think I should say that in the survey of Denbighshire, 8th Edward III., it is evident that Henry de Lucey, who was the Lord of the Lordship of Denbigh, was trying to introduce the English open field system into this district, or a district a little further west, and that introducing a system like that he probably would find it very difficult to introduce the custom of the manor, because you cannot create a custom, and therefore it would be at a late stage that he would introduce it into these districts.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

Yes.

The witness withdrew.

MR. TREVOR PARKINS recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

56,807. What is it you wish to state?—With regard to that purchase from the Commissioners I should say it does not exactly correspond with the unenclosed lands, but you will see it on the map (pointing out on map).

56,808. Is this another map?—It is the same map that I referred to before, but that shows

The witness withdrew.

The Rev. T. H. EVANS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

56,810. You live at Minera Vicarage?—Yes.

56,811. Have you your map which shows what Mr. Palmer referred to?—Yes (the witness produced a map). It shows where the common land was which was enclosed in 1808.

56,812. Do you wish to give any evidence with regard to this map, or do you put it in?—My evidence is from hearsay very much, and I produce the map on request.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,813. Is the quarry, public still?—I think not. There are four or five small quarries which have been used by the parishioners in this township, as I understand. Four are pointed out at present, but they have been taken possession of, and rents have been paid for some of them.

Lord Kenyon.

I have the following questions to ask you which are handed in by Mr. Owen Wynne, "I think you said that the price at which the late Sir Watkin purchased the Crown rights was much less than the estimated value." I think that question refers to what you say here—one-fourteenth part of the estimated value. Mr. Owen Wynne goes on to say: "How do you make this out."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

That is all a mistake. What Mr. Palmer said was that the amount was assessed at the fourteenth part of the estimated value, but that was all the Crown had a right to claim.

Lord Kenyon.

56,803. But I will finish the question. He asks: "How do you make this out, and do you know that Sir Watkin purchased on the valuation of the Woods and Forests?" Clearly he did?—Yes, I stated that.

56,804. "Do you also know that, although the acreage was large, it was all barren moorland"?—Yes, that has all been stated in evidence.

56,805. Exactly. "Do you know that on these wastes being conveyed to the late Sir Watkin there were no squatters' cottages at all?"—No, I do not know of my own knowledge, as I have said. I have been told there were some, but I do not know of my own knowledge.

56,806. That would probably run up to the waste?—Yes.

that there is a small piece there which appears to be taken in.

56,809. That would account for the discrepancy in the area?—That would account for the discrepancy.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

56,814. Have rents been paid for the quarry or by parishioners for taking the stone—which do you mean?—Rents have been charged for the permission to quarry the stones.

56,815. To whom have the rents been paid?—The lessor from the neighbourhood. A man of the name of Evan Roberts held a lease from 1875 down to about 1883 or 1884, and he has quarried a considerable amount of stone, and I believe sold it away from the township, paying a dead rent of 5*l.* a year.

56,816. Have not the overseers exacted this fine of 20*s.* per ton weight for every ton taken?—No, I do not think they have ever taken the fine.

56,817. Is one of your overseers here?—No, I am afraid not.

Rev. T. H. EVANS.

Lord Kenyon.

56,818. Here is No. 89a, and I see that is marked as township quarry. Is that what you are referring to?—Yes.

56,819. That is quarried now, is it?—Yes.

56,820. What is the area of that—is it 12 acres?—No.

56,821. Nothing like that?—No. There are four or five in different parts of the township. Four are distinctly traced now, and it is the generally prevailing opinion in the neighbourhood among the old people that there were five, but four are shown now as belonging formerly to the township.

56,822. Do they amount to 12 acres?—No. I should think three or four altogether. A portion of the 12 acres was sold to defray the expenses of the Commissioners who came there to allot the 480 acres.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,823. That is another part. In the Act of Parliament that was shown to us there was ample provision for the expenses of the Commissioners over and above the allotment for the materials?—I have an epitome of the Act here. It says, “Be it further enacted that the award to be made by the said Commissioners when enroled in manner directed by the said recited Act shall be deposited in a tin box, and shall be kept in the Parish Church of Wrexham aforesaid.” But the award is not to be found there at present. The clause that refers to that is this, “The said Commissioner was requested to set out and allot such parts not exceeding 12 acres in places judged most convenient to be used by the respective proprietors entitled to any allotment for the purpose of getting stone, sand, &c., for the improvement of their property, and for the repair of highways, private roads, and paths. Also to set out springs and pools, and other watering places for cattle, and for the use of all owners and occupiers in the township. A portion of the waste land to be sold by public auction towards defraying the expenses of this Act and its execution.”

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. ALFRED NEOBARD PALMER recalled and further examined.

Lord Kenyon.

56,824. You wish to add something, I understand, to the evidence which you have already given?—There is one thing I omitted in my evidence. I thought it might be interesting to refer to a portion of the evidence given before the Commissioners on May the 10th, 1894, by Mr. Stephen W. Williams.

56,825. I had better read Mr. Williams' evidence first. Then we shall understand what you have to say. Question 52,448 is the one, I think; it reads: (Q.) “You have touched on Strata Florida, and I know you know the whole history. Do you know anything interesting with regard to land tenure, or anything else in Strata Florida?—(A.) I am afraid I am going to contradict a very able man, and that is the right hon. member for the county of Merioneth. I think in his evidence before your Commission he makes out that there is such a thing in Wales as public land, that is to say, land that is no man's land. So far as my investigations go, and I can go back to the 12th century, I find that Rees Ap Gruffydd, who was then Prince of South Wales, gave all the land, and all the territory which he gave to the Abbey of Strata Florida, in fee. He not only gave it in fee, but he gave it with every possible right and privilege that could be attached to an estate in fee. He gave the moor, the woods and the fishery, and the river, the lakes, and everything else to the monks in fee. These are the words of the gift over: ‘Moreover, whatsoever is contained within the afore-described bounds all round, in plain and in wood, in waters and in meadows, and in pastures, in cultivated and uncultivated ground, I, Rhys, and afore-named sons, and

“my whole posterity, do give in fee, by perpetual right, to the monks of Strat Flur and their successors.’ From those monks it descended to the crown in the reign of Henry VIII. The Crown held it up to the time of Elizabeth, when Elizabeth sold it to the freeholder. The Crown gave the same title that Rees Ap Gruffydd had given in the first instance. I fail to see over that enormous tract which extended all the way from here to the sea on the one side, from a long way up in Montgomeryshire in the north to Carmarthenshire in the south, a single trace of anything like public or common land, or land which was no man's land.” That is what you refer to?—Yes. Also there is something else referring to those sentences which you have read. I cannot but think that that gentleman misunderstands the force of the charter of Rhys ap Gruffydd to the Monks of Strata Florida. Of course, as he says, there was no land which could be called “no man's land.” But there were commons over which not merely the lord, but the inhabitants of the districts had their several rights. Surely Mr. Williams does not mean to imply that Rhys ap Gruffydd gave to the monks in absolute and unrestricted possession the estates held by the uchelwyr or freemen within the district specified, or even those held by the taeogion, or servile tenants. The tir y bwrdd, boardland, or demesne, was doubtless conferred in absolute possession, but this could have formed but a small proportion of the land passed by the charter. With this exception, all that could be given were the various dues and customs of old rendered by the various holders of land, in other words the lord's rights over them. But the estates of those holders of land were not confiscated. Free and unfree held as before, but paid their several dues to the monks instead of to Rhys ap Gruffydd. I may say there is an example close to Wrexham in which the township of Stansty was given by the lord to the monks of Valle Crucis, and the same thing happened there. The dues are mentioned. The dues which were formerly paid to the lord were afterwards paid to the monks. That is just the same case.

56,826. It only conveys certain rights, not the whole thing?—Quite so. Mr. Williams appears to disbelieve in the existence of freemen in the country now called Radnorshire. But if there were no freemen or free families in that country, and if these did not there, as elsewhere in Wales, develop into freeholders, we have to deal with a phenomenon quite unique. Commons must have been appurtenant to the holdings, and absolutely necessary to the holders of land if they were to maintain the flocks in which their wealth chiefly consisted. Mr. Williams' evidence, so far as this point goes, is wholly misleading, and shows that he lacks understanding of the conditions of Welsh mediæval life, or of the sense in which a mediæval charter should be taken.

Professor Rhys.

56,827. Does that invalidate his objection to Mr. Ellis' statement?—Not entirely.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,828. You would say it was simply the same thing as the transfer of an English manor?—Yes.

56,829. The ownership passed from one to the other without any interference with the subordinate rights?—Yes.

56,830. I think that is perfectly right?—Yes, Mr. Stephen Williams implies that the whole land was confiscated; that is the grammatical construction of what he says.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. OWEN SLANEY WYNNE called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

56,834. You wish to make some statement with reference to the evidence of the last witness?—Yes, with reference to the purchase by the late Sir Watkin of the Crown rights in this neighbourhood and elsewhere. Mr. Palmer has just mentioned that they were bought at a very low figure. Although the price seems low they were purchased by the late Sir Watkin at the Crown's own valuation. It is 40 years ago now nearly since they were purchased. Of course a great many of those lands were not what they are now; they were nothing but barren moor lands with a few grouse on them. A further thing I ought to mention is this. There had been between the late Sir Watkin and the Crown for many years disputes as to some of the tracts of land, especially in this particular district. There were disputes in the parish as to the manor of Prysor of Trawsfynydd. There were disputes on the hills here as well, and I think that the Crown were rather influenced in

Professor Rhys.

56,831. Mr. Ellis had put it a little too extreme in the other direction?—Undoubtedly. He said there were some lands called "no man's land." I do not agree with that. There is one other thing I should like to say. This morning I quoted a great many extracts from various surveys which have been copied at the Record Office and elsewhere; in fact, most of my information has been obtained from documents of that sort. I take this opportunity of strongly recommending that all the surveys of the Crown manors and lordships existing in the Record Office and elsewhere should be published at the expense of the Commissioners of Woods and Forests. I think it would pay them to do so after the example we had this morning, when I showed from one of those surveys that the Crown was entitled in its lordship to one-third of waste land enclosed.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

56,832. They appear to have lost 12,000% in the Watkin-Wynn transaction in 1857, owing to not knowing their rights?—Yes. Besides, as I have examined many of these surveys, I can say they are full of materials for history. Only they should be copied by persons who have at least so much knowledge of Welsh as to be able to read and understand it, for those copies that I have seen are deformed by the most extraordinary mis-spellings, so that many of the places named are quite unrecognizable.

56,833. This is the passage in Mr. Ellis' evidence. It is page 802. "In the ancient laws of Wales, the common pastures and hill grazings were jealously guarded by the courts of the Cantrev and Cwmwd, because, so runs the law, 'every wild and waste belongs to the country and kindred (gwlad a chenedl), and 'no one has a right to exclusive possession of 'much or little land of that kind.'" their valuation on that account. There are no squatters at all on the wastes now. There may have been one or two in those days, but I do not know of a single squatter's cottage on them now. The heather is regularly cut on the hills by the commoners who have rights to cut it, and they are grazed by the sheep, and it is only by preservation since the day they were bought that the grouse have so increased. The Crown under all of them reserved their rights to the minerals. Although the price may seem to have been very low, when you take all these matters into consideration, particularly these disputes which had existed for a long time as to the boundaries, and even as to the ownership of some of them, there is not much in it.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,846. Do you live on the Craig y Corn Estate, Bwlchgwyn, near Wrexham?—Yes.

56,847. Are you a freeholder?—Yes.

56,848. Will you proceed with your statement?—“The Craig y Corn Estate is a freehold estate, and has been in the possession of one of our family for many generations. During the last 100 years no less than three Chancery suits took place in respect of it, the costs involved in which swallowed up the worth of it many times over. The first was in 1797, the second in 1838, and the third lasted from 1878 till 1890. In 1877 the mortgagee (Mr. William Pierce, Wrexham) and the executor (Mr. George Gibbons, executor of my father) seized and sold the whole of the personal and real property. The District Court of Probate did not give the estate to the executor to control. It seems that the High Court took it on their hands. Part of the proceeds of the personal estate was kept in the hands of the executor, out of which he remunerated himself, and part of the proceeds of the real estate was in the hands of the mortgagee's solicitor, and he did not forget himself for handling it. His bill of costs amounted to 160*l.* 19*s.* 3*d.*, and he allowed interest on part of it at 2½ per cent. for 13 years. My own solicitor refused or was not willing to help me to find the sum of 600*l.* to complete a purchase of 1,000*l.*, but he had a cousin, a solicitor of this town, and he desired me to go and see him. I did so, and he managed to get it for himself, and I had to pay to these two cousins for the deeds and finding 600*l.* mortgage the sum of 52*l.* odd. He not only did not act for my benefit, but the reverse; he was acting for another client directly against me. He managed to obtain an Order from the King's Bench to attach a debt and also to get no more than 10 per cent. for looking after mother's estate and my interest under the will. I paid this debt long ago.”

56,849. We cannot go into a private quarrel between you and your solicitor?—It is only a portion of my statement. Perhaps you have not read it.

56,850. We cannot really go into a quarrel with you and your solicitor. That has nothing to do with our inquiry?—I will skip over that part of it. “In 1842 a certain indenture was prepared and executed, and the estate was mortgaged from time to time up to 800*l.*

before the Commission at Mold. I believe there are some other persons who wish to speak about it here.

56,845. How is it that these documents are in your possession?—Because I happen to be agent for one of the land owners in that district, Mr. Jones, of Plasgwyn, whose ancestors were allottees under this Award.

Close to the old stent a certain strait of common was included in the said indenture. In 1848 the late Mr. Henry Davies, our neighbour, purchased this piece of common land from the Woods and Forests. The two parties claiming were there in opposition, in bad feeling and bitterness, and several quarrels and rows resulted. One party fenced and the other pulled down again. The very solicitor who prepared the indenture in 1842 backed our father in these troubles that sold it in 1877. We encroached on the common and cultivated it and made it worth about 800*l.* The deeds of the Woods and Forests after the death of the late Mr. Henry Davies were somehow in the possession of Mr. Roper, solicitor, of Mold, and were mortgaged to Mr. William Connor, of Manchester. The three named parties never had possession of this land. All the common land at this time was held by the freeholders; the poor were not allowed to make use of it. In 1861 all the common was sold in Brymbo parish to those parties who fenced their lots of their own choice. My father had three lots fenced, which he bought and had the deeds from the Woods and Forests. In 1890 Mr. William Osbert Edwards, solicitor, of Ruthin, wrote letters to several of our neighbours and also to me; at least, he came over and went from house to house hawking two of the lots not paid for in 1877. In this strange way of doing business he got hold of one very illiterate man of the name of Jonathan Roberts, and induced him to buy the lot 9 on the map, and got the money, 102*l.* In 1877 it was sold for 147*l.* From 1877 no person took care of this lot. At this time the house was not fit to live in, and I sent materials, bricks, tiles, and slates, to the value of 7*l.*, to put the house in a habitable state; but it was sold separately and privately unknown to me. After I heard that it was sold I sent a man with a horse and cart to fetch back the materials, but the man had to return without the materials, as Jonathan Roberts told him he had made use of them himself. These materials were my own personal property. Mr. William Osbert Edwards, an undischarged bankrupt, was a solicitor and Clerk of the Peace at Corwen, sued me and my brother at the Wrexham County Court, and got judgment for 30*l.* and an injunction against interfering with this lot. At one time I gave him 6*l.* to remit to my sister, who was in poverty; he refused to give me her address; he kept the 6*l.* and converted it to his own use. Lot No. 6 on the map I purchased from him, and paid 20*l.* deposit. I refused to pay more, as no person was appointed to execute a deed to me, only to take my money away, and I considered it not fair to give him any more 'blood money' to polish this perfect model of modern 'Aceldama.' The surface only was sold by the Woods and Forests. All mines, minerals, and quarries were reserved to the Crown. About a year ago I applied for a licence to quarry road stones, which could be found under the surface, offering to pay royalty. Mr. Sowray refused to grant me one. Formerly no royalty was paid for road stones. Now no person is allowed to have the benefit of these stones, though any amount of them may be had. Years ago I sold about 40 loads to Mr. Strychan, the road surveyor, at 2*s.* 9*d.* per ton. R. V. Kyrke, Esq., sent a man and paid me 2*s.* per ton, while he himself was getting from the ratepayers 6*s.* 6*d.* per ton. Nearly two years ago a new company commenced breaking stones on this estate. R. V. Kyrke, Esq., the Duke of Westminster's undertaker, contracted for all their hand-broken stones. He took a small quantity away, broke his contract, and directly blocked them while they were able to sell them to another dealer. In the Vestry minute book in the township of Minera in 1808 a freestone quarry is allowed to the poor of the township to build cottages for themselves—it is an allotment. Twenty years ago the Duke of Westminster, or Mr. Dennis, of Hafod-y-Bwlch, took possession of this quarry and rented it to the late Mr. Josiah Roberts, and got about 80*l.* from him. Now every quarry and every stone is or is about to be monopolised. Thirty years ago a lease was granted by the Duke of Westminster to a certain Limited Lead Mining Company. This company pulled the fences down, destroyed the surface of the land, committed great trespasses, and did a vast amount of damages in a reckless way without making or offering any terms or paying any compensation whatever to the owners of the surface. With many others we were victims, and suffered the above grievous damages. This company secured themselves against loss by getting the assistance of the Duke's solicitors. We had no remedy. The history of this estate is already long, painful, and lamentable, and should I go thoroughly into the whole of its details without blackwashing or whitewashing any party, but stating the plain facts, it would fill a big volume. It has been before two Lord Chancellors, and an army of judges, barristers, and lawyers have had their fingers in it. If a collection were made of all summonses, writs, documents, letters, and writings of all descriptions and characters in respect of this estate there would be about a cart load."

Professor Rhys.

56,851. The moral is, do not have anything to do with lawyers, is it not?—Probably.

56,852. You say you did encroach upon the common?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,853. I certainly do not understand your statement sufficiently to ask any questions upon it?—A part was encroached, but there were three plots paid for to the Woods and Forests.

Lord Kenyon.

56,854. Why did you send that load of material to another man's house?—Because it was part of the estate and belonged to my parents, and the executor appointed under the will and he refused to act.

56,855. Had not the Court of Chancery decided against you?—The whole estate was sold and the whole money and all the deeds—even the Woods and Forests deeds by which it was granted to my father—the Court of Chancery taken away. The Court of Chancery took away everything.

56,856. Exactly, because it was decided against you?—Yes.

56,857. This is a question by Mr. J. Owen Hughes. "You say either you or your father "made the alleged common, worth 800*l.* Would "you state what capital you or your father "expended?"—It is very hard to say distinctly how much capital, but we spent a deal of labour and time, and I consider time and labour worth capital.

Professor Rhys.

56,858. What do you mean by the word "stent"?—It is the name of landed property different to the common land.

56,859. All land which is not common land you call stent?—Yes.

56,860. In Welsh or English?—Well, it is mongrel, but it is very often used.

56,861. It is very often used here for any land which is not common land, I suppose?—Yes.

56,862. It means "estate"?—Really I do not know. It means cultivated land different to the common land—mountain land.

56,865. He is the agent to Sir Watkin Wynn?—Yes.

56,866. What is the size of your holding?—120 acres.

56,867. What is the rent?—The rent at present is 210*l.*, without tithes of course.

56,868. You wish to give evidence with regard to your own farm?—Yes, I wish to give evidence respecting my own farm. I do not think there is any unenclosed land in the district which could be cultivated with profit. There are no sheep walks in the district. I think things are managed best on large estates and on estates on which the landlord resides, if he is a practical man and understands farming. Politics, religion, and language do not make any difference between the landlord and myself. The usual time for entering on a farm is the 2nd of February. That of course applies to the land; and the house and buildings would be the 1st of May. Agreements are more common than leases. I do not know of any cases where leases have been refused to tenants who asked for them. In fact I never knew tenants to ask for leases.

56,869. As to yourself, would you rather have one or not?—I would rather not. Under good landlords I think tenants are as safe under agreements as leases. I do not object to any part of my agreement. Good tenants are allowed to do pretty well as they like. I have got a copy of my agreement.

56,870. Have you got it?—Yes.

56,871. Can you let us see it?—Yes. (Handed.) I read my agreement over and understood it before I signed it. I think a farmer would be very silly to take a farm before he understood the agreement. The rent is fixed at a lump sum. The rent of small holders is generally larger than that of large farmers. In my case there are no services other than payment of rent. I do not think my landlord would let to the highest bidder, or any of the old landlords; but I know that people who make money in business and buy land expect it to pay as large a rate of interest as the business they made their money in, and therefore they invariably want nearly double what the land is worth. My rent was reduced 47*l.* a year in 1881, and three-quarters of a year's rent was allowed me at the same time. I think that within the last 25 years local rates are about the same. So far we have escaped a board school, which no doubt would have increased the rates considerably. There has not been any consolidation worth mentioning. As to difference between large and small farmers, there are good and bad in both classes. I think that large farmers, as a rule, are the best to provide for their families. I think that large farmers can stand out longest against depressed prices. As to sub-letting, I think there are a few farmers who let a few acres, but I do not think they make any profit by doing so. In most cases rent is not paid on the day that it is due; I might say in nearly all cases. I never knew farmers to borrow money to pay their rents. Labourers are not scarce, except at harvest-time. I may say in the winter time, the last few winters, the labourers have been offering their services at almost any price. I consider the land is well farmed in my neighbourhood. There is no waste land in my neighbourhood capable of being reclaimed profitably. Arable land has been laid down in pasture because of the low price of corn. Root crops have increased, because more cattle are kept, and more potatoes are grown for sale. Fallowing has fallen into disuse because of the low price of wheat. The land that used to be made in fallows is now put down to pasture. Landlords have generally found the drain-pipes, and the tenants have done the labour; but owing to the bad times I think it would be difficult to get the tenants to do that now. Landlords also erect buildings for stock, and keep dwelling houses in repair, repair river embankments, and keep gates and posts in order, and in some cases put in new fences. Tenants lay down the land to permanent pasture, and carry out improvements which are usually made by tenants, but which are too numerous to mention.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,872. Do you mean improvements are generally made by the tenants and not by the landlord?—Well, improvements in the cleaning and tillage of land. In addition to the above the tenants do the cartage. No compensation for tenants' improvements, except under the Agricultural Holdings Act. I am aware of the Agricultural Holdings Act. I do not think that agreements contain clauses contracting out of the custom of the country. My agreement explains the custom of the country as to growing crops, tillage cultivation, manure, and produce left by an outgoing tenant.

Lord Kenyon.

56,873. You might state what the custom is with regard to wheat?—If it is a fallow the outgoing tenant claims two-thirds of the crop. With wheat after a green crop, or any other crop, he takes half the crop.

56,874. Then with regard to the unconsumed manure?—All left on the farm. I do not think there is any trouble worth mentioning concerning the game. There are a few freeholders in the district, and very often they are worse off than tenant farmers. I know of farmers without sons who have managed to pay their way. I know of farmers who have set their sons up in business. With regard to a land court, I should think we should be better without it. We should not get from our landlords more than they were forced to do for us. I believe that one-sided free trade has been the cause of the present low prices.

56,875. As to labourers, the wages remain about the same?—Much about the same, but they do not do as much work as they did 20 years ago.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,876. What is the amount of the wages?—From 15*s.* up to 18*s.*

29 August 1894.]

Mr. E. WOOLRICK.

Lord Kenyon.

56,877. As much as that?—For the best class of men. There are many men in our district live in the house, and get from 5s. up to 8s. and 9s. a week.

56,878. In the harvest time they do a lot of piece-work?—Yes.

56,879. Getting the potatoes and that sort of thing?—Yes.

56,880. What is the price paid?—6d. to 6½d. per rod; that is, 64 square yards.

56,881. How much do the men earn?—Some get through eight rods, and another man will not get through five. There is a great deal of difference. Some men would not make 2s. 6d. a day.

56,882. You get lots of Irishmen come to do that?—There are a few, but I seldom employ them myself.

56,883. I see there is a clause in your agreement that you are to put manure in the place of hay and straw, and so on, that you may sell?—Yes.

56,884. I suppose you exercise that clause when you want to?—Yes.

56,885. It seems a very reasonable one. Do you make use of much artificial manure?—Yes.

56,886. What have you used?—Basic slag is what I used last year.

56,887. Did you find that answer last year?—Yes; I think the result surprised me.

56,888. You have not tried it more than one year?—Not more than one year.

56,889. You did not say how much of your farm was arable and how much grass?—I have put down most of it to grass the last two years.

56,890. You make cheese then, probably?—I sell milk.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS MORRIS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

56,903. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

56,904. I see you live at Higher Farm, Erbistock?—Yes.

56,905. You are a tenant of Sir Watkin Wynn's?—Yes.

56,906. What is the size of your holding?—144 acres.

56,907. Have you any objection to state the rent?—No.

56,908. What is the rent?—145l.

56,909. You wish to give evidence with regard to your own farm?—Yes. I am quite satisfied with the farm. My father lived under Sir Watkin 46 years, and I have been there 15 years.

56,910. Your father was in the same farm?—Yes.

56,911. Where is that?—Near Erbistock.

56,912. Have you any statement you wish to make?—No.

56,913. Are you satisfied with the rent?—Yes.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,891. Where is your district?—Rossett, a little north of Wrexham.

56,892. You mentioned peasant holders?—Yes.

56,893. Do you think that in the assessment of the rates they are fairly dealt with? We have had it mentioned two or three times that they are assessed as a rule more highly than the tenant farmers. Have you any experience on that point?—I do not exactly understand it.

56,894. Are you a member of the board of guardians?—Yes.

56,895. Are you on the assessment committee?—No, I am not on the assessment committee.

56,896. Do you know how the assessment committee arrive at the value on which they are rated?—I have a remote idea.

56,897. How would you state it?—The rent would be something to go by to begin with.

56,898. Then suppose a peasant proprietor has no rent?—Then it would be open to put whatever they thought proper, I suppose—to judge by what they knew of the place.

56,899. You think in your district they are fairly assessed?—Yes, I think so.

Lord Kenyon.

56,900. Mr. Owen Wynne asks you this question:—"Then you say you think protection " in some form would benefit the farmers?"—Either have protection or remove the rates off the land. Let us have free trade as well as foreigners.

56,901. You said the rates in your district were much the same for the last 20 years?—Yes.

56,902. What are they now?—I think they are 2s. 8d. in the pound for the whole year.

56,914. Is it the same rent that your father paid?—Yes. I have changed farms; it is, not exactly the same place.

56,915. I suppose you came to that by private agreement with Sir Watkin's agent?—Yes.

56,916. What do you think about leases? Would you like to have a lease?—No, I am quite satisfied with an agreement.

56,917. Have you any objection to let us see it?—No. (Handed.)

56,918. Are there any clauses in this agreement that you think at all harsh?—No.

56,919. Does it bind you not to sell off your hay, or anything of that sort?—They are not very particular if you bring something back again in the place of it.

56,920. I suppose you would agree that a landlord ought to have some sort of clause to protect him against a bad tenant?—Yes, some of them would run away with everything if it were not so.

Mr. T. MORRIS.

56,921. Have you any trouble with game?—No.

56,922. Does your farm run up to the covers?—It is just on the outside, where they do not preserve—the woods are cut down.

56,923. I see there is a scale of compensation given. Do you think that is a fair scale?—Yes.

56,924. You know this agreement well, do you not?—Yes.

56,925. Have you had any buildings put up for you?—Not since I went to the Higher Farm.

56,926. You have not done any haulage?—Yes, I did a great deal at the other place. I did all the haulage for that.

56,927. You did all the haulage for it?—Well, the greater portion. Some of Sir Watkin's teams did some too.

56,928. Do you think you ought to have compensation for that?—Well, I ought to have a little, I think; Mr. Wynne knows I did a good deal at the place.

56,929. Did you ask for any compensation?—No.

56,930. Then you could not expect to get it if you did not ask for it?—No, I thought perhaps Sir Watkin might pension me off at the last, when I could not work any longer.

56,931. How about the children? Do they work on the farms much in this neighbourhood?—Yes. My children are not very old yet.

56,932. How are your neighbours off for labour?—Well, it is better than it was three years ago. It was very bad three years ago. Some of the best young men went to the brick-yards, where there were more wages given.

56,933. What do you think about a land court?—We can do without one, I think.

56,934. Have the rates increased at Erbistock?—Yes, they have gone from about 7*d.* to 1*s.*

56,935. You are in Denbighshire?—Yes.

56,936. You pay rates for Denbighshire?—Yes. We have no school board. We do all the bye-roads in turn ourselves.

56,937. I suppose you will have a parish council at Erbistock?—Well, I do not know, indeed—we should not be any better off for it.

56,938. Well, I do not know. It depends upon yourselves?—I do not think we should be.

Professor Rhys

56,939. You have no school board?—No.

56,940. Have you a school?—Yes.

56,941. How do you support it?—It comes from Government, I suppose. I do not know how it is managed.

56,942. Have you no subscriptions to pay?—We give a little. Some comes from Wynnstay, and, of course, I give 1*l.* sometimes.

56,943. What have you mostly to assist you? I think you said your children were young. Do you have servants or labourers?—Labourers, and we keep two in the house.

56,944. Where do they sleep, for instance?—In the house; we have a good house.

56,945. Is that the custom all about there? Do the servants generally live in the house?—Yes.

56,946. Not in the outhouses?—No, not outside.

56,947. Have you any labourers' cottages about?—There are very few about now.

56,948. But enough for the district?—Well at Mr. Manley's there are a few.

56,949. There is no lack of houses for the labourers required on the farm, I suppose. Are you short of houses?—No, not that I am aware of, but being so close to the brickyard they will not sometimes work for the farmer in the winter time.

56,950. Do you employ Irish labourers in the harvest time much?—No, I would not have an Irishman.

56,951. Why not?—They are too witty for me. I would not like to have them in the house.

56,952. The wittiness would help you to bear up against the disastrous state of the weather sometimes, would it not—it is supposed to do so in Ireland?—I would not have one.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,953. Have you many instances of labourers becoming tenant farmers—earning good wages, as they do?—One, and that was Mr. Clark, of the Field Farm, next the wood there. He started as a labourer.

Lord Kenyon.

56,954. He has worked his way up?—Yes, but, of course, he has been keeping a public-house between times.

Mr. Seebohm.

56,955. You are quite satisfied with your landlord?—Yes, quite satisfied.

56,956. There may be bad landlords?—Yes, but he is a very good landlord.

56,957. It is a general custom that the haulage is done by the tenant?—Yes.

56,958. Supposing a new building is to be put up the tenant would do the haulage?—Yes, it says so in the agreement.

56,959. On this estate, if you die a couple of years after you have done a large amount of haulage, they would make some compensation?—Yes, they might indeed.

56,960. It would be left entirely to the agent?—Yes.

56,961. Do you think a tenant ought to be protected on that point?—If they did a great deal, as I did where I left, I think they ought, but for a fortnight's haulage or anything like that, they would not expect it.

56,962. Where a material amount of haulage has been done, do you think that the Agricul-

56,963. You would recommend that there should be a clause in the Agricultural Holdings Act protecting the tenant?—Yes, a little ought to be allowed; it would be some encouragement to improve places.

Lord Kenyon.

56,964. Do the hounds ever cross you?—Very seldom. I would not care if they did come there now.

56,965. You would not mind if they did?—No, there are too many foxes about.

56,966. The damage the hounds do you is not great?—No, they do not do but very little damage—the foxes do worse than anything else now—killing the turkeys.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN GRIFFITHS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

56,973. You live at Moreton Below, Ruabon, and you are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

56,974. Are you a tenant of Sir Watkin?—Yes.

56,975. What is the size of your farm?—98 acres.

56,976. And what is the rent?—104*l.* 5*s.*

56,977. Is there much tithe to pay in your part?—Moderate.

56,978. Is that included in this or not?—No, we have paid it with the rent the last 12 months.

56,979. What does the tithe amount to?—About 7*l.*; that is in addition to the 104*l.*

56,980. You wish to give evidence with regard to your own farm, do you not?—Yes, I wish to give evidence about my own farm, which my family have held for 135 years. I do not think there is any unenclosed land in the district which could be cultivated with profit. There are no sheep walks. Politics, religion, or language make no difference between me and my landlord. The usual time for entering on a farm is February 2nd. Agreements are the most common. I know of no cases in which tenants have asked for leases and been refused. I think tenants are as safe under agreements as under leases.

56,981. Have you an agreement?—Yes, but I have not signed it, owing to my father's death two years ago.

56,982. You do not object to it?—I do not object to it; not in the least. Tenants can obtain a copy of their agreements. Agreements are explained to tenants. I do not think any tenant is likely to take a farm without understanding his agreement. Rent is fixed at a 56,967. This is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Are you not aware that Samuel Lewis, of Park Eyton, had 100*l.* compensation "for cartage when he left his farm?"—I am not aware of that.

Professor Rhys.

56,968. You alluded to foxes. Have you ever sent in a request for compensation in respect of foxes?—Not the last 25 years. We have sent in one last month.

Lord Kenyon.

56,969. You knew there was a fund?—I was told there was not a fund.

56,970. Why, it is 500*l.* or more?—We sent a request in last month.

56,971. When you found there was a fund you sent in a claim?—Well, we did not know it; but we have lost a lot lately, and we have sent a claim for it.

56,972. When did you send in your claim?—About a month ago.

lump sum. There are no services other than the payment of rent rendered in respect of the farm. The holding is not let to the highest bidder. The rent has not been raised nor reduced since I was 10 years of age, to my knowledge. Abatements have been received from the rent: 10 per cent. from Lady Day 1885, to Lady Day 1889; 5 per cent. for year ending Lady Day 1890; and 15 per cent. for the two years ending last Lady Day.

56,983. What is the amount of wages with you?—15*s.* per week.

56,984. You are close to the brick works, too?—Yes. Rent is not paid on the day it is due; the time is postponed. Labourers are not scarce. There is no waste land in the district capable of profitable reclamation. In the last 50 years arable land has been laid down in pasture; it has not paid to grow other produce. Root crops have increased because more stock is fed. Fallowing has fallen into disuse because the price of grain is so low. Draining, buildings for stock, gates, and posts, and nails for fencing, by the landlord, all other improvements are made by the tenant. Compensation is obtainable in the case of improvements partly or wholly effected by the tenant. The agreements on the Wynnstay Estate correspond with the custom of the country. There is no real trouble about game preserving in my district. There are no freeholders in the district that I know of. I know of farmers who have set up their sons in business and on other farms. I do not think a land court is wanted. I believe prices are low at present because so much produce comes from abroad.

56,985. You are pretty handy to the collieries and the brick works?—Yes.

56,986. Where do you lodge the labourers?—In the house; there are no cottages on the farm.

56,987. Do you find that they want to run off to the brick works?—They have not been so much of late; the last 12 months.

56,988. You can keep them pretty well?—Yes.

56,989. I suppose they can earn much more money at the brick works than you pay them?—Yes.

Professor Rhys.

56,990. I do not know what your politics or religion may be, but supposing you are of the same politics and religion as the landlord, you would not expect to have any practical proof of what might happen if there was a difference?—Well, I never have experienced it.

56,991. You have no experience on the point?—No, I am a beginner.

56,992. Your family have always gone on smoothly there?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

56,993. Are you a Churchman?—Yes.

Professor Rhys.

56,994. I did not want to ask you that, but the Chairman has done so. And most of your neighbours get on smoothly in the same way with their landlords?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. SAMUEL THOMAS called and examined.

Lord Kenyon.

57,004. Where do you live?—I live at Nostyllen now.

57,005. That is close by here?—Yes.

57,006. You wish to give evidence with regard to Bwlch Gwyn Common?—Yes.

57,007. Where is Bwlch Gwyn Common. Is it in Flintshire?—Three miles from here.

57,008. That is where the stone comes from?—Yes.

57,009. Have you a statement?—Yes, but it is in Welsh.

(The witness read his statement in the Welsh language, which was interpreted.)

57,009A. Please proceed?—

An account of the common land of Bwlch Gwyn, in the township of Brymbo, from the time of the passing of the Enclosure Act until the completion of the enclosure of the common.

The common land was held and claimed as their own by landowners. They used to come up once or twice a year to take into the pitfold any cattle that were grazing on the common.

Professor Rhys.

57,010. I suppose it is the "pit fold," as we have heard it called here to-day. Is it the "pit

56,995. You say there is no trouble worth speaking of with regard to game. What is there?—There is nothing on the farm now.

56,996. There is no game on the farm?—No.

Mr. Seeborn.

56,997. Do you think the farmers in your neighbourhood are becoming more and more independent as years go on?—There are a few.

56,998. I mean in connexion with such subjects as have been mentioned?—No.

56,999. I mean this: are they less frightened than they were? We have been told that they are frightened, and that they dare not come and give evidence.—I have never heard of it.

Lord Kenyon.

57,000. Do you think the farmers in this part of the world would like it to be thought that they were frightened to come?—No, they would not.

57,001. From what I know of the bulk of them I do not think they would like to be thought frightened. Do you think in your neighbourhood they are afraid of their landlords?—No.

57,002. They are too independent, are they not?—It is the kind way in which they are treated.

57,003. And they are men with a certain amount of intelligence too—they are not what Dr. Pan Jones has just said in the other court, slaves. Do you think they are slaves?—No, I do not.

fall" or the "pit fold"?—"Correll" in Spanish. "Gwarchae" we call it in this part of the country. "Corlen" is the scriptural word, with which compare the Spanish word "correll." The landowners would take a cow, a horse, a sheep, or a donkey if they found it on the common into the pound, and a certain fine would have to be paid to the landowners, and 1s. to the pound keeper before the animal would be let free. In 1818 David Price enclosed three acres of land, and Mr. Kyrke, of Glascoed, with his labourers and the landowners, came and pulled down the fences that had been erected. About 1820 David Price built a one room cottage and put up again the fences that had been pulled down. About this time Mr. Kyrke called together a vestry at Brymbo on a Saturday night, and it was agreed that Mr. Kyrke and his labourers and the landowners should come up on the following morning to pull down the house and the fences. One of the farmers present felt sorry for this, and he came on horseback from the top of Brymbo to Bwlch Gwyn between 12 and 1 o'clock on Sunday night, to tell David Price that Mr. Kyrke, his labourers and the landowners, would be coming there to pull down the house, and it would be better for him to be at home, and not to leave his wife and children in the house alone. The name of that good man was Thomas Shone, of the Top Farm, Brymbo. So it came to pass that David Price stayed at home, and his son was telling me last Saturday that David Price on Monday morning was sharpening an axe to prepare for the battle, and just as the axe was ready the army came up, infantry and cavalry, towards the house; the infantry halted the other side of the road opposite the house, while the mounted men stopped a little lower down, so that David Price and the army had the road between them. Then Mr. Kyrke came somewhat nearer to the middle of the road. He told David Price: "David, we have come here to pull down your house." Then David Price moved on towards Mr. Kyrke, and he said these words: "Before you will be allowed to pull down the house over the head of my wife and children you will have to kill me first. Pull down the house over the head of my wife and children while I am alive, Mr. Kyrke, that you shall never do." Mr. Kyrke saw that the battle would probably end in bloodshed. One of the mounted men tried to rush for the door, another turned the head of his horse back before the axe fell. When Mr. Kyrke saw that, he told the men "Come away, and let the simpleton remain in peace." So they started down the road so as to pull down the fences. Before they went far they had a kind of council, and Mr. Kyrke turned back towards David Price and said, "Open the door, and tell your wife and children that we will not pull down the house over their heads." The children were screaming from fear so as to be heard all over the country. Mr. Kyrke brought terms of peace to David Price. These were the terms: "First, you shall have your house and one plot of land on condition that you enclose no more; and the other condition that you pay 1s. a year of tithe." So Mr. Kyrke bore in mind the Church in the middle of the battle; possibly not so much out of respect for the Church, but owing to the fact that he was tithe collector at the time. David Price said: "I promise to pay the tithe, but about the promise that I shall not enclose any more I do not promise it. I have many small children that I want to bring up, and work is scarce and pay is small, and I want to bring them up. So the common was not enclosed until about 1818 or 1819, when a man of the name of David Foulkes enclosed a Ty un nos—a hut erected in one night. Mr. John Thompson, of Stansty, came up with his men and labourers and he razed David Foulkes' peat cottage even with the ground. Two other small plots were subsequently enclosed adjoining an old holding called Y Gors. About 1830 Mr. John Thompson, of Stansby, enclosed 300 acres, and he had peace from everybody, presumably because he was a gentleman. After that Mr. Edward Jones, of Brymbo, came up, and he enclosed a plot. The neighbours saw this, and each one went and enclosed a plot until the whole was enclosed.

Mr. Seeborn.

57,011. What date was this?—About 1830. I am not absolutely sure of the date, but it was thereabouts. All the common land in the township of Bwlch Gwyn, Brymbo, and part of the common of Minera were enclosed at this time. Mr. Kyrke came up with his men a third time, and he pulled down all the fences that were to the east of the road leading from Wrexham to Ruthin. They had commenced building my father's house, and that was pulled down in the same way as the fences. There was a good deal of very hard fighting over it, but the great ones had the better of it, and the poor ones lost the battle. That good gentleman went to his own place in a few years, and the poor people who possessed themselves of the portion of the common on the lower side of the Ruthin turnpike.

57,012. May we understand at this juncture who Mr. Kyrke and his men were?

Lord Kenyon.

You will see Mr. Kyrke at Mold; he is coming there; he is a landowner.

The Witness.—He is not the one that you see here to-day.

57,013. No, his son. Will you go on with your statement, our time is very limited now?—Yes, I will go on. In 1861 an opportunity was given to purchase an encroachment by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests. The poor people accepted the offer almost without exception. I do not believe that Mr. Thompson bought the 300 acres. I believe so because he used to try and persuade my father and others not to pay any rent to the office of Woods and Forests, but I am not sure whether he bought or not. Many of the people who had thus encroached and had cultivated had to pay over again for the land that they had cultivated to the Crown, so the common was enclosed in small plots with the exception of the large enclosure of Mr. Thompson's. Mr. Kyrke is the other person who now owns a large portion of that old common. The quarry at Bwlch Gwyn was held by the Highway Board, and was being worked for the use of the highway, and the town as well. It appears that they were being worked for many centuries past. There were three openings in the rock, one on the south side, one on the west, and the quarry that Mr. Kyrke owns now on the north. There was another quarry for the use of Brymbo township. The quarries were being worked to the great profit of the inhabitants of the township. People who were too aged to work at the quarries or the lead mines were able to raise stones at so much a ton, or so much a load, and farmers were carrying stones to be laid out on the highway, instead of paying the highway rate, so paying the rate in kind, and so keeping the aged poor from being on the rates—on the parish—by breaking stones at 1s. 8d. a load. There were old women, too, breaking stones on the roadside. The quarries were worked so for many years, but 18 years ago Mr. Kyrke, now of Penffordd, obtained leases for this quarry, and he worked it on the same system. That is, so far as it concerned giving work to the old men and women to break stones. Eight years ago Mr. Kyrke brought a crusher up there to crush stones. That is a special loss to the ratepayers, as it dispenses with the labour of the old people to break stones on the roadside, and also dispenses with the possibility of the farmer giving labour instead of paying the rate.

Professor Rhys.

57,014. You mean the labour of carrying the stones. I do not see how that follows?—So farmers have to pay a highway rate instead of liquidating it in labour, and they have as well to pay poor rate for the poor, and at the same time the stones crushed by the crusher are higher in price than those that were broken on the roadside by hand whatever before, and remain very much so until the present time. The crusher breaks them too small.

Lord Kenyon.

57,015. I do not see what this has to do with us, really?—It is the taxes.

57,016. The stone crusher has nothing to do with the Land Commission, you know. I quite understand that the machinery stops the wages, but it has really nothing to do with us?—If it is not pertinent I will not read it.

57,017. May I ask you one or two questions? Was this common enclosed by Act of Parliament. When was it enclosed? Was it enclosed by Act of Parliament at all?—No, it was not; not this common.

57,018. The Woods and Forests have claimed it. Is that so?—No, they sold it, the Commissioners sold it.

57,019. They claimed it and sold it?—No; the landowners claimed it.

57,020. The following question is handed in by Mr. J. Owen Hughes: "Who were the land-lords you refer to in conjunction with Mr. Kyrke, who came to pull down David Price's 'cottage'?"—There were scores of them, the owners of land in the township of Brymbo.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

57,021. Were there scores of owners of land?—Possibly some of those that came were tenants as well.

Mr. Seebohm.

57,022. Were they people who had the rights of pasture?—They claimed it.

Lord Kenyon.

57,023. By what right did David Price build a house?—If it was common land he has as much right as anyone else.

57,024. I do not see that anybody has the same right as the commoners. He made an encroachment. Was that so?—I do not know whose property it really was. If it belonged to the Crown I do not see how the landowners could claim it.

57,025. Well, you have answered my first question. Did the landowners enclose it under an Act of Parliament?—No, they did not.

57,026. You are sure of that?—Perfectly sure of that. Thompson enclosed 300 acres.

Lord Kenyon.

He must have done it by some right.

Mr. Seebohm.

But was it a division among the farms of the right of pasture, and then ultimately it became enclosed? We have had many cases of that kind.

Lord Kenyon.

The Woods and Forests would have taken notice of it. They would have never let a man do that.

Professor Rhys.

I suppose we shall hear Mr. Kyrke at Mold.

Lord Kenyon.

57,027. Mr. Kyrke is coming to Mold, and you may come there, too?—May I finish my statement there?

57,028–9. Yes, you may finish it at Mold, I should think?—I am very much obliged.

The witness withdrew.

Sir T. H. GRESLEY PULESTON called and examined.

Chairman.

57,030. You live at Worthenbury, Wrexham ?
—I do.

57,031. You are rector of the parish, and are a considerable landowner in the district?—A small landowner.

57,032. Will you be good enough to tell the Commission what it is you wish to state?—Well, I have given some attention and consideration to the questions which were sent to me by someone in authority I presume, and with your permission I should like to answer from my notes, and any other questions I will willingly answer if the Commissioners desire to put any to me.

57,033. Just state it in your own way if you please?—My own property is Worthenbury and Hanmer, and Bangor Isycoed. My evidence generally refers to my own estate of about 2,000 acres, and the land is situate in the parishes of Worthenbury, Hanmer, and Bangor Isycoed. There are no manorial rights. There are no courts held in Worthenbury, and I never heard of any in Hanmer or Bangor Isycoed. I know nothing of glebe land. There is no land held under copyhold that I know of in this district. There has been no enclosure of waste land within the last 50 years, or even longer. There are no sheep runs. I know of no unenclosed land except the fens in Whitchurch. With regard to management, my experience is in favour of a resident landlord. Landlords and tenants all speak English, and the question of difference of either language, politics, or religion does not affect our neighbourhood, as such a thing does not seem to be thought of in selecting a tenant. I should say, generally speaking, agents have received special training; on my own property I am my own agent, merely employing a professional man to receive rents and keep accounts. The usual date of entry in my district is the 1st May on the house, and land (except boozy pasture) 2nd February. Farms are let both on leases and from year to year, but more usually the latter. There is no great demand for leases. I think the reason is that tenants prefer to be free to change if they can better their condition. The condition of the leaseholders, and of their farming is much the same as that of yearly tenants. Changes of tenancy are neither more nor less frequent than in former years; they are about the same. I know of no cases or hardship having arisen. I believe owners when resuming the occupation of a field or plot out of a holding, for the sake of planting, building, or for other purposes, do generally serve their tenants with proper notices for the purpose, and grant them compensation—except perhaps some small plantations of three or four acres. I know of none being made. I do not know whether a tenant is compensated if damage is done to the land in timber-cutting. On my own property, unless there is a road, a tenant is compensated when timber is cut from a plantation, but when cut in small quantities the tenant usually is very glad to have the trees cut hanging over arable land. There are no mines or industrial operations on land in my occupation. The principal condition of tenancy is not to plough land that has been laid down for some years in pasture. I never heard that any of the clauses are considered oppressive. The effect they have on cultivation is very beneficial to owner and occupier. Penalising clauses are common, but I never heard of their being enforced. Tenants always, so far as I know, have a copy of their agreement or lease, and have their contents explained to them. Rent is usually 20s. to possibly 40s. per acre, and is fixed on a gross sum. I should say there is uniformity in the rents of land of similar qualities on the same or neighbouring estates. The rent of the smaller farms is about the same price per acre as that on larger farms. There are no upland farms and there is no common land. The tenant is supposed to do a day's team work for his landlord, but it is usually

30 August 1894.]

Sir T. H. G. PULESTON.

done for repairs on his own farm. Rent is always fixed by private treaty. Holdings in my experience are never let to the highest bidder. I should say the rents are reasonable and satisfactory generally to tenants. Subject to character and capital a tenant is accepted. Arbitration is not required as a means of settling or re-adjusting the rents. Rents within the last 50 years have been generally lowered, certainly not raised; rents remain about the same as they were 60 years ago, but the farms have been very greatly improved at the landowner's expense during that period; there has generally been no change in rents, when there has been it has been arranged by the sitting or applying tenant, and owner—valuations are not popular with tenant farmers. With regard to the chief fluctuations in prices affecting rent within the last 50 years—cheese has remained about the same value, and the quantity and quality improved by draining and boning the land; rents have remained about the same though the outlay by the owner in improvements has been the sole cause of this. There have been fluctuations in the price of cheese occasionally, but I should say the average price is higher than it was 50 years ago. Rent is usually paid about two months after it is due. I do not know that the preferential claim for rent has any effect on the position of tenants generally. The land tax is usually paid by the occupier. Income tax under Schedule A. is paid by landlord's cheque generally. The local rates are about the same as they were 25 years ago—rather on the decrease. The average size of farms in my district is usually small; the average would be about 70 acres, I should say. Holdings have not been consolidated. There are no upland farms. I should say that as a rule average sized farms are the best cared for.

Trade depression has not been greatly felt. I do not think it has prevented farmers doing their duty, with their landlords' assistance, to the land they hold. They seem still to find money to stock farms for their sons and give their daughters a marriage portion. Cheese making and fattening pigs is the usual nature of the farming. There is no scarcity of labourers except during hay harvest. There is no land going out of cultivation or being insufficiently cultivated in my district, nor is there any waste land. A great deal of arable land has been laid down in pasture, generally at the joint expense of owner and occupier. There has been no increase of root crops, very few being grown. There is no fallowing. Building improvements are done by the landlord, and the draining is usually shared with the owner. The landlord usually pays three quarters of the cost of drainage and irrigation. The landlord pays for buildings for stock, liquid manure tanks, and protection from river encroachment. Gates are also found by the landlord. Manures and seeds are a matter of agreement, but bone manure is generally found by the landlord on a tenant entering on the occupation of a farm, and afterwards continued by the tenant. I do not know of any instances of either party contracting out of the last Agricultural Holdings Act. Farmers do not apply for their landlord's written consent for specific improvements unless they want the landlord to pay some of the cost. As regards the custom of the country, manure, I believe, is always left at the expiration of a tenancy, but no produce. The only restriction on a tenant as to mode of cultivation that is enforced is the breaking up of old pasture; subject to this they sell usually what they please of their produce. I know of no instance of an outgoing tenant having failed to obtain sufficient compensation for his improvements. I do not know of any instance of compensation being asked for the generally improved condition of a holding as distinct from specific improvements. There is no right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interests in their holdings to any solvent tenant to whom the landlord shall not have any reasonable objection. There is no preservation of game in this district, hares being nearly extinct, and usually very few rabbits. Tenants do generally avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act. I have not seen any damage done by game to the crops and pastures of tenant farmers. Tenants are never required to "beat" coverts, &c. when their landlords go out shooting. Game does not affect cultivation, nearly all the land being grass. I believe the feeling between landlord and tenant is very good and unaffected by game preservation. The preservation of game has no effect on the labourers or the public generally. I cannot say in my petty sessional district what proportion offences against the game laws bear to other offences, but I do not recollect more than four or five game cases since I have sat on the bench. I should say the law of trespass is satisfactory. There are no sporting rights over Crown lands and commons. No attention is being paid in my district to agricultural education. I think that generally the land is not suitable for fruit growing except apples and damsons. Instruction is given in butter and cheese making, but not in other agricultural subjects. Railway rates are generally too high, but their effect is on manures and feeding stuffs purchased. Most of the tenant farmers whom I have asked insure stock, crops, and implements, and the landlord the buildings. I have never heard of any combination among landlords not to accept tenants of a certain description, or among farmers or labourers to fix wages. There are both peasant proprietors and small freeholders, who have inherited their holdings from their ancestors in my district. The wives of the tenant farmers usually assist in cheese making; the tenant farmer superintends the work on the farm and cares for his stock. The children usually leave the nest when they grow up. With regard to the parents making provision for their children on their marriage or independent settlement in life, the parents stock a farm for their sons and give an equivalent portion to their daughters; both sons and daughters have usually "perquisites" on the farm. I think that present rents could be maintained, even if wages were paid for the children's labour; I know many tenants that have no children at home. The proportion of hired labour on a farm as compared with that rendered by members of the household is probably half. A very small proportion of the hired labourers are lodged in the house. Labourers earn 15s. a week, and at harvest time about 20s., and their keep. There has been a slow but gradual increase in wages within the last 50 years. Ordinarily they are now 15s.; formerly 10s. Farmhouse accommodation for male and female servants at meal times and evenings and for sleeping purposes is generally very good. The cottage accommodation as compared with the past is generally vastly improved, and is quite sufficient; cottages are generally constructed of brick and slates. There is almost always a large garden with the cottages, very few with allotments. The land is not suitable for spade cultivation. Cottages are generally held of the owner, their tenants being subject to six months' notice to quit. There has been no migration of farmers or labourers from my district within the last 50 years. I do not think diaries and farming accounts are generally kept, although I do know of instances. Trade depression has been felt for the last seven years in my district; I think the cause is, that trade being bad has reduced the wages of the miners, so that they have not so much money to spend on farm and labourers' produce from their gardens and poultry.

Sir T. H. G. PULESTON.

Chairman—continued.

I think the general relations between landlord and tenant are very friendly and mutually considerate.

I have also put down from 1868 my outlay on my own property, which is a small one, if the Commissioners would like to hear it.

Sir T. H. G. PULESTON.

Lord Kenyon.

57,035. Do you mind giving us the total?—I think the total is 24,000*l*.

57,036. Is that including abatements and improvements?—Nothing to do with abatements. That is entirely in improvements in draining and building cottages where necessary and slating and repairing and supplying them with water. When I came to the property there was nothing of the sort.

Mr. Grove.

57,037. How many years have you given?—I think 25 years. I told my agent to send it to me for 25 years.

57,038. Have you any table of abatements in rent?—We have not given any abatements except during the rinderpest. Of course, there was a special abatement then, but I have not got the particulars of it. I think we gave about 25 or 30 per cent.

Lord Kenyon.

57,039. Do you mind stating what the rental is?—It is between 3,000*l*. and 4,000*l*. a year. I cannot tell you nearer than that. It varies to a certain extent.

57,040. Then this would amount to nearly 25 per cent. of the income?—More than that; it would be 50 per cent. some years.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,041. What is the average?—On an average I should think it would be 30 per cent. I find I have a note of it here. I have spent 23,499*l* 19*s*. 4*d*. during the time I have had the property.

Lord Kenyon.

57,042. And the rental has been between 3,000*l*. and 4,000*l*. you say. Can you give it more exactly?—I cannot give it nearer than that. It varies for different reasons. Some of it is not, strictly speaking, agricultural.

Chairman.

57,043. How long have you had the estate?—It is about 26 or 27 years since I first got it. Of course, there are always a good many outgoings at first. During the first year or two when I was paying succession duty I could not make the same outlay, but afterwards it was gradually increased until we got the work done.

Lord Kenyon.

57,044. You said this outlay was for 25 years?—About 25 years.

57,045. What was the first year of the return you have given?—1868. My accounts are very accurately kept. It would be about 30 per cent. on the average.

Chairman.

57,046. Hardly as much as that, would it be?—I must leave it to the Commissioners; I have not worked it out exactly.

Mr. Grove.

57,047. I think it would be about 27 per cent.?—I have not thought it over very exactly.

Chairman.

57,048. That is the whole of the evidence you wish to tender?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

57,049. Have you paid any attention to agricultural education at all?—I have not.

57,050. Do you think there is any hope for improvement in that respect. I mean do you think that agricultural education does any good?—I am very strongly in favour of education generally, and have spent a great deal of money upon it, but I cannot think that agricultural education is necessary in this country beyond any instruction that can be given in the way of making cheese. There is nothing else that I know of that will do the tenants any good.

57,051. I suppose you think experiments with manure, and so on, will do good?—No, there is only one manure in this country which will do any practical good, and that is bone; that again is practically in the nature of a permanent improvement, so far as anything can be permanent in this world.

57,052. I suppose you would not consider bone much good unless you did some draining first?—No. The old feeling in the country was that it did best on undrained land. I do not like putting bone on undrained land myself. I should like to say what has been going on upon my own small property has been going on all round me over the whole district. I cannot name any exception. The whole of the district has been going on improving for the last 50 years. I should like to make some of the younger members of the Commission understand the improvement there has been, particularly in cottages, compared with when I first came to live in this country: you could see a little bit of rubbishy mud cottage, with two little rooms on the ground floor and people living in it and living on 8*s*. a week; but now the cottagers are just as proud and pleased with their dwellings as any nobleman in the land.

57,053. I know the Chairman of this Commission is particularly interested in small holdings. I think I may say that we are equally interested in this district?—I think I have made 24 small holdings myself on the principle of three acres and a cow, but long before the three acres and a cow was ever thought of. I am very strongly in favour of it. If a man once gets a start and is able to keep five or six cows he can soon take a large farm in this part of the country, although I do not think he could do it in England. I have had many instances of it. I have one farmer on my estate who was my labourer, and he milks now probably 40 cows.

57,054. I think I should be right in saying that the majority of labourers in this district have a certain quantity of garden land?—They have all of them, so far as I know. I am sorry to say that they do not all cultivate the whole of their gardens on my property; they have more garden than they want.

57,055. Do you think that more attention might be given in this district to the growing of damsons?—Probably it might; damsons is a very paying crop.

57,056. And they suit the soil?—They suit the soil. Damsons and apples are the only fruit that I know that do well on this soil.

57,057. Is there any attention given to bee-keeping?—Very little. There are bees kept in many places, but not generally.

57,058. What is your opinion of the farmers of the district—favourable or otherwise?—Do you mean as to their financial position?

57,059. I mean as to their capability?—I think the whole of this district is farmed very well indeed.

Mr. Griffiths.

57,060. Have any of the tenants paid an advanced rent in consequence of this great outlay?—I have never heard of such a thing—never on my property, certainly.

57,061. They have not paid any per-centage for the outlay?—I think not. I do not recollect any. Possibly there might be some, but the rent of the whole property is very considerably decreased compared to what it was in my father's time. The property has been in the possession of my family for a great many years—600 years, and probably I take more interest in it and lay out more than I otherwise should do if it were not so.

57,062. Had this property been neglected very much before you got into possession?—I do not think it had, but we were at a great disadvantage in having no railway. We could not get any slates from anywhere except from Llangollen, and those only lasted about 18 years, so that until there were railroads we could not get them.

57,063. Do you expect in the future that you will have to spend as much on this as you have in the past?—Oh, dear no, I do not. All the slates that are put in all over this district now are principally Lord Penrhyn's slates, and they will last anyhow for 100 or 150 years.

57,064. With regard to the improvement in the cottages, do you find the morals of the people better in consequence?—Very considerably. I can answer both as a clergyman and as a magistrate. I could give very strong proofs of it, but I think perhaps it is unnecessary; you will guess what I mean; there is a very considerable moral improvement in the district.

57,065. Do you find the children of these cottagers grow up to be more useful—I mean those that have three acres and a cow—than if they had a single cottage and nothing else?—I do not think there is any harm from education. I think with respect to the children, so far as the agricultural labourers are concerned, there will be plenty left on the soil; only the best of them get to the surface, and they go off somewhere. There are a great many intelligent children all over this country.

57,066. We find they are taught habits of early rising and so on, and consequently are more useful as servants?—The only way in which I can confirm what you say is as to cleanliness—they are very much cleaner.

57,067. Are they able to attend the schools as well as others?—Oh, they are as keen to learn as any persons in the world.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,068. Looking at the matter from a landlord's point of view, do you think it pays a landlord to cut up the farms into small holdings?—No, I do not think it does. I could not recommend anyone to do it, but I think it is a very great benefit to the neighbourhood. Financially it is a very great loss.

57,069. To the general community it is a great benefit?—Yes, it is to the general community. I have never found a man come to poverty or want so long as he had two or three cows or one cow even—I think I can go as far as that. If they will keep away from the public-house and keep a cow they will do well.

57,070. You say the rents are the same as they were 60 years ago?—I do. I think they are lowered, but I do not think there is very much difference. On my own property I know of one or two instances, but on the whole I do not think there is so very much difference.

57,071. Have the rents been revised at all during that period?—Constantly. On my property some people have been there for a long while, a bit too long perhaps in some respects, but they get money and they do not want to go, and they do not want to improve anything.

57,072. You never find any difficulty in letting a farm when one becomes vacant?—No, we never have to advertise. A tenant came to me the day before yesterday, and asked whether I had any objection to his applying for a large farm in the neighbourhood. I said no. That was only the day before yesterday. I have never given notice or had occasion to do so, or seldom received notice for some years. When they want to go they go.

57,073. Have you had any complaints at all from any of the tenants that the rents are too high?—No, not one. They are very kind to me. I have a lot of capital friends and capital neighbours. They are always kind to me I am glad to say.

57,074. You say that the rates have decreased?—They have rather decreased; I am sure they have lately. I have inquired about it.

57,075. Generally we find they have increased?—They have not with us. I think there has been rather a decrease. It is not easy to judge of the increase or decrease, simply for this reason: they are now under different headings; where there is a highway board that is charged in the poor's rate, and they do not feel it quite so much as when it was paid out of their own pocket in a direct manner.

57,076. How are your roads managed?—There is a main road through most of my district. That is repaired by the county council.

57,077. What about the district rates? Are they managed by a highway board?—They are managed by the parish—the little out-of-the-way roads and bye-ways.

57,078. Do you think the roads are better managed by the county council than by the highway board?—I would rather have a highway board if I had my own choice. That is a thing I never interfere with; it is left to the farmers' judgment as far as I am concerned, but I would rather have a highway board myself, because I think they manage them more on the general principle of repairs.

57,079. Is there a good deal of care taken with the district roads?—Yes, there is a good deal. I drove over six miles of them this morning—district roads all the way, and then I came a little bit into the county council road.

57,080. What is the custom with respect to draining on your estate?—I have generally done it all, but in one or two instances I have been helped by the tenant who came to me and who has been there some years, the rent remaining the same. He said, "If you will do so and so, I will pay so much towards it, about one-third"; but I think only in two instances has that taken place that I can recollect.

57,081. Have you been doing draining and not charging anything?—I have not charged anything.

57,082. The tenant does the haulage?—He does the haulage. If my horses are doing nothing I send and help him sometimes.

57,083. I find you treat your tenants with respect to draining more liberally than the generality of landlords?—Well, perhaps I do. I have a little bit of a hobby in draining, and we always have to pay for our hobbies. I have another property besides, and of course that helps it.

57,084. Where do you get your pipes?—I have made most of them myself, and some of them I have had from my friend there (Lord Kenyon). I have made most of them myself. When I went heavily into draining, I established a brick yard of my own and made my own pipes—and I made them in Warwickshire too.

57,085. I suppose the land here requires a great deal of draining?—Yes, it is a clay land, and it makes all the difference in the world to it. A man can live on drained land where he would starve on land which was not drained, and it is the same with animals.

57,086. You say that the children of the tenant farmers receive perquisites?—Very often—they have a few sheep and the poultry and that sort of thing—that is what I mean by their perquisites, I know that is constantly so.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

57,087. We found down in Pembrokeshire that some of the children received a hunter in the shape of perquisites?—We do not encourage hunters here—well, I am only joking about that, but I do not know anything of that sort here. When they go away—when they get married which they do at 21 years of age, and some before—some marry before they are of age and they do marry very early here—what they look forward to is to get a farm and some cows and start for themselves.

57,088. Are there many farmers about here who go in for hunting and shooting?—Not so many; they do not like going out; they think it is a waste of time. They are a money-making people and a sensible people.

57,089. I have heard a very good character given to the farmers on the borders of Cheshire; they are not quite so gay as the Shropshire farmers?—No, they are not; they do not require a jug of beer in the field either—they have a little wooden barrel in Shropshire. They are a good lot of fellows, and temperate in this country as a rule.

57,090. The depression, you say, began about seven years before?—Yes, before that: it was felt, I think, in 1879, but it was only a very short thing. However, for the last seven years they have felt it more or less. Mines, coals, lead, and iron and all these things are down, and so long as they are down, every bit of agricultural produce is down too.

57,091. You think that is the chief cause?—I do believe it is the sole cause. I do not mean that foreign competition has nothing to do with it, but I think we could soon get over foreign competition if we had good trade.

Mr. Seebohm.

57,092. I think you said that you remember the time when wages in this district were about 8s. a week?—Yes, very well.

57,093. What are the current wages now?—15s. to 16s.; but now the men have been getting very high wages—30s. sometimes.

57,094. Do most of them live in cottages or farm-houses?—Most of them in cottages.

57,095. In addition to the cottage, I think you said they generally had a little land?—A large garden—except in special places where they keep a cow.

57,096. Will you tell us how many of your tenants have land for a cow?—Quite 20.

57,097. 20 out of 50?—Yes.

57,098. We notice one of the advantages in Wales is an easy ladder up from the labourer to the farmer?—Yes, that helps it. That is my object in making these places.

57,099. Can you say how many out of your 50 have been able to make their way up into little farms?—Well, I know many have done so. I recollect one man now who was a tenant—he was my carter for a long while—he is not an old man, but he has a farm and I think he pays 230*l.* a year.

30 August 1894.]

Sir T. H. G. PULESTON.

Mr. Seeborn—continued.

57,100. The rental of these little pieces, of course, must be higher than the ordinary agricultural rental?—It is slightly higher. My rule is this: if I build a cottage for a man and the man is living in it, I never alter the rent. I build it all up and charge the same rent. If I put a field to it, then I have the expense of fencing and so on, and I charge 2*l.* an acre for it.

57,101. Suppose during the last 50 years the practice had been peasant proprietorship instead of small tenants, would it not have been very much more difficult for a labourer to have risen into the position of an occupier of land?—He could not have risen on 8*s.* a week. These men get good wages.

57,102. So that in fact the principle of large holdings with small occupations affords the labour which we have been speaking of?—Yes, I should say so. I should say on a large estate where a man does not look at the expenditure of one place but takes it as a lump sum the landlord is more liberal in his outlay on repairs and improvements.

57,103. If under any system, ownership was the rule instead of rent, the rungs in the ladder would be very much broken?—I think so too. I will tell you what will rather bear out that. I have known people who have places of that sort let them and keep on the big ones themselves.

57,104. Do you happen to have heard that in France they are doing that?—No, I have not. I have been in France very little of late years. I know more about German farmers than French farmers.

57,105. Are there any small freeholders in this neighbourhood?—Yes, there are.

57,106. On the whole have they been prosperous?—I should say they have. Of course I have no means of knowing that. There are none in my own parish. There is only one small freeholder I know in the parish, and that is an old lady, and of course we cannot talk about her.

57,107. We have heard a great deal about this, that the rents are really lower than competition rent. Would you say that if a farm in the district was let to the highest bidder it would make a difference?—Yes, it would make a great difference to the landlord's pocket.

57,108. You think there would be such competition that they would be sent up higher than the present rents?—Yes, I am sure of it.

57,109. And that again would be a disadvantage looking to the far future—to the future tenants?—Of course, if he has to pay a higher rent that would naturally follow, I never have heard of it. I have heard of a man who will say, "If you will let me such a farm I will give you 25*l.* or 30*l.* a year more for it," but I do not think it is ever done.

57,110. Do you think any possible legislation could prevent that competition for small holdings?—I do not know of any. I think the good sense of the British public would be dead against it and I do not think it will ever be done.

57,111. Do you think supposing for instance the letting of land is in the hands of a public body—say a parish or county council—that those who have no land would allow anything less than the competition rent to be paid?—No. I may say I saw from a question put in the House of Commons that Her Majesty had one of the Crown farms in hand.

57,112. My point is this. If there is great competition for land and more people wanting small holdings than can possibly get them because the land is limited, if it was in the hands of any representative public body to let the land, would they not almost be compelled by those outside to put the rent up to the competition rent?—The body?

57,113. Yes, the representative body?—I should think they would; the ratepayers would require it naturally. Naturally they would say you can get so much for this land, you ought to let to the highest bidder.

57,114. Now, supposing, without looking to legislation at all, we leave things to go on exactly as they are now doing in this district, do you think the tendency is towards the increase of these small occupations?—I think it is because of the satisfaction they give the little men, as we call them.

57,115. And the increase in population in the neighbourhood tends to make these small holdings of pasture land at any rate more profitable as years go on?—I think so. The country districts are not increasing in population, but we are on the edge of a large population, and when that population is prosperous they can get practically anything they like for their produce if it is good.

57,116. Speaking generally of a pasture country would you say that really good trade is the one thing needful?—Yes, that is what they want.

Mr. Grove.

57,117. Do you think the farmers generally are acquainted with the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I do not know, I could not answer that question. I really could not answer for other people. I think myself we have a very intelligent body of gentlemen to deal with and they are quite capable of understanding it and if it was worth their while they very soon would. That is my belief. But I do not know that they do know what it is.

57,118. You consider that there is depression in agricultural interests now, I suppose?—I consider there is a certain amount of depression now, and there has been for the last seven years.

57,119. You speak of the farmers being able to provide for the welfare of their families. I suppose that does not apply at the present moment so much as it did a few years ago?—No, it does not. So far as I know there has been depression, but 50 years ago there was a great deal more depression and for 20 years afterwards than there is now.

57,120. Have there been many changes of ownership in estates in this immediate district

30 August 1894.]

Sir T. H. G. PULESTON.

for the last few years. Have there been many sales of property to any extent?—No, I may say mine has been in the family for 600 years. I should say there have been no changes of ownership affecting us. These properties at Bettisfield and Gredington have been both for a considerable time in the same ownership, and I believe Lord Trevor's too so far as I know.

57,121. Do you attach any importance to field experiments in this immediate neighbourhood?—No, I do not.

57,122. Do you think the farmer avoids the railway and does the haulage with his own horses so as to avoid the railway rates?—No, I do not think he does. I think the farmers would if they could. The railway rates are very high, and they do not give the farmers much consideration.

57,123. Manure and feeding stuffs I think you mentioned specially?—Yes, exactly so.

57,124. Is it your opinion that if the farmers—I mean comparatively small farmers—own their own farms they could make the land more productive than as tenant farmers?—No, I do not think so. I think if you keep your eyes open as you drive through this country you will see as much grass growing on it as you could hope to see.

Professor Rhys.

57,125. I notice there is a new railway being made in this district?—Yes, and I think it will help us a bit. It goes within a mile of my own place.

57,126. A little competition will assist you?—This railway is only 12 miles altogether, on a line between the London and North-Western and the Great Western. We are about an equal distance from each. The North-Western and Great Western have traffic arrangements together, so we shall never receive any benefit from them, but we might benefit by this new line.

57,127. If they have an arrangement together I am afraid you have not very much chance?—That arrangement will not affect this small line that is being made; it will compete with them as far as it can.

57,128. So that that will be so much to your advantage?—Yes.

57,129. I think you mentioned that the cottage accommodation has been greatly improved during recent years?—Yes, very greatly.

57,130. Within what years, about?—30 years I should think.

57,131. Is there any special cause?—There was, I think, a general feeling throughout England that the cottages were bad, and a great many people took that up.

57,132. Did I understand you to say that the servant men are generally lodged in the farmhouse?—There is generally one man in the house and one only.

57,133. And the others would be labourers living in their own cottages?—Yes, in their own cottages. Probably on very large farms there might be two living in the farmhouse, but I do not know of such a case—not in my own parish.

57,134. In some neighbourhoods we find the servant men sleep in the outhouses, but that is not known here?—I do not know of such a case here.

57,135. As a clergyman and landowner you have opportunities of knowing well what is the state of morality in this district?—I think it has very, very vastly improved.

57,136. Improved?—Decidedly.

57,137. Since you remember?—Yes.

57,138. Perhaps a parish like Threapwood was exceptional in old times?—Perhaps it was. There were special circumstances about Threapwood which had nothing to do with the morality or immorality of it. People were sent there for poor law purposes and to avoid poor law responsibility.

57,139. Now that I have touched upon Threapwood perhaps you would not mind my asking you to give the history of it. Threapwood was an extra-parochial district?—Yes, it was an extra parochial district, and any child born there was not chargeable to any union, so that all the children that were liable to be chargeable to any particular union were sent to Threapwood to be born there. In itself I do not know that Threapwood was more immoral than any other place, but that would naturally have probably a demoralising effect. I do not know that it has, but I know that that is a fact, because it was so in my own time.

57,140. How long is it since Threapwood has been put on the same footing as other parts of the country?—I could not absolutely tell you the date. I should think 25 to 30 years perhaps.

57,141. Then you were going to say that there was a great improvement in the morality?—Yes, decidedly.

57,142. From about what date?—I should say anyhow for 20 years. I attribute that myself to education.

57,143. Within your memory?—Yes. I am as old as anyone else, and I can recollect perhaps as long as anyone my own age.

57,144. Do you think the district was rather bad when you first remember it?—There used to be a great many illegitimate children born there, but now we scarcely ever have a case before us at Petty Sessions. Generally there used to be four or five at every Petty Sessions, but now we seldom get one. We had two sessions in every month then, and now we have one in about two months. There will be a Petty Sessions on Saturday, and so far as I know there is not a case of that sort. I think it is most gratifying, and I attribute it almost entirely to the spread of education, it gives them a self-respect which nothing else can give them.

57,145. I am glad to hear it, I have been rather blamed for asking these questions, but I am glad to hear of any improvement of that sort?—I am glad to answer the questions.

30 August 1894.]

Sir T. H. G. PULESTON.

Chairman.

57,146. There are some questions handed in and one of them is from Mr. Vincent: "Would you spend money on improvements as you have spent it if a court was established to fix rent?"—No, I do not think I should. That is most improbable. I know in Ireland they do not spend any money where the rents have been fixed, and probably I should not.

51,147. This is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you think farmers of late years would have been better off or as well off under leases as under yearly tenancies?"—Well, I have

The witness withdrew.

The Hon. Mrs. BULKELEY OWEN called and examined.

Chairman.

57,149. You have prepared with a great deal of trouble, I believe, a memorandum on the history of this part of the country. Will you favour us by reading it?—

The kingdom of Mathrafal or Powys was divided into two parts. The first of these was called Powis Fadog; it contained five cantrefes and 15 comots.

The third cantref, by name Cantref Uwch-nant, had three comots, the third of which was Maelor Saesneg, in Flintshire.

It is said to have been the portion of Maelor ap Gwran ap Cunedda Wledig, Prince of the Strathclyde Britons, but of this we have no proof. (Powel, Hist. of Cambria, p. 11.)

It consisted of the parishes of Worthenbury, Bangor, Hanmer, and the chapelry of Overton on this side of the Dee, of Erbistock, of Hope, of Iscoed in Malpas, Penley in Ellesmere, Bodidris in Llanarmon yn Ial, of the townships of Dutton in Holt, of Abenbury Fechan in Wrexham, of Hoseley and Marford in Gresford. (Pennant's Tours, Vol. I., p. 287.)

These were declared to constitute part of the county of Flint, by the statute of Rhuddlan, 12 Edw. I. (1283-4).

Of the Roman occupation of Maelor Saesneg I cannot speak, save that the Watling Street traverses it on its way from Uriconium to Deva (i.e., Chester).

It enters county Flint at Blackhurstford, and passing Bettisfield Station crosses the parish of Hanmer by Croxton Pool northwards, to the square Roman camp on the north-west of Willington Old Hall. Bending to the north-west over the bank called Bryn Arglwydd it passes down Tallarn Green, crossing the river Elfe and so on past Threapwood vicarage through Bangor.

The camp of Eglwys y Groes (which must have been the site of an old British church) is doubtless of British origin, as is proved by its circular form. Its diameter is 28 feet.

Eight Roman coins were found there of the first half of the fourth century, of the time of Galerius Maximus, and of the Constantines. Probably the Romans availed themselves of the camp, though this is by no means certain, the given several leases myself. I never object to them, but I know the feeling as a rule among the tenant farmers is that they do not care about a lease. I do not know that that makes any difference; I have given several leases myself.

British having made use of Roman coins long after the conquerors had left the country.

The first Saxon invasion of this part of Wales that we have any record of is that of Æthelfrith, King of Northumbria, who defeated Brochwael Ysgythrog, Prince of Powys, about 614, and murdered 1,200 unoffending monks of Bangor, who were engaged in prayer for the success of their prince. (Green's 'Making of England,' Bede, C. II.)

The name of the last abbot of Bangor Monachorum, S. Dunawd (St. Dinoh), still survives as the dedication saint of the churches of Bangor and Worthenbury.

Maelor Saesneg formed part of the kingdom of Mercia, and belonged to the great Saxon bishopric founded by King Oswy in 656. (Hist. St. Asaph, p. 797.) In the Domesday survey we find two of the townships of Bangor, viz., Eyton and Seswick, as belonging in the time of Edward the Confessor to the see of St. Chad.

We also find King Edward granting land by the Dee to Prince Gruffydd, but on his forfeiture taking it away from him and restoring it to the Bishop of Chester and to his tenants who had possessed it before. (The Mercian bishopric was then located at Chester.)

With the exception of the outlying parts beyond the Dee, Maelor Saesneg belonged to the sees of Chester and Lichfield and Coventry, until it was transferred to the diocese of St. Asaph by an Order in Council, dated 30th July 1849.

This explains the dedication of Hanmer Church to St. Chad.

Worthenbury and Bettisfield are identical with the Domesday manors of Hurdingerbie and Beddesfeld in the Cheshire hundred of Duddestun, and were held in Saxon times by Edwin, Earl of Mercia.

There is a gift of lands in 'Duddestun' from King Eadgar to Wulfget in 963 A.D. amongst the Saxon Charters at Peniarth. (Peniarth MSS.)

I cannot fix the date at which the Britons regained possession of Maelor Saesneg.

The castle of Overton (of which there are now no traces, the name of its site, 'The Castle-field' alone remaining to us) is said to have been built by Prince Madoc ap Meredydd ap Bleddyn ap Cynfyn (King of Gwynedd and Powys, who was killed in 1072). The castle was standing as late as 1349. Overton still retains his name in Overton Madog.

The name of Bleddyn still survives in 'Bryn Bleddyn,' on the west side of Hanmer Mere.

History tells us (Williams, 'Eminent Welshmen,' p. 307.) that Prince Madog fought against his countrymen with King Henry II. in 1158; and that he commanded the English fleet which invaded Anglesey, where, however, he was defeated. He died at Winchester in 1159, and was buried at Meifod, in Montgomeryshire.

Madog was succeeded by his son, Gruffydd Maelor, who married Angharad, daughter of Owen Gwynedd.

It was during the lifetime of this Prince that we have the first record of the gift of Hanmer Church to Haghmond Abbey in Shropshire.

The cartulary of Haghmond tells us that Henry [II.], King of England gave and conceded in perpetual alms to the canons for their support the church of Hanmere.

This document is undated, but we know it must have been between 1166-1177 from the names of the Norman barons, who witnessed it—Richard de Luci, Hugh de Laci, and Robert Marmion. (Shrop. Arch. Trans., 2nd Series Vol. II.)

There is also the confirmation of King Henry II. of the gift of Robert Fitz Simon, of the advowrey of a mediety of the church of 'Hanmere; and one carucate of land in Halghton of lay fee.'

And the confirmation of the gift of Richard Peche, the Bishop of Coventry (the see of Lichfield was removed to Coventry 1102 to 1183), who was cousin to Robert Fitz Simon.

The Bishop says that it is 'at the request of the Lord Henry the King and of David the Prince, that the parish church of Hanmer is appropriated to the monastery of Haghmond and to the Abbot William.'

Prince David was the third son of Owen Gwynedd and brother to Angharad, the wife of Gruffydd Maelor. He married Emma, the sister of Henry II., in 1173.

Lastly, there is the confirmation of the gift by 'W——, the humble prior of Coventry.'

Prince Gruffydd died in 1190, and was buried at Meifod. He was succeeded by Madoc his son, who was the founder of Valle Crucis Abbey, where he was buried in 1236.

Madog, like his grandfather, was not true to his country; he aided King John in two expeditions against the Welsh, but was afterwards reconciled to his Sovereign Prince, Llewelyn Ap

Chairman—continued.

Iorwerth, whom he ably supported in his wars against the English.

Madog was succeeded by his son Howel in the lordship of Maelor Saesneg, but he dying, it came to his brother Gruffydd, who was called the lord of Dinas Brân, from the name of the castle where he lived; he died there in 1270 and was buried at Valle Crucis.

Gruffydd had married a Norman lady—Emma, the daughter of Sir Henry de Audley. There is in the Public Record Office a copy of the charter by which Griffin son of Madoc 'lord of Bromfield' (for he held, as did his forefathers, also Maelor Gymraeg), with the assent of his heirs, conveyed to her between 1249 and 1266 'all the country called Maylor Seysnek' for as long as she lives, to wit the manor of Overton with the mill and weir, the vill of Hangmere, the vill of Lanerpanna [in Penley] Cnelton [i.e., Knelton, a township in Overton parish] and all the vills which are within the bounds of the country of Mailor Seysnec as I hold them, and that the said land shall not be withdrawn from the lordship of Wales. Witnesses—Anian, Bp. of S. Asaph; Yarwerth, Abbot of Valle Cruce; Madoc, Leulin, Owen, and Griffin, sons of the grantor and others.

There is also in the Public Record Office a confirmation of this grant by Leuwelin, Owen, and Griffin, sons of Griffin, lord of Bromfeld, of the same places with others, to their mother Emma.

Dated 'the morrow' of Blessed Thomas the Apostle, 1270.

In July 1277 an inquest was made by Guncelas de Ludlesmere, justice of Chester, on the lands of the said Emma. (Inquis. p. m. 5 Edw. I. (No. 78).)

The jurors say that Griffin de Bromfeld when he married Emma, daughter of Henry de Aldetheley, gave her the manor of Overton and Mailor Saisnek for the term of her life, and that the same Emma took the profits thereof, and they say that the said manor was an escheat of the said Griffin by the death of Howel his brother, and that he gave the same to the said Emma by feoffment and a certain charter which was confirmed by the heirs of the said Griffin and by Llewelin Prince of Wales, for they say any Welshman can give by his will his lands and tenements before his marriage or after, and after the death of the same Griffin, the same Emma was in seisin of all the lands aforesaid, till the war began between England and Wales, and then because the said Emma was in the fealty of the Lord the King of England, the said Prince Llewelin ejected her from the said lands, and returned those lands to Madoc son of Griffin.

They say also that it is the custom of Wales if anyone for fear of war or otherwise relinquished his land, and retire from Wales, the lord may seize that land as an escheat and do therewith as he pleases.

The law of our great King Howel Dda (written in the 10th century) (Howel Dda. Welsh Laws, circa 930 A.D., Bk. XIII., Chap. II., No. 90) say :—

‘By three things a Cymro loses the privilege of his country and kindred. Entirely removing to a strange country; entirely confederating with strangers who shall be at war with the Cymry kindred; and entirely resigning himself to the prevailing host of a border country, against the kindred of the Cymry, and which shall constitute treason to country and lord.’

Before December 1278 Prince Madoc was dead, and Margaret his widow appealed to King Edward I. for the patrimony of Maelor Saesneg for her sons Llewelyn and Gruffydd, who were under age. (Welsh Rolls, 6 Ed. I. m. 12, 1278.) The King assigned the third parts of the profits of Maelor Cymraeg on January 20, 1280, for their support, but he robbed them of Maelor Saesneg. (Welsh Rolls, 8 Ed. I. m. 8, 1280.) In 1279 it had been given to Robert de Crèvequer and his assigns, who were then granted a license to hold a market and fair in their manor of Overton in the parts of Maelor Seisneth. (Charter Roll, 7 Ed. I. No. 23, 1279.)

An undated grant from the freeholders of Hanmer of certain ‘waste lands’ to Thomas de Macclesfeld is witnessed by ‘Roberto de Crèvequer, tunc ballivo de Overton’ and other witnesses, all of whom bear Welsh names. (Shrop. Arch. Trans., 2nd Series, Vol. II., p. 181; also ‘Memorials of the parish and family of Hanmer.’)

Thomas de Macclesfeld and his heirs were to pay ‘unam rosam’ for all service, &c. annually on the Feast of St. John Baptist.

The family of Crèvequer did not hold the lordship long; Robert de Crèvequer, of Leeds Castle, co. Kent, was the last baron, and his son William died childless. (Nicholas, Historic Peerage.)

In 1292 Overton was made a free borough. Edward I. in the 14th year of his reign (1285–6) gave the lordship to his queen, Eleanor. (Lewis’s Topo. Dict. of Wales.)

On the 1st October 1300, Edward I. gave the earldom of Chester and the Principality of Wales to his eldest son Edward, and in the 29th year of his reign that prince came to Chester, where he received the homage of the freeholders of Wales. (Ormerod, Hist. of Cheshire, Vol. I., p. 194.) Amongst others ‘Lewys de Felton the son of Richard de Felton did homage for the lands which the sayd Richard held of the Prince in Maelor Saesneg.’ (Powel, Hist. of Wales, edit. 1584, p. 383.)

In the Minister’s accounts ($\frac{1180}{1}$ P.R.O. A.D. 1304–5) we have :—

‘The account of John Burgoyne of the issues of the manor of Overton from the Feast of St. Michael, 32 Ed. I. to Easter 33 Ed. I.’

The same is charged with 9l. 0s. 12½d. of the rents of the assize of Maylor Seysnek from the term of St. Martin 33 Ed. I. And with 7l. 6s. 6d. of the pleas and perquisites of the court of Maylor Seysnek from Michaelmas, 32 Ed. I. to Easter following. And with 6s. 2d. of the perquisites of the vill of Overton for the same time. And with 18s. 4d. by the hands of David the Clerk for 20 young oaks sold by order of Sir William Trussell, justice of Chester. Also issues from the wood of Fennes-hurst, the fair of Overton, the goods of persons dying intestate, &c.

In the Minister’s accounts, 1305, we have :—

‘Account of Ivo de Sulton, bailiff of Overton, of the issues of the same bailiwick from Easter 33 Ed. I. to Michaelmas following.’

Issues from rents of assize of Overton, Knolton, Erbystok Cleyl [i.e., Clayley in Bronington township], Wadebringemer [i.e., Batebruggemore between Cleley and Redbroc, both of which are mentioned in a Welsh Roll, 10 Ed. I. It is thought to be a Saxon word, and to refer to Bate-brugge, a toll for crossing bridges. It is the name of the moor which adjoins the Fens Wood. No traces of a bridge have been found (Memorials of Hanmer and Ellesmere, Par. Magazine, 8th June, 1888, p. 46. Canon Lee)], Yscout [i.e., Iscoed] Bangor, Albenb’ [i.e., Abenbury Fechan in Wrexham parish], Dycton [i.e., Dutton in Gresford], Bodyderit [i.e., Bodidris in Llanarmon yn Ial], Erbystok, Writhenbur’ [i.e., Worthenbury], and the parish of Overton, farm of the mill of Overton with the weir, the mill of Pendeleye [i.e., Penley] pasture, dead wood, issues of the fair of Overton, pleas and perquisites of the Welsh court of Overton, and the court of the vill of Overton.

The tenure roll of 1285 says that Ivo de Sulton holds the vill Sulton [i.e., Souulton near Wem] in the hundred of Bradford, co. Salop, under Robert Corbet.

He appears as a juror in many Shropshire inquisitions of the latter half of the 13th century. One Ivo de Sulton appears as an attorney in Sulton, A.D. 1199. (Eyton, Antiq. of Shrop., Vol. X., pp. 12, 13.)

On the 4th May 1309, there is in the Patent Rolls (Pat. Roll, 2 Ed. II., p. 2, m. 8d. P.R.O.) a Commission of Oyer and Terminer to Robert de Holand and others touching the misappropriation by Ivo de Sulton, King’s bailiff of Overton, Macclesfeld, and Maillorseysnek, of divers sums of money, received in lieu of services from the King’s tenants, his remission of felonies and outlawries, and also the occupation by Thomas Wassi and others without authority of the King’s lands, and felling and carrying away of trees.

On the 13th Sept. 1309, the Patent Rolls (Pat. Roll, 3 Ed. II. m. 34d. P.R.O.) have a similar Commission, issued to Robert de Bures and Hugh Lemynistre touching the same matter.

On March 1st, 1309, there is a grant on the Patent Rolls (Pat. Roll. 2 Ed. II. pt. 1. m. 15. P.R.O.) to Queen Isabella of the manors of Macclesfield, with its hundred, in co. Chester, Ovretun with the commote of Meillorsneseyk; Rosfeyr with the commote of Meney and Pennaghan with the hamlet of Dolpenmeyn in Wales, to hold as fully as the late Queen Eleanor had held the same.

March 6th, 1309.—The Patent Rolls (Pat. Roll. 2 Ed. II. pt. 1. m. 11. P.R.O.) give the grant to 'Richard de Chaufecire' of the forestership of Maillor Seisnek, lately held by 'William de Howell.'

Doubtless a large portion of Willington and Bronington townships were formerly forest. Domesday mentions a great wood as within the manor of Beddesfield. Large portions must have been destroyed by fire, fire-blackened stumps of trees being often found by the peat cutters in the Fens Moss.

The condition of this part of the country must have been much changed. A paved road was found under a portion of the Moss, and a British canoe in Llyn Bedydd [i.e., Lake of Baptism] which has been greatly reduced in size by modern drainage.

The River Roden takes its rise in Fens Moss.

Oct. 24th, 1316.—There is upon the Close Rolls a writ to 'Edward Earl of Chester the King's son [then aged 4] or his Justice of Chester, to deliver to John de Hinkle, Queen Isabella's bailiff of the manor of Macclesfield all fines, ransoms, and amercements received by them from the men and tenants of that manor, from the time the King committed the manor to her during pleasure.' (Close Roll. 10 Ed. II. m. 22. P.R.O.)

John de Hinkle was also bailiff of Overton, for in 1314–15 an inquest was held before 'John de Hinkle, Ballivo Isabelle Regina Anglie de Overton in Maelor Seysnek.' (Inquis. 8 Ed. II. See "Memorials of Hanmer," p. 9.)

There are several Commissions of Oyer and Terminer, &c. directed to John de Hinkle touching questions in cos. Chester and Salop. (See P.R.O.)

He was sheriff of Shropshire in 1327, and again 20th March 1330 (4 Edw. III.). 'Stoke-upon-Trent was the inheritance of the Hinckleys, a race of knights in the co. of Stafford.' (See Sheriffs of Shropshire.)

1 Feb. 1327.—The Patent Rolls say that Edward III. grants to his mother, Queen Isabella, for life (in furtherance of a resolution of Parliament that for her services in the matter of the treaty with France, and in suppressing the rebellion of the Despencers and others, that the lands, &c. assigned to her for dower should be increased from 4,500*l.* a year, 20,000 marks) of, inter alia, the manor of Overton in co. Flint, of the value of 126*l.* a year. (Pat. Roll. 1 Ed. III. pt. 1. m. 2. P.R.O.)

In 1329 one of the Bulkeleyes of Bulkeley in Cheshire appears as a landholder there.

Chairman—continued.

17 Feb. 1329.—There is on the Patent Rolls a confirmation of a charter, whereby Roger de Bulkylegh granted to Thomas his son in fee tail his lands in Overton, Knolton, Bangor, and Ebystoke in Meillorseisnek. (Pat. Roll. 3 Ed. III. pt. 1. m. 25. P.R.O.)

The grant of Maelor Saesneg was one of those resumed by King Edward III. in 1330. Rymer's Fœdera tells us in that year he took into his own hands all the grants that had been made during his minority and that he reduced the exorbitant dower of the Queen his mother to a pension of 3,000*l.* a year. (Rapin's Hist. of Eng. 2nd edit. Vol. I. p. 143.)

We find him re-granting it the same year.

16 Feb. 1330.—Edward III. gave the manor of Overton, the land of Mailor Seisnek, &c., to Eubole le Strange and his wife Alice [daughter and heir of Henry de Lacy, last Earl of Lincoln of that line, and widow of Thomas Plantagenet, Earl of Lancaster], which Eubole was a younger son of John le Strange of Knockyn (Charter Roll. 5 Ed. III. No. 83. Eyton X. p. 245).

Eubole le Strange died s. p. 1335, the manor then went to his nephew, Roger le Strange. He was dead upon 10 August 1349, and by his inquisition it appears that 'he held the castle and manor of Overton, with all the lands in Mailor Seisnick, together with advowsons of the churches of Bangor and Hanmer; all which he held from the Earl of Chester [i.e., Edward Plantagenet, afterwards called the Plack Prince. He died 1376] in chief by the service of half a knight's fee.' (Welsh Inquis. p. m. 23 Ed. III. No. 15. A.D. 1349.)

We find the above-named Roger le Strange re-granting the advowson of Hanmer to Haghmond Abbey in 1342.

License of King Ed. III. 12 May, 16 Ed. III.

'We have granted to Roger le Strange that he may be able to give . . . the advowry of the church of Hanmere, which of us is held in chief to our beloved . . . Abbot and convent of Haghmond.' (Haghmond Cart. License, Ed. III. 1342.)

12 Nov., 16 Edw. III.—'Roger le Strange, Lord of Knokin and Ellesmere, and Maylor Saysenok, greeting . . . to advance the abbey of Haghmond. . . . We have granted them the advowson of the church of Hanmere . . . so that the said convent support for us and ours a perpetual chantry.' (Ibid. Donation of Church by Roger le Strange, 1342.)

In June 1347, Roger, the Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, confirms the gift. (Ibid. Confirm. by Roger, Bishop of Coventry and Lichfield, June 1347.)

Roger le Strange was succeeded by his son John le Strange, who married Maud, daughter and co-heir of John Lord de Mohun.

He died 1398. His son, Richard le Strange quarrelled with the Abbot of Haghmond respecting the advowson of Hanmer in 1413–14. The abbot sends his attorney to Shrewsbury Assizes to demand 'the right which the same Richard unjustly deforces from him.'

Chairman—continued.

The jury decide in favour of the abbot. (Ibid. Roll 122. 1 Hen. V. A.D. 1413-14.)

Richard le Strange died in 1449-50. In that year we have his inquisition p. m., and in 1453-4 that of Elizabeth, daughter of Lord Cotham, of Sterburgh, widow of Richard le Strange, and then wife of Sir Roger Kynaston, of Hordley. (Welsh Records. Inquis. p. m. 28 Hen. VI. 1449-50. P.R.O.)

It says that she held on the day she died, together with Roger, then her husband, the manor of Overton Madock and land in Maylor Sasneche of the King as Earl of Chester, by the service of half a knight's fee, because they say that Richard le Strange, now deceased, was formerly seised of the manors and lands in his demesne, together with the advowson of Bangor, together with knight's fees, advowsons of churches, chases, parks, &c., by charter at Overton Madock, dated 8 June, 19 Hen. VI. [1441], they were granted to Durand Curteis and Thomas Blake, who devised and confirmed the same to Richard le Strange and Elizabeth, then his wife, to hold to them and their heirs. (Heralds. Visit. Shrop. p. 295.)

It states that John le Strange was son and heir. (Welsh Records. Inquis. p. m. 32 Hen. VI. P.R.O. Hagh. Cart. fol. 85b and 86.)

He succeeded as lord of Knokyn and Mohun, and Abbot Ludlow concedes to him and to Jacinta his wife (who was daughter to Richard Earl Rivers, and sister to Elizabeth Woodville, queen of Edward IV.) a perpetual chantry in Haghmond Abbey, for which he gave the church of Hanmer as an endowment on 1st Dec. 1476, with the provision that if 'the church of Hanmer should, by rebellion of the Welsh or otherwise be destroyed, or that it should not exceed the annual value of 10 marks, then the chantry to cease.'

John le Strange died in 1477, and was succeeded by his daughter Joan, who married George Stanley, son of the first Earl of Derby. He was summoned to Parliament jure uxoris 1482-1497. The inquisition taken after the death of Ferdinand Earl of Derby, 24th Sept. 1595, states that he was seised of the manors of Overton Maddock and Bangor, otherwise called the manor of Maylor Saisenecke, in county Flint, together with the advowson of the church of Bangor, appendant and pertaining to that manor. (Inquis. p. m. 37 Eliz. No. 2. P.R.O. 1595.) The lordship of Maelor Saesneg continued in the Earl of Derby's family (with the exception probably of Iscoed) until 8 Charles II., when we find a letter from Sir Thomas Hanmer, Bart., to Sir Orlando Bridgeman, concerning the purchase of the manorial rights. (Memorials of Hanmer, p. 86-87.)

It is dated 20th Nov. 1653.

He says:—

'I desire to have the parish of Hanmer, which consist of six townships, viz., Hanmer, Bettisfield, Bronington, Tybroughton, Willington, and Halghton; in the three first I have good houses and demesnes, and in the other three very considerable freeholds. The other gentlemen that are most interested in this are my cousin Hanmer, whose house of the fens is in this township of Bronington, but I hope that he and I may easily agree. Mr. Lloyd of Halghton, though he resides there, perhaps may be better pleased with the royalties of all Overton parish, where he hath most land, and relinquish Halton to me, being in Hanmer parish, he shall have my interest out to Overton, though I have some estate there. There is no other gentleman in Hanmer but my cousin Dymock, who lives in Willington; I believe he would oppose what he could.

In Worthenbury, Judge Puleston and Mr. Broughton of Broughton are the only persons of quality. In Bangor my Cosin Andrew Ellis must not be forgott, and in Bodidris Sir Evan Lloyd.

As for the other little parcels beyond Dee it matters not who hath them (i.e., Abenbury Fechan, Hoseley, and Marford) in Penley myself and my uncle Roger have most of the town.

There remains only the court baron of Overton to be considered of, which every gentleman may perhaps desire, because it is pretended that all the other towns of Maylor owe suit to that Court, and we are daily of late years called, prevented and fined therein though unjustly.

Because of these pretensions I would very gladly purchase that court to free all my estate from a foreign jurisdiction and occasion of suites for trifles, for many times much money is spent about appearing at courts and suits and services there, which are of little profit to any.

Sir Thos. Hanmer ultimately purchased the manorial rights in conjunction with Mr. John Bridgeman and Mr. Lloyd of Halghton in 1656 for 1,050*l.* from Charlotte de la Tremouille, Countess of Derby, the valiant defender of Lathom Castle for King Charles I.

What became of Mr. Bridgeman's portion of the purchase I do not know, nor of the rights of Bodidris yn Ial, a Flintshire township in the parish of Llanarmon, the property has passed to Lord Mostyn through the marriage of three succeeding heiresses, the first of whom, Margaret was a daughter of Sir Evan Lloyd who died in 1700. (Powis Fadog, Vol. v., p. 132.)

The manorial rights of Lightwood Green, which is partly in Overton and partly in Penley parish, and those of Knolton in Bangor, together with the advowson of Bangor, fell to the share of Thomas Lloyd of Halghton, and descended to his grandson, another Thomas Lloyd, who married Mary Phillips, heir of Gwernhaulod, their daughter Mary conveyed them by marriage together with Gwernhaulod to the Fletchers. Col. Lloyd Fletcher sold most of his property (excepting Gwernhaulod) together with the manorial rights to Mr. Pryce of Brynypys.

Mr. George Salter purchased them from him about 30 years ago, and resold them to the present owner, Edmund Peel, Esq., of Brynypys.

The common of Lightwood Green was enclosed many years ago. (See Hist. S. Asaph.)

Chairman—continued.

The patronage of Bangor was sold by Col. Lloyd Fletcher to the late Marquis of Westminster.

By an arrangement between Sir John, afterwards Lord Hanmer, and Mr. Pryce, the courts leet or manorial courts were held annually at Hanmer, in the old public-house which is now pulled down, but they were discontinued when the new Parish Constables Act, which was passed 13 & 14 Vict., came into full operation, principally on account of the expense connected with them and removed to Overton.

Lord Hanmer tells us that 'the free fishery of the Dee, of the same nature as free warren, once belonged to this manor within its bounds, and the common fishery exercised by the fishermen of Overton and Bangor is a relic of ancient coincident of the claim.'

Lord Kenyon has rights of turbary on the Fens Moor.

The nomination to the vicarage of Hanmer has been in possession of the Hanmer family since September 12, 1424, when it was granted to John de Hanmere and his heirs by Richard Abbot of Haghmond. (Hagh. Charters 2 & 3 Hen. VI.)

There are four Haghmond Charters concerning this.

The Hammers have owned lands in the hundred of Maelor since the time of Edward I. The first who assumed the name of Hanmer was John, youngest son of Thomas de Macclesfield, who was constable of Carnarvon Castle.

This John de Hanmer was grandfather of Sir David Hanmer, Chief Justice of England 1383, whose daughter Margaret was the wife of the patriot Owen Glyndwr.

Time does not suffice to trace their pedigree further. They are entitled, in common with the Pulestons, the Fletchers, the Dymokes of Penley, and the Kenyons (who inherit from Lloyd of the Bryn) by marriage, to the quarterings of several of the noble tribes of Wales.

The Pulestons came from Pilson, near Newport, co. Salop. They have held their lands since 7 Edward I.; in that year we find Richard de Pyvyledon restores to the King all the lands and tenements he held of the King himself in Worthenbury. Ancient kalendars and inventories of the Exchequer, Vol. I., p. 113.

He is described in the Salisbury manuscripts as of Emberhall [i.e., Emral] in 1284.

The same year the forest of Roger de Pyvleston is mentioned in a grant of land at Willington.

Threapwood, a parish which is partly in Flintshire and partly in Cheshire, formed a portion of the Domesday hundred of Duddistan and part of the Domesday forest of Broughton. Until late years it was a tract of waste common and was extra-parochial. It was exempt from all local jurisdiction, and bore formerly an evil name. I heard somebody ask to-day when it was made a parish. I think it was in 1816, but I am not quite sure of the date.

The township of Iscoed in Flintshire contains two salt springs at the Lower Wyche; which are mentioned in the 26th and 27th Report of the Chairman—continued.

Welsh Records (see Arch. Camb. Series 4, Vol. 7, p. 91. 'Iscoed in Maelor Saesneg,' by Canon Lee). The holding of them is not very clear, as they are mixed up with the Over or Upper Fulwiche, which is in Cheshire. They appear, however, to have been held by the barons of Malpas. Urian de St. Pierre (who held a fourth part of the barony of Malpas, in right of his grandmother Idonea, daughter and co-heir of David le Clerc) appears to have held the Lower Wyche of Richard de Sutton, second husband of Isabella his first cousin in free socage, by service of 20*d.* yearly, value 1 mark, in 28 Ed. I. [1299–1300]. It was granted 23 Hen. VII. [1507–8] by his descendant Richard de Prestland to Edmond Dudley. Lord Dudley sold them 18 Hen. VIII. [1526–7] to William Davidson of Chester, merchant, who granted them the following year, for the use of Malpas Grammar School, founded by Sir Randolph Brereton in 1527.

These salt pits were worked until about 35 years ago.

Amongst the Star Chamber trials we find Ralph de Brereton brings an action against Sir Randolph Brereton and others, concerning a water-mill in Maylor Sarsneke, co. Flint, temp. Henry VIII. (Star Chamber proceedings, Bundle 20, No. 98. 1 m.)

There was also a suit (ibid., Bundle 23, No. 182, 2 ms.) concerning a messuage and land in Hanmer, tried in that court 31. Hen. VIII. (1539–50), in which Elyn ap Llewellyn was the plaintiff, and David Lloyd, David ap John ap Gryfyt, Elizabeth Elys, and others, were the defendants.

Traces of the open field system of North Wales still exist in Erbistock and Bangor and Overton.

The tithe maps of Bangor and Erbistock show as late as 1847 the division of the ancient arable into strips or erws.

Mr. Neobard Palmer has written a paper with a map describing those in Erbistock. (See 'Archeo. Review,' No. 1, March 1888.)

He tells us that most of the strips measure 1 cyfar, a local measure still partially used, containing 2,560 square yards. Some, however, measure 2 cyfeiri, and others only half a cyfar. The name cyfar means, co-tillage, i.e., a joint ploughing. It was originally the quantity of land ploughed in a single yoking of the common plough team.

The present strips are now shared amongst five owners, and none of them are subject to the payment of tithe. The rector has about 36 of the strips, which represent the glebe as it was in British times; when 'the priest is to have Christ's tithe.' (Welsh Laws, p. 555.)

Most of the Mear stones have been removed, but some are still standing at the corners of the strips. (Rev. P. Sparling, rector of Erbistock.)

All the occupied land in Erbistock formed in 1270 a Gwely of family holdings; a deed was executed that year dated from the Castle, Dinas Brân, in which all 'the heirs of Erbistock' are mentioned as having sold to Howel ap Madoc a certain parcel of land there.

Under the Venedotian Code, 81–83, and Welsh Laws, pp. 740, 741, the patrimony was to be subdivided for three generations of heirs, but time does not admit of the explanation of the Welsh laws. If people would study them more, and see how we 'claimed land and soil by kin and descent' (Welsh Laws, pp. 526–529), they would understand why the Cymro was so careful to keep his pedigree.

I wish to express my thanks to W. Page, Esq., F.S.A., for his able assistance from the Public Records.

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,150. I think the first thing we ought to do is to thank Mrs. Bulkeley Owen for her paper, which is one of the most interesting that we have had, and will constitute a most interesting and valuable record. I will not ask you upon historical questions, because there are other members of the Commission who are far more able than I am myself to do that, but I shall be much obliged to you if you will give us what your practical opinion is as to the general social condition of the country, whether you think it has improved or not of late years?—I think it has very much improved. I can speak more about the women of the district.

57,151. We have seen that there are very excellent cottages round here?—No doubt the cottage accommodation has improved, and that in its turn has improved the character of those living in them. They take more pride in their homes; they like to see flowers in front of their doors, and they take as much pride in their homes as we do in ours. I think the best way in which the good of all classes would be promoted is for one class to work with another class. I think that class acting against class is provocative of great injury to both. We all should live and work together as members of one community.

57,152. In what direction has the social improvement taken place? Would you say it was in the direction of more education, or more opportunities for recreation?—I do not know that it is entirely education. The girls, for instance, are better conducted than they used to be. I think they are more respectable and more careful in their conduct in the farms than they used to be.

57,153. Are there greater opportunities for evening reading?—I do not find that the girls read very much. I think when the day's work is over they are not very fond of reading. It is a good thing to give them nice story books to read when they have leisure. Of course they have very little leisure in the farmhouses for reading except on the Sunday. I think they have risen altogether. They think more of what people think of them, and they are more particular in their conduct. I think there has been a great deal of communication between the ladies and the young girls, and that has perhaps tended to it a little. They consider a great deal more what those above them may think of their conduct. A great part of the duty of a landlord's wife I consider is to keep in contact with the young girls who leave the parish and go out into service, far away from home sometimes. One of the great means of keeping in touch with them I think has been societies like the Girls' Friendly Society, by which each lady is obliged to keep in touch with every girl who leaves her parish. I spend a great deal of my time in writing letters to girls. I have a great deal to do with them, and the girls write to me. They tell me about their love affairs even, and all kind of things that interest them.

57,154. I presume then your experience extends over a considerable area?—No, it is only in the parish in which I live. I do not live in this parish. I have had something to do with some other parishes lately. I am on the council of the society.

Lord Kenyon.

57,155. The girls you correspond with go to other parishes, that is what Sir John means?—I beg your pardon. Yes, they go all over England. We have a network of communication all over England, but I do not entirely rely upon that. I do not entirely transfer my girls when they go to some lady living in Northumberland, for instance. I find they like to be in touch with their old homes. I write to them in all parts of England about any matter occurring at their old homes which I think will interest them.

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,156. In all parts of England and in other parts of Wales too, I suppose?—Oh, yes, Wales too. They go all over England and Wales. I think if you keep in touch with them, and write about what will interest them, they feel that somebody cares for them. Further, I think it promotes thrift a great deal, because we encourage them very much to save money. A girl came home the other day, and she told me that she was going to be married; she only had a small place, but she had 40*l.* in the savings bank. I said, "That is a great deal for you to have saved." She said, "You first began it, because you made me put a shilling away. I should never have saved if I had not been encouraged when I was a very little girl to do so." She married very respectably, an artisan considerably above the class she was attached to, and there is 40*l.* to pay for her furniture and linen, and so on.

57,157. May I ask if you have interested yourself in reading rooms and such things?—I consider reading rooms very good. I think also clubs in a parish are very good things for the cottagers, but I think they should be allowed to manage them a good deal themselves. There should not be too much patronising. There should be a committee of the working men, and they should be allowed to manage their own affairs, and not be dictated to too much.

30 August 1894.]

Hon. Mrs. BULKELEY OWEN.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

57,158. As a matter of fact there are such clubs in this part of Wales?—Oh, I think so.

57,159. Is there one here in Hanmer?—I think not.

Lord Kenyon.

One has been started, and it may be started again in the winter; there is no permanent club.

Witness.

I think that young men like games better than they do reading.

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,160. In addition to the Girls' Friendly Society, have you a mothers' union?—Yes, we have a mothers' union, that is, to try to help the mothers. I think these mothers' unions should be managed in the same way, not dictating and saying exactly what people ought to do, but more giving your own experience with your own children.

57,161. May I ask over what area that influence extends, how far it is your mothers' union goes?—It goes over the whole of the St. Asaph diocese, but of course it has not spread to every village in the diocese. It was only started as a diocesan institution last year. There are about 30 branches.

57,162. So that with all that experience you are able to say you think that the social position of the people has been improving?—Yes, I think it is improving gradually. Of course there is room for a great deal more improvement.

57,163. But the tendency is the right way?—Yes, I think so. I think there is a great deal to be done by keeping touch among all classes, and that a great deal of harm is done by making mischief between people.

Professor Rhys.

57,164. I was going to ask if you, in studying the history of this district, have come to the conclusion that it was ever cleared of the original people, or simply that they have become English in speech gradually?—I do not know how the English language came in exactly. I have not been able to prove that. I think the names have always remained Welsh. I fancy the field names are mostly Welsh, and as late as that deed of 1270 all the witnesses who signed it were Welsh. Everyone of the witnesses who witnessed Thomas de Macclesfield's deed are Welsh names.

57,165. I noticed, in passing through the villages, that the names on the sign-boards looked just like the names in the rest of Wales?—Yes.

57,166. But the fact of the field names being mostly Welsh would go to prove, would it not, that the country had never been cleared of its Welsh inhabitants?—Yes. I suppose the field names go on for a long time. They do not change very much.

A 86439.

57,167. Some of the names of the villages are English and some are Welsh?—Yes, and some I think are what I may call Welsh names Anglicised.

57,168. Translated or adapted?—Yes, or made a sort of compound word.

57,169. I noticed one name mentioned in your paper just now, Angharad. Was not that a great name in the pedigrees of this district?—Angharad is a name that appears in many of the Welsh papers, but this Angharad was the daughter of Owen Gwynedd of Gwynedd, in Merionethshire and Carnarvonshire.

57,170. I have identified that name in a very much more ancient form, Hancarate, in a signature in the Book of Saint Chad, as it is called?—Yes, I know the book.

57,171. I do not know exactly where it came into the book, whether in South Wales, or after it had left?—Angharad seems to be an Anglicised form of Angharan.

57,172. I thought Hancarate was an early form, and that it had been kept for Latin use. I do not know that I have anything further to ask you. It is very gratifying to learn what you and Sir Gresley Puleston have said with regard to the improvement in the social state of the district?—Perhaps I ought to have said that Threapwood is quite different to what it used to be when it was exempt from parochial jurisdiction. It has lost its evil name, and is now inhabited by most respectable people. I hope they will not think that I wished to cast any slur upon them.

57,173. I do not think they will entertain that notion. There used to be a good school there, I know?—Yes.

Mr. Grove.

57,174. In developing the influence of clubs, I suppose you find them the more useful the farther they are kept away from public-house influence?—Most decidedly. I think a great deal of the poverty and distress comes from the public-houses. A great deal of the agricultural distress and so on may be debited to the public-houses.

Mr. Seebohm.

57,175. Referring to what Professor Rhys said with regard to there being no disturbance of people, this fact that you mentioned towards the end of your valuable paper that in Erbistock in the division into strips, the cyfars contain 2,560 square yards, which shows that it is the old customary acre of this country, shows a long continuing custom?—Yes.

57,176. And seeing that we have that very same customary acre on the other side of the Dee, in South Lancashire, and that the wedge that was driven in by the Saxon invasion of Chester did not disturb it, so that we have it on both sides—that again is proof that it itself goes back before the Saxon invasion, and therefore that the Welsh system has continued on. Then there is another very interesting little bit of history here in the last sentence but two of your evidence, where the rector has 36 of these strips in lieu of his tithes, and the rest of these strips are not subject to tithe. That again connects itself with a very ancient custom many hundreds of years before the Norman Conquest, in which we have records that the tithes were taken in every tenth strip as it was traversed by the plough. It was so in many parts of England, and it is interesting to find that it was so in this district. It is impossible to have heard this very complete history without seeing how very loyal you are, Mrs. Bulkeley Owen, to the Welsh nation, but I just want to ask this one question. Here I suppose Welsh is not taught in the schools?—No, I think not. I do not think anyone speaks Welsh at all in this district. I never heard of anyone.

57,177. Looking at it as a broad question, you would not wish to introduce it in the schools now?—I do not know. I would rather not answer that question. From an antiquarian point of view I should, I do not like the language of my forefathers to die out altogether.

57,178. I can quite appreciate that, but you do not wish any increased separation from England at any rate?—It is very useful of course to know English, because they go out to all parts of England into service, and into trades and so on, and I do not think it would be a good thing for all Welsh people to live exactly in the Principality.

57,179. You would not wish to return to the Welsh language in order to make any distinct nationality, and to separate England from Wales in any way?—No; but I consider that the whole of England belongs to Wales, I consider it is Wales and England, not England and Wales.

57,180. So that you consider England has been conquered by Wales?—Yes, I consider that we hold from the Tudors at the present time. I consider that Queen Victoria holds in right of Henry VII.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,181. Generally speaking, are the labourers members of any benefit societies?—As regards many of them, they belong to friendly societies, but I think it is a great pity that they are not more careful in—

57,182. Managing?—No, not managing, but in seeing whether the societies are sound or not. Of course, you know that from time to time reports are presented to Parliament showing what societies are sound. I think people are very much tempted to put into a society because some neighbour tells them that it is a large society, such, for instance, as the Foresters: I do not mean to say anything against the Foresters, but they go all over the country, and, therefore people think that one branch helps another, which, of course, you know it does not do. I think that they ought always to see that the society they contemplate joining is actuarially sound before they join it. I am afraid they are not careful enough in that way, and sometimes when little local societies break, they lose all their savings.

57,183. The labourers should be encouraged to join friendly societies, you think?—I think, certainly they should, and to go in young, because, of course, the payment is smaller.

Mr. Grove.

57,184. Are the labourers of the district here generally men of sober habits?—That I cannot state: I do not live in this parish, and I cannot tell you. I find, working among boys and girls that it is far easier to get the girls to save than the boys. Girls will put a great deal more in the savings' banks than boys put in. Young men have more temptations to spend their money.

57,185. Do you live near the borders?—Yes, I live about 10 miles from the border, in Shropshire.

57,186. You do not know whether there are any infringements of the Sunday Closing Act in the neighbourhood?—There is no Sunday closing where I live in Shropshire. I wish we had it. I am very strongly in favour of Sunday closing, but we never hear of any illicit clubs in Hanmer, or any illicit drinking on Sundays. I think the public-houses are always shut. Probably one of the magistrates would be better able to answer that question.

Lord Kenyon.

I may say that there were six-day licenses here before the Sunday Closing Act.

Mr. Griffiths.

57,187. I cannot help observing in reading your evidence, the different manner in which this word Saisenecke is spelt?—It is not my spelling. I copied it from the documents as it was spelt there.

57,188. Can you tell us which of these is most likely to be most reliable?—The documents come, of course, from the English Record Office, and they were copied by English clerks, or Latin clerks, as the case might be, in days gone by. They are Latin documents mostly, translated, and the Latin clerks were not familiar with the proper Welsh spelling. I suppose the proper spelling would be Maelor Saesneg, would it not. I think as a Welshman you are more likely to know than I am.

57,189. That is what I should say myself, but the English do corrupt our beautiful Welsh language very much?—Of course they do, naturally. As I have explained, the copying would be done by Latin or English clerks, who would be transcribing these documents in the Record Office.

Chairman.

Mrs. Bulkeley Owen, we are very much obliged to you for coming forward and offering this very interesting and valuable evidence.

Chairman—continued.

57,190. You live at Gredington, Whitechurch, and you are agent, I believe, to Lord Kenyon?—I am.

57,191. Are you agent for any other estates?—I am also agent for Mr. Williams Vaughan, of Oswestry, whose estate is about 800 acres, the rent of which is about 1,100*l.* Lord Kenyon's estate, which I manage here, is 8,000 acres, and the rental is 10,000*l.* a year.

57,192. We can take it that you have a good practical knowledge of farming?—I think so.

57,193. Your estates extend over a large district?—Yes, I manage about 10,000 acres altogether. I have drawn up a short statement. Shall I go through it?

57,194. Would you kindly read it? Do not go through what we have already heard from other witnesses?—No.

57,195. But anything that is of interest with regard to the neighbourhood and of interest to the Commissioners, please tell us?—I have been agent to Lord Kenyon for eight years. The evidence that I propose to give refers to the counties of Flint and Denbigh, and it also refers to all the estates under my management as well as to my general knowledge and information. I may say that I was born not very far from Wrexham, and I have lived all my life in this district. The estates that I manage are in the hundred of Maelor, Flintshire, and in the hundred of Bromfield in Denbighshire. There is no unenclosed land in this part of the world, and there are no sheep walks. The houses and buildings on the large estates are kept in better repair, and the rents are generally lower than they are on small properties, and more assistance is given in times of depression. Most large land-owners are resident. Language, religion, and politics make no difference whatever. I may say that in letting a farm I have never inquired the religion or politics of the applicant. The date of entry I think you have already heard about.

57,196. Yes, we have had that?—With regard to leases, there is very little demand for them.

57,197. That we have heard too?—I have only been asked once for a lease. I think the tenants feel more free under the agreements, which on large estates are really as safe as a lease. The changes of tenancy have not been more frequent of late years; in fact, on those estates that I manage we have had practically no changes of tenancies at all. In some years we have had no changes at all. This year on the Gredington estate I have one farmer who is leaving, and on the other estate we have no changes whatever. I have a table here showing the number of changes on the Gredington estate since 1886—I mean to say farm changes. The total number from 1886 out of 67 farms is only 13, which includes one farmer who retired in favour of his son, and another man who died. As I said before, there has been no change at all for some years, and there is only one this year. As regards building, planting, and brick-yards, there is always compensation given, and proper notice is always served. The tenant is always compensated for damage done by timber felling. I produce Lord Kenyon's agreement.

57,198. Will you put that in?—Yes. (The Witness handed in agreement.) I have never heard any serious complaints with regard to the clauses, and to the best of my knowledge the penalising clauses have never been enforced.

57,199. Do you think your penalising clauses are strict or not?—I think they are about the usual thing. I always make a point of giving tenants a copy of their agreement before they enter into any arrangement with me, as regards the letting of the farm. I also go as far as this: when I have a man whom I consider to be a suitable applicant for a farm, I give him his agreement, and I ask him to take it home and read it over before he comes to me to take the farm, so that there shall be no doubt as to whether he thoroughly understands that agreement or not. The rent on the Gredington estate varies from 10*s.* an acre to 2*l.* an acre for farm land. We have some market garden land which lets up to slightly over 3*l.* I think the other estates in this district are all about the same. The average per acre is something about 25*s.*

57,200. I see in your agreement you do not allow the tenant to sell hay and straw, but I suppose practically you make no objection?—I think the agreement contains a clause that with permission the tenant shall be allowed to do so.

57,201. It is the 13th clause, and it says that it shall be permitted from time to time?—Yes.

57,202. I suppose practically a good tenant can sell what he likes?—I have never yet stopped a man from selling any, and we should never think of doing so unless we thought that the man was trying to rob the farm—selling everything and putting nothing back.

57,203. You allow perfect freedom in cultivation?—Yes, absolutely. As regards carting, I do not know whether you care to hear anything more about carting.

57,204. I suppose it is the usual state of things, is it?—Well, I should like to point out that in our agreement we have a clause inserted that the tenant is to do so many days' carting in every year for the landlord, but I should also like to point out that that clause is never enforced. It is always done most willingly if we ask a man to help us, just in the same way as one neighbour would help another. Of course we should never think of asking a man to cart for us when he was busy, or if he had a lame horse, or anything of that sort; it is simply done as a neighbourly act.

57,205. Still you retain it in the agreement?—Yes, it has been retained in the agreement. There are a great many tenants on the estate who during the time I have been agent, namely, for eight years, I know have never done a day's

Mr. T. G. BOSCAWEN.

carting. As regards carting for repairs, we always compensate a man if he should leave after having done a lot of carting to his farm, and I have adopted a scale, which has seemed to work pretty well, on the 10 years' system, a sliding scale of 10 years; of course reducing by tenths the total amount. As regards rents, the general way in which we relet a farm is by reletting it at the old rental; we never let farms by tender. As regards reductions in rent, I have a table here which will give the reductions in rent during the last eight years.

57,206. Is that on the Gredington estates?—That is on the Gredington estates. There have been 17 farms the yearly rent of which has been permanently reduced. The total reductions come to very nearly 400l.

57,207. Are they permanent?—They are permanent reductions.

57,208. Permanent reductions 400l. a year?—Yes, about that. As regards abatements in 1885-6, 10 per cent. was returned on a half year's rent; in 1886-7, 10 per cent. was returned on the year's rent; in 1887-8, the same was returned on the year's rent, and in 1893-4, 10 per cent. was again returned on the year's rent. So that they have had $3\frac{1}{2}$ years since 1886 of 10 per cent. returned in addition to various other allowances which have been made from time to time for bone manures in special cases of depression. We hold our rent days from 5 to 10 weeks (it varies in different places) after the date of the rent falling due. The sizes of farms in this district run from 20 to 270 acres, which gives an average of about 100 acres.

As regards the labourers, we find that they are rather scarcer than they used to be, and that they are dearer, I mean to say that they want more wages. I think I may say that all the fences and ditches and so on on the estate are in very fair order, but we find that the tenants expect more help from the landlord than I believe was formerly the case. There is no uncultivated land in this part of the world that I am aware of. A large amount of land has been laid down to grass, in some cases whole farms, which has resulted in a great scarcity of buildings, and consequently has been the cause of expense to the landlord. The cause of laying down to grass has been the low price of corn, and the fact that dairying, which is the staple trade of this country, pays so much better. As regards improvements, I am prepared to answer any question upon the custom of the estates. There is no contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, except out of section 33 in some cases, but we always give the tenant the chance if he likes, of having a year's notice—just whatever he prefers; we do not care in the least which it is. Farmers occasionally apply for consent to specific improvements, and we give them such consent as a rule. Allowances are all provided for by agreements which follow the custom of the country, or by the Agricultural Holdings Act. In Lord Kenyon's agreement we have a scale which provides for the allowance the tenants should receive back. That scale was drawn up originally by the Shropshire Chamber of Agriculture.

57,209. That is a sort of custom of the country then?—It practically amounts to that. Game is preserved to a certain extent in the district, of course subject to the Ground Game Act, and wherever there has been any case of damage, I think I may say that the tenant has always been compensated.

An extremely good feeling exists with regard to the game between landlord and tenant. The tenants are only too pleased, I believe, to do anything they can to assist in preserving the game. As regards agricultural depression, we have had butter and cheese-making lectures and demonstrations in this district. I may add that at one of those classes I was the local secretary, and I attended several of the demonstrations, and everything went off very well. I think it has been very beneficial to the neighbourhood. I hear that many farmers have adopted the system which was then shown with very good results. I do not know of any combination amongst the landlords not to accept tenants, or amongst the farmers or labourers to fix wages. There are very few peasant proprietors or freehold farmers in this part of the world. The great proportion of the district belongs to about half a dozen large estates. The tenant farmers' wives generally dairy, and children work at home, and are very often started on farms by their parents. I believe that present rents could be maintained if wages were paid to the children, because we see a great many farmers with no children paying wages, and doing remarkably well. Cottage accommodation is slightly deficient. I believe the reason that more cottages have not been built in this district is simply because landlords have had so much farmwork to do—so many buildings to put up—in consequence of the large amount of land that has been laid down to grass. Of course for that we were obliged to provide buildings for the stock therefore we have not been able to devote very much money to building cottages. As regards small holdings, I have a note here that we have on the Gredington estate cottage holdings which have attached to them grass land ranging from 2 to 16 acres, and we have 34 cottages which have less than 2 acres. That is, in one or two cases they have perhaps a garden, and about half an acre, or perhaps an acre of grass land.

57,210. None less than one acre?—No, when they are less than one acre they are simply cottages and gardens.

57,211. Yes, there is nothing less than an acre of grass of course?—No, this calculation does not include any cottages that are let with the farms. We have a certain number of cottages that are let with the farms, and which are included in the farmer's rent. I have not in that calculation included those at all.

57,212. These cottages are let direct from the landlord?—They are let direct from the landlord. We have something like 91 cottages.

57,213. That is the total number, 91?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

57,214. Then how many cottages do you let with the farms. Have you any idea?—I have not got the number.

57,215. You do not know?—I do not know now. I can find out of course. I should say that we had not more than a couple of dozen that we let with the farms.

57,216. Just let for the stock-man, and so on?—Yes, for the shepherd, the waggoner, and so on.

57,217. That is, I suppose, three cottages with a farm—that is all?—It is more often two.

57,218. All the rest of the cottages are held direct from the landlord?—Exactly. There is no doubt that the labourers have left the country districts and migrated into the manufacturing districts, and we find that is more so every year, that they tend to get away into the towns. As regards the general relations between landlord and tenant, I think I may say that they are most friendly, and I think that this is proved by the very large demand that there is for farms in this district. The demand is very greatly in excess of the farms to let. You see that in eight years we have only had 13 changes and I never go to any of these adjacent market towns without receiving one application for a farm. I have on my books now, I think I might say, 30 or 40 names of eligible men whom I would put into any farm that we had to let. The moment a farm is to let it is snapped up. I think also the very few changes of tenancy show the friendly relations between landlord and tenant.

57,219. You say there is a great demand for farms on Lord Kenyon's estate?—Yes, and I believe I may say on other estates too.

57,220. I should like to know about that. Is that general through the district?—I think so.

57,221. Is it not confined at all to one or two estates, but it is general all over the country?—Fairly general I think.

57,222. The farms around here are not very large, are they?—No, they average about 100 acres.

57,223. That will be a small farm?—Yes, we do not call anything a big farm about here, unless it is over 200 acres.

57,224. Do you find that these small farms are most greedily snapped up than they would be if they were 500 acre plots, or say 250 acres?—Yes, I find the small farms of from 70 to 100 acres are more easy to let.

57,225. They are mostly grass?—Yes, dairying of course is the chief thing. They are mostly grass, but on most farms there are a few fields ploughed to grow a few roots and straw, but we have farms that have not a single acre of plough on them—which are entirely grass.

I should also like to point out that I think the regular way in which rents are paid proves the very friendly relations between landlord and tenant. I may say that in 1891, although as I think I mentioned before Lord Kenyon's rent roll is 10,000*l.* a year, I had not a single arrear on the estate, which means that I went, each rent day, to collect so much money, and I brought it away each time. In 1892 there was only one arrear on the whole estate, and at the present moment I think we have three, but those arrears are chiefly owing to the bad times last year, and also we have told them not to be in a hurry to pay—not to sell anything at a loss—and that we are quite prepared to wait for their convenience, and to take the money when it suits them to pay it. With regard to one of the two other estates (that is a smaller estate of the trustees of the late Mr. Nixon) I have been agent there for four years, and there has never been any arrear at all, every rent day we have collected the full amount of money, so that I think that shows that the relations between landlord and tenant cannot be very far wrong.

57,226. It also shows that the land is fairly rented too?—I think so. I have here a table of the expenditure on Lord Kenyon's estate. I asked Lord Kenyon whether he would like this put in, and he said he would. With your permission I would like to read it.

57,227. Yes, if you please?—The total expenditure from the year 1887 to 1893 has been 8,420*l.*

57,228. That is keeping up the estate, is it not?—That is keeping up the farm and cottages. During that number of years we have received in rent 66,700*l.* That works out to an expenditure equal to 12½ per cent.

57,229. Does that include all those new buildings that there are about there?—Yes. Then I should like to point out this, that of course that 66,000*l.* which we have received is the net rental received, but Lord Kenyon has to pay a very large number of annuities on this estate. There is also the tithe to pay out of that, and the income tax, deducting the tithe, the income tax, and the annuities, which three items amount to 31,362*l.*

57,230. That is from 1887 to 1893?—Yes—deducting that amount from the 66,700*l.* it leaves the net income from the Welsh estates for seven years, 35,338*l.*

57,231. That is the net income?—That is the net income for seven years. Now taking the expenditure represented by the amount which I gave before of 8,420*l.*, that works out on the net income to an expenditure of something like 24 per cent.

57,232. Yes, it does. That is the 12½ per cent. on the gross?—On the gross actually received, but on the net that Lord Kenyon puts in his pocket he has spent about 24 per cent. I think that is all the evidence I am prepared with.

57,233. I should like to ask you about one thing which seems a speciality in this district, and that is with regard to these small fields that you attach to the cottages. Do you consider them a great and special advantage to the agricultural population?—I think they are, certainly.

57,234. Will you go as far as to say what Sir Gresley Puleston said, that he had never known any man come to poverty who kept two or three cows?—I cannot say that I ever have.

30 August 1894.]

Mr. T. G. BOSCAWEN.

57,235. It puts the labouring population in a very much better position?—Yes, and it makes them stick to their work very much better; if a man has a home and a cow or two he is not so likely to leave his work, and is more likely to stick to his master and do his best for him.

57,236. Mr. Wickham told us yesterday that the farmers are not at all willing to give up this land to the labourers, and that it is not a popular move at all so far as the farmers are concerned; but in consequence of Lord Tollemache's action they are obliged in Cheshire to do so, or else they cannot get a good man?—Yes.

57,237. Do you think that is the case as a rule?—Yes, I think the farmers do not like losing a portion of their farms, but they see plainly now that if they want to keep men they must give land for them, and most of them who have the cottages, I think, would be quite prepared now to give up a piece of land to put to the cottages.

57,238. This principle has been going on for a great many years on this estate; it is not a new principle on this estate?—No.

57,239. And Lord Tollemache, as I understand (I knew him well), had great opposition from the farmers of the district when he introduced this plan on his estate?—Yes.

57,240. That is so?—Yes, I believe so.

57,241. But the farmers are gradually getting round to see that it is a good thing for the farming population as well as the labouring population. They are getting to see that by degrees?—Yes, I think so. That is my opinion certainly with regard to this district.

57,242. But still the old feeling exists against it?—To a certain extent. They do not like to part with any part of the farm.

57,243. They would not willingly part with any portion of the farm to accommodate the labourers?—Possibly not, unless they saw that they were going to benefit themselves by it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,244. Which do you consider best, a cottage with from 2 to 16 acres of land or a cottage with something under two acres. I think you say that there are 34 cottages upon the Gredington estate with land less than two acres?—Yes. When I say less than two acres you know that two acres include the garden.

57,245. Would two acres, including a garden, be sufficient to keep a cow?—Yes. It arises in this way, sometimes there has been perhaps a small portion of waste land that has not been cultivated, and that has been laid down to grass at some time, and added to the cottage—to the holding. It is very curious, but we have several cases where they have half an acre or three-quarters of an acre of grass land belonging to them. These small holdings are not of recent date, none have been created during the last 10 years.

57,246. What would they do with that half acre of grass land?—They generally mow it and sell the hay, or perhaps take in a neighbour's cow to graze for a bit—something of that sort. It is a certain amount of profit to them, but of course not very much.

57,247. Not very much?—No.

57,248. Is that half acre ever manured?—

Well, it generally gets some manure because as a rule if the man is a wise man he will get one of the neighbours to buy the hay on the condition that he has the manure, or he makes some arrangement of that sort.

57,249. Yes, that is what I wanted to know. But as a rule it is better to have a cottage with sufficient land attached to keep a cow?—Certainly.

57,250. There would be more demand for a holding of that kind, of course?—Oh, yes; those are the holdings for which we have the greatest demand—small holdings under 10 acres.

57,251. Upon any of these small holdings, do they cultivate the land?—I do not think there are any that are cultivated.

57,252. The people that live on these small holdings of between 2 and 16 acres, would be labourers who would be working on adjoining farms?—Yes, or about here on the estate. We employ a large number of men on the estate; all our labourers live round about, and they almost all of them have one of these holdings from 2 to 16 acres, but the generality of the tenants of those holdings are labourers of some sort or another.

57,253. Or mechanics?—Yes.

57,254. How do they dispose of the produce of the milk, the butter, or the cheese that they make?—I believe they generally make butter and they send the butter to market.

57,255. To Whitechurch?—To Whitechurch, or other places, according to which market town is nearest—some to Wrexham and some to Ellesmere. They send it once a week to market. There is generally some man in the district who goes round and collects all the butter, and takes it in for them.

57,256. You find that there is no desire to migrate among the people who have these holdings?—No, I think they are very stationary.

57,257. And you would recommend the adoption of this plan as far as possible?—I would recommend it as far as the benefit to the people goes, but from a financial point of view I could not recommend it to a landlord, because there is no doubt that it is a great expense.

57,258. You say that you have very few cases of tenants being in arrear, are you in a position to know how those tenants stand with the different tradesmen?—No, I am not, I never inquire.

57,259. Is there a feeling of satisfaction with regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act in the district?—I believe so. In the few cases which I have had anything to do with it seems to have given satisfaction, but in regard to the great number of big estates their agreement provides a scale similar to the one that I have put in.

57,260. So that there is not much necessity to put the Act into operation?—Not much; isolated cases, of course, have occurred.

30 August 1894.]

Mr. T. G. BOSCAWEN.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

57,261. I think you say that you have received notice from some tenants asking for consent for specific improvements?—Yes; I have.

57,262. What would be the nature of those improvements?—As a rule they are for hay bays, galvanized hay bays. We have always given permission to erect them as tenants' fixtures to be either removed at the termination of the tenancy, or to be sold to the landlord or the incoming tenant at a valuation to be fixed by an impartial man.

57,263. What about the laying down of land to grass?—The laying down of land is one of those improvements which a tenant cannot make unless he has permission; if he lays down land to permanent pasture without permission he cannot claim for it at all.

57,264. No, but in cases where land has been laid down has it been laid down at the landlord's expense?—Well, it has been done in various ways. I always recommend now the giving of seeds by the landlord on the condition that the tenant will do the labour, and provided of course that he has a certain amount of use out of the field there is no claim made. That has always worked very satisfactorily. I have given this spring something like 40*l.* worth of seeds to a large farm near Wrexham on those terms, but in other cases the farmer has bought the seeds and laid the field down entirely at his own expense. Of course then he would have to be compensated when he left for whatever the unexpired value was that remained in the field.

57,265. And of course it would be assessed by valuation?—It would be a matter of valuation. We had a case here about five years ago on a large farm on which the tenant had laid down a very large quantity of grass; the tenant and myself agreed on a valuer, and he valued the improvement, and his valuation was paid by Lord Kenyon to the tenant.

57,266. In cases where you supply the seeds you would exercise of course a good deal of care, and see that the land was well prepared?—I always do that.

Mr. Grove.

57,267. Do we gather from you that you think there is sufficient labour on the land?—Yes, I think so, except at harvest time. There seems to be rather a scarcity then.

57,268. Do you think that increased fruit culture could be carried out with any advantage in this district?—No, I think not. The price of English fruit is so small that there is a very great difficulty in selling it.

57,269. In reference to the changes on the estate, you spoke of one change in consequence of death. I suppose if there is a death you give the farm if you can to a member of the family, as a rule?—Yes. I believe that in this case that I referred to, the farm was let to the widow and the eldest son as joint tenants.

Mr. Grove—continued.

57,270. How long is it since the agreement you have put in was prepared? Was it prepared since you have been agent to the estate?—Yes, it was prepared just at the time that I became agent. It is the same agreement almost exactly word for word which is in force on Lord Brownlow's estate, the adjoining estate here, which is one of the largest estates in Shropshire.

Professor Rhys.

57,271. You mentioned that at harvest time there might be a difficulty in getting enough labour. Do the farmers about here ever engage Irish labour for the harvest?—Yes, I believe so, when they can get it they are very glad to have it.

57,272. Of course a good many of the farmers' sons go into other occupations?—I believe so.

57,273. They cannot all have farms?—No.

57,274. What becomes of them, do you know?—The farmers' sons?

57,275. Yes, the farmers' sons who leave. What do they take to generally?—I think as a rule a farmer's son tries, if he possibly can, to get a farm in the neighbourhood, and then hopes to by degrees get a farm in the old district again. I find that is constantly the case; they take farms further away, because they cannot get one perhaps in the adjoining neighbourhood, and then when the opportunity occurs they come nearer home.

57,276. Do the farmers' sons mostly go in for farming?—I should say so.

57,277. Do they not go into various branches of trade in the towns, and so on?—Possibly some may become shop-keepers, and so forth.

57,278. But by preference they try to get farms?—I think so.

57,279. As to the farmers' daughters, they do not all have an occupation at home, I suppose? What becomes of them; do any of them go away?—I really could not say.

57,280. Do they stay at home and help?—As a rule the farmers' daughters are dairy maids and make the cheese and look after the house generally.

57,281. With regard to the dairies, what have you to say?—I think the dairy accommodation in this district is very good. It has been very much improved in the course of the last 10 years with regard to construction.

57,282. In consequence of what?—I think in consequence of the fact that dairying pays so much better, and that so much more attention has been directed to it.

57,283. Is there a general improvement arising from the competition, and from the farmers own wish to improve the chances of selling their produce?—Quite so.

57,284. It is not by reason of any systematic reform?—Are you referring to the construction of the actual buildings?

57,285. Yes?—Well, I think that the landlords have had their attention directed to dairying, finding it is the staple trade, and they have

30 August 1894.]

Mr. T. G. BOSCAWEN.

met the times and done what they could to improve the accommodation.

57,286. Is that so on your estates?—That is so on Lord Kenyon's estate, and on the other estates in the neighbourhood.

57,287. Do you know that yourself?—I know of that as a fact.

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,288. Has your expenditure been large in altering the farm buildings on account of the laying down to permanent pasture?—Yes, it has.

57,289. Of course it involves the alteration from barns to cow-sheds?—Yes.

57,290. That has been a considerable expense within recent years?—I should think the alteration of barns to cow-sheds has been one of the chief items.

57,291. Yes, that is one of the points I was coming to. It has been the principal item in repairs?—Yes.

57,292. You make your own bricks?—We do.

57,293. And all the buildings about here are of brick and not of stone?—They are all of brick.

57,294. Do you find it a good, durable material?—Yes, we do. They are good country bricks.

57,295. I was going to ask about the form in which you apply phosphates to the land; you bone the land, but what is the form of boning?—They generally use boiled bones.

57,296. Is there a chemical manufactory in this district?—Not just in this immediate neighbourhood.

57,297. Where do you get the bone from?—It comes from various big firms in the neighbourhood, Procter and Rylands, and Vickers, Manchester, and sundry other big firms.

57,298. There are various forms of phosphates?—Various forms of phosphates.

57,299. What do you call it?—It is called boiled ground bone.

57,300. How long do you consider that particular form of bone applied to the land will retain its virtue?—I have not got the scale before me, but the scale in our agreement gives that.

57,301. Would you tell me from the scale (handing agreement to witness)?—Boiled ground bones applied to pasture land lasts for four years, boiled ground bones applied to meadows mown lasts for two years; in the last year of the tenancy a tenant would get back two-thirds of the value, and in the last year but one one-third.

57,302. Then as to that agreement, is that always enforced, or is it sometimes modified between you and the tenant?—The scale—the schedule?

57,303. No, I do not mean the scale, but the ordinary penalising terms of the agreement?—Yes, we are always open, if a tenant objects to any particular clause, to modify it.

57,304. As a matter of fact you have sometimes modified it?—Yes, I think if required I can produce a dozen that have been modified.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,305. Just one question; to what do you attribute the depression in agriculture. Sir Gresley Puleston told us that he attributed it entirely to bad trade?—I think it is a very difficult question to answer, because there have been so many different remedies mooted, but I think it is chiefly owing to the very large import of foreign food. If we could have some slight protection I think it would be a great advantage.

57,306. Do you think there are any other causes besides the importation of foreign produce?—I think the rates press rather heavily sometimes on a farmer. The way that a farmer is rated is rather heavy compared to the way that other people are rated, a farmer is assessed on such a big amount as a rule.

57,307. Is there any other cause in your opinion?—No, I believe that the chief reason of the depression is the imports. I do not think there is any other cause.

57,308. Do you think that bad seasons have had anything to do with it?—Of course those also assist, no doubt, to cause bad times, but I think the primary cause is the enormous foreign imports of food that come in, they drive the home productions out of the market altogether.

57,309. Is there a good deal of foreign produce consumed in this district—Indian corn or foreign hay for instance?—Yes, an enormous quantity, and of foreign meal. There is an enormous quantity of foreign meal used.

57,310. Is it not an advantage to the farmers that it is so cheap?—Possibly; but on the other hand it is nothing like as good as the home grown article.

57,311. Do you think we grow sufficient produce for consumption at home?—No, I do not suppose we could, but still I think that a great deal more might be grown, and a much better price might be got for what is grown if there was a slight impost.

57,312. You think that if we got a better price it would give an impetus to farmers to pay more attention to the raising of corn?—Yes, I think so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,313. I suppose your industry is principally the dairy industry?—Yes, on this portion of the estate it is.

57,314. Then in other parts is the principal industry meat production?—There it is more feeding. Lord Kenyon's estates are almost equally divided between Flintshire and Denbighshire. This is the Flintshire portion, and the other, the Denbighshire portion, is the other side of The Dee—it runs right up to Wrexham.

57,315. The meat producing industry is much more liable to competition than the dairy industry?—Yes.

57,316. Is that your opinion?—Yes, I think it is.

Chairman.Chairman—continued.

57,782 57,317. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "How many men, roughly speaking, are employed on the Gredington estate?"—I think of all sorts you might say from 40 to 50.

57,318. "And how much is spent in wages roughly?"—I think the average fortnightly pay is about 50*l.*, that would be about 100*l.* a month.

57,319. 1,200*l.* a year, or rather more than 1,200*l.* a year?—Yes, it is almost exactly that. We pay our men every alternate Monday and the pay sheet would average I think throughout the year about 50*l.* a fortnight.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. JOHN BECKETT called and examined.

Chairman.Chairman—continued.

57,320. Where do you reside?—Brook Farm, Willington Malpas.

57,321. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

57,322. Do you occupy 45 acres under Colonel Hughes?—Yes.

57,323. You agree with a great deal of the evidence we have had, and you want to give evidence about your own farm?—Yes.

57,324. There is no unenclosed land in the district which could be profitably cultivated?—No.

57,325. The usual date of entry is the same?—The 2nd of February.

57,326. Agreements are most common?—Yes.

57,327. You know of no case where leases have been refused?—No.

57,328. You consider yourself safe under your present landlord?—Quite safe.

57,329. Do you object to any part of your agreement?—No.

57,330. You have a copy of your agreement?—Yes.

57,331. Has this agreement been explained to you?—Yes.

57,332. Is the rent fixed at a lump sum?—Yes.

57,333. Are there any services except the payment of rent?—None whatever in my case.

57,334. Farms are not let to the highest bidder?—No.

57,335. What has your rent been for the last 60 years?—My rent is the same as it has been for the last 60 years or more.

57,336. How much have you paid for those 45 acres?—There has been some land bought the last few years. The original rent was 60*l.* a year for 40 acres, or something less than 40 acres. 72*l.* is my rent now for what has been purchased.

57,337. Have you had any abatements?—I received 12½ per cent. abatement a few years back, in 1888, and 10 per cent. in last May.

57,338. Have the local rates increased or diminished?—I consider they have increased the last 25 years.

57,339. Has there been any consolidation?—No.

57,340. And no sub-letting?—No, not in my district.

57,341. When do you pay your rent?—This autumn rent is due the 2nd of August. I generally pay it in November. The rent day is postponed.

57,342. You have four months' grace?—Something like that—three months.

57,343. Have you enough labourers or not?—I consider labourers are scarce in my district.

57,344. There is no land going out of cultivation, you say, and no waste land which could be profitably reclaimed?—Not in my district that I am aware of.

57,345. You say arable land has been laid down in pasture because it pays better?—Better than grain.

57,346. Root crops have increased?—I consider they have.

57,347. Can you tell us anything about your improvements?—Improvements such as buildings for stock, gates, posts, and manure have been paid for by the landlord.

57,348. What improvements have you made yourself on your farm?—Well, I have laid out a good deal of money in bone and manure for the land.

57,349. You consider you have improved your farm?—Yes, I have improved it considerably.

57,350. It is a better farm than when you first took it?—I consider it worth more money than it was.

57,351. Do you know anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act. Is it of any use to you?—I do not think it is.

57,352. Does the agreement contract out of the custom of the country?—No, not at all.

57,353. Will you tell us what the custom of the country is?—The custom of the country as to growing crops, tillage and cultivation, manure and produce left by the outgoing tenant, permanent improvements, the right of incoming tenants, the rules of cultivation, dilapidation, and sale of hay and straw or other produce is the same as my agreement.

57,354. Practically your agreement is the custom of the country?—Just so.

57,355. Have you any trouble about the game?—No trouble whatever.

57,356. I daresay you know of some farmers without sons who have managed to live and pay their way?—Oh, yes; I should think there were some.

30 August 1894.]

57,357. Have you ever thought about a land court?—I do not consider it any benefit in this part of the country.

57,358. It is not wanted in this part of the country?—I do not think so—so far as I am concerned personally.

57,359. Do you think in other parts of Wales a court would be beneficial?—I would not like to speak in general terms.

57,360. What is your opinion of the cause of the present low prices?—One chief cause I consider to be the foreign competition—so much produce sent from abroad; but there are other things in connexion with it I have no doubt.

57,361. That you think to be one of the chief causes?—One of the chief causes.

57,362. Can you mention any other cause?—I think there is a deal to be said about the disputes in trade in the country. I think that has a very bad effect on the trade of the country, and in the sale of farm produce.

57,363. You cannot sell your produce here when there is a strike going on?—Well, not so well.

57,364. There is not so much money to spend?—Just so.

Mr. Griffiths.

57,365. You speak of your landlord paying for manure? He does not pay for all your manure, does he?—No.

57,366. What did you mean when you said that he paid for the manure?—I once asked my landlord to allow me something, and he very kindly allowed me some bone manure. He has always been very kind to me. If ever I have asked him to do anything for me he has willingly done it.

57,367. Are the farmers who have no children at home as well able to provide for their children when married as those who have children at home?—I cannot answer that very well. I have a good large family, and I do not think I can provide for them very well out of farming—not at present prices.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

57,368. Still you do not pay them any wages, do you?—No; well, my children are only just growing up—just beginning to work.

57,369. Are the children of small farmers able to be as regular in school as the labourers' children, do you think?—Oh, yes, I should think so.

57,370. They are not obliged to stop at home to do some work occasionally?—No, I do not think so. I should not think that would be a just cause for keeping them from school.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,371. You would not consider the circumstances of the tenant farmers so good now as they were 20 years ago?—I consider the last 10 years to be very much worse for farming than it was before: at least I can only speak personally.

57,372. Taking the last 10 years, do you think the rent paid now is too high—I mean, if you struck an average for the last 10 years—that is, would it leave a sufficient margin of profit now for the farm, taking that period?—It just depends very much what farm it was, I consider if they were at a very big expense for labour it would take them all they could do to pay their way. Of course, in a small place like mine we do the labour ourselves, and I consider we are better able than the larger farmers to pay our way.

57,373. Who do you mean by yourselves?—Myself and my wife and my family. We do the work ourselves on my farm principally.

57,374. You think if you had to pay for labour you would not be able to do it?—Not as the prices are at present.

57,375. So that you are practically better off because you have children employed on the farm?—Yes.

57,376. If you were to pay those children their full wages you would not be so well off?—You see my children are young. They could not go out to earn wages. They go to school and do the work as well—the greater part of them.

57,377. You carry on dairying chiefly at your place, I suppose?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN HUGHES called and examined.

Chairman.

57,378. Where do you live?—Sycamore, near Wrexham.

57,379. You wish to give evidence for your father?—Yes, Thomas Hughes, Sycamore.

57,380. And also for Mr. Robert Williams?—Yes, for Mr. Robert Williams, of Tin y pistill.

57,381. Who are both tenants on the Plas Madock Estate?—Yes.

57,382. Is that Colonel Hughes' property?—No Sir Watkin Williams Wynn.

Chairman—continued.

57,383. There is no unenclosed land which could be cultivated with profit?—No.

57,384. There are no rights of sheep walk?—No rights of sheep walk.

57,385. I suppose I may take it from you that politics language and religion do not make any difference between you and Sir Watkin?—None whatever.

57,386. I suppose the usual date of entry is the same with you:—February the 2nd for land and May the 1st for the house?—Yes.

30 August 1894.]

Mr. J. HUGHES.

Chairman—continued.

57,387. Are there any leases?—No.

57,388. No cases of farmers asking for leases and being refused?—No.

57,389. Do they feel they are quite safe under Sir Watkin Wynn?—Yes.

57,390. Will you put in your agreement?—I have a copy. (Handed.)

57,391. We have had Sir Watkin's agreement. You do not object to any part of that agreement?—Not at all.

57,392. This agreement is probably explained to new tenants when they take a farm?—Yes.

57,393. The rent is fixed at a lump sum, and the holdings we know are not let to the highest bidder. Has your rent been raised or reduced?—Reduced.

57,394. What is your rent?—My father's rent is 42*l.* a year, and Robert Williams' is 75*l.*

57,395. Tell the Commission very clearly what the acreage of each farm is and what the rent is. Who is the tenant of Tyn y pistill?—Robert Williams.

57,396. How many acres has Tyn y pistill?—67 acres 1 rood 33 perches.

57,397. And the rent?—75*l.*

57,398. Who is the tenant of Sycamore?—Thomas Hughes.

57,399. What is the acreage?—56 acres 1 rood 26 perches.

57,400. What is the rent?—49*l.* 9*s.*

57,401. There is no consolidation of farms?—No.

57,402. You do not sub-let any portion of your land?—No.

57,403. The rent is not paid until three months after it is due?—Quite so.

57,404. Are labourers scarce or not?—There are plenty of labourers always.

57,405. There is no land going out of cultivation, and no waste land capable of profitable reclamation?—None whatever.

57,406. No arable land has been laid down to pasture in your neighbourhood?—Very little about our neighbourhood.

57,407. The landlord, I take it, does all the repairs and improvements?—All the repairs and improvements are done by the landlord.

57,408. Do you do the haulage?—None whatever.

57,409. All you do is to improve the land?—Improve the land, I work on the land, and improve it.

57,410. Do you consider they have improved their holdings since these two gentlemen have been tenants?—Yes.

57,411. You know nothing about the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Nothing whatever.

57,412. Is there any trouble about the game?—None whatever.

57,413. Will you tell us what you think about the establishment of a land court. Would you like to have a land court, or do you think it is unnecessary?—We do not want one, we are quite satisfied as we are.

57,414. What do you consider the cause of the present low prices?—Because so much produce comes from abroad.

Chairman—continued.

57,415. There is nothing else you wish to state on that head?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,416. Is the schedule to your agreement based on the custom of the county? Is there in the agreement a schedule for unexhausted improvements? I mean in case you left the farm would you be repaid a certain amount for unexhausted improvements?—Yes.

57,417. Is that based upon the custom of the country?—Yes, about our neighbourhood.

57,418. Mr. Beckett, the last witness, is on the same estate as you?—No, we are under Sir Watkin Williams Wynn.

57,419. Have you a schedule attached to your agreement?—Yes.

57,420. Is the custom of the country to have a schedule?—Yes.

57,421. Can you tell us whether that has been adopted by any Chamber of Agriculture?—No, I cannot.

Professor Rhys.

57,422. Where do you live?—Sycamore.

57,423. What is the name of the other farm?—Tyn-y-pistill.

57,424. Do you talk Welsh?—Yes, I am a thorough Welshman.

57,425. Where were you born and bred?—Close to where I live now.

57,426. In what parish is that?—Ruabon.

57,427. There are no people who talk Welsh about here?—I have not heard any since I have been here to-day.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,428. You would not be able to say whether this schedule in your agreement was really the custom of the country or a scale which has been made to meet the cases on Sir Watkin's estate?—No; both Robert Williams and my father agreed to that agreement.

57,429. You say that labourers are not scarce?—They are not in our district.

57,430. You have to pay them rather high wages, do you not, inasmuch as you are near works?—Well, in harvest time, 15*s.* a week. That is a man who can use a scythe. In the harvest time—hay or corn harvest—we can have them for 15*s.* a week.

57,431. You have made no improvements at all on your farm—at least your father has, not?—Well, we improve the farm.

57,432. Nothing but the soil?—The soil and the land for the benefit of growing good produce.

57,433. You have never done any hauling to any building?—No.

57,434. Does the landlord do that?—The landlord does all.

57,435. Does he charge any per-centage when he erects a building?—No.

57,436. He does not raise the rent?—No.

30 August 1894.]

Mr. J. HUGHES.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

57,437. Are you satisfied with the accommodation?—Yes, we are.

57,438. Have you had any buildings erected lately?—We have had a new house and all the buildings re-roofed about five years ago.

57,439. Had you any additions to the buildings?—Yes—more buildings than we had previously.

57,440. I suppose you require more buildings because probably you keep more stock?—Well, we have had more.

57,441. You have had more what?—More buildings than the old buildings.

57,442. They are quite sufficient for what you require?—Yes, quite sufficient now for what we require and for the land.

57,443. Have you had any Dutch barns erected?—No, we have no Dutch barns.

57,444. Have you ever applied for one?—We never asked for one.

57,445. You would like to have one?—It would save us a lot of thatching, would it not?

57,446. By-and-by probably you will ask for one?—Well, we might by-and-by.

Mr. Griffiths.

57,447. Is not the thatch rather more expensive than the thatching this year?—Well, we have saved plenty of straw to thatch our hay and wheat so far.

57,448. Very few have done so, I should think. Have you had any abatements in your rent at all?—Yes, 15 per cent.

57,449. For how many years?—This last two years.

57,450. Is your farm chiefly a dairy farm?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

57,451. Do you purchase much food for your cattle, such as bran, and so on?—Yes, in the winter time. Last year the produce was rather scarce, and we had to buy.

57,452. Cake?—No, never cake; meal and bran.

57,453. Then you keep pigs?—Yes.

57,454. Do you find it convenient to have the bran and meal cheap?—Well, the old man goes to the cheapest shop he can buy it at.

57,455. Do you think you would have it as cheap if we had not this foreign competition?—I do not think we should.

57,456. So that it is an advantage in some things and a disadvantage in other things?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

57,457. You do not expect to get everything you want in this world, I suppose? Mr. Richard Jones asked you just now if you would like something. You do not expect to get everything you like, do you?—No.

57,458. You would be a very lucky man if you did?—Yes, I should.

Chairman.

57,459. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Sir Watkin Wynn bought this estate in 1889, did he not?"—Yes.

57,460. "The rents prior to 1889 were paid to the mortgagees of Mr. Whalley's estate?" Is that a fact?—Yes.

57,461. "Did Colonel Hughes immediately re-value for Sir Watkin and reduce the rent of Robert Williams farm by 10*l.* and the rent of Thomas Hughes by 12*l.*?"—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOSEPH THOMAS BOOTE called and examined.

Chairman.

57,462. Where do you live?—At Pandy farm, Halghton.

57,463. Are you a tenant of Lord Kenyon?—Yes.

57,464. And have been for 12 years?—Yes.

57,465. Will you tell us the acreage of your farm?—172 acres.

57,466. And the rent?—187*l.*

57,467. Are you quite satisfied with the relations between his Lordship and yourself?—Yes.

57,468. When you ask for anything is it always granted?—I have never asked for a thing in the 12 years but what I have had it.

57,469. His Lordship's agent has told us what the returns on the estate have been. In bad times you have had permanent returns and abatements as well?—Yes.

57,470. You do not see in your own case any necessity for a Land Court?—No, I do not.

Chairman—continued.

57,471. Do you wish to say anything about a Land Court in other districts?—I do not think it would do in this neighbourhood.

57,472. You have no opinion as to the effect a Land Court would have in other parts of the Principality?—No, I have not.

57,473. Are the tenants in this neighbourhood well treated?—Yes.

57,474. Do you think they are prosperous or not?—Well, I should think they were.

57,475. They are paying their way?—Yes, I think they are paying their way in this neighbourhood very well.

57,476. I suppose the farms have been held by the same families for a considerable number of years?—Yes, a great number of years.

57,477. There are no leases?—No.

57,478. The average size of farms is from 70 to 100 acres, we have been told. Do you think that is about right?—Yes, from 70 to 100 acres.

30 August 1894.]

Mr. J. T. BOOTE.

Chairman—continued.

57,479. Do you get sufficient farm labourers?—Yes, I always get sufficient. I always hire them for the year and keep them in the house.

57,480. The cottages and outbuildings are in pretty good repair?—Yes, very good repair.

57,481. You have compensation for improvements by the agreement?—Yes, by the agreement.

57,482. We have had the agreement put in. You have great freedom in the management of your farm?—Yes.

57,483. There is no objection to your selling straw or hay or anything—you can do as you like?—I do as I like.

57,484. There is perfect freedom of cultivation?—Yes.

57,485. What is your opinion of Lord Kenyon as a landlord?—I do not think I could have a better if I travelled England through.

Mr. Griffiths.

57,486. Have you an agreement?—Yes.

57,487. You are satisfied with that agreement, I suppose?—Yes, I am quite satisfied with that.

57,488. You have no wish for a lease?—No.

57,489. Do you find it more difficult to make up the rent the last few years than formerly?—Well, it is a little more difficult the last few years.

57,490. What do you chiefly make your rent on?—Cheese.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,491. Do you know whether tenants have been interfered with at all at election times with respect to voting?—No, I do not think so.

57,492. There is perfect liberty for them to vote as they like?—Yes, perfect liberty to vote as they like.

57,493. No one has at any time interfered with you?—No, never.

57,494. The same thing exists on the whole estate?—Yes.

Professor Rhys.

57,495. How near Wrexham is your farm?—Eight miles.

57,496. This side of Wrexham?—Yes.

57,497. In what parish is it?—In the parish of Hanmer.

57,498. Do you speak Welsh at all?—No, I am a Cheshire man.

57,499. Does anyone in that district speak Welsh at all?—No.

57,500. The cheese you make in your district is good?—Yes, it is sold as Cheshire cheese.

57,501. Is there any of the so-called Cheshire cheese made in Cheshire, do you know?—Oh, yes, I am a Cheshire man.

Professor Rhys.—continued.

57,502. It is made to a large extent in Flintshire, is it not?—Yes; it is made on the same principle as Cheshire cheese.

57,503. But it is made largely in Flintshire, and in Denbighshire too, I think?—Yes.

57,504. It is all called Cheshire cheese?—Yes.

57,505. Do you think that is fair?—Yes, it is according to the principle you make it on. You can make Welsh cheese in Cheshire if you are so minded.

Mr. Griffiths.

57,506. Do you find any difficulty in getting people to milk your cows?—No.

57,507. Who generally milks the cows?—All my servants are hired for the year; I have five of them.

57,508. Men servants?—Men and women servants. I engage them for the 12 months. I have never had a workman the last 30 years.

57,509. You get the female servants to milk?—Yes.

57,510. Do you find any difficulty in getting female servants to do that work?—No, I never had any difficulty yet.

57,511-2. What wages do you pay the servants who do the milking?—I pay the men up to 20*l.* and beer and lodging.

57,513. I mean the women?—13*l.* 10*s.*, and I have one now I am giving 20*l.* to since I lost my wife.

57,514. She has more care, of course?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,515. Have you had any land laid down to arable pasture?—No.

57,516. It was all pasture before?—Yes.

57,517. Were you in your present holding at the time when the cattle disease was so prevalent?—No, I was under Mr. Howard, of Broughton, at that time.

57,518. Did you lose many cattle at that time?—Yes, 41.

57,519. That was the most serious loss that the agriculturists in this country have known?—Yes, I lost 16 one Sunday.

57,520. Do you keep only milking cows, or do you grow any young cattle for food?—Milking cows and young cattle.

57,521. Your acreage is 172 acres?—Yes.

57,522. Can you tell me how many head of cattle you keep?—About 75.

Chairman.

57,523. This is a question put by Mr. Vincent, "Do you object at all to the hounds coming over your land?"—No.

57,524. You are glad to see them?—Yes.

57,525. You have no wire fencing?—None whatever; I like to see them too well.

The witness withdrew.

30 August 1894.]

Mr. J. H. W. LEE.

Mr. J. H. WARBURTON LEE called and examined.

Chairman.

57,526. Do you live at Broad Oak, Whitchurch?—Yes. May I give my evidence as I have prepared it?

57,527. Yes; but if there is anything you have down that we have heard a good many times over, please pass it by?—I will. I am a land agent, and my family have been land agents for three generations before me in the same place. I am also a county councillor and magistrate, and I have been called to the Bar. My evidence relates chiefly to the Hanmer estate of 9,000 acres, in the hundred of Maelor and county of Flint, and it is with reference to this estate that my particulars are worked out. My other agencies are chiefly in England, but I manage certain small properties in Flintshire and a farm in Radnorshire, &c.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,528. In what neighbourhood in Radnorshire?—Not very far from Knighton. As regards the land in Maelor, Sir Wyndham Hanmer is lord of the manor. There are no courts or offices, and the chief rents I think amount to the sum of 5s. per annum. They are nearly all redeemed. As regards any difference where land is the property of corporations or associated bodies, I may say I have managed farms belonging to charities, and I see no special difference between those and other ownerships. I may make the same remark as regards glebe land. No doubt a resident landlord is to be preferred. At the same time in the cases of absentee landlords with which I have had to do myself the estates have always been liberally administered. We have no difference of language, and politics and religion are not taken into account at all. Where agents are employed I think they have always had special training as far as I know, and I have not heard any complaint as regards them. The usual dates of entry are for stubbles and clovers the 1st of November, for mowing lands December the 25th, and for grass, except boosey pasture, February the 2nd, and for the house, &c. the 1st of May. The farms are almost invariably let from year to year. There is no demand for leases. I suppose they consider they have sufficient security and less responsibility under a yearly tenancy. As to whether the farming of leaseholders is superior or not to that of yearly tenants, as we have only one leaseholder for a holding of any size, I cannot institute a comparison. Changes of tenancy during the period of which I have personal knowledge, have been exceedingly rare. No tenants of farms have received notice to quit except in a few cases of insolvency, with the exception of one case of hopelessly bad farming. That was in the case of a widow who was allowed to carry on, but owing to her ill-health was absolutely unable to go on with the task. We treated her with great patience for several years. On the

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

Hanmer estate there are 180 tenants holding more than 2 acres of land. In eight years the changes of tenancy from all causes have averaged about four per annum. I think that in every case where it has been possible a relative has succeeded. I am not aware of any cases of hardship as regards the tenant. The landlord has often suffered from unwillingness to give notice to quit. In resuming occupation of a field proper notice is certainly given whenever possible, occasionally it is not possible. I may say, for instance, some land was required for this school. We only knew of it last Christmas. It was a very small bit, and we asked the tenant whether she had any objection to giving it up, and she said not. It was absolutely impossible to serve her with notice. If we could have, we should have. In every case which I have had to do with if there has been any land taken, the rent has been re-adjusted or compensation granted. I will put in my agreement. (Handed.) I may say this is an old agreement, and I have tried to add certain clauses to it recently, but I think it would be very desirable to have a new form of agreement.

Chairman.

57,529. Are you satisfied with the old agreement?—Well, there is a lot of writing in it and I should like to have a new printed form. I am trying to collect suggestions from all sources so as to perfect a new agreement.

57,530. When were the alterations put in?—Most of them quite recently, but they embody the custom for a number of years, only I thought it better to express them in writing.

Lord Kenyon.

57,531. Is that the custom expressed by the Shropshire Chamber of Agriculture?—As regards compensation?

57,532. Yes?—I will come to that presently. I have not any schedule for compensation in my agreement and that is one thing I should like to see amended. Owing to not having a resident landlord for some years I have been unable to get authority.

Chairman.

57,533. Do you allow them to sell hay, straw, and fodder?—We prohibit them, but practically we allow them to sell the hay, straw, and fodder. The prohibitory clause is only useful in the case of a bad tenant who in the last year of his tenancy may be disposed to sell all off.

57,534. You have the old clause in this agreement, I see—about two men and a cart free of charge for buildings, and to do so many days of free carriage of any commodity?—The tenants as a rule do the cartage for repairs, and they have in many cases carted bark when there has

30 August 1894.]

Mr. J. H. W. LEE.

been timber falling: we give them as many tops as they like to draw for firewood, and they have a quantity of fencing posts ready to hand close by.

57,535. You insist upon that clause?—We ask them to do it. I have had tenants come more than once who have told me that it was not convenient to do it at the time and they have not done it. I have never received any complaint that the clauses are considered oppressive. No case has ever arisen. If a tenant wishes to break up a pasture or underlet he applies for permission. Then I ask tenants whether they wish to have a copy of their agreement, and I give them the agreement itself to read over before they sign it. The amount of rent on the Hammer estate, the average for all holdings whatever if all houses are thrown in, is 32s. an acre, that is tithe free. The landlord pays the tithes. On other small properties I have to do with, it is 35s. Then I am asked, "Is the rent usually fixed on a gross sum or at so much per acre?" It is fixed at a gross sum. "Is there any uniformity in the rents of similar qualities on the same or neighbouring estates?" Certainly, I should think so. Then, "Is the rent of the smaller tenantry higher per acre than on larger farms?" In the case of small cottage holdings with a few acres of land only, a rent would be put on the house, the cost of buildings and maintenance being much greater in proportion than in the case of larger holdings. This being allowed for, the rent per acre would not be higher on this estate. The average for all holdings over 10 acres is 31s.; for 10 to 2 acres, if 4*l.* be allowed for the houses, the land will be let at 29s. 6*d.* per acre. Then with regard to the question of services, I have already answered that partly upon the question of acreage.

57,536. Yes?—Every care is taken that such services shall not be irksome, and they are mentioned in the agreements. The rent is fixed by private treaty. On a vacancy occurring the rent is definitely named, and the most suitable of the applicants is then selected. Then I am asked, "Is the holding practically let to the highest bidder, and if so does the system result in fair rents being fixed?" I say, most certainly not—nothing of the kind. If we did so we could get considerably larger rents than we receive, especially in the case of the smaller holdings. With regard to the question of whether arbitration is ever resorted to as a means of settling or readjusting the rent, I say it is not; it is always done by means of friendly negotiation. Some rents have been raised, some reduced, and some have remained stationary. Owing to sales and purchases it is difficult to institute a comparison: so far as I can work it out (but I cannot be absolutely certain of my figures) I think there has been a small rise from 1843 to 1893. There have been some permanent reductions, and some temporary abatements of rent. Allowances have been made at different times in money, manures, and especially in large improvements without interest being charged. Then I am asked, "When rents are raised, or reduced does the change depend on a re-valuation?" The cases I have had of any change of rent where there has not been a change of tenant are practically nil. Therefore, I have no means of answering the question. I may say that the feeling of the neighbourhood, and the experience of the tenant as to the value of particular farms, become gradually known to the agent, and are a much better guide than any outside valuation would be.

Then upon the question of how soon after the rent falls due is it usually paid, I say it is paid practically about five or six weeks after. With regard to the question of what effect the preferential claim for rent has on the position of tenants generally it appears to me that the landlord, unlike other creditors, leaves in the tenant's care the land, to which a bad tenant may do immense injury before he leaves. In the case of such a tenant, if there was not a preferential claim for rent, the landlord would often lose the rent in addition to his other loss. Without such a claim the landlord would be disposed to get rid of a tenant who showed any signs of embarrassment instead of giving him a chance to pull round. He would require pecuniary guarantees and enquiry into a tenant's private affairs, which is not now so necessary. Many men have raised themselves to good position who have started on money partly borrowed. Having a preferential claim the landlord can accept a hard working man, though he may not be very strong in the way of capital.

As to charges on the land, no tithe is collected from tenants except from a few leaseholders. The landlord pays the tithe, in every other case. The tenants pay the land tax, which amounts, I am informed, to about 1½*d.* to 2*d.* in the £, and they also pay the local rates. There is no chief rent. The landlord pays income tax, schedule A. Then, "Have local rates increased within the last 25 years?" I think not. Then I am asked, "What is the average size of farms in your district?" If I may, I will give you the average size of all the holdings on the estate. We have four holdings over 200 acres, seven of from 150 to 200 acres, 12 from 100 to 150 acres, 18 from 50 to 100 acres, 47 from 10 to 50 acres, 92 from 2 to 10, and 37 under 2. I have taken the small holdings as under 10 acres, although perhaps I might have taken a larger figure. Then I am asked whether holdings have been consolidated. None have been consolidated I believe in recent years. I believe there have been one or two cases previously, but they are only special cases, and I have no information about them. As to subdivision and subletting, a certain number of small holdings have been cut out of farms within my recollection. But we have had an unusual number of these for a very long time past. Sub-letting is very rare. In a very few special cases we let farmers have the sub-letting of cottages. Where there is no land attached it makes little difference, though our principle is to let direct to the occupier. But where there is land attached I consider that it is better as a rule that the occupier shall not be a sub-tenant. The reason is that if he is supposed to work for a particular employer and thinks he is at all liable to disturbance he is not so likely to do his best by the land. As regards the large and small holdings, and the ability of farmers to provide for their families, I think everything depends on the individual. Both small and large farmers in this neighbourhood are as a rule a thrifty and hard working class with a good knowledge of practical agriculture. I must add that I do not know where the line is to be drawn between small and large holdings. I think it would be exceedingly undesirable from every point of view if the country consisted entirely of one class of holding whether it was large or small. As to the state of agriculture, and the nature of farming pursued, it is chiefly grass land, which has increased of late years. There is cheese making and butter making for the most part. As to the supply of labourers, there is, I think, a fair supply of labourers and good farmers attend properly to their fences, ditches and water courses, I mean as regards the bulk of our farmers, we have a few farmers who are not so good, and who neglect these things. There is no land going out of cultivation. A few acres of moss waste land have been reclaimed by tenants in my district within living memory, and possibly a little more might be reclaimed, but it is a very expensive process, and it is very dubious whether it pays. As to arable land being land down to pasture, a very considerable quantity has been laid down, I think, more at the tenant's expense than the landlord's, though some has been done by the landlord. There is very little fallowing. The general effect in the neighbourhood is that more milking stock has been kept, because cheese and butter have paid and corn has not. With reference to the question of improvements, practically all buildings and nearly all repairs are done by landlords, also a good deal of drainage. Landlords give manure in special cases. Tenants occasionally put up a small building, landlord finding materials. Tenants often do draining, landlord finding pipes. Tenants often do fencing, landlord finding materials. Tenants generally find artificial manures, and they generally find seeds for permanent pastures, but they would be paid for this if they left within 10 years provided the root was worth having, otherwise they would be able to break it up again. This remark does not apply where a field is laid down in place of another allowed to be broken up. I think that also answers the following question with regard to who does the various improvements. Then I am asked, "In the case of co-operation in improvement what is the part usually undertaken by each, and how is remuneration secured to either party?" At the present time such co-operation is rare. In the case of drainage it would be usual to compensate the tenant to some extent if he left within a few years after doing such work. Such cases occasionally occur. Any application by a tenant is of course considered on its merits. A case would be where a tenant puts up a hay shed at his own expense. We agree to treat it as a tenant's fixture, but as a matter of fact a landlord or an incoming tenant would be sure to take it at a valuation. Then I am asked, "Do you know of instances where either party contracts out of the operation of" (a) the Agricultural Holdings Act, or (b) the "custom of the country." They do not contract out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, except as to notice to quit. Most of our tenants have six months' notice. I know of no case of either party contracting out of the operation of the custom of the country. Then with regard to the question of whether farmers often apply for their landlord's written consent for specific improvements, they occasionally do, but not often, because improvements are generally made by landlords and also because in the rare cases of tenants leaving where the balance of claim is not entirely against the tenant claims for compensation are readily settled by private agreement or arbitration. I am asked, "Is such consent readily given when asked for?" Such consent would no doubt be given if the landlord thought the improvement desirable and did not prefer to do it himself. Have you dealt with the custom of the country as regards growing crops?

57,537. Yes, I think we have heard that?—The clover seeds are paid for by the incomer, and the outgoer takes half the wheat.

57,538. We have had all that as to the custom of the country?—With regard to the custom of the country as to manures and produce remaining at the expiration of the tenancy, manure is left on the farm and produce is agreed to be left, but we always give leave to an outgoer to sell off superfluous produce on his paying over one-third of sum realised as the manurial value. This goes on the farm in manure, generally bone. Latterly this has been specified in the agreement of tenancy. With regard to the mode of cultivation, we bind tenants to the four-course system, but the clover crops often go on a second year (see agreement). Dilapidations: when a tenant leaves there is often a large sum due for dilapidations, but I never knew a landlord get a halfpenny, except once (10s.), and that was on a dwelling-house, not on land. The sale of hay and straw is forbidden by agreement, but no restriction practically is exercised in the case of a good tenant. Then: "Have any cases occurred in your district where an outgoing tenant has failed to obtain sufficient compensation for his improvements?" I do not think so, I should submit any such question to arbitration at once. I know of no case where compensation is given for the generally improved condition of a holding. There is no right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interest in their holdings. Such a system would mean the putting up of the farms by auction to the highest bidder. The good will as well as the improvements would be sold, and the incomer and the landlord would be the losers. As regards game preserving, rabbits where preserved largely are fenced in. With regard to hares, very few are left. Other game is preserved by landowners in my district. The tenants generally avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act. Then, "Is there much damage done by game to the crops and pastures of tenant farmers, if so are they compensated, and how is the damage assessed?" Any cases of damage have been readily adjusted by private treaty. Tenants are not expected to beat coverts. I do not think that game preserving affects cultivation in any way worth mentioning, nor does it affect the relation between the landlord and tenant, or the labourers, or the public generally. The proportion of offences against the Game Laws as compared with other offences against property, and so on, I do not know, but it is a very small proportion. The sporting rights over commons are exercised by the lord of the manor. There is very little attention paid to fruit culture or horticulture, and none to forestry. There is a considerable amount of poultry kept on every farm, but I do not know of any what you may call poultry farms. Bee-keeping is only pursued in a casual manner. With regard to instruction in butter and cheese making, there have been demonstrations in cheese making. I have had a good deal to do with getting the instructor down through the county council, and I believe that the great majority of the farmers consider that they have learnt a great deal from him. I know of a case close to my own home where the farmer has followed the instruction implicitly, and has got three prizes in nine months, and that has been of great benefit to him. As regards insurance, farmers generally insure their buildings against fire, and insure their stock and so on to some extent against loss by accident. Cow clubs, and so on are largely used by the tenants. Buildings are insured against fire by landlords. There is no combination amongst the landlords that I know of or amongst the tenant farmers or labourers. Benefit Societies are largely used. I do not know anything about Life Assurance Societies or Provident Societies.

We have not many cases of peasant proprietors or small freeholders who have inherited their holdings from their ancestors. There are not many tenant farmers who have bought their own or other holdings for occupation. Tenant farmers take part in the manual labour on their farms to a large extent, and especially the wives in the dairy. I do not know what remuneration the children get for working on the farm. I think they would soon go off to the towns if they did not find it worth their while to stay in the country. Numbers of our farmers have set up their sons on farms—a very great number indeed. I believe the present rents could be maintained if wages were paid in respect of the children's labour. Then I am asked about hired labourers—what proportion is lodged on the farm premises. It is a very difficult question to answer, but from what information I have received I should say it would slightly outnumber the number that are in cottages, but that opinion is exactly opposite to what someone else has said to-day. I could not be certain; I asked one or two large farmers their opinion, and they thought that the majority would be in the farm-houses. Chiefly married men are settled in cottages—generally waggoners, cowmen, and head men. The state of the cottage accommodation is much the same as in past times, and I believe on this estate at all events that it is sufficient. The houses are generally scattered, and as a rule they are fairly convenient with reference to work. Their condition and construction vary very much. They have been very much improved of late years. Cottages have gardens, I think, in every case, if there is an exception I cannot call it to mind. The list I gave you will show that there are small holdings in a very large number, and they are generally held direct from the owner. There has been some migration of labourers in the last 50 years owing to less labour being employed, because there is less tillage and more machinery. Then I am asked: "What remedies do you suggest for improving the profits from land?" I think foreign products should in all cases be labelled, and that this should apply to foreign cheese especially. I also think the railway rates are a great grievance. As to the general relations between landlord and tenant, they are most friendly as a rule.

Then I am asked: "What money have you spent in repairs and improvements, specify the period over which you have spent this money, and whether you have charged interest?" Interest, as a rule, has not been charged. The exceptions are: (1) Hay sheds. For these, as a rule, interest is charged. The tenant applies for one if he wishes, knowing beforehand exactly on what terms he can have one. If he prefers it he can put one up himself as a tenant's fixture; if he does this there is practically no doubt that his successor will take it off his hands at a valuation. When a tenant puts one up the landlord often supplies the poles, and the shed becomes a tenant's fixture—I mean the roof. (2) Where a good new cottage is put up in place of a poor old one the rent has of late years generally been re-adjusted, the tenant accepting the terms proposed before the work is begun. (3) In certain special cases where additional accommodation has been put up tending to make the farm more profitable, some interest has been charged. In every case the terms have been arranged by friendly agreement between the parties before the work is undertaken. On the Hanmer estate I have no particulars except for the last 6½ years. During that period the outlay on repairs and improvements has averaged 32 per cent. on the gross rental. I deduct the tithe from the rents in order to arrive at the gross rents, but I deduct nothing else, and the outlay on the repairs and improvements in $6\frac{1}{2}$ years has averaged 32 per cent.

57,539. On the gross or on the net?—I take the gross rents and deduct only the tithe, and then the outlay will be 32 per cent. of that. We have charged interest on less than $\frac{1}{4}$ of this outlay.

57,540. That is, the improvements?—On the rent, but not the tithe free rent, because at the commencement of the period the tenant paid the tithe, and I have taken the rent exclusive of the tithe, that is for $6\frac{1}{2}$ years.

Lord Kenyon.

57,541. Could you give the figures—I mean the total?—Outlays in repairs, new buildings, draining, fences, water supply, &c., &c. for $6\frac{1}{2}$ years, 21,185*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.*, average about 3,259*l.* per annum.

57,542. What is the rental of the estate? Do not give it unless you like?—It will take me a moment to find it, that is all. I ought to say that I have tried to get the purely farming rental, and I have tried to state it as fairly as I could. I have kept out the letting of the mansion. The rental would be about 10,200*l.* for agricultural land and cottages.

Chairman.

57,543. A little over 1*l.* an acre?—Yes. You see we have a large acreage of moss which bears no rent at all. We have a large amount of moss, and that alters the figure; we let a little moss with the holdings, and we let some to a Moss Litter Co., which I have taken no account of.

57,544. It is 32*s.* an acre you told us?—That is taking agricultural land. I have taken the unlet moss right out. Then I am asked, "How many and what cases have you on your estate of families having held the same farms for generations?" Taking the tenants who hold over two acres over one-fourth have been on their present holdings for more than one generation; about as many more belong to families connected with the estate. That would be in the case of a son of one of our farmers taking a vacant farm. I will put in, if you would like to have it, all changes of tenancy that we have had in the last $6\frac{1}{2}$ years, with the causes.

Lord Kenyon.

57,545. Did that sum you gave of the expenditure include abatements of rent?—No.

57,546. You have given some abatements in rent, I think, have you not?—We have.

57,547. Will you state what they are also?—The property has changed hands, and I have no authority to state it. We gave a per-centage in 1886 and 1887, for about two to three years, and we have given sundry bone allowances since, and of course we have gone to a very large amount of outlay in the way of improvement.

57,548. You said something just now about the Agricultural Holdings Act. Did you say that you thought you could improve upon the schedule?—No, I did not say anything about it. I only said I would like to get a schedule attached to our agreement. I propose to attach one to it shortly.

57,549. You know the schedule of the Shropshire Chamber of Agriculture?—Yes.

57,550. Do you think that is a good schedule?—That is generally adopted, I think, in the neighbourhood.

57,551. Do you think that could be improved upon?—I think not so far as I know.

57,552. The only thing that occurs to me is we heard a great deal about the hardship upon tenants in reference to doing the haulage, and, supposing they were to leave their farms within a short time, not being compensated for such haulage. I have no doubt that Sir Wyndham Hanmer would compensate a man if he had to to leave in a short time?—I have made special agreements in one or two cases lately, putting it on at ten years—to treat the haulage as a ten years' improvement.

57,553. Do you not think that it would be a good thing to tack that on to the schedule?—Yes, I think probably it would.

57,554. There is, I think, something with regard to the haulage of pipes?—In the agreement?

57,555. Yes. Something of the kind might be done, too, with reference to the haulage of bricks?—Yes. You see I have put in my recent agreements in ink that the tenant shall do haulage for new buildings, except where a special arrangement is made at the time. That is put in with the express intention of getting them to come and make a special arrangement.

57,556. Yes. I think the less vague agreements are the better. With regard to this Agricultural Holdings Act, which may not apply very much here, but which does apply in some cases—do you know the Act well?—I have read it often.

57,557. Do you think that some improvement might be made in the schedules in the Act. I mean to say with regard to improvements to which the consent of the landlord is required. Could anything be taken out of that and removed into the next schedule?—I think it would be very dangerous to extend the powers of the tenant to make improvements without the consent of the landlords, unduly; it would open up very considerable room for fraud in the case of bad tenants—fraudulent tenants. Of course in the case of a good tenant the matters would be all readily adjusted, but it is very hard on a landlord to have to pay for an improvement which he scarcely considers an improvement at all.

57,558. Exactly. I have heard complaints as to a tenant losing his compensation through not having given notice at the right time. The

Act, as you know, makes it compulsory on the tenant to give a few months' notice?—Yes.

57,559. Occasionally they do not do that, they fail to do it through ignorance or some other reason?—Yes.

57,560. Do you think that some clause might be put in by which either the tenant should draw his attention to the fact, or by which the length of the notice might be shortened?—Are you speaking of the consent for drainage?

57,561. No. I will refer you to the clause?—Where the landlord can give or refuse consent?

57,562. No, nothing at all to do with the schedules, but with regard to the procedure under the Act: "A tenant to claim compensation under this Act shall, two months at least before the determination of the tenancy, give notice in writing to the landlord of his intention to make such claim." I have heard of cases—in fact, I have known of a case, in which the tenant has not given the required two months' notice?—I think it would be an extreme hardship if the tenant suffered the loss of one halfpenny through omission to give such notice, and I think that any reasonable adjustment of that rule would be perfectly fair.

57,563. That is what I thought. There it is, a hard-and-fast line, and any man who wanted to treat a tenant harshly, supposing the tenant had not given the two months' notice, could upset the whole thing on those grounds?—Yes. The only thing is, I think a landlord ought to be protected against a tenant being able to raise a claim for compensation after he has gone clean away from the place, and when it is impossible to judge of the thing.

57,564. When it is impossible to judge, and impossible to get hold of him perhaps—after he has gone and sold his stock altogether, perhaps?—Yes.

57,565. I think some notice should be given, but the question is how this might be safeguarded from the tenant's point of view?—Yes.

57,566. Is there anything else in the Act which you think is capable of amendment?—I think not. I have not considered the question of making a new Act myself, or of re-writing the Act. It is a very wide question.

57,567. We are told in many places that the Act is a dead letter?—Certainly, it is not as regards compensation for manures here. That is very satisfactory, and of course I have known it put in force in many other cases. I think generally, even where it is not specifically put in force, it strengthens the tenant's position—the fact that there is an Act makes the tenant's position stronger when he comes to negotiate with his landlord, probably the Act is never mentioned if the matter is amicably adjusted.

57,568. And if there is a decent schedule to work under?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

57,569. Following up what Lord Kenyon has been asking about the Agricultural Holdings

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

Act, 1883, do you say that you are careful in your agreement not to infringe the provisions of the Act?—Most certainly.

57,570. Am I to understand that the writing on the printed agreement which you have handed in represents the agreement in its latest form?—Yes. I think they are in strict accordance with the Act.

57,571. Let me call your attention to the clause which is written in, in addition to the printed matter?—Yes.

57,572. "In the case of improvements in Part I. under Schedule I., of the same Act no claim whatever will be entertained unless landlord's or agent's written consent can be shown"?—Ought that to have been different?

57,573. Well, it is for you to say. This is your agreement which you have come to with the tenant?—The landlord's permission.

57,574. Written permission?—It is meant to be in accordance with the Act, I thought it said permission in writing in the Act. If there is any mistake there I will put it right immediately.

57,575. In the schedule it is, improvements to which consent of landlord is required, and the general right of compensation is given by Section I. I see no mention of writing there?—That is a slip of the pen if the mistake has been made, and I withdraw it at once. It is not a thing that I meant to take any advantage of.

57,576. But the tenants have signed this agreement, as I understand, some of them?—Yes, a few. If it is not in accordance with the Act I will have it altered in all cases.

57,577. No, I am wrong about the consent in writing. I find another section of the Act does require the consent to be in writing?—Then I am quite right.

57,578. So that there is nothing (except that the words are superfluous) actually infringing the Act in your agreement?—May I say that I was well aware that the words were superfluous, but the idea was to call the attention of the tenants in their agreements to the provisions of the Act. I thought I had not made a mistake about it.

57,579. Then I notice that the forfeiture clause has been varied by you from the printed form?—Yes.

57,580. It has been varied into this form, "on failure of compliance with any important condition of this agreement"—a certain event shall happen?—Yes.

57,581. Do you think that is an improvement?—I thought that the words as put giving re-possession in case of any breach of agreement were too strong, and I thought that the words "important condition" might perhaps remove the objection.

57,582. Still the landlord or the agent would be the person to determine which is the important condition upon the true construction of this clause, would he not?—It would probably come to a court of law, would it not, if he were taking advantage of that clause.

30 August 1894.]

Mr. J. H. W. LEE.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

57,583. It may be it would?—I certainly intended it to be a weakening of the clause as expressed.

Lord Kenyon.

Would it not be better to specify the conditions?

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

57,584. Yes, the better way is undoubtedly that suggested by Lord Kenyon—to number the clauses of the agreement, and then to pick out those which once for all you would call important. That would be very much better, and in fact that is the course generally adopted, I see?—Yes.

57,585. Forgive me for asking the question, but you said you were a justice of the peace, I think?—Yes.

57,586. Do you sit at petty sessions in the district for which you are agent?—Yes, I sit in this district at Overton.

57,587. So that it is quite possible you may have to adjudicate upon cases, for instance, between master and servant, between a farmer and a labourer, on the very estate of which you are agent?—In any case in which I had in any way a personal interest, I should not of course sit.

57,588. But you would not have a personal interest there. I am on a question of policy now. Do you as a matter of fact in the case of any dispute between a tenant and a labourer sit at Petty Sessions?—Certainly.

57,589. Do you think the fact of an agent having magisterial authority tends to improve his relations with the farmers and the people in the district generally?—I have never found that it in any way had the contrary effect in any degree whatsoever.

57,590. You have found no practical ill-results, so far as you know?—No practical inconvenience. I have never found any person attempt to mix up my position as agent with that as magistrate. I do not see that I am in any way prejudiced by my position as agent in favour of the tenant as against the labourer, or of the labourer as against the tenant.

57,591. There might be a dispute between a tenant on this estate and a tenant on other estates?—I do not see what there would be to prevent my doing justice between them.

57,592. I am not saying that a man with the most absolutely rigid and impartial turn of mind would be affected very greatly by it, but still questions may arise in public in regard to the proceeding, and people might be censorious?—I think that if you apply that principle in its strictness you would have a great difficulty in finding any magistrates at all. If neither a landlord nor an agent, nor a fellow tenant, could adjudicate in the case of a tenant of an estate, if you had half a dozen magistrates you would have them dancing off the bench by threes and fours as the cases came up, I think.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

57,593. But is there not complaint—do you not notice complaints?—As regards what 57,594. With regard to the constitution of the petty sessions in many cases?—I have not heard of complaints here.

57,595. You have not heard complaints here?—No.

57,596. I think you said you were a county councillor as well?—Yes.

57,597. Are you county councillor for that district of the county in respect of which you are also agent?—Yes.

57,598. And I think you said that so far as you knew, matters of politics, and so forth had no bearing upon the management of the estate?—None whatever. I do not know the politics of many people on the estate, and as to those I do know it is only incidentally.

57,599. Still you must have been a candidate for election?—When I was a candidate the election was not fought on any political grounds. In the only case in which I had a contest both of the candidates were on the same side in politics.

Mr. Griffiths.

57,600. What do you consider the cost of building a suitable agricultural cottage?—Do you mean a three-roomed cottage, with or without outbuildings?

57,601. With buildings?—But not for keeping a cow.

57,602. No, the cottage itself?—The cottage itself, and an oven and a boiler?

57,603. Yes?—And a pigstye?

57,604. The cottage alone, I mean?—Without any outbuildings?

57,605. Yes?—You will have to tell me the thickness of the walls. I will give you it as near as I can. The cottages we have been building cost us about 150*l.* each.

57,606. What rent do you charge for those cottages?—We get 4*l.* to 5*l.* I think a new cottage with an oven and a pig-stye would be about 5*l.*

57,607. Are they generally built of bricks?—Yes.

57,608. Do any of the tenants on this estate come forward to give evidence before the Commission?—I have not seen any here to-day.

57,609. What might be the reason?—I have no idea.

57,610. You have a great number of tenants, I see?—Yes.

57,611. You do not know that there are any of them coming forward?—I have not seen any of them here to-day.

57,612. Have you had any conversation with them about it?—I asked one or two men some time ago whether they thought of giving evidence.

57,613. What did they think of it?—They said they perhaps would, or something of that sort, and I have heard nothing of them since.

57,614. Do you think it advantageous to the farmer to have a tenant under him?—I think

30 August 1894.]

Mr. J. H. W. LEE.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

where there is land it is better not. I think the labourers prefer—

57,615. The labourers prefer it, but we must look to the tenants as well as the labourers?—Yes. It has always been the custom on the estate to let directly.

57,616. Do you not think that the labourer feels more independent?—Of course it tends to make the labourer more independent certainly; it gives the labourer more a feeling of independence and makes him feel that he has a home.

57,617. And the cottage has been built on account of the farm, in connexion with it as a rule?—I do not know that. I do not know that our cottages have been. They are not especially on the farms, as it were, as a rule. It has never been the custom to say: "This cottage belongs to that farm, and that cottage to another farm." I have not heard of that being done, as a rule.

57,618. No, as long as you let them yourself of course that would not be so?—No. I may say that although I have only been agent for eight years I have lived actually on the estate all my life.

57,619. I think it is very advantageous to the farmer to have the tenant under his own control, and not for him to occupy a cottage direct from the landlord?—Yes.

57,620. What do you understand by a cow club? It is the first time we have heard of such a thing?—It is a small insurance club for cows.

57,621. We have not heard of it before?—They pay so much a quarter. There are two or three such clubs, and they are used by the cottagers. I insure my own cows in one, but I may say they are for the use of the cottagers chiefly, and they pay so much a quarter, and the cows have to be registered in the club and so on. Certain precautions are taken, and if a cow dies they get now 11*l.* That is the maximum. Of course for a very poor cow they would get less, and they get so much for a calf.

57,622. It is a very good thing?—They are largely used, and the club in this neighbourhood is an excellent one and most solvent.

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,623. It is not confined to the agricultural labourers?—It is not confined to anybody; anybody may use it, but I think that farmers with a large stock as a rule prefer to be their own insurers against loss, that is to say, to take the risk.

57,624. Could you tell me how many cows there are in the society?—I do not know. There may be somebody here who could tell us, but I do not know whether there is anybody here who can say.

Mr. Griffiths.

57,625. Supposing an incoming tenant refuses to pay for a hay shed, is there any provision in the lease as to it?—Do you mean where they have been put up as a tenant's fixture?

57,626. Where the tenant has put it up at his own expense?—There are only a few such cases. Of course under those circumstances the tenant can take it away and put it where he likes.

57,627. There is no provision made in the agreement that either the landlord or the tenant should take it up?—No. It is a small matter, because they are so very few. The landlord has put them up in most cases.

57,628. What interest do the landlords charge for such buildings?—For haysheds?

57,629. Yes?—Five or six per cent. most of them.

57,630. Then you spoke about moss litter. Do the tenants use any of that moss litter?—A few I think—not very largely.

57,631. Do you not think it would be advantageous to use more of it, if it is the best litter?—I cannot tell.

57,632. It absorbs more liquid than anything else?—It is used by some of the tenants certainly I think, but not very largely. They prefer to use straw.

57,633. But straw would not absorb nearly so much liquid manure as that would?—No.

Mr. Grove.

57,634. Have there been many recent sales of property to your knowledge in the district?—In this immediate district?

57,635. Yes?—No, not many.

57,636. Have you many arrears of rent due now from farmers?—Very few indeed. Perhaps I may say that in the last eight years the amount of rent lost from all causes by tenants failing and everything else (I worked it out the other day), I found was 10*d.* in every 100*l.*, and that was nearly all absorbed by one particular man.

57,637. Do you consider there is depression in agriculture now?—Certainly. I think that agriculture is not as prosperous as it was.

57,638. And that the tenant farmer must naturally feel it?—Yes.

57,639. Then you spoke of waste lands. Is there much waste land, so far as you know, in the district?—There are a few commons, but they are not large, and they are not altogether waste, but then there is a large acreage of the Fenns moss, but it would be an enormous thing to deal with; it is a great question; I do not think it could be profitably reclaimed.

57,640. Has there been any attempt to reclaim some part of it, or a small part of it?—Little isolated patches round the edges. I think something has been done in the past, but it would be a long time ago, and I have no particulars.

57,641. Even that, you think, would hardly pay?—Of course it has been generally done by small men who did it just as they had time, and they would hardly feel the outlay.

57,642. Just one question with regard to these cow clubs. Do you know the payment per month or per week to cover the insurance of a cow?—It is 1s. a quarter.

57,643. Four shillings a year?—Yes.

57,644. Have they been established very long, that is have they had any experience?—I believe this has been going on a long time.

57,645. Do you think they are financially sound?—I think so.

57,646. There has been no special cattle disease perhaps to test the soundness of them?—The cow club that I know of in this neighbourhood has at present got a very good sum invested.

57,647. You think, then, from that that generally speaking they are financially sound?—They are very sound, I think, those that I know of.

57,648. They are I suppose local?—Yes.

Professor Rhys.

57,649. I gather that you differ somewhat from one of the witnesses who gave evidence before us this morning as to the accommodation for farm servants?—I thought perhaps the majority were housed in the farm-houses, but I really could not form a definite conclusion. One does not exactly know how many are in the house. I asked a large farmer, the largest farmer in the district, and he told me he thought it was so. I think by asking the farming witnesses you will get better information than from me.

57,650. Have you any Welsh-speaking tenants on your estates?—None on this estate. I managed a farm in Radnorshire and the tenant there speaks Welsh. He speaks English also. I have also managed one or two small holdings on the far side of the county of Flint. The tenants there speak both Welsh and English, but they are so very small in number that I do not say much about them.

57,651. You have no difficulty with regard to language?—No. I hardly thought it worth while mentioning them especially. I was also agent for a property in Denbighshire where the tenants could speak Welsh, most of them, but which property has since been sold.

57,652. Do you find any difficulty on account of the language?—No, I have never had any difficulty. All the tenants I have had to deal with could understand English quite well.

57,653. In enumerating the different sizes of your farms, I understood you to say that you had not any very large farms. Has that been the result of policy, or have they come down from generations?—I think from generations.

57,654. So you could not exactly from experience compare the letting of really big farms with the smaller ones?—I will say at the present time that the farms we have the greatest demand for are the farms of from 50 to 100 acres. If you have a farm, we will say, of 50, 60, or 70 acres, and it is a nice farm, you get an enormous number of applicants, but if we have a large farm of about 200 acres to let we perhaps have only two or three or four applicants.

57,655. I think you said that a payment for good will is not recognised on the estate?—It is not.

57,656. Do you as a matter of fact know whether that goes on?—My opinion is that if a tenant had free sale of his interest there would be of course a payment for good will.

57,657. You do not think there is at present?—No.

57,658. The landlord perhaps would not hear of it?—No, I think not. We have very few cases of tenants leaving, but if a tenant leaves of course we are always very glad to know whom he has to suggest as his successor, and we very often take a relative.

57,659. I think you mentioned that the farmers' sons generally try to get farms themselves?—Yes, many of them.

57,660. What becomes of the others?—I think they go off into businesses of some kind. A good many of them I think go to the towns, to Manchester, Liverpool, and so on.

57,661. Do they return?—I do not know. I have heard of a man or two coming back.

57,662. Have you any property in Lower Wych Iscoed?—Yes.

57,663. Do you know anything about the salt works which were mentioned by Mrs. Bulkeley Owen this morning?—They were last worked about 30 years ago. I had a number of overtures from company promoters some two or three years ago to revive them, but they fell through.

57,664. They have not been worked for 30 years?—I believe that is about the time.

57,665. Why would you say the work was given up, or why are they not worked?—I do not know. It is a considerable distance from a station, and it is not on a good road, and I suppose the price of salt has gone down; I am only conjecturing; it did not pay to work them.

57,666. It is the difficulty of carriage at present?—I should think that had something to do with it, but I believe the brine is very weak now. I do not know what it may have been in times past, but I believe it is now weak. The Salt Tax being done away with, I am told, stopped the manufacture.

57,667. You do not think it all depends upon the difficulty and distance of carriage?—That of course would be an element. When it was proposed to revive these works, it was proposed to get the brine down close to the railway by gravitation, and manufacture it there.

57,668. That would be a source of wealth to the district, I suppose?—Yes, well, I think that the negotiation I had was on the Cheshire side—just the other side of the brook—but it would have affected both sides equally.

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,669. You spoke of a leaseholder. Have you had one leaseholder?—We have had one leaseholder on the property—that is of a farm.

30 August 1894.]

Mr. J. H. W. LEE.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

57,670. Have you had applications for more leases?—No, I have offered a tenant a lease before now, and he would not have it. Any good tenant could have had a lease at any time if he wanted it.

57,671. Do you argue from that that they considered that they were reasonably secure under a good landlord?—I think so.

57,672. Is that what they thought, as far as you know?—Certainly, that they were secure as regards the holding, and they thought that perhaps if they were leaseholders rather more would be expected of them in the way of repairs.

57,673. But you would be prepared to give leases if they asked for them?—It does not rest with me, but I think my principal would be willing to give any good tenant a lease.

57,674. Have there been any consolidations on your property?—Not that I know of.

57,675. Have you laid much land down to permanent pasture?—A very considerable quantity has been laid down to permanent pasture.

57,676. Has that involved much alteration to buildings?—Considerable addition in the way of building new cow-houses.

57,677. I think you said something about your agreement allowing for compensation for buildings. Do the tenants do any part of that building?—They do nothing to the building except carting the materials.

57,678. I thought you said something about it in your examination-in-chief?—I did not mean to. I only meant to say that if they carted the materials we should be perfectly prepared to consider it.

57,698. 57,679. Has the landlord in every instance provided the whole of the material for the buildings?—Yes, the whole of the material and everything.

57,680. Just following that up, I took this down at the time, I do not know whether I took it correctly, that in disputes you refer to arbitration?—Certainly.

57,681. Would you tell me what kind of arbitration—what would the arbitration consist of?—In very many instances where it is a case of assessing the value of manures and claims, and the value of fixtures, the matter has been referred to a man in the neighbourhood who has had the confidence of a good many people in the country, a local auctioneer.

57,682. One valuer?—One man.

57,683. Mutually agreed upon?—Mutually agreed upon between the outgoer and the incomer. I have suggested the name to the tenant because I have found him generally acceptable. I have said, "Well, you have these claims; would you be willing to leave it to Mr. So and So's arbitration?" and asked the other man the same.

Chairman.

57,684. I have a question to trouble you with from Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you think

Chairman—continued.

"the farmers would be better off if they had leases instead of yearly tenancies"?—I cannot see that they would be better off in any way whatever.

Mr. Griffiths.

57,685. Were these cow clubs established before the rinderpest, or is it since that they have been established?—I am told that many cow clubs were in operation before the rinderpest, though I believe the particular one to which I was alluding especially has been established since. Then, my Lord, may I ask if you wish to hear Mr. Godsall's evidence that I mentioned; I have not incorporated that.

Lord Kenyon.

Will you just give the figures with regard to his estate?

Chairman.

57,686. What is the name of the estate?—Iscoed Park. The average rent is 30s. an acre.

57,687. Whose estate is this?—Mr. Godsall's. He has not been able to attend.

57,688. Where is it?—Iscoed Park.

57,689. What does it consist of?—887 acres.

57,690. What rent?—1,345l.

57,691. Any abatements?—I may say that that is not tithe free. He has frequently made large abatements in bad seasons, but his custom has been, if the farm is not worth the rent, to make it so by draining and boning, or building Dutch barns. Since 1883 he has permanently reduced most of his rents.

57,692. To what extent, do you know?—I do not know. The whole of the property has been re-organised and laid out. He has had no instances of farmers insolvent, and he cannot think of a single instance in which a tenant farmer and his family have gone down in the world. As to money spent on improvements, this property has been remodelled and re-fenced and drained, and partially boned. Six new farmhouses, bricked and slated, and homesteads to them, have been built new entirely, out of nine; 16 cottages and buildings for pigs and cows have been erected.

57,693. At what expense?—I have not got that. Then the question is asked, "Where you have invested money in land what per-centage in money does it return you?" The per-centage is very small indeed. He says that the kindest feeling exists between landlords and tenants; the landlords assist their tenants in every way. We got through the cattle plague years with very few changes. Then, my Lord, I was asked how many members there were, and how many cows, in the cow club that I mentioned just now. I am told that in the cow club I was speaking of there are 170 members and 400 cows.

30 August 1894.]

Mr. T. JONES.

Lord Kenyon.

57,694. That is the Bronington Club?—The Bronington Club.

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,695. I suppose they are principally established for the working classes?—Yes.

57,696. That is the principal intention of them more than for the farmers?—Yes.

57,697. But there is no restriction?—I always urge all the working men to insure their cows whenever I have the opportunity, and I insure my own cows for that reason.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS JONES called and examined.

Chairman.

57,699. Where do you live, please?—Bankhouse Farm, Hanmer.

57,700. Are you a tenant of Lord Trevor's?—Of Lord Trevor and of Lord Kenyon too.

57,701. What would you like to tell the Commission?—I am on perfectly good terms with both landlords.

57,702. What is the size of your farm?—The land I hold under Lord Kenyon is 27 acres. It is accommodation land, and comes up to the farm under Lord Trevor.

57,703. You have got one field of Lord Kenyon's?—27 acres.

57,704. What is the size of Lord Trevor's land you hold?—Lord Trevor's land is a leasehold place. It is a large farm. The two farms together were let to my late father in 1880, with power to sub-let the Bankhouse to me.

57,705. What is the acreage of it?—The acreage altogether is 477 acres.

57,706. And the rent?—£20l.

57,707. Then you are a very large farmer for this district, perhaps the largest?—Well, one of the largest.

57,708. The largest in this district, no doubt. What is the rent of Lord Kenyon's 27 acres?—It is accommodation land, and the rent is 50l.

57,709. You are doing very well then, I suppose, are you not?—Doing well.

57,710. Yes?—Well, we have done better, my Lord. Times are not very good.

57,711. But you are under a lease?—Under a lease, and a favourable lease too.

57,712. Have you had any reduction under your lease?—Not at all.

57,713. Have you asked for it?—Yes, in 1885. The other tenants were returned 10 per cent., but an exception was made as regards the leaseholders.

57,714. That was rather hard on the leaseholders?—Well, we thought so at the time.

Lord Kenyon.

57,698. Will you ask some person if he will kindly send to the Secretary a balance sheet of that cow club and the rules?—I will. (See Appendix.)

See 57,679.

May I be allowed to make a slight correction as to one point. I am afraid I gave the impression that in every case of buildings being put up they had been done entirely by the landlord. I did not mean to say that in that most absolute way. A small holder has not unfrequently come to me, especially when the men were busy, and said, "If you will give me some boards and a few sheets of galvanised iron I will put the building up, or I will pave the pigstye if you will give me a few bricks." It is not the same case with farm buildings.

Chairman—continued.

57,715. There was no reduction made?—There was no reduction made, but certain repairs were done by the landlord afterwards in consideration.

57,716. You are managing to hold your own in spite of the bad times?—Yes, from 1870. Well, my father died two years ago, and my brother and I carry it on in his stead.

57,717. Is farming a very uphill game in these times, or are you doing pretty well in this district?—We find it an uphill game, a lot of labour is required. We are dependent on labour chiefly.

57,718. Have you got enough labour for a large farm like that?—Yes, we have plenty of labour.

57,719. Is it a mixed farm, or is it chiefly grass?—It was formerly a mixed farm, but now it is a dairy farm.

57,720. In this part of the world, when the miners are in good work, I take it you have a very good sale for your produce?—Oh, yes.

57,721. Good markets?—Yes, fair markets.

57,722. Have you any ideas about a land court, or any wish to express upon that subject?—No, we are fairly well contented as we are. The lease grants us the farm for 17 years to farm as we like, and the landlord is perfectly willing to renew.

57,723. Then you are under better conditions, of course, than a yearly tenant would be, in case of anything happening to his Lordship you would go on just the same?—Certainly.

57,724. If the estate was sold, or anything happened, you would be safe?—Perfectly safe for the time being.

57,725. Have you ever known of any cases of hardship where farms have been sold in the neighbourhood?—No, I do not recollect one now.

57,726. Is there anything else you would like to tell us?—No.

30 August 1894.]

HON. G. E. H. TREVOR.

[Continued.]

Lord Kenyon.

57,727. You make cheese, do you not?—Yes.

57,728. Have you got as good a price for your cheese this year as the last?—No, we have not.

57,729. I am sorry to see the fairs have been down lately?—The fairs have been down very low, but they are better than they were a month or six weeks ago.

57,730. To what do you attribute their being down?—Extra competition from America and extra large make.

57,731. Has not the American competition in cheese slackened off the last few years?—I believe they have got a more advanced system of cool storage over there, so that instead of flooding the market they can now keep their stuff back till they can command good prices.

57,732. Do you think the American cheese competes with the best English or Welsh?—Not with the best quality.

57,733. It does with the inferior qualities?—With the medium classes more.

57,734. Do you think that cheese making has improved in this district in the last year or two?—Yes, in some cases good has been done, and in some cases harm has been done by the instruction that has been provided. Farms vary, and anyone going straight away from the dairy lecture or demonstration, and making cheeses on the same principle exactly, might probably spoil the cheese.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

57,735. That is exactly what I was going to try to get from you?—I know where cheeses made exactly on Mr. Willis's principle have not been exactly suitable to the farm, but still many good hints have been given by that demonstration.

57,736. I do not suppose any demonstration could tell every man how to make cheese?—He cannot do it himself. When he goes round, some of the cheeses made in the farm are not as good as the cheeses made in the dairy are.

57,737. For instance, the temperature varies considerably?—Oh, yes.

57,738. At what temperature do you make yours?—About 86 at present, I believe, up to 90 in the spring.

57,739. Do you raise many poultry?—Yes, a good deal of poultry.

57,740. I forget whether you have been troubled with the foxes or not?—Well, not a great deal. We have never sent a bill in.

57,741. I think you are one of the tenants in this part of the world who are also their landlords' gamekeepers too, are you not. You have no gamekeeper?—We are not troubled with a gamekeeper, no.

57,742. I mean you look after the game for Lord Trevor. There is no gamekeeper on the estate?—There is no gamekeeper on the estate. He always is well satisfied with the game on the estate, but he will not be this year, for it is a very bad year for game.

The witness withdrew.

The Hon. G. E. HILL TREVOR called and examined.

Chairman.

57,743. You are agent to your father?—Yes, my Lord, I was appointed in 1880. I must apologise that, owing to a death in my family, I have been unable to appear, as I should have done, before the Commission before, but I have done the best I was able to do. I have had an immense amount of work as executor, and I have brought here details and particulars since 1862. I beg to put in Lord Trevor's farm agreement, and Lord Trevor's cottage agreement, and my appointment as general receiver and agent (handing in documents).

57,744. What is the size of the property?—The size of the property in the county of Flint is 1,029 acres, producing a rental of 1,407*l.* 16*s.* 8*d.*

57,745. How is that divided. Is it in small or biggish farms?—There are six farms and six cottages.

57,746. Are they mostly grass farms or mixed farms?—Principally grass.

Chairman—continued.

57,747. And I suppose they do the same trade as the others—dairying?—Almost exclusively.

57,748. Are your tenants doing fairly well?—Yes. Since 1862, when Lord Trevor succeeded the late Lord Dungannon, the rents have not been raised at all.

57,749. Have there been any abatements?—There have been several. I have prepared a list which I will read to you afterwards. I will first give you the general notes that I have been able to prepare. There is no land tax on the estate paid by tenants. The timber felled on the estate seemed to give the tenants satisfaction. In many cases they asked for trees to be felled. I have already said that cheese and butter is principally made. Remissions of 10 per cent. and 5 per cent., and also allowances of bone, have been made between the years 1880 and 1890. Repairs are done by the landlord. One lease has been granted to the late Mr. Frederick Jones, which was renewed and regranted.

57,750. And he is there now?—Mr. Thomas Jones is representing him, and at the present moment some conversation is taking place with regard to renewing the lease when it runs out again, which I am led to understand will meet with the approval of Lord Trevor, and his eldest son, Colonel Hill Trevor. Dairy classes have been held in the neighbourhood. They have been held in 1890–94, at Old Hall Farm. All the permanent grass-seeds on this estate are supplied by Lord Trevor free. Fencing, rails, gates, and all building materials, are supplied free. The drainage has, with the exception of the leasehold of Old Hall and Bankhouse Farm, have been done free by Lord Trevor, and some years ago he got a large amount of what he was unable to undertake himself, done by the Land Drainage Company, upon which the tenants have been charged nothing. Three months is always allowed at the expiration of the rents becoming due, and extra time has been given in years which have not been so favourable. We find there is keen competition for farms when any become vacant, but there have not been many changes. There are not, and have not, been any arrears of rent.

Hon. G. E. H. TREVOR.

57,751. No arrears?—No arrears. There was one trifling case some few years ago. No notice to quit has been served, and a very serious loss was sustained by Lord Trevor declining to give a tenant notice when a farm was obviously being injured. There has been one case, and one eviction for poaching in the last 13 years, none that I know of previously. The tenants do not express any wish for any land court or any other than the existing state of arrangement between landlord and tenant. I have a book here dated 1872, showing the value of the estate. For the Old Hall Farm, Hanmer, the annual value was then put down as 459*l.* 3*s.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,752. Is that a field-to-field valuation. As far as I can see, you have no schedule attached to it. Is it a gross sum or a field to field valuation?—This is field-to-field. The value was put down at 459*l.* 3*s.*, and the rent then in 1872 was 375*l.* In 1885 the Bankhouse Farm was added to it. The Bankhouse Farm is 155 acres, and the rent then, if the rent of the Bankhouse and the rent of the Old Hall had been added together, would have been 25*l.* more.

Chairman.

57,753. That is the same farm as is occupied by Mr. Jones, the last witness?—The same farm; instead of which it was let at 25*l.* less.

The rent of Tallarn Green Farm in 1867 was 140*l.*; in 1870, 140*l.*; in 1875, 120*l.*; in 1880, 120*l.*; in 1885, 120*l.*; in 1890, 120*l.*; in 1894, 120*l.*

The rent of Plassy Farm in 1880 was 120*l.*; in 1885, 120*l.*; in 1890, 113*l.* 15*s.*; in 1894, 113*l.* 15*s.* The rent of New Hall Farm in 1885 was 375*l.* The tithe amounts to 59*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, and the farm was let in 1890 to the present tenant at 400*l.*, thereby showing a loss within a few years of 25*l.* a year.

Chairman—continued.

The rent of Tallarn was in 1880, 145*l.*; in 1885, 145*l.*; in 1890, 145*l.*; in 1894, 145*l.*

Then I have a list of the tenants. The Old Hall Farm was leased in 1871; the same family are there. Bankhouse Farm, 1880; same family. New Hall Farm, the present agreement 1889; same tenant there. Plassy, 1878; the same tenant. Tallarn Green, Mr. Capper, 1878; the same tenant. That gives an average of 18 years for each of those. I have prepared a rough list of the amounts spent.

New Hall Farm. Lord Trevor tells me that he spent 2,000*l.* on building the buildings at this farm. The draining and permanent grass seeds were found by him. Gates and pump repairs have been done three times, also repairs to house since.

Bankhouse Farm was added to the Old Hall Farm at the request of the late Frederick Jones, and is carried on at the present moment by the various sons. As much as 90*l.* has been deducted in a half year during the existence of the lease, on repairs done by the landlord, which were not required under the lease.

Plassy Farm: the buildings were rebuilt altogether, draining and permanent grass seeds, gates and everything else found free; repairs to the house, pigstyes, &c. all done two years ago, and repairs still going on.

Tallarn Green Farm: there were repairs to the buildings and drainage. Well repairs done three times. Water supply now under consideration to be put in, and a new shed put up. The other Tallarn Green Farm, there have been repairs and draining, and no interest charged.

Lord Kenyon.

57,754. Could you give the summary of the amount spent upon these six farms—just the sum total?—Unfortunately, previous to my being appointed, the agency was carried on in London by the solicitors there.

57,755. But since your appointment just give us the sum total?—Owing to the cause I have already mentioned, I am afraid I cannot produce the vouchers I should like to do, but I have put down the following list: New Hall Farm, we have vouchers for 1,476*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.*, which does not in any way represent what has been done; Old Hall Farm, 428*l.* 2*s.* 2*d.*; Bankhouse Farm, 158*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*; Tallarn Green Farm, 92*l.* 17*s.* 8*d.*; Plassy Farm, 152*l.* 19*s.* 1*d.* The bills for the rebuilding of the Hall and the foregoing premises I cannot obtain, so that this in no way represents the rebuilding. Miscellaneous repairs, 356*l.*, making a total of 3,012*l.* 5*s.* 3*d.*, vouchers for which I have been able to bring.

57,756. That is since your appointment to the agency?—The principal part of this is since. There are one or two items previous.

Chairman.

57,757. I do not think we need go into those before your time. Then you are perfectly satisfied with the state of affairs on your father's part?—Perfectly.

30 August 1894.]

Hon. G. E. H. TREVOR.

Chairman—continued.

57,758. You have told us that there is no wish for a land court?—No, we have heard no expression of opinion in favour of a land court.

Sir John Llewelyn.

57,759. You told us the estate in the county of Flint was 1,029 acres?—Yes.

57,760. Is there any in the county of Denbigh?—Yes, there is the house and grounds, and gardens, and a few cottages.

57,761. But not much farm land?—Only the home farm.

57,762. Any in the other parts of Wales?—No, no other part of Wales. There is the Brynkynallt Colliery; there are the minerals in Denbighshire.

57,763. Then it is a little more than the extent of 1,059 acres; that the Welsh property covers?—There is something under 700 acres in Denbighshire: that covers Brynkynallt Colliery, Brynkynallt House, and the Colliery House. There is a very insufficient supply of house room at present, owing to the good condition of the trade in Denbighshire.

Mr. Grove.

57,764. There is no special demand for leases, I think you say?—We have never been asked for one in any case, except the Old Hall and the Bankhouse.

57,765. And in that particular case where you are asked for it, it seems that they are pleased with it, and they wish to renew it from time to time?—They would like to, but then it was a very exceptional case. Soon after Lord Trevor came into the property, the old tenant died, and the late Mr. Frederick Jones was a very good tenant, who expended a large sum of money, and he was met by his landlord.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,766. Have any claims been made on Lord Trevor by any tenant owing to damage or for any improvements?—There have been claims on a change of tenancy which have been already paid and done with in years gone by—outgoing claims.

57,767. In respect of permanent improvements?—No; hay and straw left at the end of the tenancy.

57,768. How would that be settled?—That was settled by the incoming and outgoing tenants appointing an arbitrator with a final umpire.

57,769. There has never been any difficulty in settling a claim?—None.

57,770. No recourse has been had to the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Not that I remember.

57,771. Why was the Bankhouse added to the Old Hall Farm?—I think principally because the late Mr. Frederick Jones wanted more land. It joined the Old Hall Farm.

57,772. Is that the father of the present Mr. Jones?—The father of the Mr. Jones who has given evidence.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

57,773. Then it was a case of land hunger?—I presume it was. It was previous to my appointment.

57,774. What became of the house of the Old Hall Farm?—There was a permission granted to Frederick Jones under the lease, for the son to live on the Bankhouse and act as bailiff to his father, he still remaining the tenant. I have got that permission with me.

57,775. Are the two brothers managing the Old Farm now?—The three brothers really hold it. Mr. Thomas Jones and his wife and family live at the Bankhouse, and the widow and the other sons live at the Old Hall Farm. They are only a quarter of a mile apart.

57,776. There are not many instances of consolidation on the estate?—Not that I know of. This is the permission I spoke of (producing same).

57,777. What is the state of the buildings at Bankhouse?—The Bankhouse buildings are under consideration at the present moment for some considerable repairs. On the death of the late Mr. Frederick Jones the question was to have been settled then as to how much they would do and how much the landlord would meet them, and owing to the death of the leaseholder the matter has been postponed; it is under consideration at the present moment.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

57,778. Why in the arbitration clause do you try to vary the procedure of the Act of 1883 by inserting the clause, "Without any appeal in any case to the County Court," and saying that "the provisions of section 55 of such Act relating to notice and appeals to the County Court shall not apply to this tenancy." I am not suggesting that it is perfectly clear that it does contravene section 55, or is inconsistent with the Act, but I do not quite see why you have put it in, because it is the landlord's interest as it is the tenant's interest, that there should be an appeal in the heavy cases?—It seems to me to have answered very well. It led to no trouble.

57,779. You think on the whole that even in cases involving two or three hundred pounds, that is to say, cases above the limit, you would rather have finality than have any chance of an appeal to the County Court, with a possible case stated before the High Court?—Yes, and we have never had a tenant object to it—not in any case.

57,780. It is trusting a good deal to the arbitrators or the umpire, is it not?—Well, one is appointed on each side.

57,781. But the point on which there would be an appeal to the court would be matters of construction, matters of law, not so much matters of fact?—They have got a sort of unwritten custom of appointing one on each side, and then they usually suggest Major Birch, in the Vale of Clwyd, as the umpire, and in only one case in the last 13 years has it gone so far—in only one case has it gone so far as the umpire.

Hon. G. E. H. TREVOR.

Chairman.

57,781a. I have a question to put to you by Mr. Vincent: "Referring to your series of rentals, is Mr. Vincent right in thinking that before the last Tithe Act the tithes were paid by the tenants and the land is now tithe free?"—Mr Vincent is quite right. The Tithe Act came in in 1890 I think. Before that the rent in one case I mentioned was 375*l.*, the tithe being 55*l.* 8*s.* 6*d.*, and the rent was then put at 400*l.*—a loss of 25*l.* Since that date the tenants have continued to pay the exact amount of the tithe, without any alteration in the agreement.

Chairman—continued.

May I be permitted to make one correction as to what I said about cottage property. Lord Trevor insisted on the cottages being let to the cottagers, independent of the farmers, and that led to a large amount of repairs, in one case to the amount of 37*l.* to a double cottage. Since then the arrears have been perfectly incessant, and it is fast becoming the fact that cottages on this estate are rent free, because we can get no rent.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. TREVOR GRIFFITH BOSCAWEN re-called and further examined.

*Chairman.*See
57,317-19.

57,782. You wish to make an explanation, I understand?—I wish to correct one portion of my evidence, namely, the answer I gave to a question put by Mr. Vincent. He asked me what number of men were employed on the Gredington estate, and what the wages were. I said I had not got any particulars with me then, but I said I thought there were from 40 to 50 men employed, and that the wages were about 50*l.* a fortnight. Of course that is obviously wrong, because at that rate the men would only receive 10*s.* a week. I find on referring to the books that we have 26 men employed on the estate, and that we pay every fortnight 45*l.* That is the average. There are also, including men on the brickyard, at the home farm, and other men on other portions of the estate, about 19 extra men. Those men's wages are not included in the fortnightly pay; they are paid in various other ways. The 50*l.* I gave as the fortnightly wages was 5*l.* too much, and it only referred to 26 men.

57,783. It comes practically to 1,200*l.* a year, besides these other extra men?—About that.

57,784. What would you put these other extra men at—another 400*l.* I suppose?—The extra men include three men at the brickyard, six men on the home farm, two keepers on the other estate, and the stablemen at Gredington. I understood from Mr. Vincent that he wished to know the number of men his Lordship was paying every week.

The witness withdrew.

MR. J. LLOYD.

SIXTY-SEVENTH DAY.

The Town Hall, Mold, Flintshire, Friday, 31st August 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Lord KENYON.

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.

Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.

Professor RHYS, M.A., LL.D.

Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.

Mr. EDWIN GROVE.

Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. JOHN LLOYD called and examined.

Professor Rhys.

57,785. You are Mr. John Lloyd of the Antelope Inn farm, and occupier of three other farms, namely, Dolfechlas ucha, Bryn Celyn, and Bryn-y-Gareg, and you are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

57,786. In what parish are those farms?—Cilcain, Mold.

57,787. Does the total acreage of your holdings make 228 acres?—Yes.

57,788. Will you give the figures of each?—I have prepared my evidence in writing.

57,789. How much is the Antelope farm?—28 acres. Dolfechlas ucha, 100 acres; Bryn Celyn, 60 acres; Bryn-y-Gareg, 40 acres.

57,790. Without the right of sheep run?—There is no sheep run. The names of the owners are:—Antelope and Bryn Celyn, P. B. Davies Cooke, Gwysaney; Dolfechlas ucha, E. O. V. Lloyd, Rhagatt; Bryn-y-Gareg, executors of the late T. W. Humphreys, Esq., Swansea.

57,791. Is there any unenclosed land in the district which could be cultivated with profit?—No.

57,792. You think that things are managed best on the large estates?—Yes, I do.

57,793. What do you say about politics, religion, and language?—It makes no difference whatever.

57,794. The usual time for entering on a farm in the district is?—29th November.

57,795. Do you talk Welsh or English chiefly?—I talk both.

57,796. What do you call that date in Welsh. Is there any common name for that time of entering on a farm in your district?—“Dydd Gwyl Andros” (St. Andrew’s Day).

57,797. You have a yearly agreement?—Yes.

57,798. Have you any leases?—Leases are not common in this district.

57,799. Do you know of anyone who has been refused a lease?—No.

57,800. Do you know of anyone who has asked for a lease?—No, not and been refused.

57,801. Do you think that tenants are as safe under yearly agreements as under leases?—Well

Professor Rhys—continued.

I have lived under Mr. Cooke for over 40 years. I never asked him for a lease because I felt quite safe and quite satisfied with him and his agent.

57,802. You are satisfied with your agreement?—Quite so.

57,803. There is no part of it that you wish to alter?—Not the least, because our landlord and agents are not strict with us. They always allow us to do almost everything that we ask them. They never refuse anything.

57,804. Do you obtain a copy of your agreement?—Yes.

57,805. Do you understand what is in it?—Quite so.

57,806. How is the rent fixed?—At a lump sum generally.

57,807. Do you notice whether the rents are much the same on your estate as on the other estates about?—Well, they are very much alike; I hold under three different landlords.

57,808. So that you consider the rents are much the same?—Much the same as a rule.

57,809. Are you required to do any services besides the payment of rent?—Nothing whatever.

57,810. Are the farms given to the highest bidder. Is that the way they are let?—No, they always fix the best tenant they can get so far as I have seen.

57,811. With regard to the rent, you say in your statement that there has been a reduction?—Yes, I have had an abatement from Mr. Cooke of 10 per cent. for years, and from Mr. Lloyd of Rhagatt as well.

57,812. In your written statement the 10 per cent. from Mr. Cooke is called a reduction; is it a permanent reduction?—No, it is an allowance.

57,813. It is an abatement?—Yes.

57,814. Five years ago you had an abatement or reduction of 10 per cent. on Dolfechlas ucha?—Yes, that belongs to Mr. Lloyd of Rhagatt.

57,815. Then you have had an abatement of 10 per cent. since?—Until the last rent-day. The abatement is stopped upon that estate now.

31 August 1894.]

Mr. J. LLOYD.

Professor Rhys—continued.

57,816. On the Antelope and Bryn Celyn there has been an abatement of 10 per cent. since when?—Since 1886.

57,817. Is it an annual abatement?—An annual abatement.

57,818. With regard to the rates, have they greatly increased?—Yes, they have. In former years we did not have a School Board rate, but the School Board rate now is about 11d. in the £ or so in the year.

57,819. What about the highway rates?—I think they are a little bit higher. I cannot say how much.

57,820. You have something to say about the Income Tax, Schedule B.?—Yes, they always come upon us for that, whether we make a profit or not, and in the last year we did not make a profit, only a loss.

57,821. I think one of my brother Commissioners would like to get a little more information upon that point presently. I think we must accept that statement with some reservation at present. Now in regard to consolidation, has there been any consolidation of farms?—Yes, but not much.

57,822. On which estate?—On Mr. Cooke's estate, some years ago—not much.

57,823. What has been the result?—That farms are in better order by far now.

57,824. And more or less labour employed?—More, I should say. Of course, they farm them better—a great deal better—than they used to do with the small farms.

57,825. Does consolidation usually mean more labour employed in this district?—Yes.

57,826. What do you think about the large farmers as compared with the smaller ones?—I think they are best off.

57,827. Do they farm better?—Yes, they do.

57,828. Do any farmers in this district sublet?—Well, I have sublet two of my farms to my two sons.

57,829. Is there much subletting, do you know, besides?—I do not think there is.

57,830. When do you pay the rent?—We do not pay it when it is due; we pay it when it is more convenient to us. Our landlords have altered the times, since I remember, once or twice for our convenience as tenants.

57,831. Do you know at all whether any of the farmers have to borrow money to pay their rents?—Indeed, I do not.

57,832. Are labourers plentiful?—There are plenty in my district.

57,833. What do you consider the state of cultivation in this district, so far as you have observed it? Is the country round here in a good state of cultivation, or not?—Very good, in my opinion.

57,834. There is no waste land, you say?—None that could be reclaimed for profit.

57,835. What about laying down land to pasture?—Well, we have done a great deal of that lately, because we find it pay better in pasture than growing corn. Only we must grow a certain amount of corn for straw and turnips.

Professor Rhys—continued.

57,836. For what period are you speaking now—how many years?—Well, within the last 20 years.

57,837. What crops have increased in consequence of this change of pasture? Used you to have so much root crop formerly as now?—Not half as much.

57,838. How is that?—I do not know how it is. We find we cannot do very well without root crops now to fatten our cattle and sheep.

57,839. Then do you have summer fallowing?—No.

57,840. What has taken the place of that?—Well, growing turnips and root crops.

57,841. How far have the landowners aided you in those matters? What have they done for you?—Well, they provide us with good buildings for ourselves, and outbuildings as well. They provide us with plenty of good water in our houses and outside.

57,842. What about the drainage on the farm; who does that?—The landlord.

57,843. And the irrigation?—Yes, that is done by the landlord. We get new gates and posts, and they set them up for us.

57,844. And tanks for liquid manure?—Yes.

57,845. The landlord provides all these things?—Yes.

57,846. What do the tenants do?—Well, we cultivate the land—manure it.

57,847. Who pays for the seed?—We seed it too; we find all that, and hedging and ditching, and cleaning the land; farm it properly.

57,848. Are you a great student of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Not a very great student, but still I know partly what it is.

57,849. You have read it?—Yes.

57,850. You know what it contains?—Yes.

57,851. I think you say you know it is illegal to contract out of it?—Yes.

57,852. Have you seen any attempt to do that? Do you know of anyone having tried to contract out of it?—Indeed, I do not know of any; I do not remember any.

57,853. I ask it because you give those words here: That you are aware it is illegal for anyone to contract out of it?—I know that.

57,854. You have not heard of anyone trying to do so?—No.

57,855. In regard to the custom of the country, as to crops and so on, between the incoming and outgoing tenant. What is the custom?—We will say for the outgoing tenant his share of wheat in summer fallow, two-thirds; any other, one-half.

57,856. And with regard to hay and straw and manure, and unexhausted improvements, what about them?—The outgoing tenant gets paid for them.

57,857. Is there any trouble about game in the district?—No.

57,858. Is there any game preserved in the district?—Oh, yes.

57,859. What do you think of freeholders?—Well, I think they are the better off of any of us.

31 August 1894.]

Mr. J. LLOYD.

Professor Rhŷs—continued.

57,860. Better off than the tenant farmers?—Yes.

57,861. Are there many freeholders?—No, not many.

57,862. Have any of them bought their holdings recently?—Well, there are some who have bought recently.

57,863. Most of them?—I think most of them have bought recently.

57,864. And there is a good number of them?—Not many.

57,865. On the whole, you consider they are better off than the tenant farmers?—Yes.

57,866. Then they were able to pay the money up for their farms?—I suppose they were.

57,867. I suppose they were not obliged to borrow largely?—No, I hope not.

57,868. You say you hope not, but I took it for granted you knew about them?—I do not know exactly whether they had money to pay of their own, without mortgage—I do not know—I consider that they were freeholders—that they did not owe a penny upon them.

57,869. You have opportunities of knowing something about them?—Yes.

57,870. You know what is thought of them in the neighbourhood?—Yes.

57,871. Have you had any assistance from any members of your family to pay the rent?—No, not to pay the rent.

57,872. You have said in your statement that you paid the rents for your farms without the assistance of your sons for 40 years; is that so?—Yes, I have done so.

57,873. With regard to a land court, what do you say about that?—Well, I should be very sorry to see a land court myself. I think a tenant can do better with his landlord himself than go to a court, by far. There would be a better feeling between them, if they can deal themselves without arbitration. I am of opinion I should be very sorry to see a land court in Wales.

57,874. As to the present state of agriculture, what do you say about prices?—Well, the prices are low, and I cannot see any chance of their being improved for some time, owing to foreign competition. We get our grain, our cattle, our sheep, and everything else from a foreign land, much cheaper than we can rear them here, in one sense.

57,875. Have you any remedy to suggest how this state of depression can be met?—I have not, indeed.

57,876. Do you see any chance of getting higher prices soon?—Not the least for some time to come.

57,877. You think that foreign competition is developing?—Yes.

57,878. What are the relations between you and your landlords? Are they satisfactory?—My relations between myself and the landlords and their agents are very good; they could not be better.

Mr. Griffiths.

57,879. Can you hand in a copy of your agreement?—I have no agreement at all for most of my places. Here is one. (Handing.)

57,880. Did you ever apply for one?—The only terms between me and some of my landlords is the Agricultural Holdings Act. There is no agreement whatever; he trusts me, and I trust him.

57,881. Both of you understand that fully, I suppose?—Yes.

57,882. Have you a separate dwelling-house upon each of these farms?—Yes.

57,883. Are they kept up in proper order?—Yes, they are.

57,884. You have not brought with you any receipts for the rates. You say the rates have so very much increased; have you brought the receipts to show that?—No, I have not.

57,885. Where we were yesterday we found that the rates had been reduced very much?—I think it is otherwise in our district.

57,886. Do you consider that large farmers are better off in times of depression than small ones?—Yes, I believe so.

57,887. How do you explain it?—Well, as a rule, they have more money at their backs; they can keep their stock, perhaps, from one year to the other, as I have done myself. There is no doubt I should be badly off many times if I had to sell to meet the rents every year.

57,888. But that depends upon the money that a man has at his back?—Yes, the small farmers in our district have no money as a rule, only just enough to pay their way, but large farmers have.

57,889. The small farmers do not pay any labour bills?—Not much, as a rule.

57,890. Has not your labour bill advanced of late years?—In my district very few small farmers are able to cut their own hay. I cut the hay for, say, half-a-dozen small farmers every year with my machines.

57,891. How many acres would you consider a small farm?—About 20 or 30 acres, say.

Professor Rhŷs.

57,891a. You own yourself 228, and you mention small farms of 20 and 30 acres?—They are just intermixed with my farms.

57,892. What is the average size of a farm do you say in the district?—Well, from 15 to 30 acres.

57,893. What is the average size of farms, take the large farms and the small farms together, what should you say is the average?—An average farm would be, perhaps, 100 acres or so.

57,894. There are some farms of that size besides the holdings that you hold?—Yes, there are.

Mr. Griffiths.

57,895. Have the landlords assisted in laying down land to pasture in any way. Have they given the seeds or manure?—I do not know any that have done so in our part.

31 August 1894.]

Mr. J. LLOYD.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

57,896. We heard yesterday in most cases the landlords assist the tenants by giving seed, or giving manure, and things of that kind?—They do give manure in several places in our part.

57,897. Does it not cost you more to attend to the root crops now than when you commenced farming?—No, I do not think it does.

57,898. Are you able to get women out in the field to work?—No, our implements are much better now than they used to be.

57,899. But they cost you money, do they not?—Yes, they do.

57,900. How much more does it cost now to go into a farm with implements than it did when you commenced farming?—It would cost a great deal more. For mowing you would get a scythe for 5s., but now you will have to give 20l. for a mowing machine.

57,901. And all other implements I suppose in a similar proportion?—Yes.

57,902. Do you pay any interest on draining?—Yes.

57,903. What percentage?—Indeed I forget exactly.

57,904. You have not had much done for you it may be, in that way?—I do not hold any land now (I did formerly) that has been drained.

57,905. Did your sons work with you on the farm before you put them in these other farms?—My sons are not very old yet. There is one 21 years of age, and the other is about 23 years old.

57,906. Still I suppose they worked with you from the time they were 16, did they not?—Oh, yes. I had them apprenticed as farmers ever since.

57,907. Did you pay them any wages?—No.

57,908. I thought you said just now that they did not do anything; that you had no assistance from your children?—I mean I have not had any in one sense.

57,909. You mean no assistance in money to pay the rent?—I mean in labour too.

57,910. Do not your sons labour when they grow up and have done school?—Oh, yes.

57,911. What did you mean by saying you had no assistance from them?—Well, I farmed over 40 years without them.

57,912. When you had them did they not assist you in any way?—Oh, certainly, now they do, or assist themselves, because they have farms of their own now, each of them.

57,913. With regard to unexhausted manure, have you any fixed scale in your agreement as to unexhausted manure?—No.

57,914. Supposing you leave your farm now; what do you expect to be paid for it?—I should expect to get compensation for the unexhausted improvements; of cake consumed and manure used, and so on.

57,915. According to the Agricultural Holdings Act, of course?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

57,916. What makes you think that freeholders are so much better off than the tenant farmers. We have found elsewhere they say the tenant farmer is far best off?—Well, I cannot see any reason why a man getting his land for nothing is not better off than a tenant farmer that pays rent.

57,917. Were all these tenant farmers able to pay for their farms as they purchased them, do you think?—Well, I know that some had plenty of money to pay for all.

57,918. Had they made their fortunes by farming?—Well, I cannot say that.

57,919. I suppose someone left them some money?—Yes, relations and one thing and another.

57,920. With regard to these people who have bought their farms, do you think they farm rather better than the tenant farmers do?—No, they cannot.

57,921. You appear to have very good landlords. Have you not heard of others in the district that have not such good landlords as you have?—Yes, there are lots no doubt not so good as ours.

57,922. Do you not think on their behalf it would be a very good thing in settling the question of rent to have some court to appeal to?—For my own part I would not like it.

57,923. That is quite right for your own part; but you know everyone is not in the position you are?—I do not think it would be a good thing for anyone to have to go to a land court.

57,924. How would you settle the matter. A tenant farmer comes to his landlord and complains that his rent is too high. The landlord says, "No, I do not think it is." What is he to do?—A tenant farmer ought to know exactly what he can make out of his farm, and if the landlord will not take his offer, it is the best way for that tenant farmer to go somewhere else.

57,925. Where is he to go. Are there plenty of vacant farms about?—I will just tell you. I am one out of ten myself, seven gone to America, one dead, and two stopped in Wales. They have gone to America the last 35 years.

57,926. You would recommend them to emigrate?—I would recommend farmers that cannot agree with the landlords to emigrate at once.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,927. Will you state what is the rental of these farms which you occupy. What is the rent of the Antelope?—I cannot tell you, I have not put it down.

57,928. Do you not know the rent of the farm?—Yes, no doubt; but I do not recollect how much it is now.

57,929. How long have you been paying rent for this place?—The Antelope?

57,930. Yes?—Over 40 years.

57,931. Still you do not remember the rent?—I do not remember at this moment, I cannot tell you that rent or the rent of any of my farms, to the pound.

57,932. Your memory is not a very retentive one I must say.

Professor Rhys.

57,933. Do you remember the total rent you pay?—No, I do not remember it.

57,934. Not the whole rent you pay?—No.

57,935. Well I do not think you have taken much trouble to find out the figures for us?—I do not remember.

Mr. Grove.

57,936. Is it 1*l.* or 2*l.* or 5*l.* an acre. Say roughly?—It is about from 15*s.* to 30*s.* an acre, the land I hold.

Mr. Richard Jones.

57,937. I see here you say in your statement the rent is 69*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* for 28 acres?—The house included.

57,938. You do not remember the rents of the other places?—Not to the penny.

57,939. Can you give us somewhere near it?—Oh, yes.

57,940. What is Dolfechlas?—69*l.* somewhere about, it may be a few shillings more, or a few shillings less.

57,941. Dolfechlas is 100 acres?—Yes.

57,942. What is the rent of Bryn Celyn?—I do not know exactly what the rent of Bryn Celyn is.

57,943. About—somewhere near?—It is about 73*l.* including tithe.

57,944. 1*l.* an acre?—Yes.

57,945. Bryn-y-Careg?—About 35*l.*

57,946. Is the land of the Antelope farm much better than Dolfechlas?—Yes, better by half.

57,947. You pay for that over 2*l.* an acre?—Well it may be including the house.

57,948. Is there any very poor land on Dolfechlas?—Yes, not worth 5*s.* an acre.

57,949. Is it bog or marsh?—No, waste land, rubbish and everything else.

57,950. Yet you consider the Antelope farm is let as reasonable as Dolfechlas?—Yes, every bit.

57,951. Who occupies the houses on these farms. In which do you live?—At the Antelope.

57,952. Who lives in the house at Dolfechlas?—My bailiff.

57,953. Who lives at Bryn Celyn?—My sister-in-law lives in the house, although my son is the tenant.

57,954. Who lives at Bryn-y-Careg?—Mrs. Owen, although my son is tenant of the farm.

57,955. You put forward that you are the tenant of these places and not your sons?—Yes, I sublet to my sons.

57,956. You are responsible to the landlord?—Yes, I am.

57,957. You say there is no demand for leases?—I do not know of any.

57,958. Can you give any reason why there is no demand for leases. Years ago there was a great demand for leases?—Well, I will tell you. There is a farm not far from Mold just close by here that has been let on lease a good many years ago now.

57,959. For how many years?—For 21 years. I was with the farmer when he was taking it. Times were very good then, and they had a very high price for the farm. Lately, say some years back, the landlord of that tenant reduced his rent something like 75*l.* a year, I think.

57,960. Who was that landlord?—Mr. Phillips of Rhual Hall, Mold, and the tenant is John Lloyd of Maesgarman farm.

57,961. Has the lease expired?—No.

57,962. And his rent has been reduced as much as 75*l.* a year?—Yes.

57,963. What was the original rent?—I cannot tell you what was the original rent, but I know it has been reduced that much.

57,964. Was it a repairing lease. Had the tenant bound himself to keep the buildings in repair?—No, the landlord keeps the buildings in repair. I was with the tenant when he took that farm.

57,965. How many years are unexpired yet of the lease?—I cannot say exactly; it may be four or five years, or three or four years.

57,966. I must say it was very creditable on the landlord's part. You say that no services are required of the tenants except the payment of rent?—Nothing whatever on our part.

57,967. No haulage or anything?—Oh, no.

57,968. You say that you had abatements, but not lately on Dolfechlas?—The last half year. The repairs upon the estate are very much wanted and the landlord is going to spend the abatement money in repairing the buildings on the Rhagatt estate. I think they are going to spend about 3,000*l.* or 4,000*l.*, if I understand right.

57,969. Or else you have had abatements annually from the year 1886?—Yes, until this month. This month was our last rent-day.

57,970. What is the state of the buildings on Dolfechlas; are they very fair?—Well, it wants a good lot of repairs.

57,971. How long have you occupied this place?—About 27 years; it may be a little more or less.

57,972. Have you had any repairs done to the buildings?—Oh yes, several times; in fact we get a little repair every year.

57,973. Have you more accommodation for your stock now than when you first became a tenant of the farm at Dolfechlas?—Yes, I have.

57,974. Have you sufficient at the present time?—Yes, quite sufficient now.

57,975. I suppose you are able to keep more stock now than when you first became tenant of the place?—Yes, almost double it.

57,976. In consequence of your changed method of farming; that is, you do not raise much corn, and you have laid down the land to grass?—Yes.

57,977. Consequently you are able to keep more stock?—Yes.

Mr. J. LLOYD.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

57,978. Do you think that the landlords generally have met the requirements of the tenants in this respect, and added to the buildings?—I believe they have.

57,979. Now, you say that you have laid down land to grass. Do you mean to say you have laid down the land with permanent grass seeds, or simply rotation seeds?—Not permanent we will say. We can cut it when we like.

57,980. Of course rotation seeds are not permanent. I suppose you would plough the and in some three or four years or so, after laying down the land with rotation seed?—Yes, and more in some parts; just as we think to cut it again. Some fields we like to cut much oftener than others.

57,981. You let it rest for four or five years, and some perhaps more?—Oh, yes, some of it 10 years.

57,982. Under those circumstances you have never made a claim for laying down land to pasture?—Oh, no.

57,983. What is the complaint you have to make with respect to Schedule B. Are there many farmers who pay income tax under Schedule B?—Well, I do not know of any tenant farmer in the parish of Cilcain except myself who does.

57,984. Do you keep farming accounts?—Yes.

57,985. If you keep accounts, do you not think it would answer your purpose better to fill your return under Schedule D?—Well, I have to pay upon Schedules A. and B. and D.

57,986. Are you a landlord?—Well, in a very small way.

57,987. You say that large farmers farm their land better than small farmers?—Yes.

57,988. That is contrary to the opinion which has been expressed very frequently before us?—Well, they may differ in different localities.

57,989. What is told us is that the farmers take a greater personal part in the management of a small farm than they would in a large farm; greater personal supervision and exercise; more care in working a small farm than they would with a large farm?—Well, it is different with us, I think.

57,990. I suppose more machinery would be used on a large farm?—Yes.

57,991. Do you find that the employment of machinery has reduced the labour bill to any very great extent?—No, I do not think it has.

57,992. You do not know any farmers who have been able to dispense with some of their men because they employ more machinery?—No.

57,993. Do you find that farms are as well cultivated now as they were many years ago?—Quite as well in our district.

57,994. Ditches and watercourses kept open?—Yes, hedges and everything else.

57,995. You say the landlords supply tanks for liquid manure. Do you know how many tenant farmers have been supplied with tanks?—Not so many, I think, but there are a few.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

57,996. Have the landlords supplied the tenants with Dutch barns for covering their corn?—Well, they are doing so now at Pembedw estate for the farms.

57,997. Who owns the Pembedw estate?—Mr. Buddicom.

57,998. Hitherto, they have not done much that way?—No. On the farms I hold I have one on each farm, but I have done that myself instead of thatching the corn and so on.

57,999. Entirely yourself?—Yes.

58,000. You were not supplied even with the materials?—No, I never asked.

58,001. Do you think it was for want of asking that you did not get it?—Well, I have not the least doubt if I asked my landlord he would do it now. I made a mistake. I must correct it now. I forgot about that. There is a shed at Bryn Celyn built on Mr. Cooke's estate; he found the timber, and I found the roofing and work and so on.

58,002. Is that on one of your farms?—Yes, under Mr. Cooke. The Bryn Celyn farm.

58,003. You say that the landlords have assisted the tenants in works of irrigation. What do you mean by that?—I know what drainage is.

58,004. Do you know what irrigation is—it is your own word?—I know what irrigation is too.

58,005. Will you answer, what have they done in the shape of irrigation?—I think my daughter copied the statement you have, and there may be a little difference.

Professor Rhys.

58,006. Who put the word "irrigation" in?—I should not wonder but my daughter did in copying it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

58,007. Is this your daughter's writing?—Yes, I think so.

58,008. Your daughter has been putting in something that you did not tell her?—It may be that she did.

58,009. What have the landlords done in the shape of seeding?—Nothing in our district.

58,010. She has put another thing in then?—Then she must be wrong.

58,011. Manuring?—The tenant farmer does that and the seeding.

58,012. That I am afraid was my mistake?—It may be.

Mr. Grove.

58,013. You mentioned the question of railway rates I think. Do you mean by that local railway rates, or do you mean competitive rates on foreign produce?—Well, I mean the railway rates are very high in our part. In taking a ton of cake or something from Liverpool we have to pay about 9s. to the railway station, or a little more.

58,014. You think that the farming industry is injured by the high railway rates paid?—

31 August 1894.]

Mr. J. LLOYD.

Mr. Grove—continued.

There is no doubt it is, and to a great extent too.

58,015. And you think the railway companies could afford to carry at less than they do carry?—Yes, I believe they could carry, we will say, cake and such things for just half what they do now.

58,016. Have the county council done anything in teaching butter-making in this part?—I do not know indeed.

58,017. As to a land court. You do not want the friendly relations between the landlord and tenant to be disturbed?—Not at all.

58,018. That is very natural, and I am sure we all agree with you. But suppose an arrangement of this sort were made that the landlord and tenant should first of all meet and try to manage between themselves their terms and the rent, and if they could not agree then for the operation of the Court to be sought. Would you agree with that?—No, I would not. If I could not agree with my landlord myself I would turn my back and be done with it. That would be my way.

58,019. You seem to have most excellent landlords; are they all of the same character in this part?—Not at all.

58,020. Have you known of any differences between the tenant farmers and their landlords?—Well, I do not know.

58,021. You do not think you have heard of any?—No.

58,022. Do you attach any importance to security of tenure?—Well, it is very desirable to have security of tenure; there is no doubt about that.

58,023. Do you think you would get on better by a lease than you would by a yearly taking?—Well, you would be safer with some landlords no doubt.

58,024. So that in some cases there might be an advantage in having a lease?—Yes.

58,025. You spoke about a lease where the rent has been reduced 75?—Yes.

58,026. I am very glad to tell you that we have met with a good many cases of that sort, that where there have been leases, the landlords, kind and sympathetic with the tenant, and knowing the difficulties of the times, have taken off the rent where there is a lease, in the same way as they have in respect of the yearly takings. I think you should know that. You speak of the local rates being much heavier, the school board rate being 11d. in the £ out of it?—Yes.

58,027. Do you know any reason why the rates have gone up. Are you a guardian?—No.

58,028. Can you give any idea why? Is it because of increased expenditure, or is it because of the decreased rateable value in the union?—I should say it is the decrease of the rateable value in the union.

58,029. Some pits and works have stopped?—Yes, a great many of the works have stopped.

58,030. That would affect the total figures of course?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

58,031. You have not told us what wages you pay. What wages do you give, about?—Well, I pay my head man about 15s. a week, a house and garden free, and a place to keep a cow free, all the year round. That is the head man. The others are from 4s. to 18s. according to size and ability.

58,032. You know some men who farm their own holdings—freeholds?—Yes.

58,033. Do you think a man who owns his own land tries to make more of the land, and can make more of it, than a man who is only a tenant?—Oh, no, he cannot make more than a good tenant.

58,034. You said you are under the Agricultural Holdings Act. Is there any custom of the country that is recognised?—Yes, if I was to leave the farm after sowing wheat in summer fallow I should be entitled to two-thirds of it.

58,035. So that in addition to the Agricultural Holdings Act there is a recognised custom of the country?—Yes, that would be entirely independent of the Act.

58,036. Has that ever been reduced into a regular system, and put at the end of an agreement, do you know?—I do not think it has been.

58,037. It is so in some counties. In my own county, for instance, we have the whole thing scheduled in a proper way. You do not think that is done here?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

58,038. With respect to Schedule B, do you think the standard is too high to take half the rental; should it be one-third?—Yes, it would be more just. I must say we should not feel it so much then.

58,039. Of course you would not feel it so much; you would have to pay on less. You would not say you have made a profit in your farm to the extent of half the rent?—Quite so.

58,040. Did you pay on Schedule B, the last time you paid income tax?—Yes, I have been paying on Schedule B for the last 30 or 40 years.

58,041. If you have not made half the rent, why did you not claim to fill in the return under Schedule D?—I will tell you in a moment. In making up the accounts and appealing and one thing and another, it would cost me more labour than paying the money by half perhaps.

58,042. You are afraid of much labour?—Well, I do not like to work for nothing if I can help it.

58,043. Or was it you did not like the Income Tax Commissioners to know your circumstances?—Not the least; it would cost us more in labour and one thing and another.

58,044. If you keep accurate accounts, it is very little labour?—It is a good bit to go over it for three years.

58,045. I keep accounts and it does not cost me much labour?—I would rather not do it.

31 August 1894.]

Mr. J. LLOYD.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,046. What do you value the keep of a cow at to a labourer?—It is worth 7l. a year.

58,047. What did you pay the labourers per week, as wages, when you began farming?—When I began farming the labourers used to have their meat and all in our house.

58,048. What did you value that at; how many shillings a week?—The money we had to pay to the best men, almost, in the country then was about 6s. and their meat.

58,049. What did you value that meat per week at?—Indeed I do not know.

58,050. Would it cost 5s.?—No, I do not think it would; 10s. at that time was reckoned a very good wage per week, the man finding his own.

58,051. Is it your opinion that there should be a cottage similar to yours attached to all the farms in the hands of the tenant?—It would be very desirable, especially on farms of good size.

58,052. Then you are not of opinion that the landlord should let all the cottages to labourers that are not connected with the farm?—I do not understand your question quite.

58,053. What I mean to say is that you think that every farmer should have a cottage in his own hand that he can let to his labourer?—Yes, if he keeps a labourer.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

58,054. So that all the labourers might not get their cottages from the landlord direct and not from the tenant at all?—Yes.

Professor Rhys

58,055. Do the farmers about you keep accounts do you think?—Indeed I cannot say.

58,056. Or do they rely simply on the bank book if they have a banking account?—I cannot say.

58,057. What number of servants do you keep?—Workmen do you mean?

58,058. Men servants living on the farm?—Well, I keep altogether about ten.

58,059. Where do you lodge them?—They have houses of their own; they find their own, every one that I have.

58,060. You are a larger tenant farmer than most of your neighbours I take it?—Yes, I am.

58,061. There is a question here put by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "In addition to being a farmer have you any other business?"—Yes.

58,062. "Are you a coal merchant and a publican also?"—Yes.

58,063. "Do you find farming pays you as well as your other businesses?"—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. PHILIP PENNANT PENNANT called and examined.

Chairman.

58,064. Are you an owner of land, a county councillor, late president of the Vale of Clwyd Chamber of Agriculture, treasurer and member of the Agricultural Committee of the North Wales University College and chairman of the Flintshire and Denbighshire Dairy School?—Yes.

58,065. You are prepared to give evidence touching Flintshire and West Denbighshire?—Yes.

58,066. Your evidence refers to your own estate in the Vale of Clwyd and also in the Holywell and Ysgeriog parishes?—Yes.

58,067. Will you kindly make your statement to the Commissioners?—With reference to my own property, I speak with regard to about 1,400 acres of purely agricultural land, which has been in my possession for 40 years, and for which I have acted as my agent for a considerable number of years, I have omitted to include in my calculation land of an urban character or what has recently come into my possession, as it would be calculated to upset the series of calculations which bear on the 40 years. I also wish to offer evidence of a more general character as to the tenure of land and agricultural education. I will omit all subjects which you have heard over and over again, and I will confine myself so far as I can to evidence which I think will be interesting to you. I have before me the syllabus, and I come to the question of occupation. I would say that the end of November is the time generally for the date of entry in this district for land, and May the 1st for house buildings and an outlet field, with the exception of the eastern side of the county, where February 2nd takes the place of the end of November. Farms are let almost invariably from year to year, and there is no great demand for leases. In four cases I have myself been asked for a lease and I have given four leases, but they are not asked for as a rule, unless a tenant has a certain amount of capital that he desires to spend on the farm. I think, as a rule, a tenant does not ask for a lease because he prefers that the owner and not himself should spend capital on improvements. I myself have not found that changes in tenancy are more frequent than formerly. Wherever an occupation has been resumed for the purpose of planting, building, or other purposes, owners do serve their tenants with proper notices and grant them compensation. If damage is done to land in timber-cutting the tenant has been compensated in all cases with which I am acquainted, and the same is the case where land has been required for mining, brickfields, quarries, or industrial operations. Penalising clauses are common on such matters as ploughing up old pasture land and so forth, and they are not often enforced because they are not often broken. On my own property the tenants invariably have a copy of their agreements. The rent is fixed at a gross sum. With regard to uniformity in rents on neighbouring estates I believe that, speaking roughly, there is a tolerable uniformity in rents. My experience as a member of the assessment committee is in this direction. Then with regard to the rent of larger and smaller holdings, I should say that putting aside the value of the house, the rent will not be different, except on quite large farms where the tenant would need a large capital. This class of farm is more difficult to let than formerly, and occupiers have to be tempted by a low rent. Such points as proximity to a railway station or to a market affect the rent of this class of farm much more than in the case of small holdings. There are no services other than the payment of rent rendered by tenants on my own property, and I believe that they are very unusual, as a rule, in the neighbourhood. The rent is fixed by proposal, followed by private treaty, and I believe that that is general. The holding is not let to the highest bidder in any sense of the term, and I believe that fair rents are generally fixed. In case of a vacancy on my own property, the preference is given first to a relation, and next to a tenant on the property. The great object is the acceptance of a tenant with a good practical knowledge of farming and a sufficient capital. With regard to arbitration being resorted to as a means of settling or adjusting rent, I can mention one case where by mutual arrangement between myself and my tenant, after a large sum had been spent on improvements, the rent was re-adjusted by reference to a third party in whom we both had confidence, and if there was occasion to adopt the same course again, I should be very ready to adopt it. My experience extends to 40 years. During the first portion of that period rents were rising, and my rents rose, partly in consequence of good times perhaps, but mainly in consequence of improvements effected. Subsequently they have been lowered, in consequence of the agricultural depression. In 1856 my rental was 1,683*l.*; in 1876 it was 1,834*l.*; then the depression began, and in 1894—at the present moment—they have been reduced to 1,559*l.* I may say that for the last four half years I have in addition given a 10 per cent. abatement.

58,068. You have given 10 per cent. back for the last four years?—Yes, and occasionally small abatements have been made previously, and in 1879, which was an extremely wet year, there was a 5 per cent. abatement given, and in 1888 there was a 5 per cent. abatement. I may say I am rather against the principle of abatements, excepting as a mere temporary expedient. I think that if abatements are likely to become permanent, it is better to re-adjust the rent. I have given the amounts of the rent in certain years, and I should like to say that the expenditure during 40 years, that is to say, from 1854 to 1894, on improvements has been 7,606*l.*, and on repairs 10,020*l.*

Chairman—continued.

58,069. Are the repairs during the same period?—Yes. The major part of the money has been on improvements spent in draining.

58,070. You spent a good lot of money in draining?—Yes, with very great advantage, I think, both to myself and the tenants.

58,071. Might I ask you on that, was the whole of the money spent by yourself on draining, or did the tenants assist with regard to the labour?—The whole of the money was spent by myself, including the cartage of the pipes.

58,072. It was spent on draining; all expenses paid by the landlord?—Yes. Where rents have been raised or reduced it has been done by a personal arrangement with the tenants. Where an increase has been made, the amount of the increase, and the nature and extent of the improvement for which the increase is to be made, have generally been agreed upon with the tenant before the improvement is begun. The rent is paid from three to four months after the actual period when it becomes due. In answer to the question, "What effect has the preferential claim for rent on the position of tenants generally?" I should say that the tenant thereby gets a longer credit for his rent. As regards charges on land, tithes, land tax, chief rent, and income tax are paid directly by myself; the local rates by the occupier. Poor rates proper have decreased, but road rates and county rates have increased. The fluctuation of the rate falls on the occupier until the tenancy expires or the rent is adjusted. It will then be transferred to the owner. The average size of the farms in the district ranges from three acres to 200 or 300 acres.

58,073. Are they as big as 300?—I have not farms so large as that, but there are some in my neighbourhood, in the Vale of Clwyd, larger than that.

58,074. What do they run up to—what is the highest?—I hardly know. I should think 500, but I daresay you will get that evidence better about that at Denbigh. I should say that about 100-acre farms would comprise most of the land in the district, that is to say, running from, say, 60 up to 140 acres. With regard to the consolidation of farms, formerly there was a tendency in that direction, but now I should say the tendency is in the opposite direction. It was at one time regarded as necessary in consequence of the introduction of machinery; it was supposed that machinery could only be used on large farms, and the consolidation took place mostly on arable lowland farms, where machinery could be used. With regard to the effects of consolidation on production, I should not like to speak with any confidence, but I think that the effect at first on tillage farms was to increase production, but I believe that has since ceased to be the case. With regard to the employment of labour, the number of farmers was decreased, but there was more employment for labourers. Formerly consolidation, I do not think, affected rent one way or the other, but now it would cause a decrease, for, as I previously stated, tenants with sufficient capital to take a large farm, are scarce. On population I do not think

Mr. P. P. PENNANT.

consolidation had much effect, and as to houses the farmhouse became a labourer's cottage instead. At the present time the tendency is in an opposite direction. Sub-division, or rather re-division, is being carried out where consolidation had been effected. This takes place where a tenancy becomes vacant and the old buildings exist, and where it is therefore feasible. I think formerly the occupiers of large holdings farmed with most skill and did best, but now unquestionably the smaller occupiers have the best of it, and have weathered the depression best. At busy times there is a decided scarcity of labour; at slack times it is otherwise, but if there were more labourers there would at times be a considerable amount of distress. Ditches and fences, and so forth, I consider are not so well attended to as formerly, but I do not think that is due to the scarcity of labour so much as to the change in the farming, clean ditches not being so necessary with grass land as with tillage. There are, unquestionably, fewer labourers now competent to do hedging, ditching, and that kind of work, than there formerly were. When land is suitable, grass is taking the place of corn, to a very large extent, the object being to meet the fall in the price of corn, and the rise in the price of labour. A very large extent has been laid down in pasture which is practically permanent pasture, but it is not considered permanent pasture unless the landlord has contributed to the expense; that is, the tenant at any moment has perfect power to cut it up if he likes. But I have in several cases assisted in this way, and in one instance I have been requested by a tenant for consent to do so under Schedule I, of the Agricultural Holdings Act. I should say that root crops have decreased in about the same proportion as corn. All these changes have been caused, no doubt, by the fall in corn, and the rise in wages, and one effect has been to diminish the demand for labour—I mean the turning tillage into grass—but on the other hand, another effect has been to enable the farmer to weather the storm. All improvements, as a rule, are done by the landlord, as well as repairs, except those indoors. In some cases tenants contribute cartage, but not in my own case, except for very small repairs and very small improvements, where no alteration is made in the rent, and this amount would be repaid if he left before he had reaped the benefit of the improvement. With regard to drainage and irrigation, buildings for stock, tanks for preserving liquid manure, and fences, gates and posts, these are almost universally supplied by the landlord, excepting manures and seeds, and those are generally done by the tenants, though I may say individually I have helped tenants with both seeds and manure to a not very inconsiderable extent. With regard to the question of whether farmers often apply for their landlord's written consent for specific improvements, and if not, why, and with what results; they do not often. I have had one such application for laying down land in pasture, but I think I may say that I am almost certain that farmers, as a rule, do not trouble their heads or know much about the Agricultural Holdings Act. With regard to agricultural education, I do not think that any attention in this district is paid to fruit culture, not much to horticulture, none to forestry, and not much to poultry farming, although lectures have been given on poultry farming in the neighbourhood, and it is an industry that is a good deal followed. The proximity to Rhyl and the watering places makes it rather a profitable industry, and most small farmers and cottagers give a considerable amount of attention to poultry farming. With regard to butter and cheese making, a good deal more has been done. In 1889 the Flintshire and Denbighshire Dairy School was established, and it has done very good work. To illustrate the good work it has done, I may say that at the Chester Royal Agricultural Show last year, out of 46 persons who took prizes or were honourably mentioned for dairy work, 20 had passed through the Flintshire and Denbighshire Dairy School. The form in which it was managed was that it was a limited company not formed for profit, but for carrying on the work; but it has now been transferred, and is under the two county councils for Flintshire and Denbighshire, and this year, from the beginning of the session up to August 1st, it has been giving instruction as a travelling dairy through the district, but from August 1st it goes on to October 31st in giving instruction at the headquarters. At the end of the dairy school term an examination is held each year by the Agricultural Department of the Bangor University College, and as I have acted as third examiner with two experts at all these examinations from 1889 to the present time I am able to say that enormous progress has been made, as is shown by the results that are arrived at at these examinations. I was immensely struck last year by it, but at the same time I think that the satisfactory results are due, perhaps, as much as anything to the superior teaching that is given now. When we started we had to educate our teachers. We have done that, and now the teachers are able to educate the pupils better. In addition to the agricultural education lectures have been given at various centres; schoolmasters' classes in agriculture have been held, and those have been largely attended. I go now to another subject, namely, co-operation and combination amongst farmers. As regards the co-operation amongst farmers for purchasing or analysing farm stuffs and manures, I do not think nearly as much has been done as might be done with great advantage. There are no factories for butter-making or anything of that sort, but I think them desirable, and I shall speak on that subject again where it comes in more suitably. With regard to farming operations generally, no doubt some threshing machines are owned by farmers in shares; that combination has been carried out. Then I am asked, "To what extent do farmers and agricultural labourers avail themselves of, benefit "societies"? I believe to a very considerable extent. There are not many peasant proprietors or small freeholders in this district, but I, myself, should very much like to see the number increased. I think that the combined ownership and occupation of land is a healthy state of things, and I should like to see it very much increased. Some 30 years ago the number of freeholders sensibly decreased, the owners preferring to take their capital into business in the towns. They were able to get a good price for their freeholds, which seemed a large sum of money, and they thought they could lay it out better elsewhere. With regard to the extent to which tenant farmers and their wives take part in the manual work of the farm, the wives attend to the dairy, and on the small holdings they would attend to the cow, but they do no field work now, although within my recollection one used to see women occasionally in the fields. The farmer himself, on all but quite large farms, works as long as he is young and strong. With regard to the children remaining at home, very often some go out, but some stay, and they are remunerated by being kept, taught farming, and assisted in starting on a small farm on marrying. The next question is: "Could present rents be maintained if wages were paid in respect of children's labour?" With regard to that I should say that no difference would occur. Farmers who are without children are about equally well off in the long run, as the service of children after they leave school about compensates for the expenses previously incurred. I have not attempted to go very elaborately into the question of the housing of labourers or anything of that sort, but I would make just this one observation, that formerly farm servants had accommodation on the farms with access by an outside staircase but that mode of accommodation has died away very much, and as a rule now any servants in the house would be accommodated within the house, which I think is a very superior mode of arrangement. With regard to the time when the depression in agriculture came on this district, I should think that it began to come on before 1879, but that that abnormally wet season very much accentuated it, and first brought it into notice prominently. We always do hear about the agricultural depression from 1879, when we had a terribly bad year, and it was the first year that it really prominently caught people's notice. I think it had been coming on before that. The principal causes of depression have been the fall in prices of farming produce, particularly grain, and also the increased cost of labour. The class chiefly affected are the owners and occupiers, and particularly those on heavy tillage lands; on cheese farms the least. The labourers have not suffered; they have suffered least, but if there had not been agricultural depression I have no doubt they would be better off than they now are. They have felt it in that degree, but still the labourers, at any rate in this district where we are, within the reach of collieries and works of different kinds, and the large towns like Liverpool and Manchester, find that wages are not ruled by agricultural considerations, they are ruled by the larger industries.

Chairman—continued.

Then with regard to the question of, "What remedies do you suggest for improving the profits from land?" I venture to make these observations. It is difficult to mention anything worthy of the name of remedy, but I think the following six considerations are important:—(1.) Promotion of expenditure of capital on land. As regards landlords this cannot be done unless they are assured against legislation in the direction of dual ownership and the (so-called) Three F's. On this point the following extract is important, taken from the report of the majority of the Committee on the Irish Land Acts, dated the 23rd of this month. They say: "It is certain from experience as well as from the effects of the Act of 1881 upon the interests of landlord and tenant that the tenant alone is willing to make improvements, or will in future make them." Similar legislation wherever enacted would operate in a similar way. In this country the stoppage of the flow of landlord's capital into the land would be most fatal. A large number of tenants, more particularly on medium-sized farms, have barely sufficient capital to do justice to themselves or their farms at present, when all improvements and all repairs are done for them. Equal importance must be given to this point of the expenditure of capital, as regards the tenant, but the question here is much more difficult. I think tenants should be discouraged from spending money on the improvements in Schedules 1 and 2 of the Agricultural Holdings Act, except under a distinct arrangement with the landlord; as a rule their capital is better spent on their stock, in the equipment of their farm, and in putting heart into the land, and now comes the difficult question, how is this capital put into the land to be secured to the tenant or his representatives in case through death or illness or any other cause he or they have to relinquish the farm. Manure and cake bills by themselves will not indicate fully the improvement desired to be valued. The skill of the tenant and the character of the soil are potent factors to be considered. In such cases voluntary reference to a third party would be the most satisfactory solution. But can valuers be found of sufficient skill, experience, and independence as to secure the confidence of both parties. Can the Board of Agriculture create such a body? I should like to see a few individuals in the country who in the agricultural world would occupy the position that the judges occupy in the law region, and I think that then if they were in that kind of position they would attain the confidence of landlords and tenants, who would be, where there was a difference of opinion, willing voluntarily to refer matters to them. But you must have the very highest class of man, and you must have him paid a good salary, so as to ensure that independence which I daresay might exist otherwise in the man himself, but which must exist in the minds of the people who are going to refer to him. Failing such voluntary reference, recourse must be had to the slower and more expensive processes of the Agricultural Holdings Act, perhaps modified and improved as it might be by the experience of 11 years. There is one definite alteration or rather addition to that Act which I venture to urge as desirable, viz., that in all cases where property changes hands by purchase the tenant should have the right to have his interest in unexhausted improvements valued, and the amount charged on the purchase money. This would obviate what has sometimes proved a source of misunderstanding between the new landlord and the tenant. In fact, I believe that three-fourths of the grievances that you hear of from tenants have arisen in this kind of way.

(2.) The next consideration that I put forward is this: To promote agricultural education, dairy schools, and so forth. I may here observe that I think it is unfortunate that of the money given by the Treasury towards technical education a larger amount is not given through the Board of Agriculture, as in that case they who have the necessary expert knowledge could have taken a more decided initiative and lead in agricultural education. I have had correspondence with them on this subject myself. I am myself a county councillor, and have great trust in county councillors, but still I like the expert knowledge which you get at the Bangor University College, who have to a certain extent helped agricultural education in these parts, and what you also can get from the Board of Agriculture, and I should like to see them able to take more of a lead in the matter. I will illustrate what I mean, if I am not tedious, with reference to the dairy school; up to the present time the Bangor University College has contributed 60*l.* a year to the three dairy schools that they have established in their district. I am afraid that after this year they will not be able to contribute that 60*l.*, because they will get that 60*l.* from the Board of Agriculture, and the Board of Agriculture has said that they must spend the money at the College, and leave the county councillors to find the money for the dairy school. What would be the effect? Although the dairy school would be managed by a committee formed partly of Flintshire people, partly of Denbighshire people, and partly of members appointed by the University College, if the University College contributes no money towards the expense I am sure that their voice will be practically not heard at all. I think it is right that they should be in a position to have a voice in the matter, and that can only be done through a larger amount being contributed to them by the Board of Agriculture. Hence my observation.

(3.) The next consideration is to extend the principle of the Merchandise Marks Act to all marketable articles dealt with by the farmer. To promote the factory system for dairy produce on simple and inexpensive lines, as it is now conducted in Denmark, Switzerland, and elsewhere, so as to meet the great requirement of the market for uniformity of quality.

(4.) The Queen's premium stallions have done much good, and in our district not a little is due to the energy and public-spirited conduct of the owner, Mr. Pratt, who resides near St. Asaph. I would suggest that Parliament should make a grant for the establishment of Queen's premium cart stallions and Queen's premium bulls.

(5.) I have no doubt myself but that light railways in many districts might be of very great advantage, though at the present time the Board of Trade requirements are so exacting that it is absolutely impossible to build any railway that is not going to carry a considerable amount of traffic. I think that the relaxation of the Board of Trade requirements is almost more important than the question of gauge in the erection of railways. I am quite sure that no more railways will be made in this district unless the Board of Trade regulations are relaxed, unless it be that a new railway company tries to drive its way to a port for Ireland, and then of course they would look for a big traffic, and they could afford to meet the regulations, but as a matter of fact the Board of Trade regulations for putting in a siding on a bye-railway here are just as stringent as they are upon a bit of railway between Rugby and Euston, and it seems to me that that is ridiculous; it is unnecessary where the traffic is not so large and where the trains are much less frequent.

(6.) Finally, I would make these observations, that the most permanent and real remedy for the agricultural depression is to reduce the cost of production, and the outlay required to place the products of the farm in the market. This, as far as it can be done, is a real remedy because prices are ruled not so much by cost of production in this country as by the importations from abroad, consequently what is saved in production here will nearly all be clear gain to the producer. To reach this end, agricultural education must be pushed forward, and a better combination of science with practice encouraged. Those are, I think, all the observations I have to make.

Sir John Llewelyn.

58,075. Would you like to see agricultural experts appointed in each county?—Hardly that. I want a better man than that. A man above that. I do not think a very great number would be required for the country.

58,076. We may take it that local knowledge would be essential?—I think not for this purpose. I consider that local knowledge is absolutely essential for the purpose of valuing land—for the purpose of arriving at the value of land, but for the question of arriving at the improvement that may have been effected in a farm by a tenant by a course of cultivation through a series of years you want a man with skill and experience and a knowledge of farming, and he would have that without local knowledge. But I am looking of course to a class of

Mr. P. P. PENNANT.

individuals who would have practical knowledge all over the country.

58,077. Then it is a legal knowledge you suggest more than an agricultural knowledge?—No, not legal; skill in agriculture is the great thing, and you want a man who would understand farm accounts, and who would be able to cross-examine the tenant and the agent and people in the district so as to ascertain what was the actual improvement effected in the land.

58,078. By whom would you have such men appointed?—I should say that they ought to be appointed by the Board of Agriculture, and you must have perfect independence; independence is the most important element in it. If you had local experts they would not have that independence which would command the confidence of both landlord and tenant. That is the important point.

58,079. I should like to get a little more accurately than I have yet what point you would refer to these men?—This is how I put it: in certain cases a farmer or his representatives have to relinquish a farm it might be through death, illness, or any other causes. Supposing that farmer has been a very good farmer, and has brought his farm into a high state of cultivation, the question is how much compensation ought he to receive. I say that the production of a few bills for manure and cake for the last few years will not give the full value of that improvement; you want a real expert on the subject who could look into the farmers' accounts, if he has got any, over a series of years, and also all the bills showing his expenditure in those matters, and also who should be able to cross-examine anybody who could give evidence on the subject, and in that way understand the question. I think that a person who occupied with regard to agriculture the position that a judge occupies with regard to law would be a person who would command the confidence of landlords and tenants, and they would be used, and gladly used, for reference in such cases.

58,080. Then do you not think that it would be very desirable that all improvements upon a farm should be specified in writing upon the agreement?—As they are made.

58,081. Yes, as they are made?—Yes, I am entirely for discouraging tenants in spending their money upon those improvements in Schedules 1 and 2, excepting when they are specified in writing on the agreement, and when the way in which the compensation for them is to be paid is specified most clearly and decidedly.

58,082. You are of opinion that in this country more money might be profitably employed upon the land than is now employed?—That will always be true—judiciously spent.

58,083. Do I, as a matter of fact, understand from you that all permanent repairs, that is buildings, are done by the landlord?—Certainly.

58,084. How about haulages?—That varies on different properties, unquestionably. I have always paid for haulage, except in quite small matters, on improvements. For instance, I will give two illustrations, a farmer asked me to build an oven to his farm. I call that a small improvement if there was no oven before, and there would be no increase of rent for that. I should build the oven, but I should say: "This will be an advantage for you, you must carry the material, and then I will build the oven." He would be charged no extra rent, and he would contribute that towards the improvement. If it was a large improvement, such as building a barn or draining so many acres, I should pay the whole of the haulage myself, and I have done so.

58,085. Is that the ordinary custom in your neighbourhood?—I should say that it prevails to a very considerable extent, but on some properties I should say that unquestionably the haulage is done entirely by the tenants. But I have this feeling, that I wish to be the owner of the property, and I do not wish the tenant to become little by little part owner with me.

58,086. So that, if the haulage is done by the tenant, you would admit that to that extent there is a tenant right?—Certainly.

Professor Rhys.

58,087. I think with regard to valuation and arbitration, it has been suggested to us that it would be a good thing if there were a schedule showing the state of all the fields we will say on a farm when a man takes it and of the buildings also?—I think it would be an extremely good thing, although it would be rather a difficult thing. It is rather difficult to define how much goodness there is in land.

58,088. Quite so, or what exactly one man means by saying that the land is in a fair state of cultivation?—Yes, as to what that would mean, I think it would be an excellent thing so far as you could do it, but it is a very difficult thing.

58,089. With regard to the importance of the man who should arbitrate, a matter you dwelt upon just now, I quite agree with you that it is a very serious question, but my ideas on that point have been very much modified. I may say during this Commission we have met, I should say, with a number of gentlemen on this inquiry who seem to be quite up to any demand with regard to trust and skill. I have been quite pleased to come across so many gentlemen who are so able and so trusted by all parties?—I think that there are such persons, and I think that if they were once in existence, and used, the confidence in them would increase. I do not think it is at all impossible to create such a body.

58,090. I quite agree with you. I think the names of some of these men are known, and their influence felt over the greater part of North Wales, or the greater part of South Wales, as the case may be?—Yes. I could mention two or three perhaps who are in that position.

31 August 1894.]

Mr. P. P. PENNANT.

Mr. Grove.

58,091. Do you think that Wales and Monmouthshire could find a due proportion of men of the right calibre?—Oh, yes, they could, but a man of that sort, you may depend upon it, is at the present time engaged in important business himself, or else he is a man who would not give up his freedom and leisure for nothing. You must give a high salary.

58,092. Yes. That you mentioned before. Have you studied the question of the butter factories in Denmark. Do you know that there are about 1,000 butter factories in that country, although it is so small a country?—Yes, I am aware of that.

58,093. I do not quite follow you as to this 60% grant towards agricultural education in, I think you said, Flintshire and Denbighshire?—The Flint and Denbigh Dairy School receive 60% a year from the Agricultural Department of the University College of North Wales.

58,094. And it is expended under the two county councils with a joint committee, I suppose?—Yes; you see up to the present time or up to last year it was managed by a company, and they were the receivers of this 60%. Now the two county councils have taken their place.

58,095. Then the two county councils have formed a joint committee, I suppose?—Yes: with members of the college.

58,096. But if the 60% were to be discontinued you could still give the college representation on that joint committee. You have power to do so?—Yes, certainly.

58,097. You have power to take outside members?—Most certainly.

58,098. Would the matter of 60% a year be at all serious to these two counties?—Not the least in the world, but I think it would have a serious effect on the committee; the money-paying members of the committee would take the lead. The University College have had the lead on the committee hitherto. When it was worked by the private company they took the lead.

58,099. But you can still invite representatives into your joint committee?—Yes; but they would still not be the moving spirits; the University used to be the moving spirits.

58,100. Do you not think they ought to be?—Yes; I think they ought to be, and therefore I say the University ought to be in a position to continue this 60%.

58,101. What is the total expenditure in the two counties?—I cannot tell you off-hand, but it is not a very large sum.

58,102. Is it 500% or 600%?—Oh, no.

58,103. Nothing like it?—No, nothing like that.

58,104. In technical instruction we are spending in Monmouthshire 4,000% a year, but we make a small rate; we make a halfpenny rate, and spend half the local taxation money?—You see in this county three-fourths of the money received under the Customs and Excise Act is devoted to intermediate education, and of the remainder, the quarter, one-fourth of that approximately is devoted to agriculture.

58,105. Did you hear the evidence of the last witness as to local railway rates, in which he said he thought they were high?—Yes.

58,106. Do you agree with that?—Well, they are high.

58,107. You do not suppose railway companies are charging beyond their maximum power, do you?—Oh, no.

58,108. You do not think so?—No; they do not. On short distances rates are high, there is no question about that.

58,109. Is the assessment on a farm reduced for the local rates when an abatement is made as distinct from a permanent reduction?—I think not. No, certainly not.

58,110. But it is so in some counties we find?—Yes; but is not that when the abatement has become practically permanent. It may be so.

58,111. Do you not think it would be fair and right that it should be?—Yes, I think it would.

58,112. Supposing a farmer produces receipts which show that his landlord has made him an abatement, should not that be taken into account in the assessment?—Unquestionably it ought to be taken into account in the assessment, but of course an assessment is a prospective thing, and an abatement is retrospective.

58,113. But on the same basis as the income tax one year might overlap another?—Yes; I think that would be only fair and right. I am speaking perhaps more as a member of the assessment committee than as a farmer in that particular observation.

58,114. Do you agree at the present time that there is serious depression in agriculture?—Of course the depression in agriculture in this part of the country is comparatively light to what it is in the eastern counties of England, and where tillage prevails mainly. I consider that in cheese districts there is least depression, and in stock-rearing districts there is next least depression, and this rather comes under that class.

58,115. Just so, but still there is depression?—Unquestionably. I take it that the fat beast sold to the butcher has depreciated from the highest point some 25 per cent., but I do not think that lean stock have depreciated so much; still there have been great fluctuations, and it is difficult to say what is the average.

58,116. Have you formed any idea in your mind as to what size farm would be the most profitable; I mean with a view of getting the very best out of the land that we could?—I think that depends so very much on the lie of the land. At the bottom of a valley in a flat country, a large farm would probably make the most. On the side of a hill, and where considerations of water come in, and so forth, probably the smaller farms would get more out of the land.

58,117. In case of a vacant farm, are there many applications for it?—I have always had several.

31 August 1894.]

Mr. P. P. PENNANT.

[Continued.]

Mr. Richard Jones.

58,117a. You are in favour of compensating the tenant farmer for general improvement of his farm?—Yes, I am.

58,118. And you are in favour of substituting a valuer appointed by the Board of Agriculture in place of anything in the shape of an Agricultural Holdings Act?—Oh, a voluntary reference to a man of that character.

58,119. You would not dispense with the Agricultural Holdings Act?—You cannot do without it I think. You must have recourse to law if you cannot agree.

58,120. Of course there is this difficulty, which has been pointed out by Professor Rhys as to valuing the general improvement of a farm; unless a farm is valued and scheduled on the change of a tenancy, how is a valuer, having no local knowledge of the farm, to value it?—He can only do it if the farmer has kept good accounts. They will tell him whether the farm has improved in value, and he will be able to see by the stock it carries or the amount of corn that can be sold from the farm; he will be able to judge whether the farm has increased in value, and whether heart has been put into the land, but it will only be, of course, where the farmer has kept intelligible accounts. With regard to the scheduling of the state of cultivation of the farm, I think it is a most excellent thing so far as it can be done, but it is extremely difficult. If you describe such and such fields as in fair cultivation it is a most elastic term, and might mean anything, almost.

58,121. Unfortunately we have to take things as they are, and you know that farmers do not keep accounts?—No, they do not, to a great extent.

58,121a. Another thing is, a valuer might be very easily misled as to the state of a farm if he is going to take the number of stock that the farm carried, because a great deal depends upon the farmer's method of managing a farm. At present farms carry very much more stock than they did 20 or 25 years ago in consequence of the laying down of more pasture, and growing more roots?—Yes.

58,122. Perhaps the value of the farm is not one whit greater than it was 25 years ago?—No, but a skilled man would be able to recognise that there was a difference in the management of the farm.

58,123. There may be a difference in the management of the farm perhaps, whereas, perhaps, the value of the farm is no greater?—Yes, but if the farm produced more, as a whole, at the present time than it did, say, 10 or 20 years ago, I think that is evidence that the farm has been improved, and that there is more heart in the land.

58,124. You see you cannot say whether a farm is capable of producing more when you cultivate less—you do not cultivate as much, and then of course you do not raise so much produce on the farm?—You mean under a system of tillage.

58,125. Yes, under a system of tillage?—Yes, but then my valuer is a man of experience, who would understand all that; he would be able to see almost at a glance at the accounts whether the proportion of tillage had increased or decreased.

58,126. I am afraid that it would not work satisfactorily?—I say that it is an extremely difficult thing, but you must have recourse to some method of arriving at the alteration in the value, and I say that the mere production of bills for manure and cake, which is about all you have now to go by, does not give you the full answer to the question.

58,127. I quite agree with you?—Therefore, I would give the valuer, if you have got a sufficiently good one, a little latitude beyond that. Of course, in his award he would have to state how he arrived at his decision.

58,128. You would not go so far as to advocate that every farm should be valued on a change of tenancy?—Oh, I think it would be perfectly unnecessary. I take it that if a farmer gives up his farm, and he thinks that compensation is due to him, and he meets his landlord, and the landlord satisfies him with compensation, why trouble any third person? I think it is much better that they should not.

58,129. In cases where they fail to agree upon a valuation you would refer the matter?—Then if they fail to agree, first of all see if they cannot agree to a voluntary reference to a third party.

58,130. And this third party is to be a valuer appointed by whom?—They may have a valuer of that description. I think they will be glad to refer it to such a person, but if they cannot agree to refer it then you must go to the Agricultural Holdings Act. Still, I think it is very much better that these things should be done voluntarily, if possible. I myself have never had any difficulty in settling any claims.

58,131. Is there anything else that you would refer to the valuer besides claims?—I do not think there is anything else that I can think of. Do you mean as to a question of rent, for instance?

58,132. Any question that may arise between landlord and tenant?—Yes; I mentioned one instance in my own case where a considerable amount of improvements had been done on a farm, and we could not quite agree as to what would be a fair rent for the future, and we voluntarily agreed to refer that matter to a third party in whom we had confidence, and we accepted his decision.

58,133. Who nominated the person who was to settle the question?—We ourselves. Whether the tenant suggested him first or I suggested him first I cannot say; I think the tenant did.

58,134. The tenant did not raise any objection?—No, it was mutually agreed upon.

58,135. I find that the time of entry varies in your county?—It does.

58,136. Which do you consider the best time of entry, the November entry?—I think the November entry is the best.

58,137. Why?—The tenant farmer does not want the land. He can get his wheat sown by

31 August 1894.]

Mr. P. P. PENNANT.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

that time, and he does not want the arable land.

58,138. Then the incoming tenant can go upon it?—The new tenant can go upon it.

58,139. Does having a different time of entry cause a certain amount of inconvenience?—Not the least in the world, I think.

58,140. But supposing a tenant was going from a farm to another?—I see your point. You see, they give up the house and buildings on the same day, the 1st of May, in both cases, but the fact is that on the eastern side they approximate to the time that prevails in Cheshire.

58,141. Do you consider that the local taxation money would be more usefully applied if more was given to agricultural education?—If a larger proportion were given instead of to intermediate education?

58,142. Yes, if a larger proportion were given instead of to intermediate education?—It would be a good thing for agriculture, certainly.

58,143. Yes, but what would it be for education generally?—Well, taking it as a whole, intermediate education is very important; it must not go to the wall; but still in an agricultural district, of course, agricultural education is all important.

58,144. But of course you require a fair general education in order to appreciate agricultural education?—Yes, you do unquestionably. You must not let intermediate education go to the wall for the sake of agricultural education. Agricultural education is something to be put on the top of a good grounding in intermediate education.

58,145. I think you say that three-fourths of the local taxation money is applied to intermediate education?—It is.

58,146. And the other quarter is given to —? —The other quarter is given to technical education, and of that one-fourth is given to technical agricultural education. That is about the division.

58,147. To what subjects is the other three-fourths of the quarter applied?—It is given in cookery, drawing, chemistry, physiography, dress-making, and laundry work.

58,148. Do you consider the money usefully applied that is applied for that purpose?—Certainly.

58,149. But you would be better satisfied if there was half, say, instead of one quarter?—I have had a good deal to do with it, and I must not complain of my own work, because I am on the Technical Instruction Committee, but I think that a quarter is full little for agricultural education; of course only half the county is quite agricultural.

58,150. Perhaps the members of your committee are mostly urban representatives, is that so?—No, I do not think so. I think that agricultural education is perhaps something newer and it is not properly appreciated yet; perhaps it has not shown itself to be entitled to so much appreciation, but I think it is improving. I am certain that much ought to be made of it, and that much can be made of it.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

58,151. What class of horses have you here, are they the shire or the Clydesdale?—There are both.

58,152. What is the fee that is charged now for a good horse?—I have not examined into that point. In giving evidence I like to give evidence of things that I know of, and I do not like to guess.

58,153. But you have spoken about Queen's premium stallions; I thought that you would be prepared to say something upon that subject?—Exactly. There is no doubt that a considerable impetus has been given in the Vale of Clwyd to horse breeding through the Queen's premium stallions being brought there, and also a good many with whom I have conversed have expressed the opinion that it would be very advantageous if the same kind of thing was extended to cart stallions and to bulls—in fact to agricultural sires generally.

58,154. Do you find that there is a tendency among farmers in the matter of stallions to go to the cheapest market?—Unquestionably.

58,155. They are not alive to the importance of it?—No, they are not alive to the advantages of breeding from good stock only.

58,156. Have you any ploughing matches?—Yes.

58,157. Are not such things as hedging and ditching encouraged at those ploughing matches?—They used to be, but I am sorry to say that hedging and ditching are rather gone out of fashion. There used to be hedgers and ditchers who were as proud of their work as the finest artist is proud of his picture, but I am sorry to say that that feeling has a good deal died away, and there are not hedgers and ditchers at all of the same character that there used to be, for some reason or another.

58,158. It may be owing to the fact that farmers are employing perhaps less men, and wanting to do more of it they discourage it?—Yes, they do unquestionably employ rather less labour. I do not think that the same importance is considered to attach to the hedges and ditches on grass land as on tillage land. You must get away the water from the head lands in tillage and if there is a little bit standing in a grass field it does not matter so much.

58,159. Are there as many men who are able to thatch well?—A reduced number.

58,160. And I suppose they will become more reduced still inasmuch as Dutch barns are erected?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,161. Do you charge any interest upon draining?—The general way in which the draining has been done is this. In early times when I had an agent we met together with the tenant and agreed that such and such things should be done upon the farms, such and such fields should be drained, and that when that was completed the rent should be so and so, and then it was done whether it cost more or whether it cost less. The rent was fixed. It was not fixed in the shape of a percentage for the draining, although that has been done on my property in two instances; but it has not been the general way. The other has been the general way.

58,162. How do you account for root crops being much less. The last witness told us that root crops had decreased very much?—I said they had decreased in the same proportion as corn; not more. I should say, looking 25 years back, the proportion of corn and green crops would be about the same.

58,163. The rotation would come to the same?—Yes. Of course there is a far larger amount under grass and rotation grass.

58,164. Do you consider that the time has arrived that every farmer should keep his accounts properly?—I think it is desirable. I think that a farmer who keeps his accounts and keeps them in an intelligent form will be able the better to find out where he is losing money and where he is gaining money.

58,165. And when he comes in to claim for any permanent improvements in the land, he will then be in a position to get compensation?—He will be able to point out what he has done and that it is a real improvement.

58,166. It will be a means of enabling him to do so?—It will be a means of enabling him to do so.

58,167. So that if any expert comes, he will see what the land has produced the first year of his tenancy in corn, turnips, or cheese-making, and comparing that with the last year of his tenancy, he will be able to get at very nearly what improvements he has made on the farm? Yes, that is my idea.

58,168. By whom have these lectures been given on poultry farming, because this is the first we have heard of them?—I had nothing whatever to do with it and I cannot tell you the name of the person, but I believe many persons in this room could tell you. I think Mrs. Keene brought the poultry lecturers down here.

58,169. Were the lectures well attended?—I do not know whether they were, I do not know much about it, but I know they were given.

58,170. Are you of opinion that more could be done in that way than is done at the present time?—Yes, more could be done, but there is a great deal more done now than there was a very short time ago. I think that the people have become alive to the great advantage there is in the markets at Rhyl and the watering places for the sale of poultry.

58,171. I am glad to hear you say there is such an improvement in the butter and cheese-making district. Do you attribute it to this dairy school?—Yes.

58,172. Do the pupils carry out the instructions given in these dairy schools when they go home to the farms?—Even if they do not do that, they have learnt an immense number of things to avoid in dairying.

58,173. We have found in our county, as a rule, that the mothers will not allow the daughters to do it because they think that no one can do it as well as they can?—That is the universal experience here.

58,174. You think the time will arrive when they will get into a better state of things?—Yes, it is a mere matter of time.

58,175. With regard to the sale of this dairy produce, do you find any difficulty in selling the butter in this neighbourhood?—No, you cannot say that there is a difficulty.

58,176. Is there any butter salted down in casks?—Yes, there is.

58,177. At what price is that sold in this district?—I could hardly venture to say.

58,178. I am sorry to say they only make 8d. a pound for it in our neighbourhood at the present moment?—I think it is not much more than that.

58,179. Why should not all the butter of the district be sold at a price, say double that, 16d. a pound?—There is a good deal sold at 16d. a pound and about that price, but that is only the very best class of butter, and sold by somebody who has managed to get a connection in Llandudno or one of those places.

58,180. You are of opinion that there is not a sufficient market now to take all the produce of the dairying in this district so as to get that price for butter?—Just in the season, the watering places will take a great deal.

58,181. Still they will not take all?—No.

58,182. We found a difficulty in our neighbourhood to get a place where we could sell the butter at that price?—I was in company with another gentleman interested in this matter and we asked Hudson, the great butter dealer, why he went abroad for his butter and he said that was the only place where he could get absolute uniformity. We argued that he could get just as good butter in this country. He said yes, but that his first requirement was not excellence in quality, but uniformity in quality.

58,183. You think we cannot get that uniformity without factories?—Yes, not without factories.

58,184. And the sooner the better?—The sooner the better.

58,185. Do you think the dairies on most of the farms are up to what they ought to be in produce?—I should say not altogether—not for the highest class of butter. They would sacrifice nothing in giving up their dairies to use a factory. I do not think a factory would be possible within a limited distance of the watering places, because it is more profitable to sell milk direct.

58,186. You have said a great deal about young women trained to the dairy. With regard to the young men of the agricultural class, have they been taught agricultural chemistry in the night schools—the farmers' sons?—We have never taught agricultural chemistry here. Some have gone to Bangor to learn it.

58,187. The schoolmasters in the district have not taken it up?—No, we have not got so far as that.

31. August 1894.]

Mr. P. P. PENNANT.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

58,188. Some of the schoolmasters earn a larger grant by that than they do by the whole school in our part?—We have had agriculture taught in the elementary schools, but we have not got so far advanced as that, although I hope that we may very shortly, and I think it would be very desirable.

58,189. Then, with regard to the farm servants, do you know if they find any difficulty in getting the farm servants into the house at night. You say they get them into the house to sleep, whereas they formerly slept outside. Do you think they find any difficulty in getting these farm servants in the house at night?—No, I do not believe they do.

58,190. If servants do not come in early at night they are not up very early in the morning?—No, they are not. When they are in the house they have to abide by the rules of the house—go to bed with the house and get up with the house.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

58,191. Have you come across a Bill introduced into the House of Commons during the last session, entitled "The Agricultural Holdings Amendment Act, 1894"? I ask you that in order to lead up to this question. Are you aware that in that Bill there is a provision for the appointment of official valuers?—No, I am not aware of it.

58,192. I wanted to ascertain your opinion on the question whether the method of appointment and tenure of office under that Bill is something like what you desire. You will find it at Section 30—"The County Council for every county other than the metropolis, and of a city, town, or borough shall from time to time appoint such number of fit persons that they shall think fit, to be agricultural valuers for such county for a period not exceeding three years." That is subject to the approval of the Board of Agriculture. The tenure of the office depends upon subsection 3, "if any official agricultural valuer shall be proved to the satisfaction of the said Board of Agriculture to be incompetent or guilty of any misconduct in the execution of his duty as a referee or umpire, he shall be liable to have his appointment summarily cancelled by the said Board." I gather from you that you would hardly regard persons appointed in that way as sufficiently secure in their office to meet your views?—No, I want a much higher class of man than you will get in that way.

58,193. Do you wish to suggest the same tenure as the judges of the High Court have?—Yes, even that.

58,194. Let them hold the office quam diu bene se gesserint?—You might have an age limitation very fairly, because they are expected to go about the country. Therefore activity is an absolute essential.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

58,195. You think this would be defective in that respect?—I do not think you would get a sufficiently high class of men in that way.

58,196. As to the body to appoint would you prefer the Board of Agriculture to the County Council?—I think so. I think the man would have more status if he was appointed in that way.

58,197. In substance your valuers would be a body of highly skilled judges?—They would.

58,198. With regard to your suggestion as to butter making and the factories, would you see any objection to the County Council having power to acquire land for the purpose of a factory and of expending public moneys for the making of the factory?—I am rather inclined to think it would be a good expenditure.

58,199. I suppose the point is this, that the tenant farmers have not sufficient money to provide all the requisite buildings and machinery, and the landlords hardly care to enter into a speculation, as a rule, with them. That is the point, I suppose?—I think the great difficulty at the present moment is that the public mind has not been sufficiently educated on the subject.

58,200. As to uniformity of the quality and general characteristics of the butter, the larger the scale on which the thing is done the more likely you are to secure good results?—Certainly.

58,201. If it is done on any very considerable scale in any county, it is almost hopeless to suppose that it can be done without the expenditure of public money?—You must have the milk brought to the factory and send the skimmed milk to the farm again.

58,202. If you have half a dozen farms in one county and they were all under one management, it would lead possibly to decreased expenditure and possibly increased profit?—It would. I daresay an impulse to the movement might be got in that way—you want something to start it.

58,203. You read with approval an extract from the Report of the Select Committee with regard to the operation of the Irish Land Act?—Yes.

58,204. Do you agree that the position of the tenants in Ireland is better since those Acts have come into operation than it was before?—Yes. I should say that the tenant undoubtedly was given something in that Act.

58,205. Do you mean that he is on the whole better off?—He undoubtedly was given something, but I think that with a similar Act in this country the tenant would be a loser, for this reason, in Ireland improvements and repairs were not done to a very large extent by the landlord before; in fact, I have always understood that that was the ground on which the Act was passed. Now, in this country, the improvements almost entirely are done by the landlord, and if an Act of that character was to pass then the landlord would cease to do the improvements and the repairs; so that in this country I think the tenant would be a loser by the passing of such an Act.

31 August 1894.]

Mr. P. P. PENNANT.

Lord Kenyon.

58,206. Mr. Brynmor Jones has asked very much the question I was going to ask you with regard to the large amount of money that I think some of your schemes would require. You want butter factories and Queen's premium agricultural horses you say. I was going to ask you whether you would advocate any advance of public capital to improve holdings?—On loan?

58,207. Yes?—Oh, yes, I think that is desirable.

58,208. That would be a third advance? Where do you propose these funds should come from?—I take it the money for what I call Queen's premium cart stallions and bulls would not amount to a very great sum, and it would come out of the annual revenue. It would be a comparatively small grant which would effect it.

58,209. Then with regard to this butter factory?—My idea was that the people in the locality would be shareholders—those who were interested in it—and that the thing should be done on an extremely cheap basis. In Denmark and Switzerland the whole thing costs very little, the cartage and everything that can be is put out to contract, and generally those things are taken by one of the farmers themselves, and the actual original outlay of capital is something very small.

58,210. Are you aware that there is a factory at St. Clears, in South Wales?—No, I do not think I ever heard of it.

58,211. We visited it in the course of our peregrinations not very long ago. I do not know quite what the capital sum was, but, as you suggest, it was raised in shares by the people in the locality?—I know at Tipperary Junction there is a factory put up, which draws the milk of the whole district round there, and that, I believe, cost very little to put up.

58,212. Do you think, if the County Council were to initiate such a thing, it would be taken up in the country?—Yes, I think they might initiate such a thing. I think it is rather desirable that the farmers themselves should have a small share in it. I think, perhaps, they would carry it on with more zest if they had an interest in it.

58,213. The question at St. Clears was whether the farmers sent their milk in sufficient quantity. Do you think the farmers in this district would send their milk to the factory, if started?—I am afraid public opinion is not sufficiently aroused on the subject. Unquestionably in the neighbourhood of the watering places the price of milk is too much to make it profitable.

58,214. I think the grant to the Agricultural College is something like 700*l.* a year, is it not?—Yes, or 800*l.* a year.

58,215. Do you think that money is usefully spent?—Oh, I think it has been most usefully spent.

58,216. Do you think more might be allocated to local purposes?—The Board of Agriculture have forbidden them in the future to spend money on the dairy school for instance. It is not for the 60*l.* that I speak, but it is for the lead that that expert body gets by being a contributor in money.

58,217. They would lose their expert control?—Yes.

58,218. In fact, confining the thing to the college is rather giving money to the theory than to the practice?—Yes.

58,219. Do you think the farmers' sons avail themselves of the scholarships they offer at the college?—I do not know. In Carnarvonshire where they know the college and about it, I dare say they do. Here they do not know anything about it.

58,220. Is it sufficiently advertised, do you think?—No.

58,221. Do you think if it were better known they might?—Yes, a thing of that sort has to grow.

58,222. You are aware there have been schoolmasters' classes?—Oh, yes.

58,223. With regard to valuers, you advocate very highly paid officials?—I do.

58,224. Do you think they would have sufficient work to justify the expense?—I am sure the Board of Agriculture might utilise them as inspectors, and in other ways they would find plenty of useful work for them.

58,225. You think they might do some other work besides?—Yes.

58,226. You suggest they should be a voluntary reference?—Yes, voluntary reference.

58,227. You do not advocate compulsory powers?—No; I think compulsory powers would spoil the whole thing.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

58,228. What do you mean by that? Because in this Bill which I was referring to the parties can only choose from the official list?—Yes, but it would be a voluntary reference.

58,229. A voluntary reference in the first instance?—The award would be compulsory, of course.

58,230. If the men like under this Bill to agree their differences without coming to the court at all, there is nothing taking away the liberty allowed by the common law, but a list of these official valuers is to be drawn up and the county court judge or the Board of Agriculture in some cases, is to nominate the umpire from them if the parties cannot agree?—Yes—well, of course these valuers would be of value supposing the matter got into the scope of the Agricultural Holdings Act, and one had to be appointed.

58,231. You would not object to the judge of the county court being limited in his choice to the skilled men?—Oh, certainly not.

Chairman.

58,232. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones—"Have you ever consolidated any of the farms on your estate?"—Yes, I have, and I have unconsolidated them too.

See 70,511

31 August 1894.]

Mr. P. P. PENNANT.

Chairman—continued.

58,233. "Have you a tenant called Mr. John Roberts living at Geinas?"—Yes, I have.

58,234. "Did you at the same time let to him the following farms: Geinas, Tydraw, Pistyll, Sodom, and Tanyfallen?"—No. Geinas and Tydraw were separate farms once upon a time, but they were joined together long before I ever had anything to do with them.

58,235. And the other three?—The farm Pistyll was let to Mr. John Roberts for a certain number of years. I think he had it for about five years, and now they have been unconsolidated and separated. The other two, Sodom and Tanyfallen, I do not remember.

58,236. "Were not these farms formerly occupied by five tenants?"—I do not know what "Sodom" alludes to.

58,237. Do you remember Tanyfallen?—Yes, Tanyfallen, Geinas, and Pistyll are three farms. Tanyfallen was broken up; half of it or part of it was exchanged with Mr. Hughes, of Kimmel, and the remainder was attached to the Geinas farm.

58,238. "Did you not let five holdings at the same time to the late Mr. William Jones, Nantgwilym?"—No. Mr. William Jones, of Nantgwilym, had two farms of mine. One of them he occupied after his father, and the other one he took from his nephew who had it from his father. He did not turn out to be a successful farmer, and as his uncle had practically managed it for him before, he took it over.

58,239. "Are not the following the names of these farms:—Nantgwilym, Henblas, Nantgwilym Bach and two other small holdings?"—Nantgwilym is one; Pantglas was almost part and parcel of Nantgwilym before I came into possession up to the present year, when I separated them. In fact, during the 40 years I have possessed Nantgwilym and Pantglas, they have been together up to the present year, when I separated them. The farm of Henblas was, as I have said before, occupied by the nephew of Mr. William Jones. The nephew was unable to farm, and he went on to the railway and his uncle took the farm over.

58,240. "Did you not at the same time let three or four farms to the tenants of Hendre, Boddfari, namely, the following:—Hendre, Ty'nycæan, Ty'nycæan Bach, and another holding?"—I daresay 100 years ago they might have all been farms, but within my experience they were only two farms, namely, Hendre and Ty'nycæan. For a short time they were held by the same person, but at the present time and now for some 10 years they have been unconsolidated again, and let to two people as they were before.

58,241. "How did any of these farms fall into your hands? Was it the result of notice to quit served by you or by your tenants?"—On which farms?

58,242. I do not quite understand that myself.—How did they come into my hands so that I was able to consolidate them?

Lord Kenyon.

58,243. The question means did they give you notice to quit or did you give notice to quit?—I did not give notice to quit in any one of the cases.

Chairman.

58,244. "Is there now a separate tenant in each of the above-mentioned holdings?"—Some of the holdings I do not recognise. I do not recognise which is Sodom; but, however, on each of those holdings I have mentioned there is a separate tenant at the present time. I have in fact, subdivided as far as I have been able. That is the principle I have gone on for the last 10 years.

58,245. The next question is "Why did you change your policy?"—And subdivide instead of consolidate?

58,246?—Yes?—Well, I think the consolidation policy was begun before I had much voice in the matter. I daresay I might have been inclined to consolidate if I had had the experience that I have now even; but I cannot say about that. At the present time I can fairly see that you can get tenants for small holdings most readily, and besides I would like to give as many people as possible an opportunity of earning a livelihood on a holding if I had the opportunity.

58,247. "Are most of the new tenants you have taken on your estate in the past few years Churchmen and Conservatives?"—No, I should say not, I think not. I really do not go into those questions much, but I think it is owing to deaths that a great many vacancies have taken place during the present year. I should say that the majority are not so.

58,248. "How many new tenants have come on your estate this last spring?"—At Henblas and Nantgwilym the farms were filled by farmers off the estate: they are not new tenants. There is a small holding where a new tenant has come on, Plasyn it is called. That man I believe is a Wesleyan, but I will not be perfectly certain. However, I have never seen him in church at any rate. Then I have another farm where a new tenant has come who was not on the property before, at Calcot. That man I believe is a Calvinistic Methodist. I have another farm called Cefny on which a new tenant has come, and I have not the remotest idea in the world what denomination he belongs to, or whether he is a Conservative or Radical or what his politics are, I have not the remotest idea.

58,249. Then you cannot answer this question: "Do you know whether they are Conservatives or Churchmen?"—No, I cannot. I cannot answer that one.

58,250. "Did a new tenant come to Fynonbeuno this spring?"—No, the tenant at Fynonbeuno is not a new tenant. He is one off the estate; but as a matter of fact he was a Wesleyan.

58,251. "Did a relative of the old tenant at Fynonbeuno apply to have the farm when it

31 August 1894.]

Mr. P. P. PENNANT.

Chairman—continued.

"became vacant last spring?"—Yes; there was a family that have lived there for 300 years, they say, and when the farm became vacant I told this family that I should be sorry to see an interruption in that family's existence there. One of them applied for it; however he eventually declined; he did not like to give up the holding which he had. Oh, I understand what you mean by that question is the person that had married the tenant in the farm. Mrs. Owen was the tenant of the farm, and a Mr. Lloyd married her, and was for a term the tenant. She died, and he was tenant for a certain number of years. After I had let the farm his brother applied to me for it. Well, the farm was let; but I am not at all sure that I should have let it to him—I mean I should not have given a preference to him; I think he would have made a good enough tenant—because I did not regard him as one of the family that had been on the farm for the 300 years; he was merely the brother of a man who had married one of the family there.

58,252. "Was this relative of the old tenant a Nonconformist or a Churchman?"—Well, he was a Nonconformist, certainly.

58,253. "Was the new tenant who came to this farm this spring formerly a Wesleyan Methodist?"—Yes, he certainly was.

58,254. "Is he now a Churchman?"—No, he goes to church because the Wesleyan chapel is too distant, but he is a Wesleyan still.

58,255. "Are the tenants at Nantgwilym and Henblás who entered this spring not Churchmen?"—They are old tenants on the estate; they are not taken on fresh; the one is certainly a Churchman, the other has attended church and he has attended the Calvinistic Methodist chapel.

58,256. "Has an application ever been made to you by the Calvinistic Methodists for a

Chairman—continued.

"plot of land in the village of Tremeirchion as a building site for a chapel?"—Yes.

58,257. "Did you distinctly refuse to sell any land whatsoever?"—No; I selected a site for them in, to my mind, a most excellent position, commanded by roads and pathways in every direction.

58,258. "Did not the other landlords who owned property in the village also refuse to sell land?"—I never heard of any other landlord being asked in the village, but it might have been so.

58,259. "Do you approve of the objects of the 'Landowners' and Agents' League,' which formerly had its head at Aberdovey, and which had for its main objects the filling of vacant farms with tenants who were Churchmen or Conservatives?"—I never heard of the League.

Lord Kenyon.

58,260. I think we heard of it at Dolgelly?—I never heard of it.

Chairman.

58,261. There is another question by Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones; "How far from the village was the site you suggested for the chapel?"—I was going to say 200 yards, but perhaps a quarter of a mile.

58,262. I understand you wish to put in a schedule?—Yes; this is a schedule of compensation to tenants drawn up by a committee of the Vale of Clwyd Chamber of Agriculture in 1883 and approved at a general meeting, and it has been in operation on my estate since that time. (See Appendix.)

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Colonel HENRY RICHARD LLOYD HOWARD called and examined.

Chairman.

58,263. You are the owner of the Wygfair estate situate in the counties of Denbigh and Flint?—Yes.

58,264. You wish to put before the Commission some particulars concerning that estate?—Yes.

58,265. Will you kindly do so?—I own 839 acres in the county of Denbigh, and 691 acres in the county of Flint. The estate in the county of Flint has since been reduced by the sale of 106 acres, the particulars of which you will get presently. Absentee landlords encourage bad farmers. In this district there are very few absentee landlords. No rule can be laid down as regards large and small estates. Consolidated estates are certainly better than scattered ones.

Chairman—continued.

Neither language, politics, nor religion influence landlords in choosing tenants, or in deciding whether they shall be retained. Where agents are employed they have received special training but I know of no inconvenience or hardship being experienced where they have not. The 30th November is the usual date of entry in my district for land and the 1st May for house and boozy pasture. Farms are let from year to year. There is no demand for leases or they would be readily granted; tenants do not care for them. Being a yearly tenant a man has a much better chance of a reduction and of any allowance made. Tenants believe themselves to be quite as safe under a yearly agreement as they would be under a lease. There are very

31 August 1894.]

Col. H. R. LLOYD HOWARD.

few changes of tenancy; I do not consider changes more frequent than of yore. A tenant is compensated by arrangement made between him and the landlord. If land is damaged by timber cutting, a tenant is compensated, and in the case of mining, brickfields, quarries, or other industrial operations being commenced, compensation is always made. Then I produce a copy of the agreement. (Handed.) None of the clauses are ever objected to; they have no effect on cultivation. No penal law is enforced with a good tenant. The tenant is given a copy of the agreement and has ample time to consider the clauses before signing. A tenant is not likely to put his name to paper unless he knows what he is signing. The rent is fixed at a gross sum.

58,266 On the agreement you say: "shall not dispose of or sell any hay, straw, or manure." That clause, suppose is a dead letter?—Yes, it is practically a dead letter, and they farm as they like. Of course we do not allow them to plough up permanent pasture.

58,267. Otherwise it is freedom of cultivation?—Quite so. The rent of small farms is slightly higher than that of larger ones; this is only fair, owing to the proportionately greater expense in erecting and maintaining buildings. There are no services rendered by tenants except hauling for improvements and repairs. That is not always done, but it depends upon whether my carts are engaged or not; if they are engaged then the tenant has to do it. The rent is fixed on the basis of a valuation. In three instances the tenants fixed their own value. In September 1892, I let by auction 26 acres of grass from 15th September to 28th December, 1892, for 47*l.* In May 1893, I again let the same land by auction from 10th May to 30th November, 1893, for 83*l.* 10*s.* There is no compulsion to bid at an auction. From 1st May to 30 November 1894, I let it at 75*l.* by auction. Rents have not been raised; they have been reduced. There have been both permanent reductions and temporary abatements of rent; they vary in different cases. Notice of such reductions and abatements is given to tenants. I hand in a table of the reductions of rent which makes it appear that we have reduced 16 per cent., and the tenants have now had abatements of 10 per cent. which makes it 26 per cent. in all.

58,268. A permanent reduction of 16 per cent?—Yes, and abatement 10 per cent. Rents are never raised, if reduced it is done by consultation with agent and tenant. It is paid five months after it falls due. Everyone knows of the existence of the preferential claim, and it can make no difference. It prevents shopkeepers giving long credit. In its absence landowners would probably insist on payment in advance. Tithes, land tax, chief rent, and income tax, Schedule A, are paid by the owner. Local rates and income tax, Schedule B, are paid by the occupier. The size of farms varies in my district.

Chairman—continued.

58,269. They are small farms?—Yes, I think you may take an average of about 80 acres. It is very difficult to say, but I should think that is a fair average. I should say holdings have not been consolidated. I have subdivided one farm and built a new house and buildings, and shall probably subdivide another farm, if my property is not interfered with as has been the case in Ireland. There is no scarcity of labourers, except at certain times of the year when there is a great demand. No land is going out of cultivation in my district. No waste land has been reclaimed. Arable land has been laid down to pasture at the tenant's expense, because he thought it would pay better. I wish to state that I do not speak generally; I only speak for my own property. Improvements are all done by the landlord, the tenant usually carrying the materials. I do all the improvements and charge no interest. There are no improvements ever effected by the tenants. Tenants do not apply for the landlord's written consent for improvements, because the tenants prefer to have their improvements done by their landlord. Such consent is readily given, unless the landlord is of opinion that the improvement is ill-judged. I have never heard of an outgoing tenant failing to obtain sufficient compensation for his improvements. There is no right recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interests in their holdings to any solvent tenant to whom the landlord shall not have any reasonable objection. I should not allow any tenant to pay goodwill; all his money would be required to work and stock his farm. With regard to game preserving, tenants kill all the rabbits which cannot be preserved, except on land in the occupation of the owner. Hares are extinct and instances of game preserving by the landowner vary. Tenants generally avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act. There is not sufficient game to do any damage to the crops and pastures, and there are no claims for compensation made. Here the tenant often puts wire netting round part of the fields nearest the wood; the rabbits come out of the woods and get round it; the tenant drives them with dogs, and the rabbits go homewards and cannot get through the wire netting, and then they are killed. Tenants are not expected to "beat" coverts unless they like; they are paid in money if they care to come. The effect of game preserving on the public is that they obtain good game at a figure that they could not rear them at. The clerk to the magistrates could give the proportion that game law offences bear to other offences. There is no attention being paid to agricultural education in my district. I personally take an interest in fruit culture, and last year put out 134 orchard trees. No attention is paid to market gardening, as there is no demand. When the landlord cuts down timber they replant. With regard to poultry farming, Mr. Tegetmeir, who writes for the "Field," the greatest authority living on poultry farming, has for years held that it does not pay.

Chairman—continued.

A great many cottagers keep bees, but their hives are old-fashioned, and there appears to be a want of instruction in this. A great many of these occupations might be sources of profits to farmers, and would be if foreign competition could be got rid of. Instruction in butter and cheese-making is given, and is much availed off. I would not have a dairy-maid unless she had a dairy school certificate. This instruction will have its effect in time, but it must be remembered that the Welsh as a rule are very conservative, except in politics, and think they know how to make butter better than anyone else. Light railways cost about 2,000*l.* a mile; lines like the Glyn Valley tramway would be very useful. With regard to insurance, the landlords insure the buildings, and the tenants mostly insure their stock. There is certainly no combination amongst landlords not to accept tenants of a certain description, but there is an association of landlords to protect their own property, the object of which has already been explained in the evidence given by Lord Penrhyn. I cannot say anything as to farmers and labourers associating for the purpose of fixing wages. There are tenant farmers who have bought their own or other holdings for their own occupation in this district. I myself have sold some property by auction. I hand in a list of the prices. Of the lots four lots were bought by the tenants, one lot by the tenant's son, and one lot by the tenant's daughter.

58,270. That was in 1893?—Yes, the date is on the list, 5th August 1893. (The witness handed in the following list.)

58,271. Did this property sell fairly well?—Exceedingly well. Please observe the years purchase it sold at. I should like to part with a good deal more at the same price.

58,272. One fetched 86 years' purchase?—Yes, that was a very small one; that was a garden.

58,273. Another, 40 years' purchase, and so on?—Yes. It is impossible for me to tell whether they borrowed money to pay for it; the land must have been worth the money or they would not have been able to borrow it. I give my labourers 15*s.* a week and a cottage free for most. The chief fluctuations in wages since 1850 are:—In 1850 labourers' wages were 1*s.* 2*d.* and 1*s.* 8*d.* a day = 7*s.* and 10*s.* per week; in 1857, 1*s.* 10*d.* a day = 11*s.* per week; in 1858, 2*s.* a day = 12*s.* per week; in 1893, 2*s.* 6*d.* a day = 15*s.* per week. Cottage accommodation is good; there are very few thatched cottages in existence. The requirements for thorough cultivation are sufficient. Cottages vary in situation with regard to concentration in villages and distance from work. Their condition and construction is good; all the newly-built cottages have three rooms; they have gardens of sufficient size for one man to work; they are held of the owner. A workman left me a short time back; I gave him six weeks' notice to go out of his cottage. Labourers are very fairly off; they have 15*s.* a week and a cottage. There has been no considerable migration of farmers or labourers from my district within recent years. In my opinion trade depression began in my district in 1884. I consider foreign competition is the cause; all classes are affected by it.

58,274. That is the principal cause of depression you consider?—I think so, my Lord. I suggest as remedies: That those whose money is in "stocks and shares" should have their fair share of rates and taxes, which are now most unfairly borne by the landlord and tenant; light railways; an improvement by Government in the breeding of cattle, as is being done with horses; agricultural education; dairy, poultry, bees, &c.; Government to lend money, at as low a rate of interest as possible, to landlords to drain and build with; dairy factories as in Denmark; horse-breeding, a great deal of that is being done in our country by Mr. Pratt, but there are a lot of stallions travelling the country that are really not fit to get stock from, and those should be prohibited travelling the country, because the tendency of the farmer is to go to the man who will serve him the cheapest. Supposing I invest at 3 per cent. 350*l.*, the price of a pair of cottages, I receive 10*l.* 10*s.* per annum for certain. If I build a pair of cottages with the same money I might get 1*s.* a week for each, say 2*l.* 10*s.* per annum for each, and I must pay rates, taxes, and repairs. In building one should receive 6 per cent. to cover one from loss, so that really I should receive 21*l.* per annum, and I am only receiving 5*l.*, a loss of 16*l.* per annum for my philanthropy. With regard to light railways, in my original evidence, written out about September 1893, I advocated the making of light railways or tramways, the roads to be free from the absurd and vexatious regulations as at present insisted upon by the Board of Trade—such as interlocking apparatus, &c. The speed of these lines should be very moderate. Any incline up to 1 in 11 can be surmounted by the Fell system of a third or grip rail. Temporary sidings could be set up at any points where farmers might have produce to pick up. The gauge of these should be 2 ft. 4 ins. or 2 ft. 6 ins. No station is required, except at each end, and small lock-up sheds. Tickets for passengers might be issued on the train by the conductor. Probable cost of railways: Mr. E. R. Salway, in his book, makes it 2,000*l.* a mile. There is a light railway working in the Department of Loiret, in France, which cost 1,555*l.* per mile, but the rails would have been better heavier, say 24 lbs. a yard: now they are only 19 lbs. Mr. Horace Bell, late consulting engineer for State railways to the Indian Government, says that these lines out there cost 1,800*l.* to 2,000*l.* a mile, and if laid on existing roads, half that sum. I have worked out that if one of these lines earned 2*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* per mile per week, that it would pay the interest of the money. The Loiret line is earning between 2*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* and 2*l.* 17*s.* per mile per week. These estimates include equipments. Such lines as these, from Mold to Ruthin, Mold to Holywell, Mold to Buckley, St. Asaph to Llanfairtalhaiarn and on to Llanrwst, Denbigh to Cerrig-y-Druoidion and on to Bettws-y-Coed, would be of great use—the Government to lend the money, as in the case of the Irish railways. The general relations between landlord and tenant are friendly. I strongly object to the appointment of a land court, as calculated to destroy the present friendly position of landlord and tenant. Dual ownership has been tried in Ireland, and found utterly wanting; why, therefore, attempt to set it up here? I would rather advocate the voluntary extension of the Ashbourne Act, as in Ireland—there is no need to make it compulsory, there are plenty of landlords willing to sell. I would apply it, in the first instance, to absentee landlords. If a land court were established, the landlord would lose all interest in his property; he would become a mere rent receiver, and no inducement to live at his own home. He would probably live in London and abroad, rents would have to be paid to the day, and the tenants would get but little repairs done for them. As to the money spent in repairs and improvements, and the period over which the money has been spent, I hand in a table. The table is from 1870 to 1894, a quarter of a century—25 years. (See Appendix.) I want to make one explanation with regard to it. From 1870 to 1880 the accounts have been destroyed. I have had possession of the property for four years, and my father for 21 years. Either those accounts never existed, or they have been destroyed. I have spoken to the gentleman who was agent, and he says the figures I have put down are about right and fair, and I think myself they are honestly under the mark. I have received in rents during that period, 28,000*l.* odd.

58,275. That is from 1870 to 1894?—Yes. There is half a year in 1870, but I have taken it as a whole year—it is not worth talking about. I have received 28,000*l.* in rent and I have spent 12,000*l.* in repairs, so that the percentage of outlay upon repairs is 41 per cent. With regard to the money that my father and myself have actually handled out of the property, what with repairs, new buildings, draining, &c., insurance, rates, taxes, tithes, and agency, during the past 25 years, we have only received 43*l.* out of every 100*l.* The other 57 per cent. has gone.

58,276. Does that include any charges on the property?—Oh, there are no charges; I am free.

58,277. No jointure?—No; I am free—as air.

58,278. 28,000*l.* in rent between 1870 and 1894, and 12,000*l.* spent in repairs, and 43*l.* in every 100*l.*, really was all you received after the taxes, &c., and charges were paid?—Quite so. I have no evidence of what cases on the estate the families have held the same farm for generations; but one woman now living has been a tenant for over 50 years. One woman died last year, and after her death the holding was sold by auction, and the daughter bought it.

Lord Kenyon.

58,279. You heard Mr. Pennant's evidence this morning?—Yes.

58,280. Have you given any consideration to what he suggested about a valuer?—No; I have never had any difficulty with the present system.

58,281. That was new to you?—Yes, perfectly new. I never heard a word about it until he suggested it. We never have any difficulty; therefore I have not given it a thought.

Col. H. R. LLOYD HOWARD.

58,282. With regard to what he said about agricultural education in this country, do you agree with him as to that?—Yes, thoroughly. I think a great deal more might be done in it.

58,283. Do you think that a butter factory would be taken up by the landlords of this county?—I think it might be if it was started on a proper footing. Then you would have to be very careful that the tenants did not feed their cattle except for making butter. If you have a taste in it no one would buy it. I may say I am interested in butter, and I took the first prize for it at Denbigh.

58,284. Do you think the County Council should start a scheme of that sort?—Yes, I think some authority might. I do not see why they should not try it.

58,285. Do you advocate the Queen's premium cart stallions?—Certainly; the improvement in the breed of horses since Mr. Pratt has been in the Vale—and it is now the third or fourth year—is very marked. It was noticed by several of us at the Denbigh show.

58,286. I suppose a good many of the landlords keep bulls for the tenants?—Yes, there is one at Cefn. I keep Jersey cattle myself, because I believe in them, and I believe they pay better.

58,287. Do you think any light railway is required in this district?—Yes, I think so. I think one from here to Ruthin would be a very useful thing laid alongside the road. It is a very good road all the way, and it is quite easy to surmount that hill with the grip rail.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,288. Is your agent a trained man in agriculture?—Yes, very much so.

58,289. You do not employ a valuer, I suppose?—No, they have such faith in him that they are quite satisfied with anything he does.

58,290. Do you construct any sheds for the storing of hay?—Yes, I put up one for a tenant this year and three others for myself.

58,291. Do you charge any interest upon the outlay?—Oh, dear me, no, never.

58,292. Do the servants in this neighbourhood generally attend dairy schools?—I think they are getting more keen about it than they were.

58,293. When are the classes held generally, what time of day?—They go there for a month, I think it is; I am not very clear about it. Mr. Pennant gave you that evidence.

59,294. In Scotland they have their classes in the evening, for the purpose of the servants having a chance to attend?—I have been over the dairy school at Lleweny this morning, and the class are stopping there. They stay for a month, I think.

58,295. But servants could not do that?—No, but farmers' daughters go there and stop a certain time.

Lord Kenyon.

58,296. The dairy class travels sometimes?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,297. Do you know whether the servants attend the travelling dairy school or not?—I do not know. Mr. Pennant can tell you better than I can, because he has to do with it.

58,298. You are of opinion that there are too many horses travelling now and that they are injurious?—Yes; I would wipe all the bad stallions out, every one of them, and forbid them to travel. A bad horse or a bad bull eats just as much as a good one.

58,299. It has been said elsewhere that they ought all to be registered?—Yes, certainly there should be some system of that sort.

Mr. Richard Jones.

58,300. When a farm becomes vacant what process do you adopt in order to let it?—We advertise it in the paper. We very seldom have a farm vacant. We had one taken the other day and a man came and took it immediately we advertised.

58,301. Is it a general thing that landlords advertise their farms?—Yes, I think so. You see the advertisements in the paper. If you have anything to sell or let you advertise it.

58,302. Do you let to the highest bidder?—Oh, dear me, no.

58,303. The most desirable tenant?—Yes.

58,304. It is not for the lack of applications that you advertise it?—Oh no.

58,305. How many applications do you generally get for a farm when it is advertised?—I have not had one vacant till the other day, and a man heard of it in a public house and came and took it. I did not advertise it at all.

58,306. Have you advertised it?—No.

58,307. But on the large estates it is not a general thing?—I would not like to speak for anyone but myself.

58,308. You are acquainted with the district?—Oh yes, I know it very well. I think they generally advertise a farm. I think so. I know a farm near me that belonged to a large estate that was advertised the other day and taken immediately.

58,309. Have you made many abatements on your farms?—Yes, we have reduced the rent 16 per cent. and we have abated a further 10 per cent., which makes 26 per cent. I gave you that evidence.

58,310. Was it on your initiative that the deductions and abatements were made?—The 16 per cent. was done in my father's time, and I gave the other 10 per cent. abatement and it has continued ever since I have been in.

58,311. So that the tenants have a reduction of 26 per cent.?—Yes, and they get all the repairs and improvements done for nothing.

58,312. When were the rents revised on your estate?—I have no record of anything of that

31 August 1894.]

Col. H. R. LLOYD HOWARD.

sort, so far as I know, and I am speaking to the best of my ability, there has been no rise in the rents that I can trace.

58,313. No alteration from 1872 to 1876?—There was certainly not then. The table I handed in will show that.

58,314. Have you enforced the penal clauses in your agreements?—Never.

58,315. I suppose they are always observed?—Yes, I have never had occasion to enforce them.

58,316. Supposing that these clauses were broken would you enforce the penalty?—I could not say. I will wait until they are broken.

58,317. Do you think there is any necessity to do anything more than receive compensation for the actual damage done?—I do not quite follow that question.

58,318. Well, you see I have not seen your agreement, but very frequently there is a fine of 20*l.* for the infringement of these restrictive clauses?—Well, it has never occurred, so that I could not give an opinion. I have handed up my agreement.

58,319. There is a clause to that effect in your agreement?—There is the usual clause.

Lord Kenyon.

58,320. It is more to prevent the pasture being broken up than anything else?—Yes, it would take years and years to lay it down again. I do not think you can lay it down under 5*l.* an acre.

Mr. Richard Jones.

58,321. Well, it would not cost 20*l.* an acre to lay it down?—That may be.

Mr. Grove.

58,322. You gave us an instance where you had let some small piece of land at a very high rate. I suppose that is strictly accommodation land?—Not at all. It is 2½ miles from this town, if not 3 miles.

58,323. You would not call that accommodation land in any sense?—No, certainly not.

58,324. When you give fruit trees, which you say you are trying to encourage, do you protect them at all. Do you do anything towards protecting them?—I have begged the tenants to do something. I have staked them myself, and I have begged them to protect them, and I shall see whether they do. If they do not protect them I shall not put any more in.

58,325. In speaking of poultry farming, you say it does not pay?—That is the opinion of Mr. Tegetmeir.

58,326. You would like to see it encouraged?—Yes, as an auxiliary, and the right breed of chickens encouraged, one for laying and one for eating.

Mr. Grove—continued.

58,327. When you sold the five or six farms some few years ago, do you know whether any money was borrowed by the sitting tenant to purchase?—I do not know that—but they were only sold last year, last August. We received the money and did not ask any questions.

58,328. You speak of the cost of cottages, and you make up a table showing that if you built cottages you would be a large loser as compared with an ordinary tenancy. If those cottages were built on your own land would there not be some part of the advantage received back in giving proper housing for the labour for the land?—A man must live somewhere, he cannot live in the open field.

58,329. If we were to admit that the cottages were necessary for a certain amount of labour on the land, that table would hardly be fair, would it—looking at it from that utilitarian point of view?—There is no reason that the cottager should not have lived in the town, say two miles off, and come to the work, and then you would be receiving the interest on your 250*l.*

58,330. Would you consider it advantageous to do that?—Numbers of men walk two miles.

58,331. Would you consider it as valuable? Would you not like to have the men on the farm to attend to the stock?—Yes, quite so; I quite admit it would be better, but not absolutely necessary.

58,332. Then, speaking of the light railways, that is a very nice point. You work it out so much per week will pay the interest on the capital?—Yes, I worked it out roughly. I make out, say they cost 2,000*l.* a mile, the interest on that 2,000*l.* a mile at 3½ per cent. would be 70*l.* Say the working expenses of the line were 65*l.*, that would work it out at 2*l.* 11*s.* 6*d.* per mile per week. Referring to that railway in France I was speaking of, this was taken from the Times of only a few days ago—“These sums represent gross earnings, respectively, of about 2*l.* 4*s.* 6*d.* and 2*l.* 17*s.* per mile per week, which, according to our ideas, would not be remunerative, even for a very light railway. The fact, however, that a responsible and experienced firm of contractors are working the line on these terms, shows that a profit is to be made with a very small volume of traffic, if the system of working is adapted to the conditions.” I would put in sidings. I would have portable sidings, so that if a man wanted to send a stack of hay to Liverpool he would simply have to send it to the railway, have it trussed, and take it off.

58,333. You consider the Board of Trade regulations would have to be very much modified before you could think of that?—It would be perfectly impossible as it is now.

58,334. You would advocate it being applicable to passenger traffic as well as merchandise?—Yes.

58,335. Therefore they must modify their regulations?—Oh, they must do it if they want to have any light railways. If you made a line say from here to Holywell, there is the Halkin mine there drawing their coals three or four miles up one of the steepest hills in the world, and sending their lead down to Bagilt. It costs 3s. 6d. a ton to send it down, and you can bring lead from Australia for 5s. a ton; in fact, I believe they will bring it for nothing.

58,336. You spoke of Denmark. Have you studied the question at all in reference to butter factories in that country?—I have not gone into butter factories there. I went to one butter factory in this country, Lord Vernon's; it was very interesting.

58,337. I suppose you know in Denmark they have appointed inspectors and they keep an inspector also in England, whose duty it is to go into all our markets for butter, find out the whole circumstances of the case, and report home to the Government, so that they seem to have made a regular system of the whole thing—and that is the reason I suppose they are fairly successful with it?—I am very successful with my own butter. I can sell any quantity of it at 18d. a pound all the year round, because of the uniformity of quality, and it is very well made.

Professor Rhys.

58,338. What was the district in France you instanced with regard to the railways?—The department of Loiret.

58,339. Do you know whether that is a fairly level country or hilly?—It does not say very much about that. I should think most probably it is flat.

58,340. I was thinking of the railway you suggested from St. Asaph or Denbigh to Llanfairtalhaiarn and on to Llanrwst?—Yes, and Bettws-y-coed.

58,341. Would it not be rather expensive to get it to the level of Bettws-y-coed?—No, with the Fell railway, which I have been over as a boy on the engine on the Mont Cenis, they could drag a loaded train up 1 in 11, and it went up very easily.

Sir John Llewelyn.

58,342. Is that the rack and pinion system?—No, the grip rail, the Fell system.

Professor Rhys.

58,343. Does that involve considerable expense and tell rather against the suggestion as applicable to this country?—I do not think so. You only put in the third rail where you want it. Directly you want it you use the grip. The driver can put the grip on wherever it is. I think you could get down into the valley very easily with a gradient of 1 in 25 or something of that sort.

58,344. With regard to labourers you do not seem to feel any objection to their living a mile or two away in the towns?—I think it would be better to live on the spot.

Professor Rhys—continued.

58,345. I do not want to discuss that. Do your farmers keep any servants living on the spot?—Yes, they live in the house I think.

58,346. That system you find to work all right?—That seems to work all right. There are no complaints.

Sir John Llewelyn.

58,347. You told us about the sale of property. Was that by private treaty with the tenant?—No; sold by auction in this town.

58,348. Was there any right of pre-emption given to the sitting tenant?—No. We offered one place to the woman who had been there 50 years—I am speaking only generally—at a price and she refused it, and it fetched 130l. or 140l. more than she offered for it. We should have been quite willing to have sold it to her at 30l. or 40l. less than it was worth, but she refused and we put it up to public auction. It was sold at the hotel here.

58,349. In regard to the purchase of goodwill you tell us, I think, that you are opposed to the idea of the sale of good-will in the land?—Certainly.

58,350. Do you know as a matter of fact whether any money does pass between an outgoing and incoming tenant?—I never heard of any except the usual arrangement as to crops and those sort of things—not with regard to giving possession. A man's money is required to work his farm.

Mr. Richard Jones.

58,351. I was not present when you answered some of the questions, but you think a preferential claim for rent has a very beneficial effect?—My answer to that question was—"Every one knows of the existence of the preferential claim and it can make no difference. It prevents shop-keepers giving long credit. In its absence landowners would probably insist on payment in advance."

58,352. What is the effect of the preferential claim on tenants who have capital—that is the most desirable class of tenants?—I should say it has none. It is only with respect to the man who has not any money.

58,353. Has not the preferential claim for rent the effect of stimulating rents and keeping them up?—Not at all that I have heard of. I never heard of it.

58,354. Supposing the preferential claim was abolished?—The landlord would insist upon having his rent paid in advance.

58,355. And he would exercise more care in the selection of his tenant?—Yes, perhaps. We exercise what we consider sufficient now.

58,356. He would do more so then?—No, I do not think we could exercise any more care than we do at present.

58,357. Would you have any objection to abolish it?—Yes, I should have great objection, because you have a tenant going into a farm and he would have to find the money for the rent in advance when he was wanting money for his farm. I should say let it remain as it is—it is perfectly satisfactory.

58,358. In the interest of the tenant you are in favour of it remaining as it is?—Certainly.

58,359. We frequently hear from tenant farmers that they would like it?—Those are the tenant farmers you mentioned who have no capital.

58,360. The preferential claim induces men of straw to come and compete with the most desirable tenants, such as bond fide tenant farmers who have capital. It increases the competition?—I do not think so.

58,361. That is not your opinion?—No, that is not my opinion.

58,362. It is somewhat contrary to the general opinion, I must say?—We cannot all be of one mind.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,363. One question with regard to the land which you let out by auction—we call it a bye hold?—We simply let grass land by auction.

58,364. With regard to that what time of the year do you generally let it?—I came into this land through a death—I will be perfectly plain with you—I had a crop of hay off it, and in September 1892 I let it from the 15th of September to the 28th of December for 47*l*. In May 1893 I again let the same land by auction from the 10th of May to the 30th of November for 83*l*. 10*s*.

58,365. Why did you change the time of letting it?—Because I came in and took it through a death, and the grass was actually standing on the land at the time the lady died. I came in as heir-at-law and the actual grass standing on the land belonged to me. The lady left no will; I came into possession. That is the reason I changed the time.

58,366. You made it May afterwards?—Yes, certainly; it was let before in September. I let it from the 1st of May for grazing.

58,367. Is not that a time when tenants are generally very short of keep, and they have either to buy hay or buy cake or corn?—Yes, but you would not choose the worst time of the year to sell anything, would you?

58,368. But the tenant is obliged to give a higher price for it?—This was taken by outsiders and by auction, and from the 1st of May to the 31st of November 1894 for 75*l*.

Chairman.

58,369. There is a question handed in by Mr. J. E. Vincent—"Have you not miscalculated the ratio between your expenditure and rental? Ought it not to be nearly 43 per cent.?"—It might be.

58,370. I do not think you gave any percentage, did you?—Yes, I did. One is 41 per cent. The repairs and improvements, and the actual money handled was 43 per cent., but I might have made a mistake.

58,371. Mr. Vincent contends that it ought to be nearly 43 per cent. in both cases?—Very likely.

58,372. There is one question by Mr. Owen Wynne—"Do you think the farmers of late years would have been better off under leases, than under the ordinary yearly tenancies?"—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. DAVID JONES called and examined.

Chairman.

58,373. Where do you live?—Plas Newydd.

58,374. How far is that from Mold?—About four miles.

58,375. Are you a tenant farmer?—A tenant farmer, yes.

58,376. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Carstairs Jones, of Hartsheath.

58,377. How large is your farm?—275 acres.

58,378. Is it a grass or a mixed farm?—It is mostly a grass farm.

58,379. What is the rent?—The rent is 319*l*. and odd shillings.

58,380. What do you wish to tell the Commission?—I have nothing against the landlord; we are getting on very well. I have got a very good agent.

58,381. How long have you been on the farm?—About five years; getting on for five years now.

Chairman—continued.

58,382. What would you like to say?—Well, I consider, after my experience in farming, that there is too much burden on the land.

58,383. Anything else?—Rents, rates, and everything, are too high on the land.

58,384. You complain of your rent. You think your rent is too high?—Well, I do not say my rent is too high, but according to the size of the farm. It is only grass land, and not sufficient arable land.

58,385. You have not sufficient arable land on your farm?—No, that is so.

58,386. Do you consider the rents in the neighbourhood are too high?—I consider the rents in Wales are too high.

58,387. You consider the rents all over Wales are too high?—Yes, generally, and the rates and everything on the land is too much money to pay.

31 August 1894.]

Mr. D. JONES.

Chairman—continued.

58,388. You think the rents and the rates all over Wales are too high. What else?—To have the rents settled is better than abatements. I do not believe in abatements.

58,389. You think there ought to be permanent abatements in rent?—Yes.

58,390. Anything else?—Well, I consider myself that it would be very good to have some board of arbitrators. I had an experience in that line in the other farm I was in. There was an abatement, but I wanted to settle the rent, and the landlord could not come to my terms. I only wanted the farm according to rent I was paying after deducting abatements, I wanted to have it settled, I took another farm, and after I took the other farm, the farm I am in at present, the agent came to me and wanted me to take the farm on my own terms. It is the case very often to let a tenant go, and let the farm again perhaps lower to a new tenant.

58,391. Do you consider that the common practice in the neighbourhood, or is that an individual or singular case?—Well, not quite singular. I know of more cases than that.

58,392. You know of more cases where that has happened?—Yes; I consider it is better if the tenant farmer can agree, but when cases come where they cannot agree, it is better to have an arbitration, because it is loss to the landlords sometimes to lose a good tenant, and perhaps take another not so good instead.

58,393. You think it would be in the landlord's interest to have a legal arbitrator—do you go as far as that?—Yes, I believe it would be better for the landlord.

58,394. Because he would keep a good tenant, though he might lose a little rent. That is what is in your mind?—Yes.

58,395. And you would like to see some sort of court of arbitration fixed?—Yes, I should like to see it. And another thing I should like to give evidence about. I do not believe anyone ought to be a land agent without being a practical farmer himself. There are a good many lawyers in Wales who are land agents, but I do not think myself they ought be. My agent at present is a practical farmer himself and is very agreeable.

58,396. Were you in the room this morning when the evidence was given?—Yes.

58,397. Did you hear Mr. Pennant's evidence?—I could not catch every word.

58,398. He was in favour of arbitration to settle any dispute about compensation?—Yes.

58,399. But you go farther, and you would like arbitration to settle the question of rent between landlord and tenant?—Yes, if there is a dispute.

58,400. It would not be necessary to go to this arbitration unless there was a dispute which could not be settled amicably between the landlord and the tenant?—No.

58,401. Is there anything else you would like to tell us?—No, nothing more except that point.

58,402. And that point you are very strong upon?—I am very strong that no one ought to be a land agent except he is a practical farmer himself.

58,403. Your point is that every land agent ought to be a practical man?—Yes.

58,404. You object to lawyers as land agents?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,405. You do not tell us why you wish for a permanent reduction of rent in preference to abatement?—It would be far better.

58,406. But what is the reason?—Well, because we could look forward better, and go on and farm better, I believe.

58,407. Would you not also have your rates reduced—the rateable value of your farm?—Yes.

58,408. Can you get that with abatements?—No.

58,409. Why did you leave the other farm you occupied?—Because the farm did not pay. It was very poor land, and it was very late, and the crop was late.

58,410. Did you appeal to your landlord for a reduction in your rent?—I appealed for having the rent the same as I had it, to settle it permanently instead of abatements.

58,411. But he would not even do that for you?—No.

58,412. Do you think that it was for the want of knowledge, or do you think he was rather a hard landlord. Do you think he knew that the farm was a little bit high?—Yes, the agent knew, I explained it.

58,413. And he offered it afterwards when you were taking this new farm?—He offered it after I had taken another farm.

Mr. Richard Jones.

58,414. Have you any grievance with your present landlord?—No, we are getting on very well.

58,415. You have no hostile feeling against him at all personally?—No, not at all.

58,416. What you complain of is that the rent is too high, that you cannot make your farm pay?—Yes, I complain that the rents generally are too high in the country, and it is better to settle the rents than have abatements.

58,417. Are you acquainted with the circumstances of the farmers, your neighbours?—Yes, but not very much now, because I have not been long in this neighbourhood.

58,418. Do you hear complaints from your neighbours that their farms do not pay?—Yes, I hear a great many complaints.

58,419. Is there a reluctance among the tenant farmers to appear before the Commission?—Well, I do not know that.

58,420. Do they feel timid, or is there any fear to appear before the Commission?—Well, I am afraid there is.

58,421. They are afraid that they will be punished in some way or other?—Well, I think they are.

31 August 1894.]

Mr. D. JONES.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

58,422. Do you think there is any justification for that fear?—Well no, I do not think there is.

58,423. But still it does exist?—Yes.

58,424. Do you know whether any landlords have invited their tenants to appear before the Commission?—No, I do not know of any.

58,425. You do not know whether any of them have announced that there was perfect liberty to their tenants to appear before the Commission?—No, I do not know of any.

58,426. Are you satisfied with the profits you have been making on your farm for the last five years?—No.

58,427. It has not paid you?—No, the last three years it has not paid. Prices have been so bad, and it has not paid the last three years.

58,428. Do you think that the question of rent will never right itself without the interference of some third party to settle it?—I am afraid not.

58,429. You think that there is no prospect, at any rate, at the present time, of times improving to such an extent as to justify the present rents?—No, I do not see it.

Mr. Grove.

58,430. Are there many teetotallers about that you know of—many total abstainers?—Yes.

58,431. Do you think that if some of the money that went into the public houses was turned into other directions, it might improve the position of farming a bit?—Yes, I think it would be a great help. I think it would be better.

58,432. Would you like to buy your own farm if you could. I mean would you like to be the possessor of your own farm if you could manage it?—Oh, certainly yes.

58,433. Do you think if the property belonged to you yourself, that you could farm it better than you do now, to try and make a little more out of the land?—Yes, I think I would.

58,434. You would like to have a try at it, if you could?—Aye.

Professor Rhys.

58,435. Which is your parish?—Mold; Hartstead township.

58,436. Do you speak Welsh?—Yes. I prefer to speak Welsh, and to give my evidence in Welsh, if you will allow it.

58,437. What language do the farmers about you speak. Do they speak Welsh mostly?—Some Welsh and some English. I am on the boundary.

58,438. Have you an agreement?—Yes.

58,439. Have you read that carefully through, and do you understand it?—Well, I have read it, and I understand it.

58,440. And it is usual for people about you to have agreements?—I think it is.

58,441. Have you any farm servants?—Yes.

58,442. Where do you lodge them?—Some in the house, and some out.

Sir John Llewelyn.

58,443. You said you thought the rents in Wales were too high. Have you any experience of other parts of Wales?—Yes; I have an experience of two or three parts.

58,444. Would you tell us where?—Cerrig-y-Druidion.

58,445. Denbigh county?—Denbigh county.

58,446. Can you speak for other parts of Wales—any other counties?—Well, I know Merionethshire very well.

58,447. Do you know anything of South Wales?—No.

58,448. Your own rent is one that you do not complain of as being too high?—No, I have no complaint myself.

58,449. Would you tell us upon how many years' average you think rent ought to be estimated in fixing the rent?—I think 10 years would be quite sufficient.

58,450. A 10 years' average?—Yes.

58,451. And you think that if the rent was fixed it should remain a fixture for 10 years?—Yes.

Chairman.

58,452. There are some questions put in somewhat of a personal character, and I should not put them to you without your consent. I understand Mr. Llewellyn Jones does not press them. Will you kindly read them through personally, and let us know whether you wish them put or not? They will not be pressed if they are at all objectionable to you? [The questions were handed to the witness.—I have no objection.

58,453. You have no objection to answering these questions?—No.

58,454. Before I put them, Mr. Griffiths wants to ask you a question.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,455. If you had your rent reduced, would you be willing, if the times got better, such as the times were in the seventies, for the rent to be advanced again?—Yes.

58,456. Which time were you able to pay the rent best, in those days or now?—Those days.

Chairman.

58,457. These are the questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "While you were tenant at Maestyddyn, did you ever receive a letter urging you to leave the Nonconformists and go to church, as this would be of advantage to you in case you desired another farm on any estate?"—Yes.

58,458. "Who sent you this letter?"—The rector of the parish.

58,459. "Do you object to stating the contents of this letter?"—I have not got the letter with me, but the contents were these: "If you had only recommendation from me you might

" or any other part of England or Wales."

58,460. What was the name of the rector who wrote you this letter?—The Rev. Mr. Griffiths. I do not remember his first name.

58,461. Can you produce this letter? Have you got the letter?—I have not got it at present.

58,462. Have you got it at home?—No.

58,463. Can you get the letter? Is the letter now in existence?—I expect it is, and you shall have it again.

58,464. Can you send the letter to the Commissioners. Can you find the letter?—Well, I am not quite sure, because I have given it to a friend. I got about a dozen of them from the same source.

68,465. If you can get that letter it will be as well to send it in to the Commissioners. We do not doubt your statement for a moment, but it is always better to have the evidence perfectly straightforward and as convincing as possible?—Yes.

Mr. Llewellyn Jones.—I think the letter will be produced, my Lord, by the next witness.

Chairman.

58,466. There are some further questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones. "Was the holding you referred to in your evidence on Lord Bagot's estate?"—Yes

58,467. "What rent did you pay for your holding?"—220*l*.

58,468. For how many acres?—Oh, it was about 400 acres, but very poor land, cold and late.

58,469. "Did you ask for a reduction in your rent?"—Yes, I asked for a permanent rent—to have it the same exactly as I was paying by having an abatement. I wanted it settled.

58,470. "What was the reduction you asked for?" I understood that would be a permanent reduction to the extent of the abatement. You wanted the abatement? Is that so?—Yes.

58,471. "Was it allowed to you?"—No.

58,472. "Did you then give notice to quit?"—Yes.

51,473. "Do you know for how much the farm was then let?"—Well, the agent told me himself that it was let exactly the same, but the tenant said less.

58,474. The agent said it was let for the same amount?—For the same amount.

58,475. And the tenant said it was let for less?—Yes.

58,476. "How long had you been tenant of this farm?"—About 15 years.

58,477. Then there are some questions by Mr. J. E. Vincent. "Do you not think if landlord and tenant cannot agree as to the rent, that they had better part?"—No, I believe it is better to have an arbitration.

58,478. "It is bad, is it not, if they are not friendly." That is to say if the landlord and tenant are not friendly it is bad?—Well, I think it is better to part, if they are not friendly. That is my opinion.

58,479. "Did you ever know two men to be good friends after they had gone to law with one another?"—I do not remember.

58,480. Now come some questions by Mr. Vincent upon the letter which the reverend gentleman wrote to you. "How long ago was this letter written?"—Well, about six years.

58,481. "What was the parish?"—Clocaenog.

58,482. "Did you think the letter worth any serious attention?"—Oh certainly. It is written by the rector of the parish.

The witness withdrew.

The Rev. JOSEPH DAVIES called and examined.

Chairman.

58,483. You are a Congregational minister, and you live at Daylight Villas, Buckley?—Yes.

Chairman.

Before this witness gives his evidence, I should like to know if there is any representative of Mr. Cooke present.

Major Birch.—I represent Mr. Cooke, my Lord.

Chairman.

Mr. Vincent, do you wish this letter to be shown to the reverend gentleman.

Mr. J. E. Vincent.—Your lordship is at liberty to do anything you like with the letter. I think it is only fair that he should have it.

Chairman.

Very well. [The letter was handed to the witness.]

Witness.

I may just say, my lord, that I am not going to give evidence at all with regard to the encroachment that is now proceeding, or has been proceeding of late. I am not going to refer to that at all.

Chairman.

58,484. Your evidence does not relate to the matter referred to in that letter of Mr. Vincent's?—No, not to the encroachment that has been proceeding on Buckley Common within the last 12 months.

31 August 1894.]

Rev. J. DAVIES.

Chairman—continued.

The letter, Mr. Vincent, refers entirely to that, I understand.

Mr. J. E. Vincent.—So I understand I was simply instructed to give every information I could to the Commission.

Chairman.

58,485. What do you wish to state to the Commission?—I am here to give evidence, my Lord, with regard to some common land at Buckley, in the county of Flint, and I am going to refer to four cases, and these I give as samples of what is going on between Philip Bryan Davis Cooke, Esq., of Gwysaney Hall, lord of the manor of Ewloe Wood township, and some of the poor hardworking men of Buckley.

Sir John Llewelyn.

58,486. Where is Buckley exactly. Which side of this place; is it near Hawarden?—It lies between here and Hawarden.

Chairman.

58,487. Mr. Cooke is lord of the manor, I take it?—Lord of the manor of Ewloe Wood township. The first case is that of a Mr. Thomas Lewis, who built a cottage on a plot of common land, about the year 1865. I well remember the cottage being built. The said Thomas Lewis lived there from 1865 until he died, some six years ago. After his death his son John (the eldest of four children) applied to Mr. Cooke's agent for the house, so that he could sublet it, as others were doing and are doing on the common to this day. The agent would not consent to his subletting, and gave Lewis to understand that if he must have anything to do with the place he must come there to live, of course paying an advanced rent. At this time Lewis junior lived in the county of Durham, and was not in a position to remove his family from Durham to Flintshire, in fact he was so poor that he had to borrow money to pay his railway fare to come to his father's funeral, and therefore could not possibly pay for the removal of his family and furniture, but he was hoping that some day he would be in a position to do so, and and once again settle in the old house at home. He was expecting, and rightly so, to have some share and interest in the house that he, along with his father—along with his father, I repeat that—had so recently built, and built with very hard-earned money, even though he was not able to come to it just there and then. But no, the house was taken from the Lewis family, and very soon tenanted by Mr. Cooke's bailiff's daughter, who lives there to-day, although the squire never paid a cent towards either the enclosing of the plot of land, or the building of the house, nor did the Lewis family receive the least consideration for their outlay in any shape or form.

The second sample I want to refer to is that of Mr. Robert Minshull, who died some eight years ago. I knew the man very well. He has left behind him a married daughter, a Mrs. Henry Fox, who ought to be receiving some benefit from a cottage that her father built at his own expense, and sublet to her for several years, and which she sublet for three years after his death. But five years ago it was taken from her by the lord of the manor and let to his bailiff's son at an annual rental of 5*l.*, but the Minshull's family do not receive a fraction of the 5*l.*, they don't even get the chance to see it or to smell it.

The third case is a little different, but a little worse, if worse can be. In the year 1848 Mr. Robert Lamb fenced in a piece of wild, rough, and worthless common, a plot with scarcely a bit of soil on it, and built a cottage thereon, and made, in the course of a lengthened period, and with great labour and expense, a splendid garden, one of the best in the district. For several years he paid an annual chief rent of 6*s.*, the rent as fixed by the Court Leet, and sanctioned by a jury of that court. This rent was paid until about the year 1872, when the squire's agent, a Mr. Bowdage, requested Mr. Lamb to sign a document, Lamb refused, for he could see clearly that in doing so he would be giving up all his claim and interest in his cottage and garden. And because he refused to sign that document, and mark you, not because he refused or failed to pay his rent, he was ejected, turned out of house and harbour, he, his wife, and 10 children, and every bit of furniture thrown on the common, tumbled neck and crop out of the very cottage he himself had built. Gentlemen, I was an eye-witness of the dastardly proceeding, and shall not soon forget it. And then, when they had the poor fellow in this fix, they offered him his own house at a rental of 3*l.* a year, a real Monte Carlo advance, an advance of 1,000 per cent., a kind of a lively roguish upward jump. And the man and his family, 12 souls all told, with nothing better than a hedge for shelter, and a wild, dreary, damp common, for a sleeping place, and never a shilling to spend for law, had nothing that he possibly could do, but to accept the Squire's terms, and to this day that is the rent the man is paying, for Mr. Lamb I am glad to say is still living. He has lived through it all, how is a mystery to many, and I hope that he will live long enough to know and to feel that a slice of common law has been created by the British Parliament, assisted by this Commission, that will give him, and many others like him in North Wales, a little bit of fair play. I am pleased to inform you that Mr. Lamb is in this court at the present time. I presume that here and now will be the right time for stating that the cottagers on Birkley Common (scores of them) were compelled under a threat of eject-ment to sign a similar document to the one already referred to, or be thrown out bag and baggage after the Robert Lamb fashion.

The fourth sample is the case of an exorbitant rent that is being charged for a plot of common land occupied by Mr. John Taylor, grocer, Alltany, Buckley Common, I will tell you what rent is charged for one piece of common land. Of course there is a building on it that was erected in the year 1869, but the squire never paid a farthing towards the building or the enclosure, and yet he demands and receives for that plot of common land rent after the rate of 19*l.* 10*s.* per acre per annum, and gives the occupier the high privilege of paying all the rates and taxes in the bargain, while estate land close by is let for less than 19*s.* per acre. These are only four sample cases which I, along with others, know to be most unfair and very hard for anyone to take advantage of, and for the lord of the manor to fix such high rents at the labourer's expense and trouble, and also to take and claim (as his own) without any consideration, the cottages, gardens, and crofts from the families and friends of those who enclosed the land and erected the buildings. We are hoping and believing that this Commission appointed by Government will aid the said Government to settle the question once and for all, in a fair and equitable manner. That is all we ask for, my Lord.

58,488. That is the whole of your statement?—That is the statement.

Sir John Llewelyn.

58,489. I understand that you are questioning the ownership of this common?—Not exactly that.

58,490. What is it exactly then? You think there has been a case of hardship with these people?—That is it.

58,491. That their tenancy, whatever their tenancy was, had expired. I do not know whether it is a leasehold even, or perhaps they were squatters, or had their leases of the place which had expired?—No leases. They enclosed portions of the common, and the rent at first was fixed by a Court Leet, a lawful court, that meets once a year.

58,492. Then in the first instance they were squatters. Did they go there with any right in the first instance?—Only by permission.

58,493. For how long a period did they hold these houses?—No period was allotted.

58,494. But as a matter of fact how long was it. Was it 100 years or was it five years?—In the cases I have referred to—let us take the third case, Mr. Robert Lamb's case?

58,495. Yes, by all means?—That was in 1848. That is 46 years ago.

58,496. When did the court last sit that fixed the rent?—In the same year.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

58,497. And they gave it from year to year, I suppose?—From year to year.

58,498. And with no time named?—No time named.

58,499. Then he was a tenant from year to year, each year consecutively. He might have been turned out at a previous period, I suppose, at the end of any one year?—Very likely.

58,500. I only want to get what is in your mind about it. You say it was fixed by Court Leet, that he was to have it for a year, and then for another year. Is that so?—That is how they paid their rent. They paid the rent annually at the court leet, but with an understanding that they had a claim and an interest in the holding.

58,501. That understanding was an unwritten one, I suppose?—Clearly so.

58,502. Do you think it desirable that people should go and take possession of a part of a common as they choose?—Not now.

58,503. You think it cannot be done now?—No, it cannot be done now.

58,504. Do you dispute the legal right of Mr. Cooke to act as he did?—I do not dispute that.

58,505. But you think that the law is bad?—Yes, they are very hard cases, very severe. There is no dispute about the legal right.

58,506. What you want to show is that you think the law is very harsh in those cases?—Yes, that is my point.

Professor Rhys.

58,507. Your complaint is as to the law?—That is it.

58,508. The present state of the law?—The present state of the law.

Mr. Grove.

58,509. And the reason that you come here to-day is to try and influence the Commission to consider what you say, with the view of making some recommendation as to the alteration of that law. Is that it?—Exactly that, just that.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,510. Are there any Court Leets held at present?—Yes.

58,511. Was this case ever brought before the Court Leet?—I am not aware that it ever was.

Chairman.

58,512. There are some questions put in by Mr. Vincent. "Did you buy a farm at Bistree some time ago?"—Yes.

Rev. J. DAVIES.

Chairman—continued.

58,513. "Was the farm occupied by a widow when you bought it?"—Yes.

58,514. "Did you increase the rent?"—No.

58,515. "Did the widow leave?"—Yes.

58,516. "Are you aware that Mr. Cooke claims as owner, and not as lord of the manor?"—I am not aware of that.

58,517. "Did you hear of the case of Cooke against Sharratt and Beavan, tried here in 1875?"—Not any particulars of it.

58,518. "Was that an action of ejectment in respect of a plot on this common?" Can you answer that question?—I could not answer that.

58,519. "Was judgment given for the plaintiff?"—No, I could not answer that.

58,520. There are some more questions by Mr. Vincent. "What rent does John Taylor pay you?"—After he has paid the ground rent, the chief rent so-called, I receive 10 guineas.

58,521. What is Mr. Taylor?—He is my brother-in-law.

58,522. He pays you 10 guineas a year?—Yes.

58,523. "What rent do you pay for the land which Taylor holds from you?"—Mr. Taylor pays it.

58,524. I understand from this question that Mr. Vincent imagines that you sublet some land to Mr. Taylor. Is that the fact?—Mr. Taylor pays ground rent, 2*l.* 10*s.* That is what I referred to as the fourth case. This is a ground rental after the rate of 19*l.* 10*s.* per acre. I had a business there, and Mr. Taylor, my brother-in-law, got the business after me.

The witness withdrew.

58,525. I do not understand this. Mr. John Taylor, you have told us is charged for a piece of common and building which the squire did not put up, at a rent at the rate of 19*l.* odd per acre. This is so is it not?—Yes.

58,526. And the land next door is let at 19*s.* an acre. That is what you told us?—That is it.

58,527. How does Mr. John Taylor pay you any rent?—I put the buildings up, my Lord.

58,528. You put the buildings up which the squire claimed?—That is it.

58,529. And Mr. Taylor pays you?—Yes.

58,530. How much do you say he pays you?—Ten guineas, after the 2*l.* 10*s.* is paid for the ground rent.

58,531. Then practically he pays you 10 guineas?—For the shop.

58,532. He pays you 10 guineas for the shop, and he pays Mr. Cooke 2*l.* 10*s.* for the ground?—Yes.

58,533. This is a question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones. "What you object to is the lord of the manor standing by, allowing others to cultivate the common and to build houses thereupon, and then, when the common was cultivated and houses built, demanding practically a rack rent for the property?"—Yes, that is it.

Re-examined
65,205.

Major BIRCH called and examined.

Chairman.

58,534. Where do you live?—I live at Maes Elwy, near St. Asaph.

58,535. You are empowered by Mr. Cooke to speak with regard to this case?—I am Mr. Cooke's head agent.

58,536. May I ask, Major Birch, whether Mr. Cooke is a large landowner?—Yes, my Lord, he is a large landowner.

58,537. What is the size of his property about. We do not know it exactly?—I will tell it you directly. I want to be exact. I shall give other evidence before you, before the Commission is over. His estate is nearly 4,000 acres, 3,700 acres odd.

58,538. We will keep to this rebutting evidence, if you please. You will give us your other evidence at Denbigh I believe?—Yes, at Denbigh.

58,539. We will keep now to this case of the common. What do you wish to say upon that? In the first place we do not claim any of this land as lord of the manor, we claim as the owner. I put it in a case that was decided in 1875, it was a test case in which the ownership of the land was proved to belong to Mr. Cooke. I also say that we received rents for this land (we have the rentals since the year 1760) and that those rents have always been varied. I will tell you the general custom of the estate to begin with. No doubt many of these houses were built by the occupants; they had their houses at a nominal rent for many years, so that no hardship could be done to them, and so that they could reap the benefit of what they had done. After that they were put up at certain rents, but very much below their real value, or their rateable value. One rule that Mr. Cooke has on his estate is that they shall not sublet. I will take the first case of John Lewis.

58,540. Do you mean Thomas Lewis?—I think John Lewis was the old tenant.

58,541. No, John was the son?—Yes, I be your pardon, John was the son.

31 August 1894.]

Major BIRCH.

58,542. John lived in Durham and was very poor?—John lived in Durham, I did not know he was very poor. I never heard that. At all events he wanted the place. I said you shall have the place, most decidedly. We make a rule that these holdings always descend from father to son, and if we cannot get a son we get as near a relation as possible, but always with a slightly increased rent. I also said: "There is one condition: you are a collier, you can get work here, and if you have the house you must reside in it; because we do not allow you to sublet." He refused these conditions. He never asked for any offer of compensation, but went away. That was the case, and that is all I have to say upon it.

58,543. Does the bailiff's daughter live there now?—The bailiff's daughter does, I believe, but the bailiff's daughter living there had nothing to do with the case.

58,544. It is only to test the evidence that I put it to you, because that is the same word for word as what the reverend gentleman said, I think?—Yes. As to the Fox case; Fox had two houses—Minshull or Fox—you can take it as Minshull. I said to him give up one, and you can have the other. That is my explanation of that case.

58,545. In that case were there two cottages?—There were two cottages, and he sublet one.

58,546. He built two cottages?—Yes.

58,547. He did not build one cottage, but two cottages?—Yes.

58,548. And sublet one to his daughter?—Yes.

58,549. She sublet it again, is that so?—Yes, that is so.

58,550. Then it was taken from her, and the bailiff's daughter lives there now. Is that so?—Yes. I believe it is so.

58,551. Then Mr. Lamb's case?—Mr. Lamb's case is long before my time, but my explanation is that it would follow this case which took place in 1875 at the Mold Assizes when no doubt—I am only speaking on supposition—the agent asked them to sign an agreement. This case I will put in.

[The witness handed in the following document]:—

"EJECTMENT ON BUCKLEY MOUNTAIN.

"Tried at MOLD ASSIZES, March 25th, 1875.

"Cooke v. Sharratt and Beavan.

"Mr. Morgan Lloyd, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Swetenham, and Mr. Coxan for plaintiff; and Mr. Wynne Ffoulkes and Mr. Ignatius Williams for the defendants. It appears from the opening statement of Mr. Lloyd, that the plaintiff, P. B. Davies Cooke, Esq., is lord of the manor of Ewloe, where the land in question is situated. Many years ago there was a good deal of waste land in the township, which, time after time was enclosed by several individuals who built upon portions of it, and paid small sums in acknowledgement of the ownership to Mr. Cooke, his representatives and predecessors. In this case the portion of land in question, which in the books was known as the pottery near the marl pit, was enclosed by a man named Wilcox, who died in or about the year 1840, and was succeeded by his brother-in-law, John Griffiths, who married his sister. John Griffiths, as well as Wilcox, paid ground rents of five shillings a year, and Mr. Lloyd produced a receipt for that amount paid in 1838. John Griffiths died in 1865, and the rents were paid by his representatives until about two years ago, when the defendant Beavan brought an action for the possession of the two fields known as the Cross Fields from those representatives. He won the action, and in the holding of those representatives was the pottery in question with the defendant Sharratt as sub-tenant. The defendants held that the pottery was part and parcel of the freehold, while he (Mr. Lloyd) would show it had nothing whatever to with it, and belonged to the plaintiff in this action as lord of the manor. The plaintiff had allowed the nominal rents for many years until the tenants had been fairly recompensed for any expenditure they might have incurred. Of late years these rents had been raised all over the estate; and made compatible with the value of the property. All the tenants had submitted to this renewal, either by arrangement, or by means of legal proceedings, except the defendant, who disputed the plaintiff's right to the property; and the action was brought to try the question. He called Mr. T. W. Bowdage, local agent of the plaintiff, who was examined by Mr. Swetenham. He produced a map of the township of Ewloe, and a book purporting to be the 'chief and 'encroachment rent book,' dated 1832, in which the plot in question was included under the head of 'encroachments,' and the rent accounted for. The book was in the handwriting of a person named William Williams, since deceased; the witness also produced similar books, dated 1833-34-35-36-37-38-40-41, and subsequent years. Mr. Bowdage said that five shillings per annum would be very near the present value of the land were the pottery not upon it, and from 1860 to 1865 he received the rent from the late Mr. John Griffiths, and he produced a receipt given by him to John Griffiths on the 29th October 1861. He also produced receipts for the years 1862, 1863, 1864, and 1865. The witness also produced a notice to quit served on Sharratt on the premises on the 11th March 1873. A copy of the same notice was served on Beavan on the 18th March 1873.

"For the defence it was contended that the plaintiffs had not identified the piece of property in question, and the same rent having been paid since 1809, proved that it was in the nature of a quit rent, and not one for encroachment.

"In his summing up the learned judge said there would have been much force in the defence had the rent not been receipted for, and acknowledged as an encroachment rent. He put it to the jury to decide, and they returned a verdict for the plaintiff, which was entered accordingly, without costs of special jury."

Then as to John Taylor—

58,552. Before we go to Taylor, Lamb's rent was 6s. a year. Is that right?—I think not.

58,553. Then in 1877 he was asked to sign a paper. Is that true?—That would be so, I should say.

58,554. He refused to sign it?—Of course I am speaking now not of my own knowledge.

58,555. But it is pretty well known, I should think?—I should think he did.

58,556. He refused to sign the paper?—I do not know anything about the case.

58,557. Anyhow he was ejected?—He is living in the same house now.

58,558. Never mind that. He was ejected with his wife and 10 children?—I cannot say anything about that.

58,559. You do not know about that?—No, I never heard of it before.

58,560. Does he pay 3*l.* a year now?—He does.

58,561. So that there is no difference between you there, except that you do not know whether he was turned out with his wife and 10 children; that is the only thing?—I do not think it is likely.

58,562. You do not say it did not take place?—Oh, no, I cannot.

58,563. But he paid 6s., and then his rent went up to 3*l.*, is that it?—I do not know about his paying the 6s., it was before my time, I cannot say. I can produce the rentals if you like.

58,564. Perhaps when you come to your evidence in chief you might go into it?—Yes. I can bring them.

58,565. Perhaps it would be as well. Then with regard to John Taylor?—John Taylor succeeded his brother, and he never objected to the rent in any way whatever. He does not pay 19*l.* 10s. He only pays 14*l.*

58,566. They never said he paid 19*l.* 10s., but he paid at the rate of 19*l.* odd plus the rates?—But that meant the full rent. Did not that mean the rent?

58,567. No, what I understood the witness to say was that he was charged for a piece of common and a building which the squire did not put up, but which was put up by the reverend gentleman, the last witness?—Yes.

58,568. The rent is charged now at the rate of 19*l.* odd, plus the rates?—No. We only get 14*l.*

58,569. How big is the holding?—It was the same holding.

58,570. But how big is the holding, is it an acre of land?—I will tell you. It is 3 acres and 29 perches.

58,571. Mr. Taylor's holding?—Yes, Mr. Taylor's holding. He pays 14*l.* for it, and the rateable value is 34*l.* 10s., not the gross, but the rateable value.

58,572. I suppose that is what the witness meant—that the rateable value is now 3*l.* odd an acre?—I do not know what he meant.

58,573. That is a mistake, he is wrong about that?—He pays us 14*l.* per annum, but of course he pays Mr. James Davies in addition to that. That I do not know anything about.

58,574. He says he paid him 10 guineas, I think?—But he is rated at 34*l.* 10s., so I maintain that his rent is not very exorbitant.

58,575. Mr. John Taylor is rated at 34*l.* 10s.?—Yes.

58,576. And pays how much?—He pays 14*l.* per annum.

58,577. I have only one further question to ask you from the chair. Do you consider it is a good plan to allow people to build on your property?—Not without some arrangement.

58,578. And to allow them to go on for a good many years. Do you not think it is a system that is likely to create friction?—I do.

58,579. You think it is a bad system?—I do.

58,580. It is not a system which is carried on now, is it?—No, certainly not.

58,581. This is a thing of the past?—It is a thing of the past.

58,582. It is not permitted by the rules of the estate now?—Oh, no. If anybody wished to build now there would be a distinct arrangement and understanding made.

58,583. So that it could not happen now?—It could not happen now. We have no applications for buildings.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,584. Can you tell us whether Mr. Cooke allowed all these houses to be built as lord of the manor or as owner?—They were built, most of them, before Mr. Davies Cooke's time.

58,585. But was it the lord of the manor who allowed it then, or how was it done?—I have no knowledge of that at all. We do not claim as lord of the manor. We claim simply as the landlord.

58,586. I quite understand that, but I wanted to know when the houses were built were they allowed to be built by the lord of the manor or by the owner?—I cannot tell you. But what we claim is as landlord and we claim the right of doing anything we like with the rents. We have never done anything unjust yet and we shall not do anything unjust in the future, and if the rateable value of the whole of this property is examined you will find that they are about 1-8th or 1-9th below the rateable value of the rent they pay and in some cases even the rents do not pay the rates.

58,587. But is it not the question who brought them to that rateable value?—Well, it was brought by the hand of the law in the case I have handed in.

Mr. Grove.

58,588. The last witness said that in 1865 Thomas Lewis, the father of John Lewis, built the cottage and cultivated the garden?—Of course if you saw the cultivation of Buckley Mountain you would see it is not of a very high class.

58,589. That may be, but still, such as it is can you give any reason why that act of trespass should be allowed at that time?—I can give no reason.

58,590. Was it because there was an uncertainty as to the ownership at that time which had to be decided by law?—I cannot possibly say. It is impossible for me to say. I became head agent for the estate in 1882 and I know of nothing that took place previously. I am perfectly willing to be responsible for everything that has taken place since.

58,591. When you spoke about John Lewis, the collier, and your conversation with him, your words were that he asked for no compensation?—Yes.

58,592. Would you have given him compensation?—If he could have proved a right I should have certainly given it to him, and Mr. Cooke would have insisted on my giving it to him whether I wished it or not.

Sir John Llewelyn.

58,593. I suppose there is no such thing as a Court Leet in existence at present?—There is a Court Leet.

58,594. Is there a Court Leet still?—Yes.

58,595. What is the Court Leet sitting for?—They sit to have a very good dinner.

58,596. But does not the Court Leet presuppose a manor of some kind?—It presupposes a manor. The steward of the manor was here this morning. I do not know whether he is here now. I cannot tell you about it, because it is not my department. I know they assemble and a jury is sworn, but no presentment is ever made to them, they immediately adjourn to a dinner and that finishes the day, and the dinner and the steward are paid by Mr. Cooke.

58,597. We do not know anything about Court Leets existing with regard to private property; they are connected with manors?—Yes, I am aware of it.

58,598. Does not that give a very good ground to these people to think that there are some manorial rights there?—It may, but the case was tried at the assizes here, and it was decided very distinctly that we were in actual possession and could do what we liked with it.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

58,599. Have you the judgment of the court?—I have. It is there.

58,600. It has been handed in?—It has been handed in. That is a copy of the case.

58,601. The question has been decided by a court of law?—It has been decided by a court of law.

58,602. In respect of these particular properties?—Yes. In respect of these particular properties.

Mr. Grove.

58,603. I understand Mr. Cooke still pays for a dinner for this Court Leet every year?—He does.

58,604. It is very generous of him?—Of course, if you think it ought to be discontinued we must discontinue it.

58,605. You see I am not on the jury?—It is a very good dinner.

Chairman.

58,606. There are two or three questions which I have to ask you, handed in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones—"Whether Mr. Cooke claims "as lord of the manor, or as owner of the freehold, do you think it just that he should "practically confiscate the squatter's improvements and buildings?"—We do not do it.

58,607. No, but do you think it just that these improvements should be confiscated?—The improvements were made and they were at a nominal rent for many years, and then the rents were raised.

58,608. Then you approve of the plan?—I see no injustice in it.

58,609. You see no injustice in the confiscation of the squatter's buildings and improvements?—Well, it is a very hard term to call it "confiscation," I think.

58,610. The resumption—call it what you please?—I know Mr. Cooke so well that I am perfectly certain that if there was a legal claim he does not want to rob them of one penny.

58,611. This is the question, and I must keep you to the question; it is not my question; it is: "Do you think it just that he should practically "confiscate the squatter's improvements and "buildings?"—I do not think I can answer that question.

58,612. You would rather not answer that question. Then the second question of Mr. Llewellyn Jones is—"In the case of persons "occupying this land, has notice been always "given of Mr. Cooke's claim to the freehold?"—They signed the ordinary agreement, every one—the ordinary cottage agreement.

58,613. Then notice has always been given of Mr. Cooke's claim to the freehold?—No doubt about it. Of course I speak entirely of my own time.

58,614. "Has a chief rent for any of these "cottages ever been fixed by a Court Leet?"—Not to my knowledge.

31 August 1894.]

Major BIRCH.

Chairman—continued.

58,615. "Is the report you handed in an accurate report?"—I believe so.

58,616. "How is this land described in the report of the case which was tried at Mold assizes?"—This was a test case.

58,617. Yes, a test case?—And it was the case of a pottery.

58,618. How is it described?—I do not know.

58,619. It would appear from the opening statement of Mr. Morgan Lloyd "that the plaintiff, P. B. Davies Cooke, Esq., is lord of the manor Ewloe, where the land in question is situated. Many years ago there was a great deal of waste land in the township which time after time was enclosed by several individuals." There he is described as lord of the manor and the land is described as waste land?—Yes.

58,620. There is not a word about freehold land there or about freeholder, is there?—No.

58,621. In this report that you have handed in which you say is an accurate report the land is described as waste land and P. B. Davies Cooke, Esq., is described as lord of the manor and not as freeholder?—Yes. He owns the minerals.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,622. Do you know whether this land was ever enfranchised?—I do not know.

58,623. If it had been it would be freehold of course?—Yes.

Chairman.

58,624. The following question is handed in by Mr. Owen Wynne—"Do you consider it right for anyone to enclose land and build on it if he has no title to it, whether it is manorial or otherwise?"—Certainly not.

58,625. Then I will put the following question from the chair: Though this is not considered right it was winked at or tacitly acknowledged in the old days?—It may have been. The buildings are there.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN DUNN, called and examined.

Chairman.

58,626. You live at Oaks Farm, Buckley?—I do.

58,627. Are you a tenant farmer?—Yes.

58,628. Under whom?—Under Mr. Cooke.

58,629. You farm 136 acres of land?—I do.

58,630. Can you tell us what the rent is, or do you object to tell us what the rent is?—It is just 1*l.* an acre as near as possible.

58,631. About 130*l.* a year?—Yes.

58,632. What do you desire to tell the Commission?—I am ready to answer any question that you have to put.

58,633. I think there is a great deal with which you agree in what we have already heard to-day?—Yes.

58,634. With regard to agreements being most common and with regard to the date of entry I should like to ask you do you not think tenants are as safe under agreements as under leases?—I prefer an agreement at the present time.

58,635. You prefer an annual tenancy?—I prefer an annual tenancy under present circumstances.

58,636. Upon that I should like to ask you do you consider farming prosperous at the present time?—I do not.

58,637. Tenant farmers have some difficulty in making a living?—They have.

58,638. Do you consider the rents too high generally or not?—No, I do not consider them extra high. I cannot say that they are. The landlords have met us very well; our landlord has, and I think they have in the neighbourhood.

Chairman—continued.

58,639. And you can live at the present rents?—We can manage to live; we have to tear on pretty hard too.

58,640. But you can just manage to scrape on?—Yes.

58,641. You can get a copy of your agreement, I suppose?—I have one.

58,642. Is there anything you object to in your agreement?—Not in the least or else I would not have signed it at the time I took the farm.

58,643. The usual rent of land in your district is from 1*l.* to 1*l.* 10*s.* per acre?—Thereabouts.

58,644. Have you had any permanent reduction?—Yes, I had a permanent reduction in 1888.

58,645. Was that 10 per cent.?—Yes, it was just 10 per cent., and I have had 10 per cent. abatement since.

58,646. That has gone on ever since?—Yes, ever since.

58,647. Then there were abatements in 1893 and 1894?—Yes.

58,648. That is to say 14*l.* for each year?—Yes.

58,649. We have heard a great deal about the local rates and we have been told that they have decreased. What is your opinion?—They have been increased.

58,650. How much do you think they have been increased?—Well, with me nearly double.

58,651. Does the landlord pay this increased rate?—No; I pay that.

31 August 1894.]

Mr. J. DUNN.

Chairman—continued.

58,652. Do you ever sublet any part of your holding?—None whatever.

58,653. Do you pay the rent when it is due, or do you get some time?—We generally have three or four months' grace.

58,654. As regards labourers, can you get good labourers in your district?—We are rather deficient in good labourers. Common labourers are pretty plentiful, but good farm labourers are rather scarce.

58,655. You mean the old-fashioned stamp?—Yes, the old-fashioned stamp; good thatchers, hedgers, and ditchers, and so forth.

58,656. I suppose there is not so much arable land in the district as there was?—Not so much.

58,657. More grass?—More grass and green crops.

58,658. Do you do much dairying?—I keep about a dozen cows.

58,659. What do you principally keep?—Sheep.

58,660. Do you do much improvements yourself on the farm as regards buildings?—No, I do not do any of them.

58,661. The landlord does them?—The landlord.

58,662. How long have you been on your holding?—I have been under the squire about 30 years, or rather over; but I have not had a farm above 26 or 27 years.

58,663. Do you consider you have improved the farm during those 26 years? Is it worth more money now than it was when you took it?—No; I cannot say that it is. I do not think it has gone any worse.

58,664. You have expended a lot of care on it?—I have.

58,665. And a good deal of money on it?—Yes, a good deal of money. No doubt I have improved it in some ways.

58,666. Do you know any freeholders in your district?—Yes; I know a few.

58,667. Men that own their own farms and farm them themselves?—Yes.

58,668. What would you say with regard to them? Are they better off than a tenant farmer, or are they worse off?—I know some that say they are freeholders, but whether they are or not I cannot say. There might be a mortgage on them.

58,669. They do not pay any rent; they may have raised money on it, but they have not paid any rent?—Yes.

58,670. You consider those men are better off than you are?—I do not see that they are getting on much better than ourselves.

58,671. They are hampered by the money they have borrowed upon the farm?—I expect that is it.

58,672. In our yown instance, so far as you are personally concerned, do you think there is any necessity for a Land Court, or for any arbitration?—I do not agree with it myself. I will tell you the reason why I think this. If we cannot agree with our agent or landlord I do not think it is any use for another party to come in. There have been four agents there since I have been tenant, and I have never had a disagreeable word with any one of them. Anything I have asked them in reason they have done for me—every one. I have asked in reason. I do not think I have asked anything out of reason.

58,673. You think that on a good estate with a fair and practical agent?—Yes, a practical agent.

58,674. There is no need for any third person to interfere?—I think not myself.

58,675. Would you go so far as to say that where things are not very comfortable there is no need to interfere?—Well, if things are not very comfortable of course perhaps it would be better, but in our case, where we have got a practical agent, and so on, I think we are doing better as we are.

58,676. But you do not go so far as to say that a land court would not be useful in some cases?—I do not think it would.

58,677. You think it would not be useful?—I do not think it would be useful, speaking candidly.

58,678. What do you consider to be the cause of the present depression?—I think foreign competition; I put it down to that as much as to anything. When I took the farm first they were selling wheat about 8s. or 9s. per measure; now it is 3s. 6d., so that we have no chance of wheat growing here.

58,679. Have you ever thought of any plan by which the agricultural depression could be got over in any way, or of any plan that might bring any improvement to tenant farmers?—I cannot see it. We have been looking forward for better times a long time now.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,680. How would you propose to settle matters between landlords and their tenants when they cannot agree. We had a case here just now where the tenant was obliged to leave his farm because the landlord would not reduce his rent?—Yes.

58,681. How would you propose to settle that question. I do not refer to your case; you seem to be in pretty favourable circumstances under your landlord; but there are cases that will turn up, and how do you propose to have them settled?—Well, by arbitration, I should say.

58,682. In which way?—Providing the landlord would agree to arbitration and the tenant the same, get two competent and practical men in and settle it in that way.

Mr. Grove.

58,683. You say the local rates are nearly double?—Yes.

58,684. Can you give just in a word or two the reason why?—Well, the population has increased in our neighbourhood a good deal, and there are a good deal more poor on the parish, that is one reason; and then of course we have got a highway now, which has added to them, they make a largish amount.

58,685. Are there any pits or works that have stopped lately in your district?—Yes, there are some.

58,686. That would make a difference?—Yes, that would make a difference again.

58,687. And less rateable value?—And less rateable value.

58,688. Your reductions in rent have been permanent?—My reductions in rent have been permanent.

58,689. Therefore your assessment on these rates have been lower?—The assessment follows the abatement.

58,690. So that you have the full benefit of it?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. RICHARD VENABLES KYRKE called and examined.

Chairman.

58,693. Are you the owner of land in this neighbourhood?—I do not own much now, but I have been, and part of it I have sold to my son; I have been until recently, and I have some still.

58,694. Where do you live?—Penywn, Mold.

58,695. You know the neighbourhood very intimately?—Perfectly well, I have also been agent for about 1,000 acres in the neighbourhood, and I know almost every field in the district, that is, if you will allow me I will define the district—about six or seven miles north of Wrexham, partly in Denbighshire and partly in Flintshire, lying to the west of the Mold and Wrexham road.

58,696. Was it some years back that you were agent?—I am still agent to some extent.

58,697. Quite so. You have known the district for 50 years and are well acquainted with it?—Yes.

58,698. You know it really thoroughly?—Yes.

58,699. Is there anything that you wish particularly to bring before the Commission. We have had a great deal of general information from previous witnesses?—I am aware of that.

58,700. You have heard the kind of evidence that has been given to day, and I do not propose to ask you to go through that again?—No.

58,701. Anything you can tell us that will be of interest we shall be glad to hear?—I will deal with the different matters as shortly as possible. With regard to enclosures: no enclosures have been made in this neighbourhood (that is in the district I have mentioned and not exactly this Mold district) by Act of Parliament for many years, but the colliers and others 40 or

Mr. Grove—continued.

58,691. You think that these freeholders who have bought their own farms have no advantage; do you not think it is an advantage for a man to feel that it is his own, that he has got security of tenure?—I know one case for instance, in the neighbourhood, where the farmer bought a little farm, and I believe the interest which he has to pay on the capital is more than what his rent was before. I cannot see any advantage there.

58,692. No, there would not be an advantage if you look at the rent by itself, of course. There would be no advantage there. But still a landlord may die and the property may come into the market for sale, and the tenants may have notice to quit; how would it be then?—I suppose they would have to take their chance. I do not know how it would be.

Chairman—continued.

50 years ago, seized upon Crown wastes in defiance of the freeholders who had rights of pasturage. These squatters erected cottages and improved the land, and then the Crown claimed their holdings and sold them to the squatters at 7 years' purchase of the land, and 3½ years for holdings. The effect is that they are now freeholders of their houses and plots of ground from one-fourth of an acre to three acres. Then the next question is; "were recreation grounds or allotments for the use of the labouring poor apportioned?" The squatters seized the whole. Then there is no land adapted for profitable cultivation. The freeholders have rights of sheep runs, subject to no payment. These runs, go generally with the farms, but are sometimes let to independent tenants. Farms with sheep runs are of course worth more on account of them. There are no large estates in the districts which I speak of. There is no difference on account of language, politics, or religion. The term of entry and so on is what you have already heard. Leases are never asked for, tenants are better off without them, as abatements are made to yearly tenants in bad times. The next question is with regard to changes in tenancy. There are more changes in consequence of bad times. Some tenants take more land than they have proper capital for. Then in bad times, they run the land out and leave it. Then I am asked, "Have any cases of hardships arisen?" I am not aware of any to the tenants, but it is a hardship to the landlords to have the land left worn out and dirty. Tenants would always be compensated as a matter of course, in resuming the occupation of land for planting and so on. Agreements provide for compensation for damage done in timber cutting and compensation for brickfields or anything of that kind. Then I am asked "Are penalising clauses common, and are they often enforced?" They are never enforced that I know of at all. Tenants are given a copy of the agreements. Rents vary very much according to the quality of the land.

58,702. They vary very much. Could you tell us something about that. What is the highest rent?—I should say that in the district I am speaking of it is probably about 30s. an acre.

58,703. There is nothing of 3*l.*, 4*l.*, or 5*l.* an acre?—Not unless they are small holdings.

58,704. Or accommodation land?—Or accommodation land, I do not know of any.

58,705. But they are from 1*l.* to 30s. an acre you say?—Yes, I think so.

58,706. That is what we have been told before, we have been told generally that they are about 1*l.* to 30s. all round?—I would say less than 1*l.* for uplands, 15s. probably.

58,707. 15s. to 30s.?—15s. to 30s. I should say. The rent is usually fixed at a gross sum, generally by agreement. I think the rents of land are fairly uniform. The cost of buildings in the case of smaller tenantry is larger in proportion and there is not so much demand for large farms. There are no services except carriage of materials for repairs, which is done at convenient times by the tenants and is never complained of, the tenants getting the benefit of the repairs and alterations, and the landlords bearing the rest of the cost. I may remark upon that that I have never had a case of complaint at all; they are always too glad to do it, and moreover it costs them nothing to do it. They do it with their own teams and at their own time, whereas if the landlord had to do it he would have to hire a team at the rate usual in the country and probably would be overcharged as he would not have anyone on the spot to look after it the same as the tenants do, so that I think there is no hardship in that. Land is never let to the highest bidder. Many tenants want more land than they have capital to cultivate properly. I have never known arbitration to be resorted to. Rents are generally lower than they were 20 or 30 years ago. I can prove that if necessary.

58,708. I suppose rents have come down here like everywhere else?—Yes, they are very much down. With regard to permanent reductions there are both permanent reductions and temporary abatements of rent up to 20 per cent. Changes in rent I should say depend upon seasons and prices a good deal, at the time at which farms are let. I cannot say what the chief fluctuations in prices are. I have not followed the statistics sufficiently. Rents due the 2nd of February are collected at the end of April, in May, June, and July, on different estates. Then I am asked "What effect has the preferential claim for rent on the position of tenants generally?" Many tenants are able to tide over bad times owing to the landlord not pressing for his rent, feeling secure of it. Were the preferential claim to be abolished, and the landlord put on a level with an ordinary creditor he could not do this. The abolition of the law of distress would be very disastrous to many tenants. There is no doubt that it is a great benefit to the tenant. I have often been told by tenants that the postponement of the rent day for a month or two was as good as a reduction of rent, inasmuch as it gave them a better chance of disposing of their stock. Owing to his having security for the rent a landlord is enabled to give time to his tenantry, which time is indeed money to them. It is not fair that a landlord should be placed on a level with other creditors. He is compelled to give credit to his tenant, unless he exacts his rent beforehand, or insists upon security. He cannot ascertain the financial position of his tenants, whereas a tradesman can always satisfy himself as to whether rent is due, if he thinks proper, before giving credit. Moreover, the tradesman can only lose the value of his goods, whereas the landlord not only risks his rent, but has to pay a preferential charge (tithe) out of his own pocket. As the interest of the tenant is naturally that of his creditors, if the power of giving the tenant time to make the best of his stock and produce be taken away it would be rather an injury than a benefit to the creditors. With regard to the charge on land, they are as you have heard. With regard to the rates, the School Board and Sanitary rates have increased, the School Board very much indeed. I think money spent by Elective Boards is more freely spent than when spent by, we will say, the National Schools. They do not spend nearly the money that the School Boards do. With regard to the average size of farms in my district I should say they are small generally, and under 100 acres. I have not known holdings consolidated. There is no sub-letting. I consider large holdings are better farmed. The nature of cultivation pursued is mixed—arable and pasture. Farm labourers are very scarce. Boys in the colliery districts get higher wages and have shorter hours than farm labourers. I think that most of the land would produce much more if better farmed. Then "To what extent has waste land been reclaimed?" I say not at all. There is no waste land which is capable of profitable reclamation. There is some draining required. There is more pasture land owing to low prices of corn and scarcity of labour. As to root crops, there is a decrease of arable cultivation generally. There is no fallowing. The effect of the changes has been less gross returns, less employment for labourers, less custom to tradesmen, such as seedsmen, agricultural implement makers, blacksmiths, saddlers, etc. The improvements made by the landlords are building, draining, repairs, and gates, &c. The improvements made by the tenants are none, speaking generally. I have known some improvements made by Englishmen, but I am bound to say that the worst tenants I have met with were Englishmen. The Agricultural Holdings Act is frequently contracted out of in agreements, but in the case of a claim I do not think the clauses would be acted upon. Agreements conform to the custom of the country generally. The outgoing tenant gets half the wheat crop, and clover seeds are paid for. With regard to haulage and cultivation, there is no payment for tillage except by agreement, because there is no tillage done by the tenant before he leaves. The manure and produce remain at the expiration of the tenancy according to agreement, and if there is no agreement the manure and produce go off. I never heard of a tenant paying for bad cultivation or dilapidations, except in one instance. Then "Have many (or any) cases occurred in your district where an outgoing tenant has failed to obtain sufficient compensation for his 'improvements'?" None that I know of. I know of no instance where compensation has been given for the general improved condition of a holding. With regard to any right being recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose of their interest in their holdings, there is no such right recognised. Their interests are not due to any outlay of theirs. As to the Agricultural Holdings Act there is no case in this neighbourhood, tenants not usually making any outlay to entitle them to the benefit of the Act. I have frequently cautioned them to keep an account of any lime they may use, but very little is consumed. Game is preserved on some estates. The tenants are very ready to avail themselves of the Ground Game Act. I consider winged game does little or no harm. Ground game has almost disappeared. There is no obligation upon the tenants to beat covers. Many are very glad to come. The relations between landlords and tenants are likely to be much better when the landlord is induced for the sake of sport to visit the estate. He is thereby made acquainted with it, with his tenants and their families, and with their wants, in a way that he might not otherwise be. Field sports are a great inducement to a landlord to reside upon his property. The public are able to purchase game at a reasonable rate, whereas if game were not preserved, it would be exterminated. The Crown lessees exercise sporting rights over Crown lands and commons. Many of the labourers are in benefit societies. There is no combination at all among landlords, farmers, or labourers, that I know of. As to tenant farmers that have bought their holdings I know of three. One has recently sold his farm and another has tried to do so. Some holdings of a few acres have been bought. I think with regard to the present condition of such freeholders they would be glad to be yearly tenants. On small farms the tenant farmers do the chief part of work, and their wives assist them. The children in some cases work at home. I do not know their private arrangements as to wages. I consider children at home, who are boarded and clothed by their parents, do not cost much less than indoor hired labour, even if they get no wages. On small farms there is very little hired labour. A labourer's wages are 16s. to 18s. per week, the wages of a good farm labourer 50 years ago were 9s. to 10s. a week. I think I may say 10s., I have referred this morning, and I find it is 10s. that I paid myself when I began 50 years ago. The wages have gradually improved to almost double. Cottages are very much better than they were formerly. There are some old ones that might be improved. There are generally gardens attached to the cottages. With regard to the question of whether there has been any considerable migration of farmers or labourers from the district within the last 50 years, I should say that the collieries and other works attract the young men. Then I am asked "What remedies do you suggest for improving the profits from land?" First of all I suggest better farming. I would say that I have made a kind of a list of what I consider are the defects in the farming of the district that I speak of. Of course I do not mean that to apply to all tenants; there are some good and some bad, but I mean to say, going over the district generally which I am speaking of, I am sure you would find a good many of what I call defects; in the first place over-stocking. That has been very patent this last year, because they rear stock up to the maximum produce of the land. Consequently in a bad year like this, they have to buy fodder and then they are behindhand with their money, and very often behindhand with their rents and so on, and their excuse is that they have been obliged to buy so much fodder. There is another thing, too shallow ploughing. It is ridiculous to see the way that many of them skim the land, and I have often told them that they would never dig their gardens to such a shallow depth. I have practised it myself; I have always double ploughed the land and got very much greater produce from it. The next thing is not cleaning the land. They do not clean it properly. Another thing is, they do not use lime. Lime is a very bad thing when it is too much used, but it is a very good thing when it is moderately used. The farmers in my district are able to get a large cartload of very good agricultural lime, as much as they choose to put on a cart, for 2s. a load, as much as they can put on. The reason is that the chief demand for lime at the lime kilns is for chemical purposes, and it has all to be hand-picked, and all the small is thrown over the bank and it is ready for spreading, and it is just as good lime for agricultural purposes, as if they paid the highest price for it; but they will not take advantage of it. I think they also have sometimes used poor artificial manures. There is another great fault, and that is under-bred stock. Many of the farmers, of course, I do not mean my remarks to apply to all, because a great many know better, but I mean to say there are a great many in my district, who are subject to what I say. I think they do not care what sort of an animal they get for sires, so long as it is cheap, and they would not pay a trifle more for the best animal in the country. As Colonel Howard said, I have seen entire horses travelling in the country that ought to be shot. The consequence is that in a bad year like this the farmers cannot dispose of their under-bred stock at all. Nobody will buy those, but I have never known the time when a good beast would not fetch a fair price. That is the way they rear these wretched things, and they are not worth

31 August 1894.]

Mr. R. V. KYRKE.

feeding or rearing at all. I say also that there is carelessness about seed. I do not think some take much pains about getting the very best seed. I have myself seen a farmer sowing oats out of a hopper mixed with charlock seeds. I hope they do better now, but I have seen that myself. They leave the head lands unploughed and there are weeds the following year, and weeds up and down the hedges are very often allowed, thistles and all those kind of things. Then there is a want of care with regard to implements. I have seen ploughs and things left out in the ditches in the winter instead of their being housed. I have seen a plough put to stop a gap in a fence. There is very inferior butter-making. At least it is very irregular; some make very good butter and some very bad, but they want a great alteration in that. The prices of butter are very superior to what are obtained elsewhere; in this district I believe that this very day a farmer can get 1s. 1d. a pound while the best Irish butter, as I saw when looking at the papers, is I think 85s. a cwt., which works out at about 9d. a pound. That is all to the advantage of the Welsh farmers, particularly in the colliery districts, where they sell their butter to the shops and have a ready market at the best price. Some of it is really very bad. Then they never manure the old pastures. I do not know anybody in the district who manures an old pasture, but they go grazing and grazing, and I believe it would pay them better if they would occasionally manure their old pastures. Then they waste their liquid manure, you see that running away into the ditches. There is another bad thing, if they want to mend a fence they put a lot of boughs into the live fences, and it is like tying a dead man to a living one. It is sure to kill the live fence. With regard to improving the profits from land I should suggest better prices for produce but in the absence of protection these are not to be looked for. Free trade in lead has injured the farmers of Flintshire. The native mines are closed and the farmers no longer get employment in carting the ore to the smelting works, and coals, timber, and other materials to the mines, besides losing good markets for their produce. As to that I remember myself that the farmers have been very prosperous here at times, and I have known a farmer pay his rent entirely by carting from a mine with which I was connected, and he got a great deal more than even his rent. I have seen 600 and 700 tons a month of ore carried from one mine down to the smelting works and of course there was coal going back to the engines, but that is all done away with now on account of the foreign ore being brought here at such a price that our mines cannot compete with them. The consequence is that the population of Flintshire has gone down I think 4,000 or 5,000, between one census and another. I think that is about it, although I am not quite sure of the figures. The relations between landlord and tenant are friendly. I object to a land court on the ground that it will unfavourably affect the relations existing between the landlord and tenant. Instead of mutual good feeling, there will be a tendency to rely upon strict legal rights, which will not be altogether to the advantage of the tenant. Landlords will not readily make improvements, unless they can arrange with their tenants without the intervention of the land court. Then there is a point which I have made a note of and which I think I have not heard mentioned. There is a want of mutuality. If the court fixes a low rent the landlord is bound to let. If the rent is raised the tenant can give it up. If the tenant's improvements are to be considered in fixing the rent, what effect will bad farming and dilapidations have upon it? I believe a Welshman is well able to take care of himself, and quite competent to make a bargain with his landlord. He would not like to be bound by arbitration in his dealings in cattle or produce. Free sale would only benefit the present tenant, and then only in case the land court should be lower than the marketable rent. On the first sale he would require a premium, which would be heightened by competition, as he would sell to the highest bidder. I believe it to be quite incorrect to assume that there is any such system now as letting to the highest bidder, but even if it were so, the landlord would look for a solvent tenant, and one able to keep the property in order; but no such considerations would influence the tenant, and the competitors would be more numerous and the premium higher. This premium would act as an increased rent, and after the first sale the tenant would be more overweighted than at present. With regard to fixity of tenure, the same objection as to want of mutuality applies to this. A landlord is continually bound, while a tenant cannot be. The tenant has the security of the land for the performance of the engagement, but he may become insolvent. Who are to be the land court judges? If local men, they may be suspected of partiality. If from a distance, they may not be acquainted with the local value of the land. If removable, they may be subject to political influence. If not, an incompetent or partial judge may exercise a destructive influence on property. Farms in Wales cannot be valued wholesale, as in some parts of Ireland, where there are large tracts of land of almost uniform quality—and where the improvements are considered to belong to the tenant, in the absence of proof to the contrary. In Wales farms (and often fields) differ from each other in soil, water, buildings, accessibility, elevation, tithe, poor rates, &c., &c., and a field to field valuation is necessary, causing much expense and trouble. I consider that repairs of buildings, new buildings, and permanent improvements, should be done by the landlord. Drainage, buildings &c., executed jointly by landlord and tenant never work well. The landlord gets no return for his outlay and the tenant never considers himself repaid. If by arrangement such works are done by the tenant, they should certainly be repaid, but they get worse in time, and I think the plan of allowing for them in proportion to the time they have existed is a fair one and does away with the necessity of valuing the advantage to the farm. Of course, accurate accounts should be kept and agreed upon when they are made. If the landlord's consent is not required, buildings may be put up which are not necessary for the farm. A tenant once applied to me to erect additional buildings on a farm already well provided with them, on the ground that he had taken additional land (a mile away) from another person. If he could have erected them without consent he would probably have done so, having plenty of means. There would necessarily be expense incurred by the applicants to a land court. If fees are high, decisions will be costly; if low, litigation will be encouraged, and expense thrown upon the public funds. I would mention, if you have no questions to ask me, that I have omitted to say one thing. I have just put down what I consider are the advantages and disadvantages of the farmers at the present time, if you would care to have them.

58,709. Certainly?—I consider the advantages are, first, machinery. I heard some one say now that they did not think machinery lessened the demand for labour, but I can give you a small instance in my own knowledge which occurred the other day; a farmer had two acres of potatoes to raise, and the Irish labourers came round and asked him 7*d.* a rood for raising them. That would come to about 2*l.* 2*s.* per acre. He would not pay it; he had a potato-raiser, and with the aid of his little children and two hired women he raised all those potatoes, I think in a day and a half, and put them into carts, and took them straight off to the railway, and he told me that for the whole amount of labour he had only to pay out of pocket 7*s.* 6*d.*, whereas he would have had to pay 4*l.* 4*s.* for the two acres. I think also there is a convenience in traction engines coming round, so that horses are not required to draw the machines from place to place. Besides that they have self-binders for the threshing machines, which save a great deal of labour, and in many ways I consider that machinery does save a good deal. Then they have hay barns frequently now, and these save a very great deal in thatching. Also rents are lower than they were. Then they have cheap feeding stuffs, and now by means of railways they are able to sell milk. I think the disadvantages are dear labour, lower prices for wheat and barley, higher rates, loss owing to the stoppage of the lead mines, and there is also a loss owing to the introduction of machinery into collieries, lessening the demand for horses, hay, oats, straw, &c. That in some places I know has made a very great difference, introducing endless ropes instead of horses. I think that the following articles are selling fairly, and that with regard to them a farmer ought not to complain very much—pigs, horses, poultry and eggs, butter, wheat-straw, and sheep. I have been asked by Major Warren's agent, who has been too unwell to come here to mention the reason of his absence, and if you would kindly allow me to read his letter I should like to do so. It is very short.

58,710. Yes?—Major Warren's estate, I may explain, is within the district that I speak of, and a property which Mr. Wickham spoke of yesterday belonging to Mrs. Rasbotham is also in the district I speak of. The letter is as follows:—"I have been hors de combat since we met yesterday, with a bad cold, and have failed " to prepare any sort of return re Major Warren's " Hope Estate, and it is doubtful whether I " shall be able to get out of bed to-morrow." Further on he says:—"The acreage of the Hope " property is, I think, about 682 acres, and the " gross rental is 544*l.* Temporary abatements " since 1883, 397*l.* 18*s.* 10*d.*; expended in " buildings, erections, and restorations, 2,188*l.*; " drainage, 1,076*l.*," the total being 3,661*l.* The gross rental during the 11 years from 1893 to 1894 would amount on those figures to 5,984*l.*, and it will be seen that the amounts returned in temporary abatements or expended in different ways would consume two-thirds of it. There is also an outlying property of my son's which I have been looking after for him in the parish of Hope. He has only had it about five years. The rents received have been 2,290*l.* 9*s.* 2*d.*; the allowances made 188*l.* 8*s.* 2*d.*; tithe, &c., 173*l.* 7*s.* 10*d.*; repairs, 586*l.* 19*s.*; making altogether 948*l.* 15*s.*, out of 2,290*l.* odd, being, I think, about 44½ per cent. If you like I will put in an agreement which is in use on the property. [The witness handed in agreement.]

The witness withdrew.

58,711. Where do you live?—I live at Pentrehobyn, close by here.

58,712. Are you a landowner?—I own about 2,500 acres here and in Montgomeryshire, between the two. I was for 18 years the manager of the late Lord Penrhyn's property.

58,713. Which property was that?—The whole of it.

58,714. You were the head agent?—I was, for the late Lord Penrhyn, for 18 years.

that I rather want to give one or two details of information which may be of use to the Commission. What I wish to begin with is the case of the Caerhun enclosure, which the Commissioners may remember was brought before them at the time the Commission sat in Anglesey. I was Lord Penrhyn's agent at the time, and I think I can throw some little light upon the subject. These Caerhun enclosure riots, Mr. T. Ellis, M.P., stated, had been entirely suppressed by the late Lord Penrhyn, as chairman of Quarter Sessions, by using his influence as such in order to carry out his own, that is Lord Penrhyn's, unjust views. In fact, Mr. Ellis' language was much stronger than that, but I will not refer to it. I believe that Mr. Ellis has withdrawn this assertion so far as regards the chairmanship of the Quarter Sessions, but he now says that the late Lord Penrhyn used such influence as Lord Lieutenant of the county. Mr. Ellis, as one of our legislators, should surely know that no Lord Lieutenant has the power to act as he asserts that Lord Penrhyn acted. Mr. Beaver Roberts in his evidence has given a very clear statement on this head, and I endorse all he has said; while I may add that, having had the management of the late Lord Penrhyn's property at the time of the disturbances, one of the principal tenants of the district, who I feel sure was a freeholder also, came to me to complain of the damage the tenants in the district were suffering from, and to ask me to bring his case and other similar ones to the notice of the late Lord Penrhyn as a landlord and a magistrate, for his consideration, with the view of his protecting the farmer's interests. The history of the Caerhun episode is briefly this—In order to put an end to damage done by squatters and trespassers from adjoining parishes, an Enclosure Act was applied for by the principal landowners of Llanbedr and Caerhun parishes, and was granted after properly convened meetings and no objection offered, and allotments were then made and enclosed. These riots or breaches of the peace were brought about some time afterwards by the questionable action of a few tenants who claimed to have been advised that the enclosure was illegal; but so far from this being the case the whole affair connected with the enclosure and allotments was conducted in a perfectly legal manner from beginning to end, and it would hardly have been possible for magistrates, being responsible for law and order, to have acted differently from what the Carnarvonshire magistrates did. I may say that Lord Newborough, a most fair dealing man, was chairman of Quarter Sessions when the orders were made for suppressing the Caerhun disturbances, and that one of the late Liberal members for the county proposed the resolution which was brought forward with the view of carrying out the object. Therefore, to say that Lord Penrhyn acted the part attributed to him by Mr. Ellis is clearly in direct opposition to facts. I know the Chairman does not like strong language, so that out of deference to him I will keep within bounds, but I think it is for the Commission to judge how far it is right for members of Parliament to use such strong adjectives as they sometimes do, particularly in reference to matters with which they are but indifferently conversant. Before closing the Caerhun episode, I may perhaps be permitted to call attention to the great injustice that is done to farmers and other ratepayers, by the way in which the law directs that an extra police rate shall be levied in order to quell disturbances such as that one at Caerhun. It is levied, as the Commissioners are aware, upon the rateable value of the district, so that not only does the wretched farmer or householder suffer loss and injury to his property, but he has to pay for the extra police to quell disturbances for which he is in no way responsible, while the author of the evil, paying no rate, escapes scot free. Perhaps I might recommend to our legislators that for the benefit of farmers and householders, not to mention the cause of justice, a capitation rate should be levied in such cases as that of the Caerhun disturbances, when the evil doer would not, as he now does, escape the penalties that should be attached to rioting. The next case that I have to appeal to the Commissioners about is the evidence of the Rev. Mr. Griffiths.

58,716. Before you go further, I should like to ask you this question. Mr. Ellis said, about these enclosures, that "there must have been practically a unanimous feeling that wrong was being done to the poor and to the peasantry and to the country side by this enclosure. Those who in Lord Penrhyn's eyes were evildoers had evidently the sympathy of the whole country side, for Lord Penrhyn, a very popular landowner, was absolutely unable to get any evidence whatsoever as to the people who pulled down these walls and made the protest against the enclosure"—Yes, this letter is as regards evidence, precisely what I say.

58,717. But I want to know is that the case. Was any evidence obtainable against the people who pulled down these walls?—Well, it was difficult, for the simple reason, that the men who pulled them down would not give evidence against themselves, naturally.

58,718. The late Lord Penrhyn was a popular landowner, I take it?—He was, very.

58,719. But still Mr. Ellis was right in saying that there was a unanimous feeling that wrong was being done to the poor and to the peasantry?—No, I say he was not right, distinctly.

58,720. I do not say that you admit that there was wrong, but there was a feeling in the country that wrong was being done to the poor and to the peasantry?—No, nothing of the sort, because the man I have referred to was one of the principal farmers of the district, and he came to me begging me to intercede with Lord Penrhyn on his behalf and the behalf of others.

58,721. He was one of the principal farmers, that I quite agree, but I am asking whether it is the fact that the general feeling in the neighbourhood was against Lord Penrhyn's action?—No, not the least. Besides, it was not Lord Penrhyn's action. It was the action of the magistrates. That is just the difference of opinion between me and Mr. Ellis.

58,722. Then was the action of the magistrates a popular or an unpopular action?—Oh, decidedly popular; it was the action of law against disorder.

58,723. But was it a popular or an unpopular action in the district?—It depends upon what you call popular or unpopular. It was popular among all the well-doers decidedly, that is to say among the farmers of the better class, but naturally unpopular amongst the men who pulled the fences down.

58,724. But they never could get any evidence as to who pulled them down?—No, for the simple reason, the men who pulled the fences down would not come, and give evidence against themselves.

58,725. But these people who were in negotiation for this common would have said who pulled the fences down?—No, they could not, because the negotiation they were the farmers. Really the enclosure was made for the benefit of the farmers and general community.

58,726. As against the labourers?—No, not at all. As against squatters and those kind of people, not the labourers. The labourers really, I suppose, had nothing to do with it—not the labourers of the farmers, but labourers outside of those they might have done.

58,727. But the squatters and those kind of people were very hostile?—Yes, naturally, because they used to send sheep and all sorts of animals there which they had no business to do. They were trespassers.

58,728. But they were doing what they considered from custom they had a right to do?—No, not at all. They had no business to consider anything of the sort, because of course it is the farmers who really had the right to these enclosures—to the commons. All the farmers bordering upon these commons have the right of common pasture, that is really it, and then a lot of others, quarrymen and all sorts of people that had no right whatever to send sheep there, sent sheep up to these commons, to the detriment of the breed, and not only that, but spreading all sorts of disease with the bad class of sheep they sent up.

58,729. It had become a common practice, I take it?—Yes, it was the result of that practice that led to the Enclosure Commissioners making their award.

58,730. But will you go as far as that? May I take it that the men you describe as "squatters and those kind of people" considered it a hardship that they were suddenly prevented from turning their sheep upon the mountains?—Well, that is rather a hard question, because I do not agree to that at all. What I hold is this: that the men had no business there whatever. If you will grant that; if you will say that the men, having no business there, felt themselves aggrieved, I will go with you there.

58,731. You will go as far as that?—I will go as far as that, if you say that the men had no business there.

58,732. I say nothing?—Well, I would only say that the men, having no business there, were aggrieved naturally that they were not allowed to go there. I will say that.

58,733. I should like to ask this one question: How long had this system been going on?—That I cannot tell you. Application was made to the Enclosure Commissioners in 1854; I am speaking with a certain amount of reservation, but as near as I can tell about 1854. Then the awards were made, and it was not until, I think, some little time after that they began to pull down the fences and create mischief.

58,734. How long had these squatters been in the habit of pasturing their sheep on the mountain?—I cannot tell you. It might have been for years.

58,735. For years and years?—Yes, possibly.

58,736. Then, no doubt, they considered it hard on them to have this enclosure made?—Oh, yes.

58,737. I mean, these men may have considered it a hardship when this enclosure suddenly took place. You would go as far as that?—Well, yes, if you will allow me to add the rider that they had no business to be there. They were men really who had no business there, but, having no business, I will admit that they felt they were aggrieved.

58,738. You do not admit that they had no right there?—No, none whatever. On the contrary, they were actually trespassers.

58,739. Only you admit that for years and years this custom had been indulged in, and nobody had put a stop to it?—Well, without anybody putting a stop to it, but not without protest.

58,740. But no action had been taken for years and years to drive these sheep off the hills?—Well, protest had been made, but no action taken.

58,741. No action taken?—But please, my Lord, add my rider that protest had been made, because that makes all the difference.

58,742. But no action had been taken?—No action had been taken.

58,743. And then there was this manifestation of indignation?—Of ill-feeling against the law taking a very proper course.

58,744. I am only asking what happened. There was a feeling of indignation when this enclosure took place?—Yes, but then you must let me add this, because I am very particular about it. It really was that they were the aggressors and trespassers. They had no business there from the very first, and because the farmers, possibly through indolence or anything else, let these fellows go on, it gave them no earthly right to send their sheep there.

58,745. Still, they were in possession of the mountain when it was enclosed?—They were in possession of the mountain under protest. Well, you can hardly call that in possession.

58,746. At any rate, the sheep were on the mountain?—Yes, quite so, under protest. I only really want to saddle the right horse.

58,747. I am sure that is what every member of the Commission would wish?—Yes, and therefore I wish them to thoroughly understand my views about it. Then I will go on to my next case.

58,748. Yes; I am sorry to have interrupted you?—Not at all. I am here on purpose to be interrupted. The next case I wish to refer to is that of the Rev. Mr. Griffith. In his evidence before the Commission at their meeting in Carnarvon, Mr. Griffith stated, in order to cast odium on the landlords, that the tenants would not give evidence on the land question for fear of the landlords, and that on this account the tenants had a dependent spirit. Now, I happened to be in court, and the real words used by Mr. Griffith were that the tenants were slaves, but I see—it has been pointed out to me since—that Mr. Griffith has altered that, and he has put into his corrected evidence the words I have just read, and that of course is the only thing that I can appeal to, and which the Commissioners can listen to.

58,749. Yes, that is what we go by?—Well, what I heard him say in court influenced me a great deal, of course. Now, I should like to point out to the Rev. Mr. Griffith that we are all more or less dependent upon each other in this world, and that it is very easy to make exaggerated statements with regard to the different relations that one bears to another. But without going further in the matter, and taking up too much of the Commissioners' time, perhaps I may be allowed to ask them to compare the life of the Welsh farmer with that of the ordinary Welsh tradesman, when I think they will agree with me that of the two the lot of the latter is quite as much, if not more, deserving of our sympathy.

58,750. Is this what you refer to at Question 12,315 on page 567, the Rev. Mr. Griffith is being examined by Mr. Griffiths: "Will you kindly tell me what is the reason why the tenant farmers do not come here to-day; it is not harvesting, I should think?—Yes, "I can tell you without any hesitation.—"What is it?—Fear of the landlords and "of their agents."—Yes, that is it. Now I say that the lot of the ordinary Welsh tradesman is quite as much, if not more, deserving of our sympathy than that of the Welsh farmer, and that he is equally, if not more, dependent on his customers as the tenant is upon his landlord, while the "London Gazette" will, I think, show which of the two occupations is financially the more hazardous. The Commissioners must not imagine, because I am making this comparison, that therefore I have not sufficient sympathy with the farmers in their troubles for I have a vast deal of sympathy with them, but when inconsiderate statements are made by biassed people with the view of casting odium upon the landlords it is well that one who knows the inner life of the Welsh people fairly well should come forward and state his views to the Commissioners.

58,751. Does that refer to the statement I have just read?—That refers to that statement of Mr. Griffiths.

58,752. You object to that statement?—Entirely and utterly.

58,753. Then you would not agree with what we heard at Monmouth. Mr. Thomas Pugh, a grocer, told us that the tenants were afraid to come forward?—I do not know Monmouthshire, but I know Carnarvonshire pretty well, and I know this country too pretty well, and also parts of Denbighshire. I say they are not afraid, but we are all to a certain degree dependent on one another, and the tenant farmer is no more a slave to his landlord than the tradesman is to his customers. In fact I am not sure that the latter is not in the greater fear.

58,754. You object to this statement?—Yes.

58,755. And you would not agree with Mr. David Jones, who told us to-day that he thinks the farmers are timid and afraid to come forward?—Indeed I do not.

58,756. That is in this district?—No, I really do not think so.

58,757. You disagree with Mr. Griffith, of Carnarvonshire, and Mr. David Jones, of Flintshire?—Entirely, and for the reasons I have stated, I say that the small landlords in Wales have quite enough to contend with in these days, without having to bear the efforts made by unfair and hostile critics to cast odium upon them and prejudice the tenants against them. But putting aside the opinions of extreme men, even impartial people, in dealing with the land question, seem to lose sight of the fact how much overcrowded we are in the country now, and that the farming interest may be subject, like any other occupation or profession in these days, to very keen competition, and for my part I see no difference between the competition now existing for farms, and that of the lawyer, the doctor, the merchant, and the tradesman, looking out for a good thing. Why I say this is because there has been generally a sort of slur cast upon the landlords in this country, that they try to get all they possibly can out of their tenants, whereas I say it is nothing more than that competition which is existing all over England in every other profession and trade. Perhaps I may be allowed now to refer to the great and unavoidable expenses attending the management of a Welsh property, with the view of showing that however willing the small landowner may be to spend money on improvements and repairs, he is financially sadly crippled by various outgoings, and in these days can do but little. It is hardly necessary for me to point out the great expenditure required to keep in repair the landlord's house and premises, and the different farm houses and buildings on his property; and perhaps I may be permitted to tell the Commissioners that the Welsh tenant as a rule does nothing, except in some instances the hauling, to help his landlord in this respect. Every trifling repair has to be done by the landlord, entailing on a small property of several holdings the necessity of sending a mason, a slater, or a carpenter several miles, perhaps, to do some trifling repair, at, of course, a very considerable cost; and while the tenant complains of the great increase in the price of labour, so the landlord has to complain of the great advance in the price of the wages of the artisan. Thus repairs now cost the landlord a far greater amount than formerly, while a reduced rental makes him less able to bear the burden. Then when cases arise where the landlord has to appeal to the London law courts, his plight is sorry indeed, and he is sometimes half ruined by them. I may perhaps mention a case which happened in my own family, to illustrate the way we landlords are treated in this respect. We wanted to pay off a mortgage of 18,000*l.* in an amicable suit, and the expenses in the London courts were 3,600*l.* Thus a large sum which might have assisted me in improving and repairing my property, went out of the county for the benefit of that insatiable institution in the Strand in London. Another instance I should like to bring forward to the notice of the Commissioners, which affects a neighbourhood in which I am interested, besides being of importance to the landed interests generally, and I think the case I refer to will show how the landlords and tenants have been adversely dealt with where the law is concerned. A railway was, and still is, much needed to two villages in Montgomeryshire for carrying agricultural and mineral produce, and would probably now be an accomplished fact but for the enormous legal expenses attendant upon the obtaining the Act of Parliament. Mr. Savin, the contractor, told me that these expenses were so great that all the subscribed capital was absorbed, and nothing left for the construction of the railway. Now, I will venture to say that there is not a single district in Ireland where light railways have been constructed, I think I am right in saying, out of the taxes of this country, which needed a railway more, if as much, as the district I have named, and yet not a step is taken to help the Welsh landlord and tenant in the matter, but on the contrary impediments are thrown in the way.

58,758. That is on account of the Board of Trade's demands?—No, it was on account of the legal expenses.

58,759. The legal expenses as well?—Yes, the legal expenses attached to it. I do not suppose the Board of Trade had much to do with them.

58,760. You do not think the Board of Trade are to blame?—No, I should not think so. I have not really gone much into the question of the Board of Trade. Of course the safety and the construction of railways is naturally in the hands of the Board of Trade, and they must be excessively particular.

58,761. But what you particularly complain of is the great legal expense?—Yes, it is frightful. Here, the contractor told me himself that it came to 6,000*l.*, and yet in that district which you are going to next week I am sure scores of people will tell you as well as I do, that there is the greatest need of a railway out there. I could, of course, go further into the struggles of the landowner of a small Welsh property. Of course, my Lord, my object in saying all this is this: So much has been said on the part of the tenant that many people have said to me "Why on earth do not you landlords come forward?" I said, "Very well, if you really wish it I will come forward," and that is my object in making these statements.

58,762. Quite so; we are very much obliged to you for doing so?—I could, of course, go further into the struggles of the landowner of a small Welsh property, and the difficulties he has to contend with, but these will probably be dealt with by others; in the meantime I may say that he has the greatest difficulty to keep himself afloat, and to save from sale the lands of his ancestors, which he cherishes in the same way that the tenant cherishes his farm; but unfortunately the landlord, for obvious reasons, cannot enlist the eloquence and sympathy of the Welsh M.P.'s in his favour to bring his troubles to the notice of the public. With regard to landlords' and tenants' agreements, I beg to hand in copies of two which may be of interest to the Commissioners, and which have been executed (handing in documents).

58,763. What are these?—These are tenants' agreements. There is one (handing same). I have a particular object in handing in that. One is A and the other is B. For the agreement marked A, I am responsible, and it will endorse Mr. Owen Wynne's opinion as to the amount of paper on which he could now make an agreement. I do not think he will make out a shorter one than mine. The other is in one particular the composition of the tenant, and represents pretty well the custom of this county. I produce them to show the ideas of a landlord and those of a tenant with regard to agricultural agreements, and I may say that neither was written with the smallest idea of its being produced here. So much has been said as to objectionable agreements being forced on unwilling tenants that it is well the Commissioners should hear another story. If the Commissioners will have the kindness to look at those two agreements, the one marked A is the one I wrote out with the tenant in five minutes, or certainly ten.

58,764. Are these the agreements drawn up by yourself?—That is one I drew up for that particular tenant.

58,765. I think I may as well read it through. This is the one marked A:—"Agreed between Pennant A. Lloyd, the landlord, on the one part, and (blank) on the other part, whereby

"the former agrees to let and the latter agrees to take the farm called (blank), in the parish of (blank) as yearly tenant, according to the provisions of the last Landlord and Tenant Act. The holding to be from year to year, no hay or straw to be sold off the premises. (Blank) to become the tenant from 25th September last past, the rent, one hundred, and payable half-yearly on 25th March and 25th September, the first half year to be payable on the 25th March next. The tithe to be paid to Mr. Lloyd as it becomes due, and Mr. So and So is not to break up any old pasture?"—I will tell you the history of that agreement, but I am rather afraid of taking up too much time. It is rather interesting, just to show how landlord and tenant, if left alone together, can agree. It was a large farm, a very good farm, and had been held for generations by the same people in my family. The man got into trouble by lending money to somebody. My predecessor did all he possibly could to get him to tide over the affair, and he allowed him to take in a partner, which was, of course, a most objectionable thing. In due course the man got still further into trouble, and he came to me upon the rent day at Llanbedr, and said he wanted to give up the farm at once to his partner altogether. I said, "Well, you cannot very well do that now on account of the Agricultural Holdings Act." "Oh," he said, "Mr. Lloyd, if you will draw out an agreement, I am sure it will be all right." "But," I said, "I cannot do that, I cannot be as it were buyer and seller." However, he very much pressed me, so I wrote out an agreement, whereby he agreed to give up the farm. Then I drew up another agreement for the incoming tenant to sign, and he signed it, and that man took up the farm at once, so that it was really to accommodate the two men that I drew it out.

58,766. Then, the other marked B. is headed as follows:—"A yearly holding according to the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act of 1883?"—Yes. Then comes the clause that I object to most strenuously, and I only wish the Commissioners would put an end to it out of Flintshire.

58,767. You object to the clause of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, it is no end of trouble to the tenants themselves, and yet you cannot get the tenants to change it.

58,767. "The tenancy to be from year to year, from 25th September last, subject to twelve months' notice from that day in any year. The land to be given up after such notice on the 30th November, and the house and outbuildings and boosing pasture on 1st May following?"—The boozy pasture they call it here.

58,769. Yes; "on the 1st May following." Why do you object to that?—Because the man should have the house and premises and everything at the time he takes over the land.

58,770. That is of course for the convenience of the outgoing tenant; he might not have anywhere to go?—But how is the incoming tenant to get on? It is very awkward for him.

58,771. I know it is the same custom in England, and it is very awkward sometimes I am aware?—Does it exist in England now? It used to, because that was on account of the thrashing on the barn, but you have no thrashing now, because all the thrashing is done out.

58,772. It is the same anyhow all over my estate, and in some cases, for instance, that of a widow, it is supposed to be convenient?—All I know is that it leads to no end of dispute between the outgoing and incoming tenant here. Now perhaps it may not be out of place here, now that we are upon the question of agreements, to refer to a speech of Mr. T. E. Ellis, M.P., in the House of Commons, in 1892, on the subject of the land question in Wales. Mr. Ellis, in his speech, advocates the payment of what he calls "good will" to the outgoing tenant, upon the assumption that the outgoing tenant has improved his farm to a certain extent. I think I may safely, say from a somewhat extensive knowledge of North Wales and its agricultural population, that for every tenant who would honestly be entitled to anything in the shape of good will on a change of tenancy, there are hundreds that would have no such claim, for the Welsh tenant, as a rule, makes no improvement to his holding.

58,773. May I stop you there for a moment. Do you go so far as to say that a Welsh tenant as a rule does not improve the land he occupies?—I do, further than what he does for his own advantage. Of course he improves it for his own advantage, but nothing in the world more, that is to say to get good crops out of it. I want to have the thing fairly thrashed out. Mr. Ellis talks about good will, and I say, from my experience in North Wales, that the tenants are not entitled to it at all. The landlords do all the work, they do all the repairs and the improvements and everything as far as I know.

58,774. Do you go so far as to say that the tenant does not improve the land?—No, the Welsh tenant does not. There may be some few instances. Of course there are, but I mean to say, as a rule, he does not improve it to entitle him to good will.

58,775. As a rule you say the Welsh tenant does not improve his land?—Yes, quite so. To establish a system of good will under such circumstances would be giving to the undeserving, and might some day result in great injustice to the landlord. So with Mr. Ellis's ideas as to a sort of right of a son succeeding a father. I entirely disagree as to the desirability of such a system. If a son of a deceased tenant is likely to prove a worthy successor, it is to the interest of landlords, and the general, if not universal custom in Wales, to let the son have the farm. That is my experience of something like 50 years I think. To adopt Mr. Ellis's idea would take away the rights of property, and cause the landlord to lose all interest in his estate, and result in his doing next to nothing for it; while he might at any moment be saddled with an incompetent tenant and his land damaged if, not ruined. Now I should like to refer to a matter which I hope will receive the attention of the Commissioners, and that is the difficulties a landlord has to contend with in saving his land from damage and himself from great pecuniary loss in the event of a tenant getting into difficulties from his own fault or otherwise. In the case of a tradesman who thinks he has reason to believe that a customer is going to the bad, he can at once refuse to supply him with any more goods, and sue him in the County Court for a debt. The landlord, on the other hand, can do nothing for possibly nearly two years, while all that time his property is going from bad to worse, and a debt accumulating. Fortunately in Wales we are seldom subject to such misfortunes, but when a case does happen it is very hard upon the landlords. I beg to draw the attention of the Commissioners to the state of things. And now I have touched upon the subject of landlords; I may here state for the general consideration of those who delight in running down the Welsh landlord, that I know instances where, in order to keep their property in repair, the landlords have put themselves to the greatest possible inconveniences, and in one where after doing all he could for his tenantry on a small property, he met with a most miserable return afterwards. I am merely stating this from a landlord's point of view, and that case I can vouch for.

58,776. Will you give us any particulars of that case where there was a miserable return from the tenants?—No, I won't do that.

58,777. You speak of it generally?—That is the fact.

58,778. You speak generally on that point?—No, it was only in this one particular instance, and if I personally know of an instance like this, how many others must there be of a similar kind? I mention the circumstance that the Commissioners and the public may understand that in dealings between the landlord and the tenant it is not always that the tenants suffer. As regards the general depression in the agricultural industry of the country, which we all deplore so much, whether it is greater or less than some imagine, I will not now express an opinion, but I have the very strongest impression that so long as there are men who will persist in setting class against class for political and other ends, so long will capital cease to flow into the land market, and so long will agricultural interests suffer. In speaking of the tithe, it may be said that I am treading upon somewhat dangerous ground, but let me assure those who expect any revolutionary ideas on this head to emanate from me, that they will be mistaken. I am utterly opposed to the spoliation of the Church, but I nevertheless think, if this Commission is to report upon the condition of the landlords as well as the tenants, that it will be for them to consider how far the tithe owner, day especially, should contribute towards the repairs of those buildings from which he derives the tithes, while it is also for them to consider the present condition of some cases where the tithe absorbs all the agricultural produce of the land. I now come to the question of rates, and hope, that the Commissioners will see the injustice of the poor rate being levied entirely on real estate. When the present poor law was first established, the land formed the chief wealth of the country, and was the principal source from whence came poverty. Now, other wealth exists, and is to a very large, if not equal extent, the cause of poverty; so that surely the consolidated fund, which is the product of this wealth, other than land, should contribute its share to the maintenance of the poor. Now there is only one other subject I am going to trouble the Commissioners with and that is, I wish to refer briefly to the ideas that some people have, and give publicity to, on the subject of what they call nationalisation of the land, by which I suppose they mean, the placing in the hands of the State all the lands in the United Kingdom. How they intend to buy up the properties of the present owners is perhaps beneath their notice; but supposing the land to be bought, I should like to draw the attention of the farmers in Wales to the evidence of Mr. Sowray, who for many years had charge of the office which represents the State Department from whence the land now belonging to the nation is managed. Mr. Sowray in his evidence said that the State let farms by tender, or in other words, to the highest bidder, so the farmers can judge from this statement what would be their lot should these somewhat wild notions have their way. I do not mean to say that we landlords are angels, but I do mean to say that we represent a better system than this, that we are a fairly good specimen of the general community, and that we certainly do not deserve the scurrilous abuse heaped upon us by some of the Welsh press. And I should strongly recommend the Welsh tenant to think twice before he falls into the trap of a Welsh Land Court, which means, I suppose, another law court, and tenants can judge from the experiences of my family and the other instances I have quoted, how they are likely to fare at the hands of such institutions. That is, my evidence, my Lord, and now I shall be happy to answer any questions.

58,779. I have some questions which have been handed up which I must put to you. Mr. Llewellyn Jones asks: "Do you not think 'Home Rule for Wales would be a remedy for some of the evils of which you complain'?"—No, most certainly not.

58,780. Mr. Owen Wynne asks: "What is your opinion of the comparative value in these days to a farmer on a lease or a yearly tenancy. 'Under which is he better off?'—He is far better off under a yearly tenancy, for a simple reason.

58,781. What?—Would you like to have my reason?

58,782. Yes?—Well, in one case of course the leaseholder would never get an abatement, and in the other case, he is continually getting abatements now. There is scarcely a landlord who does not give abatements, and if the man were a leaseholder he would not get any abatement at all.

Chairman—continued.

Professor Rhys.

58,783. But we have had instances more than once?—Well, he is a very benevolent landlord, that is all.

Chairman.

58,784. Mr. Owen Wynne also asks: "Do you think that any of the witnesses who have come before this Commission have been influenced by political or sectarian ideas?" Yes, I should say certainly.

58,785. Then I have some questions by Mr. Vincent: "Do you consider this alleged land question arose spontaneously or was created artificially?"—Well, it was principally created by Mr. Gladstone's speech at the foot of Snowdon.

58,786. "Have agitators any responsibility for the existence of this question?"—The other answer will do for that.

58,787. "We have heard that agents are inexperienced. What have you to say on that point?"—I do not think they are at all. Speaking for myself, as Lord Penrhyn's agent, when he first offered me the agency I immediately put myself under the very best farmer I could find, and I learned farming from him, and then I went to a surveyor and learned land surveying from him also, so that I put myself in as near a position to making myself a good agent as I could, but at the same time, really if you are an agent of a very large estate it is not so very important a thing as people imagine, though of great advantage.

58,788. "Do you not think that a re-assessment of the tithe rent-charge is more necessary than a suggestion that the tithe owner should pay part of the cost of buildings for which he can get no benefit?"—Yes, decidedly. It would come to the same thing from my point of view.

58,789. Then I should like to get perfectly fairly what I understand you to say. You consider that the land reformers in Wales are influenced simply from political motives, and not from any desire to benefit the tenant farmers?—No, I do not say that.

58,790. Then I misunderstood you?—You say land reformers. I say that many people who have come forward on this present occasion are biassed by sectarian and political views, but I do not call such people land reformers. I am a land reformer by all manner of means, but I do not come forward as a politician or sectarian, far from it.

58,791. I wanted to get that exactly right, so that there should be no misunderstanding?—Quite right.

Professor Rhys.

58,792. You mentioned just now in the case of the Caerhun disturbances that a protest was made against those people who stocked the common without any right to do so. What was the nature of the protest. I do not quite understand the proceeding?—I cannot say decidedly from my own knowledge that a protest was made, but I know quite enough of enclosures and so forth to be aware that the farmers would naturally protest against these men who had no business to send their stock there.

58,793. But you talked of a protest repeatedly, and I thought there was some process of giving these people to understand legally that they had no right there?—I do not quite follow you.

58,794. You spoke repeatedly of a protest?—Yes, that was in answer to a question of the Chairman's, that was not in my evidence.

51,795. I do not care about that, the stock was on the commons, where it had no right to be, according to what you say?—Yes.

58,796. That was under protest, you say?—Yes, naturally.

58,797. What does that mean?—It means to say that the tenant farmers would naturally object to having the stock of other people upon their ground.

58,798. You do not refer to any legal process of warning these people?—No, because I do not know that any took place, but they must have been continually warned, in the same way as in any other case where the stock of another farmer would come on his neighbour's land, and he would naturally protest against it.

58,799. You have no personal knowledge of that, but you suppose that they did object?—Who did.

58,800. The farmers did object?—To what.

58,801. To these people occupying the commons?—I know that they object to these men pulling the fences down, which came to pretty much the same thing.

58,802. But I think you mentioned that some of the tenants thought differently, and did not agree with the action taken?—Yes, that was so, but they were very ill-advised. Very possibly these tenants would be the smaller tenants, and the others the larger tenants, and the smaller tenants would naturally want to send as many sheep on the sheep walks as they could, and would not like restriction. That is one of the evils of the sheep-walk system in Wales, that there is no order or regularity about it, and there ought to be. Everyone of the tenants ought to send sheep according to his acreage. No doubt some of them did disagree with the action taken, but they were very ill-advised. I have said that in my evidence.

58,803. How do you know that they were the small tenants, you said they were very likely the same tenants?—Yes, I should think they were pretty sure to be.

58,804. Do you know that they were the same tenants?—I cannot say from absolute knowledge but they were sure to be.

58,805. Well, how many of them?—That I cannot tell you.

58,806. You are giving your impression, but I just want to know the value of your evidence?—I give you my reasons, and I think they are pretty good. I think it is very

31 August 1894.]

Mr. P. A. LLOYD.

natural to conclude that some of the tenants did, but were very ill-advised.

58,807. Then there was one tenant who applied to you to appeal to Lord Penrhyn to take action?—Yes.

58,808. Could you give his name?—No, I will not give any names, I tell you that as a positive fact, the man is dead now.

58,809. But you will not give his name?—If the Chairman thinks it of any importance I will, I do not much care.

58,810. Who was the Liberal member of Parliament who proposed it, you can give his name I suppose?—Yes, Sir Love-Parry.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,811. Have you informed these two gentlemen whose evidence you have rebutted to-day that you meant to attack their evidence?—I have not attacked anybody.

58,812. I understood you had been rebutting the evidence of two gentlemen?—I referred to the evidence that was given. It was in answer to a question of the Chairman, whether the evidence which was given before this Commission was actuated by sectarian and political bias.

58,813. But you have rebutted the evidence of two gentlemen here?—I do not see that I have. I only say that the outcome of this action of the Commission generally is the outcome of sectarian and political bias. I do say so most distinctly.

58,814. But would it not be fair to let those gentlemen know that you meant to come?—You can tell them that, anybody may tell them what I have said.

58,815. I mean so that they might have been present to defend themselves?—Well, they may say it is not so, that is all, and I say that it is, and there is just the difference between us. I do not mention any particular persons. I say it is so, that there is a sectarian and a political bias, and I think it is a shocking thing that it should be so.

58,816. You mentioned Mr. Ellis and Mr. Griffiths?—I mentioned Mr. Griffith's name. That was in relation to another case. I said that he gave evidence stating that the tenants were afraid of the landlords.

58,817. Well, I will leave that matter. Do you still insist upon saying that the tenant farmers of Wales have not made any permanent improvements in face of what we have seen right throughout North Wales; walls being built by the tenants, and so on?—I say as a rule tenants do not improve. The walls may have been made 100 years ago, but I am talking of the tenants of to-day. Besides, you cannot tell who put the walls up. The landlords might have done it.

58,818. Oh yes, we can. We have found a number of instances in which the walls have been built by the tenants?—How many years ago?

58,819. Some of late, and some many years ago?—It is just possible that something of that sort may have been done, but I am talking of the general improvements of the land. Of course it is possible that walls may have been built.

58,820. I think it is rather a serious charge to make against the tenants of Wales, from what I have seen?—I do not see that it is any serious charge. They get the land, and they do not improve it. There is no charge in that. You must take my evidence in reference to what other people say. What I say is this, that Mr. Ellis asserts before Parliament that there should be what he calls a good will. I say that the Welsh farmer is not entitled to good will. It is a matter of opinion.

58,821. But it is only a matter of your opinion?—Well, exactly, but I think there are many others who have the same opinion, they must have it if they know Wales and know anything about land.

58,822. Do you think the tenants who lay out much money upon their farms can carry the improvements away with them when they leave?—Of course they do lay out money on the farm, but they are only laying it out to get a fair return for their yearly tenancy.

58,823. But they improve the farm very much by doing so?—Some of them do, and some of them do not.

58,824. It is those that do that I am speaking of. I am not speaking of those that do not. You are very well aware that they cannot carry their improvements away with them?—No. Do not mistake me. Where any man is fairly entitled to any permanent improvement, nobody is more ready to give it to him than I am, but to pay him for what he thinks an improvement, or for some quasi improvement, that is another thing altogether. I say I would be only thankful to pay any of my tenants for any permanent improvements that they make. Therefore do not run away with an idea of that sort.

58,825-6. But have you ever paid them for any general improvements?—Because they have never done any, not one to my mind, not what I call a permanent improvement.

Sir John Llewelyn.

58,827. I understand you admitted the right of a tenant to compensation where he improved the land?—Oh, most distinctly. No man does it more than I do. Most distinctly. I do not want anybody to run away with such a notion as that, and I would only be too thankful myself to pay any tenant for any permanent improvement he did. I should be very glad to see the man properly paid for it, but just for the sake of a few tenants that do it, to go and get a bill into Parliament for what you call good will and fixity of tenure; it is not in the least suitable for Wales, I am quite sure of that.

Chairman.

58,828. Mr. Vincent asks: "Was not the name of Mr. Ellis mentioned in the summary

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD GOODWIN called and examined.

Chairman.

58,830. You are a tenant farmer?—Yes.

58,831. Who is your landlord?—Mr. George Henry Adams' trustees.

58,832. Will you allow your statement to be read?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

Evidence submitted by Edward Goodwin, tenant-farmer, of Pen-y-Stryt Farm, in the parish of Tryddyn.

Occupation.—The usual date of entry on farms in this parish is the 30th of November on the land, and the 1st of May following to the house and buildings. Farms are let from year to year. There is no demand for leases, because land is let too high. Changes in tenancy are not frequent in this parish. The condition of tenancy is by agreement. There are some clauses that are considered oppressive, but I do not know of any of them being enforced. There are penalising clauses in nearly all agreements against ploughing up old pastures, and sub-letting land; but there are generally no causes for their enforcement. I believe that most tenants have a copy of their agreement. I entered on my farm, which is 82 acres in extent, about 11 years ago, at a gross rental of 110*l.* per annum, about 27*s.* per acre. My farm is situated near the middle of the parish, and about 800 feet above the level of the sea. Land of similar quality is let out something near the same rent, but there are so many different land-owners that every farm is let independent of each other. Small farms are let at much higher rents than large ones. The rents on upland farms are from 27*s.*, 17*s.*, and 10*s.*, per acre; lowland farms, according to quality, from 1*l.* to 2*l.* per acre. As a rule, tenants cart all materials for repair free of cost. Rents are fixed by private treaty between the tenant and the landlord, or his agent. The highest bidder is not accepted in all cases, but in most cases they are, which goes against fair rents being fixed, and the acceptance of tenants with sufficient capital. I do not know of any case where arbitration has been resorted to as a means of settling or re-adjusting rents. There have been some permanent reductions of rents, and some temporary reductions. I took my farm at a reduction of over 20*l.* on the old rent, and have had a temporary reduction of 10*l.* about four years ago. No notice of intended abatement is given to the tenants. No change in rents have been effected by re-valuation, but always by private treaty between landlord and tenant. The reduction in the price of wheat, during the last 12 years, has been 33 per cent.

A 86439.

that is the one that I first alluded to. That is Caerhun enclosure.

58,829. Then Mr. Vincent asks: "It is only a general statement of Mr. Griffiths' that, you traverse, is it not?"—Yes, quite so.

Chairman—continued.

and the price of cattle about the same. Rents are usually paid two to three months after they fall due. Tithes, land tax, and all local rates are paid by the tenant. Income tax is paid by the tenant, but allowed in the rent.

Cultivation.—There is no scarcity of labourers, but fences, ditches and watercourses are much neglected. There is no land going out of cultivation, but there are four farms let to the same tenant to preserve game mostly. There has not been any considerable change in the nature of cultivation, excepting that less wheat is grown, more roots grown and less fallowing. Contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act is a clause in most agreements in this parish.

The General Condition of the Farming Population.—In this parish farmers and their wives and children work on the farm. The children are not in receipt of wages. It would be impossible to pay present rents if all the labour done on the farms was paid for. In my opinion, the chief causes of agricultural depression are foreign competition and the insufficiency of the land laws to protect the farmers. The classes most affected by the depression are:—(a) The farmers and their families, because they work harder themselves and have to leave undone many things that ought to be done, because they are unable to pay others for doing it. (b) Farm labourers, because farmers owing to their inability to employ them, employ lads and inferior men, whom they can get for the lowest pay.

Remedies. The remedies which I would suggest for improving the profits from land are:—Security of tenure, fair rents, and a Land Court to settle all disputes that may arise between landlord and tenant, which they are unable to settle themselves by private treaty.

The general relations between landlord and tenant in this district are friendly. I have not heard of any landlords enforcing their agreements, only when a tenant leaves his farm. They never interfere in politics or in religious differences.

Sir John Llewelyn.

58,833. You say you think that fair rents should be settled by somebody else. Do you not think that the landlord and tenant are the best people to do it?—Well, I rather would have somebody different, to spare any bad feeling that might arise between landlord and tenant.

58,834. Who?—I think any Board of Arbitration appointed by the County Council, or anyone besides those that are interested in the question.

C c

58,835. You think that they can settle the rent better than the landlord and tenant, do you?—Well, it is very difficult for trustees to alter the rents when they want to pay annuities from the land, and it is very hard on the holder that the rent cannot be altered.

58,836. You think that trustees are not such good landlords as some other landlords?—Well, my landlord does as much as he can to meet me, but he is in a very difficult position to do much.

58,837. With regard to the Land Court would you allow any lawyers to come into it?—I do not care who. We do not want anything but what is strictly fair between landlord and tenant, let it be lawyers or anybody.

Mr. Grove.

58,838. Would you always like the landlord and tenant to try to agree first?—Yes.

58,839. And in many cases I suppose you think they would agree?—Yes, I believe they would.

58,840. But when they could not agree you would look for some other party to step in and say, "now this is fair between the landlord and tenant"?—Yes.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. WILLIAM CLOVES PICKERING called and examined.

Chairman.Chairman—continued.

58,841. Are you agent to Lord Mostyn and a fellow of the Institute of Surveyors?—I am.

58,842. You desire to make a statement to us?—Yes. With your permission I should like to go through my statement, and I will take up as little time as I possibly can.

58,843. Tell us anything of interest and importance to the neighbourhood and to the Commissioners, at the same time do not repeat the sort of evidence we have heard a good deal of?—Certainly. I will try and make it as short as I can.

I am agent to Lord Mostyn and for the Mostyn estates. The estate consists of 6,350 acres. The manor of Mostyn, of which a portion of the estate consists, comprises 3,091 acres, and with your permission I should like to read an extract with regard to the right or title of his Lordship to that manor.

"The vill or manor of Mostyn with all its rights was sold to a predecessor of Lord Mostyn, by letters patent of the 11th July in the 12th year of James 1st; and since the present Lord Mostyn and his predecessors became possessed of the said vill or manor they have paid all and every the various sums, rents, or values by the said letters patents reserved or made payable, and they have paid and continue to pay the same to the former Kings and Queens of this Realm and to her present Majesty.

"Before the year 1816, the northern portion of the manor, which goes to the channel of the Dee, was only navigable to small vessels; but from that date to 1831 Sir Thomas Mostyn spent between 25,000*l.* to 30,000*l.* in making the Gutter navigable for large vessels, extending the pier and quay and forming a dock." I may say the rent is paid to the present day.

There are no courts held in connexion with the manor. I know of no difference in effect where land is managed under mortgage or otherwise. There is very little call for recreation grounds in my district. I should certainly say that the tenants are treated more leniently by large than by small landowners. As to absentee landlords, I do not think any rule can be laid down. I may say that neither language, politics, nor religion are ever considered in choosing tenants.

I have had six years' special training in Shropshire, and in 1877 I was appointed agent to Mr. Sandbach, where I remained for eight years. I also had the management of a farm of between 300 and 400 acres. On leaving, the tenants presented me with an address thanking me for what I had done for them. It may sound egotistical; but they appreciated what I had done for them, and I am pleased and thankful to them for it.

With regard to the dates of entry in the neighbourhood, it is generally on this estate on the 30th November for the land; and the house, boosey, and part of buildings on the 1st May following. The farms are let from year to year, and I have had no demand for leases. In resuming occupation of a field, for planting or otherwise, compensation is always granted and notice given. I know of no grievance from damage by timber cutting, and should there be, I generally arrange with the timber merchant to compensate the tenant for it. In the case of taking any land for mining or other purposes compensation is always granted. I have never heard of any clauses in the agreement being oppressive. With your permission I will hand in the agreement. There are two agreements, one an old agreement and the other one which I have now brought out and intend to carry out on the estate. (Handed.)

58,844. May I ask you one question with reference to the agreement. I suppose his Lordship's tenants have practically freedom of cultivation?—They have in the new one; but I may say that under the old one it was practically freedom of cropping.

Mr. W. C. PICKERING.

58,845. Is there a clause to prevent hay and straw being sold?—In the old agreement there was. There were penalizing clauses to that effect.

58,846. But the penalizing clauses were never enforced?—They were never enforced.

58,847. And in the new agreement they are struck out?—Yes; with the exception of breaking up pasture. The tenants are given copies of the agreements, and the rent is generally based on the gross at so much per acre. The rents of the smaller tenantry are certainly higher than those of the larger ones, on account of the extra expense in building. There are no services required on the Mostyn estate—no services with regard to the payment of rent—and the rent is always fixed by private treaty. I have never let a farm to the highest bidder, but always try to choose the most practical farmer; and I have always found that that has been the means of a fair rent being fixed. In choosing a tenant I generally endeavour to accept one with sufficient capital; and no case has ever arisen where it was necessary to resort to arbitration for the fixing of the rent. The rents have not varied that I know of in the last 50 years—if anything they are lower. I have made permanent abatements on this estate. In 1885 there was 15 per cent. allowed to those not permanently reduced, and then to 1889 10 per cent. was allowed.

58,848. Neither of them permanent?—No, those were temporary, then 5 per cent. to Michaelmas 1890, and then 5 per cent. from March 1891 to March 1892, and from that date 15 per cent. to the 25th March 1894. To those permanently reduced I allowed 10 per cent. from the 25th March, 1892, to March 25th, 1894. I may say, that 36 of the principal tenants on the estate have been permanently reduced in rent. The permanent reductions amount now to 478*l.* per annum, and the total amount of temporary abatements since Michaelmas 1885 amount to 4,210*l.* When the rents are reduced it is always by private arrangement between myself and the tenant. As to the chief fluctuations in prices, I will hand in a list. (See Appendix.) The rent is generally collected four months after it becomes due. I may say the rents used to be collected in the middle of January and July, but the tenants spoke to me and said, if we could possibly throw over the rent for another fortnight it would be a great boon to them, because they would then have the benefit of the Caerwys Fair. I need hardly say that his Lordship was only too glad to accede to their request, and I have been told by the tenants, that, having an opportunity of selling at that fair before paying their rent, has been a benefit of 10 per cent. to them very often. The effect of the preferential claim on the position of the tenant I consider is beneficial, as it enables the landlord to give his tenants time to pay. The charges on the land—the tithe—are paid by the owner, the land tax by the tenant. What chief rent there is, I see is paid by the owner, and the local rates by the occupier—the income tax by the owner. The size of the farms average from 30 to 80 acres.

58,849. Are there any farms larger than that?—Yes—12 farms under two acres.

53 farms of 2 acres and under 10

Then as to small holdings, there has been very little consolidation of small holdings. I do not agree to any sub-letting. Then as to the practical skill between a large and small holding, there is decidedly more practical skill on a large farm. Then as to the ability of the tenants to provide for their families, this I consider depends a great deal on their individual character and industry. There is a certain amount of scarcity of labour, and I may say that the fences are not altogether as they should be, and certainly the ditches and watercourses. I am sorry to say, that a good many outlets to the drains are not properly attended to by the tenants. I know of no land going out of cultivation, nor do I know of any waste land being reclaimed. I do not consider that there would be any benefit in ploughing up the rough land that we have on the estate, and there is very little draining required. The arable land laid down to pasture is generally at the tenant's expense, but if he were to go, compensation would be allowed him. There is undoubtedly a decrease in the root crop, and there is very little fallowing now in force.

58,850. If a tenant laid down grass at his own expense, would he be allowed to plough it up at the end of his tenancy?—Yes, certainly, so long as it was not permanent pasture. Then as to the effect of the decrease in the root crop: there is no doubt the cattle in the winter suffer a great deal from it, and I am sorry to say it keeps prices down, because I am perfectly certain the farmer cannot bring his stock out in the condition he should do, if he has not a certain amount of root crop. As to the improvements done by the landlord, I may say all the improvements are done by him. Drainage and irrigation is done by him—buildings for stock also. As to tanks for preserving liquid manure, I have not built any, neither have I had any cause to protect any encroachment from the river. Fences, gates, and posts are found by the landlord, and at certain times manure has been found by the landlord for a tenant where a farm has possibly been allowed to run down a certain amount of manure has been allowed him for a year or two. The tenants as a rule always buy their own seeds. I do not know of any co-operation for improvements. In the case of improvements partly or wholly effected by a tenant, the tenant is compensated on leaving I may say. Then as to the Agricultural Holdings Act, we do not hear very much about it in the neighbourhood. I do not know of any custom of the country, but so far as any practice exists, the outgoing tenant is entitled to two-thirds of the wheat crop after bare fallow, and half after other crops, and he gives up the land on the 30th November, and a portion of the buildings, and the rent on the 1st May. I have not had any notice given me by a tenant for improvements under the Agricultural Holdings Act. Tillage and cultivation if done are paid by the incoming tenant, or failing him, by the landlord. As to the manure and produce remaining at the expiration of the tenancy, I may say in that case the tenant generally goes out as he came in, and if there are any permanent improvements they are always paid for. The outgoing tenant has the boosey pasture and half the stable and house until the 1st May.

58,851. Is there any complaint about that. We have heard complaints about the incoming tenant not being able to leave the house till the 1st May. Do you consider that fair?—I think the outgoing tenant should be allowed the house, and a portion of the buildings, because he may have a certain amount of produce to consume, and it would be rather awkward if he was away from the holding during that time.

58,852. Your practical opinion is that that is the best plan?—It is. I have not known any case since I have been here of a tenant not obtaining sufficient compensation for his improvements. I know of no case of compensation being given for the generally improved condition of a holding. There is no such thing as a recognised right of a tenant to dispose of any interest he may have in the farm. As to game preserving, I may say first that rabbits are not preserved, hares are very scarce; other game are preserved to a small extent. As to tenants availing themselves of the Ground Game Act, I may say they do certainly avail themselves of it. There is not much game damage on the estate, but where there has been any case of excessive damage, we have allowed compensation. As to tenants beating covers, of course they are not expected to, but I am glad to say that a few are sportsmen enough to do so and are glad to come and see the game killed. I should certainly say that if game were reared to any great extent it would be against good cultivation. The relations between landlord and tenant I may say is rather improved than otherwise. With regard to labourers, I do not know that they are affected very much. With regard to the public generally, they to a certain extent are able to get a rabbit, a hare, and a pheasant, which possibly they would not do if there was no game preserving—so that it may be taken that it provides a certain amount of food supply. I do not know of any bee-keeping carried on to any extent. There have been some instructions given in butter and cheese making at Whitford, and I may say the classes were fairly well attended. I made some experiments on the home farm last year with regard to different manures for the growth of turnips, but I am sorry to say owing to the drought the turnips were a very poor crop—I may say almost a total failure—although it has had a beneficial result this year on the corn and the seeds sown after turnips. The agricultural classes I refer to have been held at Whitford, if it were possible for the professor who comes down to hold these classes to attend personally on the farm and suggest certain improvements, it would be better than holding a class at night where there is no possibility of so much instruction being given as if he were to attend at the farm. They are, however, fairly well attended. There is co-operation amongst farmers for threshing and harvesting. Very often they buy a threshing machine between themselves and let it out to different farmers. I do not know of many farmers insuring their stock and crop. The landlord always insures the buildings. As to any combination between landlords not to accept tenants of a certain description, I most emphatically say there is nothing of the sort. Tenant farmers and their wives do to a certain extent take part in the manual labour of the farm, and their children in many cases work at home. I consider the rents of farms could be kept up even supposing there was no child labour, because the men I have seen who have no children seem to get on very well. The labourers generally live in the cottages; they are in fair condition and chiefly stone and slate. There are generally gardens to the different cottages, and in one or two cases they hold from the tenant but chiefly from the owner.

As to the relations existing between the landlord and tenants on this estate, I may say I have every reason to believe they are of the most friendly and cordial description. To bear out that statement, with your permission I will read a copy of an address presented to Lord Mostyn at the last rent audit dinner in February.

58,853. If you please?—I may say it was signed by every agricultural tenant of any importance.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

58,854. Are they here?—I think there are several of the tenants here. "To the Right Honourable Lord Mostyn.—We, your tenants, on the Mostyn estate, beg to tender to your Lordship our grateful thanks for the great consideration which you have bestowed on us, in meeting us so practically and feelingly during the periods of great agricultural depression, which has been and is still hanging over us. We thank you also for showing your sympathy in all kinds of distress, and for your continual presence with us, really dwelling amongst your own people. If you have in a slight degree made yourself poorer by your many and good deeds, you have on "the other hand gained immeasurably more in the esteem and affections of your tenants. We hope that the Almighty will lengthen the lives of yourself and your noble lady, so that you may both continue in the good way which you have followed since you came to live amongst us. Allow us to be your faithful tenants."—Then follow the names of the tenants.

58,855. Is this address you have referred to signed by all the tenants?—Every tenant of any agricultural importance.

58,856. Was it prepared before the dinner?—Well, I cannot say when it was prepared. I presume it was, because it was presented at the dinner.

58,857. What had Lord Mostyn done besides making the abatements and reductions of rent that you referred to?—That is what they referred to.

58,858. And that is the only thing?—He has met them, I believe, in other ways. Besides the permanent reductions, there have been private matters that perhaps I had better not go into.

58,859. In what parishes is the Mostyn estate situated?—Chiefly in the parish of Whitford.

58,860. Is that a Welsh or an English-speaking parish?—Well, it is chiefly English-speaking; I mean to say that everybody, with very few exceptions, understands English.

58,861. Do the tenant farmers in that parish habitually use the Welsh language in intercourse amongst themselves?—Some do and some do not. Of course at a fair, or anything of that sort, possibly they would.

58,862. Do they attend Welsh places of worship for instance?—Well, I really do not know; I suppose they do; I presume they do.

58,863. There are chapels where Welsh is preached?—Oh, yes.

58,864. Are most of the tenants Nonconformists?—Really I could not say, for I never make any inquiries with regard to the religion of the tenants; but of course there are a good many, I have no doubt.

58,865. What are the arrangements for labour on the farms on the estate; are most of the labourers men who are lodged at the farm houses, and are they chiefly engaged by the year, or are they labourers on their own finding, working for weekly wages?—There are some that work by the year, but as a rule they are chiefly on weekly wages on the estate.

58,866. Take the men who work on weekly wages; where do they live—in cottages on the farms taken directly from Lord Mostyn by the farmer, or in cottages elsewhere?—Chiefly in the villages. There are of course some men taken on by the year, and they, as a rule, reside on the farm.

58,867. What is paid for an ordinary cottage, per week, in this part of the country?—They vary; from 1s. to 2s.; some are a little higher—there are some 3s.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

58,868. Have most of the cottages got gardens?—Yes, most of them.

58,869. Have any labourers got allotments besides gardens?—No. I may say there is really little or no call for allotments. I have now a few allotments of a quarter of an acre and there are still some of them not taken. I have never had any applications, but we should be only too glad if we had an application to put some land down for allotments.

58,870. Are the cottages modern cottages mostly?—Many of them are very old cottages, and I may say that as to 91 of the cottages, the lease fell in some few years ago, and they were left in rather a bad condition, but we are improving them, I am glad to say, every year, and I hope in a few years we may pass a clean bill of health with regard to that; but they were certainly in a very bad condition.

58,871. We saw some very bad cottages on the road coming from the station this morning?—Which way did you come.

58,872. Past the brewery and by St. Winifride's Well?—That is nothing to do with Lord Mostyn; that is not his property.

58,873. You think the cottages on the Mostyn estate are better than those we saw?—I should not like to draw any invidious comparison, but I think they compare very favourably.

58,874. With regard to the agricultural classes, were they in connexion with the Bangor University College?—Yes. Professor Gilchrist came down and certainly gave some most interesting lectures—very interesting indeed.

58,875. I quite follow what you say, that it would be better if he went to the farm houses, but I suppose what he comes to do is rather to instruct young people in the theory, is it not?—Yes, possibly it may be, but I think there are older farmers, or men who have been in the farms some time, who would be only too glad of any suggestion that could be made to improve their cultivation.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,876. What is the name of the Professor who comes round giving lectures?—Professor Gilchrist.

58,877. Then he has just left?—Yes, he has gone to Reading, I think.

58,878. You said, I think, that the attendance is not very good at these lectures?—It is pretty fair.

58,879. Are the farmers free enough to ask him questions?—Oh, dear, yes.

58,880. Still you think if he went to the farms, everyone would be able to bring his own case before him?—Certainly; he would be able to put his case better before him there than in a room. If he went over the fields—actually on the fields—he would be able to make suggestions, and it would bear more weight with the farmers, I think, than hearing what they think is nothing but book lore.

Mr. W. C. PICKERING.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

58,881. Were the experiments that were tried last year on grass land?—No; it was on arable land; the experiments were mostly as to the manuring most suitable for turnips.

58,882. You had no experiments on grass land at all?—No, we had not.

58,883. It was a bad year for it, if you had?—It would have been, very.

58,884. Do the cottagers keep cows upon Lord Mostyn's estate?—Yes, there are a few that keep cows, and we are always very glad indeed to let anybody that we can have a little bit of land for keeping a cow. It is a very great help to a labouring man.

58,885. Do you think there is a demand for such cottages by the working people?—I think the supply, so far as we are concerned, is equal to the demand.

58,886. Have you any reading-rooms in this district?—We have a reading-room, which is fairly well attended.

58,887. A general reading-room?—Yes, a general reading-room.

58,888. It is not very well attended, do you say?—Fairly well attended.

Mr. Richard Jones.

58,889. What is the reason of the decrease in the root crops?—I suppose they would say it is rather an expensive crop to grow; it may be that, but I only wish to goodness they would grow a little more.

58,890. But still it is one of the most profitable means of cleaning land, is it not?—I quite agree with you. They do a lot of cleaning with potatoes. They have done so.

58,891. But potatoes do not clean land, I think?—Certainly not so well as roots, and they exhaust it a great deal more.

58,892. It is one of the most exhausting crops?—Quite so.

58,893. Is fallowing fallen into disuse?—Yes, it is a good deal, now,

58,894. Then, consequently, the land is not generally so clean, or in so good a condition as it was years ago?—On certain farms, I am bound to state, it is not quite as good, but there are certain exceptions. Taking the run, I think that the land is certainly not quite in such good heart as it used to be.

58,895. Do you think that want of capital has anything to do with it?—No, I do not think there has been anything of that sort, so far as I know. They are a great deal too fond, I think, of growing corn. They are very fond of growing a great area of corn.

58,896. Growing corn?—Oats, barley, and that sort of thing.

58,897. They do not grow very much wheat?—Not very much wheat.

58,898. Of course oats and barley pay, as a matter of fact?—Well, they do now. Of course last year the straw paid for the wheat. It was up to 6*l.* a ton here—oat straw and wheat straw; but that is, of course, an exception.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

58,899. Are there any farms run out here—thoroughly exhausted?—No, I could not say that.

58,900. Do you think that the standard of farming on Lord Mostyn's estate, generally speaking, is as high as it was 20 years ago?—I cannot say; I have only been here nine years.

58,901. Are there any tenants in arrear with their rent?—Well, as it is the case on all estates, there are one or two in arrears, but otherwise, I must say, that they pay it remarkably well. I think we shall always find that on every estate there are a certain few who cannot quite keep their heads above water.

58,902. Would you regard those few as thrifty and industrious farmers?—They are improving, and the reason they are in arrears is that we have rather allowed them to go on, because we could see they were pulling themselves round, and we did not press them perhaps as we might have done. Their farms are improving, and allowing these few arrears to accumulate has been of very great help to them, and I have no doubt that in the present times, or the good times which we appear to be going to have, they will clear their arrears off.

58,903. Do you think those farmers started with sufficient capital?—The farmers I refer to were before my time; possibly they may have been a little bit in straitened circumstances; but some of them have got very large families, which are now growing up, and that, of course, possibly might be a help to them.

58,904. Do you find a tendency amongst farmers to take farms larger than they are able to stock?—No, I do not.

58,905. Of course the temptation is very great, because, as a rule, the larger the farm, the cheaper the taking?—Not always; it is as a rule.

58,906. It is as a rule?—It is as a rule. A large farm is, perhaps, possibly, lower than a small farm, because really on a small holding the expenses of the buildings increase it, although the land may not be any better.

58,907. Do you find the competition for farms very keen?—Yes. We have had no farm on hand since I have been here—the last nine years. There were two farms, not in this immediate neighbourhood, which were vacant for six months, but one farm really fell in with the lease—a portion of it.

58,908. Was that on Lord Mostyn's estate?—Yes, on his Flintshire estate. The case I refer to was with regard to a man who had taken a lease. A portion of it was the Bishop's land, and a portion of it was his Lordship's land, and at the termination of the lease the buildings had got in rather bad repair, and generally dilapidated, and after we had got the buildings in good order, I let a portion of it, which is let now, and the tenant has been there ever since—for the last eight years.

1 September 1894.]

Mr. W. C. PICKERING.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

58,909. Did you reduce the rent of that place?—Yes, the rent was reduced, although we had a desperately heavy outlay on the buildings.

58,910. Are there any sheep runs attached to the farms?—There are, but to no great extent. Near Halkin, they have a right of run—on the Halkin Mountain.

58,911. Is a certain portion of the mountain allotted to each farm? I believe there are a certain number of sheep allotted to it. In those cases of sheep runs I certainly think there ought to be some rule regulating the number of stock kept on them, because I have seen in my own experience a man who possibly may hold only a few acres and be a sort of dealer have his 200 sheep running there, and a tenant with his few acres who has no sheep or few sheep, and keeps up the number of sheep allotted. Also the class of sheep that are kept there, I think, might be vastly improved by keeping better male animals on the mountains.

58,912. Then it is really grazing without stint?—I should say it was on this mountain. I think you will really hear something more about this from another witness.

58,913. From a tenant farmer?—Yes.

58,914. Have there been many changes in tenancy on the Mostyn estate?—Not during my time. We have got several tenants on the estate, who have been on the estate for generations. There is one case in point, where the family has been for over 300 years, and there is another case where the family has been on the farm for five generations, that is, 150 years. Three have been on farms for over 100 years, and others from 50, 30, and 20 years. There have been a few changes in my time.

58,915. Of course you have not been long enough there to be able to give any comparison?—I have not, but what I say is that, so far as I know from the estate books, the changes in the tenancy have not increased.

58,916. Have there been any failure of tenants on the estate?—No, I do not know of any failures on the Mostyn estate.

Mr. Grove.

58,917. Did you state that you had had no claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I have had no claim.

58,918. Do you think the tenant farmers are acquainted with the provisions of the Act?—I think some are, but I do not think it is really of very great value.

58,919. Do you think the majority of them would be acquainted with it?—I think so. I think they would avail themselves of any clause in it.

58,920. Have they any farmers' clubs or agricultural associations?—None in this district—not in this immediate district.

58,921. You say you give compensation for damage by game?—Well I have allowed it.

58,922. Do you mean damage by game under the Ground Game Act, that the farmers could deal with themselves?—Oh, yes, the farmers can deal with themselves.

58,923. Even in those cases you give compensation?—I have given it in cases where the farmers could have snared the rabbits, or trapped or shot them.

58,924. But not damage by winged game, as apart from that?—No, this was not winged game.

58,925. In this peripatetic teaching that you are proposing, it is a new feature and a very interesting one. In Denmark the State employ three experts, who go round wherever they are required, either by an association or by a private farmer, at a very small cost, from 4s. to 5s. a day, I think it is, and he is ready to give instruction. Is it something of that sort you mean?—Exactly.

58,926. But do you not think a process of that kind would be very slow?—No, I think they could cover a fair area. I mean to say, they could take it yearly. They could visit a farm—take it, we will say, in the spring and the autumn, and go to an adjoining farm. There might be one man who would want possibly to know how to improve his pasture, and another man might inquire with regard to corn, and so on.

58,927. So that you mean he should be an agricultural expert really?—Quite so.

58,928. And not particularly applied to butter-making or cheese-making?—No.

58,929. You mean generally?—Yes, generally.

58,930. You have not made any liquid manure tanks, I think you say?—No, I have not.

58,931. Do you think they would be desirable in places?—I certainly think they would.

58,932. Would they be very expensive to construct?—They would be rather expensive.

58,933. Do you think there is sufficient labour on the land now?—Yes, I think so.

58,934. And sufficient cottages for housing the labourers?—Yes, there are sufficient cottages. We have a good many cottages empty now.

58,935. Just one other question as to the reading-room which is fairly attended. There is no doubt that sort of thing is most valuable and useful, and ought to be more developed, if possible. Who manages the reading-room?—Well, the schoolmaster in the village has a certain amount of management.

58,936. Do you think if the management of it were more amongst the labourers themselves, and if they would form a small committee to manage the matter, that it would make it more attractive to them?—I am afraid not. In other cases where we have tried it, it is not very well attended. They prefer not sitting at home, but they have their own houses of meeting.

58,937. It is a suggestion that we have had made in other places, that if the management were more distributed amongst the men themselves probably it would be more attractive to them?—Yes.

1 September 1894.]

Mr. W. C. PICKERING.

Professor Rhys.

58,938?—When a farm becomes vacant, who generally succeeds; is it a member of the family?—I cannot say that that is the custom, but it is the practice. I mean to say, I should give the preference to a relative. I should give them the first option, I may say.

58,939. Is there anything in the nature of a goodwill?—Nothing that I know of.

58,940. You do not know what negotiations there are between the incoming tenant and the outgoing tenant?—No, I should set my face against that.

58,941. Would you hear of it, do you think?—I think I should hear of it.

58,942. Some of the farmers have servants, I suppose, besides labourers?—Yes, some few of the larger farmers.

58,943. Not many?—No, not many.

58,944. How do they house them, do you know?—In the farms that I refer to the female servants are in the house, and the men, as a rule, sleep in the out-buildings, as it were—in rooms prepared for them.

58,945. We heard the other day in the district of Maelor Saesneg, that they arranged matters somewhat differently, and that the men slept in the houses?—In the cases I referred to that is not the case. There are very few really who employ servants who sleep on the place.

58,946. So that you could not exactly say from that what would be the influence on the conduct of those men, and on their morality?—No, I cannot, I am afraid.

58,947. The cases are too few for you to judge?—They are, I think, too few to draw a hard and fast line.

58,948. Then you have no difficulty about language, I think?—None at all, I have never found any.

Sir John Llewelyn.

58,949. Did you not hand in just now a list of the holdings on the estate, giving those under two acres and those above?—No, but I shall be very happy to do so.

58,950. You need not trouble about the exact figures; I was going to ask you a question upon it as to whether it is your opinion that it is a good thing for the country that there should be a variety in the size of holdings?—I do think so, but at the same time I think that on every estate there should be two or three large farms, because as a rule the tenants of the large farms keep a better class of stock than the smaller class of farmers could possibly afford to do, and in that way they improve the stock round about.

58,951. I notice that you call them farms, even though they are from two to 10 acres?—Perhaps I was wrong in classifying them as farms.

58,952. If there are a large number who have on the average two acres of land, perhaps that would account for their not wanting allotments?—I have prepared a statement, which, if I shall not be taking up your time, I will go into, as to the number of those farms.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

58,953. You give the number?—I give the number. There were 12 of about two acres, and under 10 there were 53.

58,954. That is a large number of small holdings?—That is a large number of small holdings.

58,955. You have told us that in your opinion it is a good thing for the country that there should be a large number of these small holdings?—Yes.

58,956. In your opinion has there been a tendency on the part of the men who inhabit these small holdings to acquire larger ones. Do they want more land?—I do not think I can call any case to mind. They are perfectly contented with their holdings.

58,957. Even if they have 10 acres?—Yes.

58,958. I suppose these men have some other occupation?—Yes. As a rule they are labourers who work away from their little holdings.

58,959. With regard to the larger farms, what is your opinion as to the leases, are they desirable or not?—I have never had an application for a lease, and I really think that a tenant would rather have a free hand than be tied down for a number of years to a farm.

58,960. Do the people think they have sufficient security of tenure?—There is not the slightest doubt as far as my opinion goes. From my experience in Wales after 17 years I have no hesitation in saying that they consider themselves just as free and as likely to remain on the farm as if they had a lease for 100 years. I mean they will never be removed so long as they carry out the terms of their agreement. I am speaking entirely from my view of the case, and from what I have seen in my experience.

58,961. Your experience has been that there have been no evictions?—None.

58,962. Not on your estate?—No.

58,963. Have you ever heard of any?—I cannot say that I have.

58,964. Then with regard to rent, is that fixed upon an average of seasons, good and bad?—No, we have no sliding scale. These cases have been met with the permanent abatements and the temporary abatements.

58,965. My question arises out of a statement which you made, I think, to the effect that you considered that the crops of this year are attributable to the failure of last year's crop—in regard to the turnips?—That was really meant in this way: the experiments that I tried on the home farm were applied to turnip land. This was a failure owing to the draught, but I looked over all those plots before we cut our oat field—where the clover was—and I could certainly see that it had borne fruit, and that where these manures were not supplied there was not anything like the crop. But I do not say that it was on account of the failure of the turnip crop; of course it stands to reason that if there had been a very heavy turnip crop possibly there would not have been so much left in the land.

58,966. Do you consider the crops this year are better than last year?—Very much better.

1 September 1894.]

Mr. W. C. PICKERING.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

58,967. I suppose it would be the case that a landlord or agent in arranging the matter of rent would look upon an average of seasons rather than one good or bad season?—Certainly. I should not think of raising the rent on a good year.

58,968. What is the average of rent per acre in this immediate district?—I cannot very well speak with regard to the land in the district.

58,969. Can you give an average; would it be 15s.?—I may say that our land runs from 7s. to 25s. an acre.

58,970. That would vary with the quantity of land, and whether it is accommodation land near the town or not?—That would have a good deal to do with it. I may say that the accommodation land would run up to more, perhaps to a couple of pounds, but what I mean by 25s. an acre for a farm is when it is a good mixed farm—a good arable and pasture farm.

58,971. Has there been much tendency to lay down arable to pasture?—Not very much lately, taking it as a rule on the estate.

Chairman.

58,972. We were very glad to hear that the relations between his lordship and his tenantry are as good as possible. What is your opinion of the tenantry themselves, are they an industrious lot of people?—I certainly think they are.

58,973. A hard-working and industrious set of people?—I consider them to be a hard-working and industrious set of people.

58,974. And they do their best to improve their farms?—They do.

Professor Rhys.

58,975. You think on the whole that they do improve their farms?—There are some that are getting, as I said before, run down a little bit, but taking the generality, they are improving their holdings.

58,976. There are some that do improve them?—There are undoubtedly some that have improved them vastly.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,977. Then you are not of the same opinion as the gentleman we had before us yesterday. He said that the tenant farmers of Wales do not improve their land?—I must say I am speaking from my own experience. I say that there are some that do improve it.

58,978. There must be some very great lack of confidence if they do not improve their land; it is very much to their own benefit to do so?—Certainly it is.

Mr. Richard Jones.

58,979. To pursue this point of improvement, I will just ask you this question. Have you ever had any claim under part three of Schedule I for compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Never.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

58,980. Then may we take it that they do not bone land or apply any cake?—I am sorry to say there is not nearly enough cake used. I should like to see a great deal more used. There is no doubt it is very beneficial to the tenant, and you will see by the agreement I have inserted that we should allow compensation for any cake that is used on the holding, and I only wish that the tenant farmers would see what an improvement it is to their stock and their pasture.

58,981. Do you think that the farmers are not alive to the importance of the matter?—There are a few, I am glad to say, that are using it now who did not use it a few years ago, and I have no doubt that they will increase when they see the beneficial result.

Chairman.

58,982. I have a question or two to ask you from Mr. J. E. Vincent. "Have you any further documents which might be of interest to the Commission—documents in the nature of tables?"—Do you mean to say with reference to imports and exports.

58,983. With reference to your estate?—No, I do not think I have.

58,984. You have handed everything in?—I think I have handed everything in.

58,985. I have some questions to put to you which are handed in by Mr. T. Vaughan Hughes. "Do you not think that there is a lack of a large amount of recent knowledge as to the cultivation of soils by your tenants?"—I think there is.

58,986. "For instance the composition of the soils cultivated, what they are composed of, and, secondly, the nature and quality of the manures which they apply?"—Yes, undoubtedly, and there is no doubt that with regard to manures the tenants in my opinion should avail themselves more of having them analysed.

58,987. "Do you not think that such knowledge respecting these soils is desirable on the part of your tenants?"—I think so, certainly, my Lord.

58,988. "Are any of your tenants acquainted with the provisions of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act?"—Not that I know of.

58,989. "Do any of your tenants keep an account of the amount of food they take away from the soils they cultivate, and of the plant food in the shape of manures that they return to the soils?"—No, they do not know the nature of the soil sufficiently.

58,990. "Do many of your tenants utilise to the fullest extent the numerous labour-saving appliances devised within the last 10 years?"—I see an improvement in that direction.

Sir John Llewelyn.

58,991. Have you a table that you could give the Commissioners showing a comparison between the prices and the rents in the early part of this century and now?—I am afraid I have not a table of the early century prices, but I may say that I could trace three farms on the Mostyn estate; in 1807, the rent of one farm of 69 acres was 56*l.*; in 1892 it was 50*l.* or 14*s.* 8*d.* an acre, which was a 12 per cent. reduction from that time. Another holding of 12 acres was practically the same.

58,992. It does not refer to all the holdings on the estate?—No, I cannot trace those back.

58,993. Only a few of them?—Yes.

58,994. May I ask if that return can be handed in?—With the greatest of pleasure, I should like to state that I omitted to state the amount of the rent roll.

Chairman.

58,995. That is so?—It is 5,413*l.*

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ISAAC TAYLOR recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

58,998. You are, I understand, agent for several estates?—I am.

58,999. Will you name them?—The Penbedw estate in Flintshire, belonging to Harry W. Buddicom, Esq.

59,000. How large is that estate?—3,823 acres.

59,001. Is there any objection to state the rental?—I can state the rental if you wish it; it is about 2,645*l.*

59,002. Then the Earl of Denbigh's estate?—2,057 acres. I only give you the agricultural land. The gross rental is 2,318*l.*

59,003. The Dowager Lady Vivian's estate I believe you are agent for also?—Yes. That is 607 acres. The rental is about 907*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, agricultural land only.

59,004. Is there any other estate you have to mention?—Yes, that of Sir Pyers. Mostyn, comprising 4,015 acres, rental, 5,054*l.*

59,005. Is there any other large estate for which you are agent?—There are no other large ones. I have the particulars of a lot of small ones here.

59,006. We will take them together, if you please, afterwards?—I can give you a copy of my notes.

59,007. Will you hand that in. We have not dealt with Mr. A. C. Lewis's estate?—I will give you his.

59,008. You have them all separate?—Yes, separate.

59,009. Perhaps the best way would be to go through them. We have the big estates?—Mr. Lewis, Bryn Edwin Estate, 256 acres, 377*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* rent. Then Charles Michael Berington, Esq.—

59,010. What have you to tell us about that?—Do you want me to go into the particulars of these estates now?

59,011. If there is anything of interest in the neighbourhood, and to the Commission, with regard to that estate, please tell us?—I can

Chairman—continued.

58,996. The acreage is 6,350, and the rent is 5,413*l.*?—That is so. I may say that in the last 11½ years his Lordship has spent in repairs and improvements 11,400*l.*, in allowances to tenants, and for unexhausted improvements, 7,735*l.*, which, I think, makes a total of 19,135*l.*, that is to say, 29 per cent. in 11½ years.

Mr. Griffiths.

58,997. How do you account for the unexhausted improvements?—We arrive at that by valuation. The tenant and I make a valuation ourselves if the tenant has spent anything on unexhausted improvements, and we agree between ourselves.

Chairman—continued.

only say with regard to Mr. Lewis's property that he has for some years paid the tithe rent-charge for his tenants, which would be equal to a reduction of about 40*l.* a year. The rental of the principal farm has been reduced from 281*l.* to 200*l.* All repairs are done by the landlord.

59,012. Whose is the next estate?—I have here one or two which I have not mentioned; Charles Michael Berington's, 242 acres, rent 290*l.*

59,013. Whose estate is the Pen-y-Pylle; the acreage of which is 105, and the rent 140*l.* Have you the same statement before you as I have here. I think we had better deal with the properties in the order in which you have handed them in?—Yes. The first one is Mr. Buddicom's estate, the Penbedw estate.

59,014. You have told us of that?—You have not had any particulars of it. You have had the acreage and the rent, but I think I have not said anything about the abatements.

Sir John Llewelyn.

59,015. Is there a property called Pen-y-Pylle?—Yes.

59,016. To whom does that belong?—It has been in the hands of the mortgagees for many years. The mortgagees are in possession.

59,017. Whose estate was it?—It belonged to Mr. Beaver Roberts, Bangor. The acreage is under 105 acres.

Chairman.

59,018. Will you tell us about the Pen-y-Pylle estate?—The acreage is about 105 acres, the rental 141*l.* 10*s.*; abatements made in consequence of agricultural depression, 15 per cent. from March 25th, 1885, to March 25th, 1894. Permanent reductions, on one farm a permanent reduction has been made from 47*l.* to 40*l.* from September 29th, 1889. All repairs done by the landlord without charge. That is all with regard to that.

59,019. Now take the next one?—The Bryn Edwin estate.

59,020. Yes?—You have the acreage of that and the rental.

59,021. Is that Mr. Barnston's?—No, it belongs to Mr. A. C. Lewis.

59,022. I do not think we need go through all these small figures, you had better tell us what you know about Lord Denbigh's, Mr. Buddicom's, the Dowager Lady Vivian's, and Sir Pyers Mostyn's estates?—Yes. The first I will take is Mr. Buddicom's; the acreage is 3,823, the rental 2,645*l*.

59,023. What have you to say with regard to that estate?—Abatements made in consequence of agricultural depression, 1879 to 1890, 15 per cent., 1891 to 1892, 15 per cent., 1893, 20 per cent. There have been permanent reductions also made in the last 14 years of about 308*l*. per annum. The landlord does all repairs and has erected several new farmhouses and buildings, the annual expenditure being over 500*l*. per annum. He has recently offered to put up hay and corn barns sufficient to hold all their produce for the tenants, charging them 5 per cent. on the outlay. Many of the tenants have been on the estate for many years, and have succeeded their ancestors.

59,024. Have there been any permanent reductions on the estate?—Permanent reductions 308*l*.

59,025. Per year?—Yes.

59,026. Now let us deal with the Earl of Denbigh's estate?—The acreage of the estate is about 2,057 agricultural land. The gross rental of the same about 2,318*l*. Abatements made in rents in consequence of agricultural depression:—

From September 29th, 1885, to March 25th, 1890, 15 per cent.

From March 25th, 1890, to March 25th, 1892, 10 per cent.

From March 25th, 1892, to September 29th, 1893, 20 per cent.

Permanent reductions in rent have been made on several farms amounting to about 235*l*. per annum. The landlord does all repairs, and has expended an average sum of about 500*l*. per annum in improvements and repairs without any charge made to the tenants. In July 1893 Lord Denbigh received from his tenants a written expression of their gratitude for his liberal treatment, a copy of which is attached. I have the original here if your Lordship would like to see it.

59,027. You can put that in?—Will you go to Sir Pyers Mostyn's estate now.

59,028. Yes?—The acreage is about 4,015 of agricultural land only, and the rental of agricultural land only is 5,054*l*. Abatements made in rents in consequence of agricultural depression:—

From 1885 to 1889, 15 per cent.

" 1890 to 1892, 10 "

" 1892 to 1894, 15 "

Permanent reductions have been made on several farms amounting to about 340*l*. per annum. All repairs and improvements have been made by the landlord, the average annual cost of which amounts to about 550*l*. There are a large number of small tenants on the estate, not agricultural, which are not included. Which estate shall I take next?

59,029. The Dowager Lady Vivian's. That is Anglesea 'property, is it not?—No. I dealt with that in Anglesea; this is the property in Flintshire. The acreage is about 607 acres. The rental is about 907*l*. 10*s*. of agricultural land only. Abatements made in rents in consequence of agricultural depression; 1886, 1887, and 1888, 10 per cent., September 29th, 1892, to March 25th, 1894, 10 per cent. Permanent reductions have also been made to the amount of 42*l*. 10*s*. per annum. All repairs are done by Lady Vivian. Would you like to have the particulars of any of the smaller estates.

59,030. No, we will take it with regard to all the small ones that you can put them in in a schedule, if you please?—Yes.

59,031. I will ask you one question; the feeling I may take it between these landlords and their tenants is very friendly?—Very friendly, indeed.

59,032. Are there yearly agreements or leases, as a rule?—Yearly agreements, mostly.

59,033. Have you a form of agreement to hand in?—Yes. I have a general form which I use for all these estates.

59,034. It is the same form all over these estates?—Yes. I gave you one in Anglesea, I think.

59,035. I think we had better have it again.

[The witness handed in form of agreement.] You do not allow tenants to sell hay or straw?—Well, that is in the agreement, but they do it; particularly in the last year they did it; the price was so high.

59,036. You have no objection to that?—We did not object so long as they treated the farms fairly.

59,037. Then practically they have got freedom of cultivation?—That is so. Those penal clauses have never been enforced that I know of.

59,038. On these estates there is no complaint about the game?—No. There is very little game. There is no game, except on one or two of the large estates, and there is nothing like what there used to be there.

59,039. What is your opinion of the tenant farmers in this neighbourhood; are they an industrious, hard-working set of people?—Yes, I think so.

59,040. Do they improve their farms?—They do, many of them.

59,041. They do the best they can with their land?—Yes.

59,042. Were you present at the meeting yesterday at Mold?—No.

59,043. You did not hear Mr. Pennant Lloyd's evidence?—No, I did not.

59,044. He was asked the following question: See 58,775
"As a rule, you say that the Welsh tenant
"farmer does not improve his land," and his answer was, "Yes, quite so." Do you agree with that?—That he does not improve his land?

Chairman—continued.

59,045. Yes. Mr. Pennant Lloyd told us that the tenant farmers, as a rule, do not improve their land?—I do not agree with that.

59,046. You think the tenant farmers are an industrious class of people, and do improve their land?—Yes, they do improve their land, as a rule.

Sir John Llewelyn.

59,047. Just one question. You have given us a long list of the abatements upon the estates with which you are connected. I want to ask you whether the tenants exercise their opportunity of going before the assessment committee and getting a reduction in their rates?—They would not get it on those temporary abatements.

59,048. Even though those temporary abatements were continued for a long series of years?—They would not get it.

59,049. What is the reason, have they tried?—I do not think they have.

59,050. You do not think have they tried?—I do not think the committee would listen to it. If they get a permanent reduction they get a certificate from me, and they go before the assessment committee, and they get the rates reduced.

59,051. Quite so. You think that no attempt has been made?—I do not know of one.

Professor Rhys.

59,052. There is nothing to prevent the committee granting it, is there, excepting that they are not asked?—No, I should think not.

59,053. It is their own idea?—I do not know of a case that has been before them.

59,054. I know of its being done in a certain part of England, where the abatement is for three years, we will say?—I have never heard of it being done here.

59,055. There is nothing to prevent them if they thought proper to do so?—Oh, they could do it if they liked.

59,056. You do not think they have been asked?—I do not think so. I think that the committee would require a certificate from me, and I have never been asked for one for a temporary abatement.

59,057. You know very well how some of the farmers live, I have no doubt, in these parts?—In what way do you mean.

59,058. Their fare for instance?—Some of them live hard enough, and some of them do pretty well.

59,059. Would you mind telling us how they live generally—an ordinary farmer we will say?—Well, I really cannot tell you exactly.

59,060. Perhaps we shall get one of themselves to tell us?—Yes, I think so.

58,061. I asked Mr. Pickering just now about the farm servants, and he did not know of many on the Mostyn estate?—I do not know of many either. If the farmers have sons, they generally do their work, but I think that about here there are plenty of labourers employed, who live in cottages. There are plenty of houses for them.

59,062. So that there are comparatively few farm servants living on the farms?—Not very many.

59,063. And those who do, have their beds in the outbuildings; is that the state of things?—In some cases we have separate accommodation for them to get to their rooms.

59,064. In the farmhouse?—Yes—a staircase outside.

59,065. You think that is a good plan?—Well, for the men servants I think it is; they like to have a little liberty, and they do not like to be obliged to come in very early very often.

51,066. No; but one of the witnesses who spoke on this subject said it was a good thing that they should have to come in at the time that the farmer wished, and I think he rather disapproved of the separate staircase, but that is not the idea here I understand?—No.

Mr. Grove.

59,067. Are leases ever asked for?—Very seldom; there are a few, but very, very few. I know some that have expired recently, and they have not applied for them.

59,068. They have not applied for them to be renewed?—No.

59,069. Have there been many sales of estates and properties in this district of late?—Yes.

59,070. Many?—Yes; there was one the other day near Mold.

59,071. Of what acreage, about?—About 700 or 800 acres. It was all sold except one lot, and many of the tenants bought their holdings, at very low prices too.

59,072. Do you know whether they bought them with borrowed money principally?—I cannot tell you that, because they have not settled for them yet. It is only lately.

59,073. What would be the chance of that being the case?—I think some of them would have to borrow the money.

59,074. What rate of interest would they pay for it, do you suppose?—I cannot tell you exactly.

59,075. What do you think it would be?—I should think they might get it at about $3\frac{1}{2}$ or 4 per cent. The rents would not be increased, because they have bought them very low. The landlord gave them an advantage, many of them.

59,076. Do you get any claims under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I have never had one.

59,077. Do you think the tenants are acquainted with the provisions of that Act?—Some of them are. I think the bulk of them do not know much about it, and do not care.

59,078. You would consider it a fair thing to the tenant that his assessment should be reduced

1st September 1894.]

Mr. I. TAYLOR.

Mr. Grove—continued.

on an abatement of rent, would you not?—Well, what I contend is this, that it is unfair to the other ratepayers. Somebody would have to pay the rates. If it was an abatement all round, it would be all right.

59,079. Of course the practice of unions varies very much?—Yes.

59,080. But we have found several cases in which, on a yearly abatement, the assessment has been reduced?—I have never heard of it here.

59,081. It is so in my own county, for instance, in some of the unions, and not in others?—A temporary abatement?

59,082. Yes, a temporary abatement?—I have never heard of it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,083. You would not consider it unfair to the other ratepayers if his farm was not of the same value—if it was reduced in value, would you?—What, the assessment?

59,084. Yes, to have a reduction in the assessment?—I say that I do not think that the assessment, as carried out, is fair at all, because they calculate it here according to the rent. The rents on one estate are much higher than those on others. I have known cases of a man being assessed at 30s. an acre, and his neighbour over the hedge, with equally good land, only at 17s., because he only paid 17s. for it.

59,085. I do not say anything about the mode in which the assessment is made, but the fact that the landlord makes an abatement on a farm assumes that the place is of less value, of course?—Oh, yes.

59,086. It would be unfair to the other farms if that is so?—I think there would be a difficulty about it, because, perhaps, you might only get an abatement for six months, and then the assessment would have to be altered again?—I do not think that it can be very well carried out.

59,087. As a rule you do not get an abatement for six months; it is generally for 12 months at the least?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,088. I think the abatements you make are not the same on each estate?—No, you see they were 15 per cent., 10 per cent., and sometimes 20 per cent.

59,089. Do you have the different farms valued, or what is your rule?—No, we give it to them on the rent-day.

59,090. But how are you guided?—We give a per-centage on the rentals; where there has been a permanent reduction we do not give so much. If we give the other tenants 20 per cent. we give those who have had a permanent reduction 10 per cent.

59,091. You do not make any difference if you consider a farm is highly rented?—No, not at all. We give them the same all round.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,092. In what parishes are these estates situate. We have not got that from you, I think?—Lord Denbigh's property is in the parish of Whitford and Holywell.

59,093. If you have given them already you need not give them again?—I think they are mentioned.

59,094. Are they Welsh parishes or English parishes?—Welsh.

59,095. Is the prevailing language of the tenant farmer Welsh?—Most of them can talk Welsh. They can also talk English, nearly all of them. I talk Welsh to them generally.

59,096. What do they talk amongst themselves?—Welsh, generally.

59,097. Are there many Nonconformists among them?—Several.

59,098. Am I right in gathering from your evidence that, notwithstanding the abatements that have been made upon these estates the tenants have found it a great effort to pay the rent?—I daresay they have had pretty hard work to do it; the prices of everything have been so low.

59,099. It has been a regular struggle for them?—I daresay it has to many of them.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,100. Do you speak Welsh yourself?—Yes.

59,101. And you find no difficulty in treating with the tenants?—No.

Chairman.

59,102. There is one question handed in by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you think the tenants have any control over their men after the 'day's work is done'?"—Well, I do not think so. Many, of them go away; they only work up to about 6 o'clock.

59,103. Mr. Vincent would like to have Lord Denbigh's testimonial read. Will you read it out?—Yes.

"To His Lordship, the Earl of Denbigh."

We, the undersigned, being your Lordship's tenants in this district, do hereby wish to express our sincere and heartfelt gratitude to your lordship, no less than our appreciation of the deep sympathy which you, in so practical and substantial a form, have shown towards us, in these times of serious agricultural depression, by making what we most thankfully consider a very substantial abatement. This mark of sympathy with your struggling tenants we value the more that it arises from the deep concern which your lordship cherishes for the welfare of your tenants during these years of poignant anxiety and distress. It gives us unfeigned satisfaction to believe that your humane and honourable attitude will further intensify the high esteem in which you are held in the hearts of your tenants.—Mostyn, July 19th, 1893."

1 September 1894.]

Mr. J. TAYLOR.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,104. Is that all?—There is a bit more about myself, but I do not think I need read that.

59,105. How did that come to be given in July 1893?—It was sent to Lord Denbigh.

59,106. But how did it happen to be given in July 1893; why not July 1892, or even July 1889?—His Lordship was over early in the year to attend a rent dinner at Holywell.

59,107. It had been prepared before the rent dinner, had it?—Yes, it must have been.

59,108. What strikes me as odd is, that seeing the abatements had been going on for so many years, it should happen to come in July 1893?—Neither his Lordship nor myself knew anything about it until it was received.

59,109. Had there been some grave dispute between Lord Denbigh and his tenants?—Not in the least.

59,110. How do you account for it being given in that particular month?—I cannot tell you. It was spontaneous on the part of the tenants. I might account for it in this way, in

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS ROBERTS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

59,116. Do you understand English at all?—A little bit.

59,117. But you have written your evidence in Welsh?—Yes.

59,118. It has been translated to you in your presence, and examined by Professor Rhys?—Yes.

59,119. And that is your evidence, and it is correct?—I think it is.

59,120. You understand it?—Yes.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

Evidence of Thomas Roberts, Tyn-y-caeau, Gwaenysgor.

I am the tenant of Tyn-y-caeau, which formerly belonged to a Mr. Morgan, and was afterwards transferred to Mr. Pochin. I became tenant of the farm 27 years ago, and was tenant under Mr. Morgan for 10 years or thereabouts at 40*l.* a year. Mr. Morgan gave me six months notice and sold to Mr. Pochin. I retook the farm, but my rent was increased to 60*l.* From time to time I was promised that the buildings should be repaired, and I paid the increased rent, but nothing was done for eight years, and these were done because the house was going to ruins, and, in fact, the gable end of the house did collapse, and it was then that they did do some repairs. I will speak regarding the high rents and the serious depreciation in the price of produce, and that in fact in my case I was obliged to pay more rent when the price of produce had fallen, in some cases more than 50 per cent. I will state that game preservation damages us considerably, and though I pay rent for the land more than I ought to, under one respect: I think they got 20 per cent. abatement at that time.

59,111. It seems to strike me as rather an odd thing that it should be given just at that time, and that so many per-centages of abatement seems to have been got without any testimonial being given. Are we to understand that on estates where these spontaneous offerings are not given to the landlord, the landlord has not been behaving well?—A testimonial of this sort?

59,112. Yes?—I should say not.

59,113. You seemed to make such a point of it, or somebody wanted it read; that is what occurs to me?—I do not know. I handed it in; I think you have a copy of it?

59,114. Yes?—It is signed by most of the tenants—the principal tenants.

Chairman.

59,115. There is a question handed in by Mr. R. Bromley: "Have the tenants any difficulty in getting repairs done on the estates?"—No.

Chairman—continued.

the condition of agriculture, still the landlord has the right to make a further rent, by letting the sporting to private individuals who trespass on my farm and for which I receive no compensation.

59,121. Were you a tenant of Mr. H. D. Pochin, who bought Tyn-y-caeau, on the Bodnant estate?—Yes.

59,122. Mr. Pochin appeared before the Commission at Conway, and said that he lost 21 tenants out of 25 in 20 years. Are you one of those tenants?—Not this same estate.

59,123. Do you wish to put in any correspondence between yourself and your landlord?—Yes, after I failed with the agent for 16 years.

59,124. Do you wish that correspondence read before the Commission?—Yes, my Lord.

The Secretary read the following letters:—

"Copy of letter sent to H. D. Pochin, Esq.

"Tyn-y-caeau, Gwaenysgor,

"DEAR SIR, "January 1st, 1894.

"I beg to ask your pardon for thus addressing you. I have been thinking of writing to you before now. The reason for writing now is that, as Mr. Nice is about to leave, and Mr. Bell poorly, I do not know where to send but to you. Being the oldest tenant on the estate, I have certain grievances which are not suitable to others; I have been a tenant to you for 16 years. Previous to my taking the farm from you the rent was 40*l.*; the rent was advanced to 60*l.*, and the only addition to my place for the 20*l.* advance was about 1½ acres of land at a place called Pont-y-Fachwen, from land enclosed from the common, through which the Golden Grove family received one pound annually. You will see that I have paid you over 300*l.* more than was paid by any tenant during the same period before you became the landlord. Through the adverse circumstances of agriculture I have been applying for reduction in the rent, knowing that other tenants who had no such advancements had been successful, but I have failed. I wrote a letter to Mr. Bell on March 2, 1886 (of which a copy is kept), about the rent, the condition of the house, and the buildings, and, as a proof of the truth of my complaints, the house came down the end of that month. The last rent Mr. Bell received in August 1891; he and Mr. Conway Bell promised to come and see my place, but they never came. Some time after I went to Bodrhyddan. Mr. Bell told me to see Mr. Nice; but I could not press on Mr. Nice for things that ought to have been done previous to his coming. You will see the reason my sending this to you, that I have tried with them and failed. Up to now the repairs promised have not been accomplished. Though I have paid the rent faithfully, the promises made as regards repairs have not been fulfilled. Mr. Nice has promised the repairs, but, most the pity, I am afraid that he will be going before their accomplishment, though the advancement in my rent was higher than any other farm. The buildings, as regards repairs, are more backward. Feeling as I do the depression in agriculture, I most humbly call your attention to the above matters, and beg on you to grant a permanent reduction in the rent. In the letter referred to, sent to Mr. Bell, I said that matters of dispute ought to be settled between landlord and tenant without the interference of others; but in some cases, such as the Royal Commission affords just at present, I think it is good that an interference takes place. I beg to call your assistance in calling their notice on a subject which is between landlord and tenant, that is, with regards to the land tax in this parish. For every 3*s.* that we pay on the same valuation in proportion at Newmarket and Llanasa they pay only 1*s.* there. I consider, if the Commission is worth anything, that they ought to try and remove this, and glad if you will undertake to lay this matter before the Commission, and of giving you further particulars. Also to the remarks made as regards my farm and buildings, I trust and hope that they will receive your kind attention.

"Yours very truly,
"THOMAS ROBERTS."

"Bodnant Hall Eglwysbach R.S.O.
North Wales.

"3rd January 1894.

To Mr. Thomas Roberts.

DEAR SIR,

I have your note. Of the facts you state I know nothing. I believe both Mr. Bell and Mr. Nice have been disposed that no wrong should be done to any of my tenants, yourself of course amongst the number. I will make inquiry as to what you say. The Royal Commission have no power whatever to make the slightest alteration with either landlord or tenant. They are only a Commission to make inquiry, and it is not at all likely they will deal in any important manner with the land tax, which is now what it has been for very many years.

Yours truly,

HENRY D. POCHIN."

59,125. You are still a tenant of Mr. Pochin?—Yes.

59,126. And you are still paying 60*l.* a year?—Yes.

59,127. Have you had any abatement?—Yes.

59,128. How much?—Two shillings in the pound.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,129. What is the acreage of your farm?—47 acres.

59,130. Who was your former landlord before Mr. Pochin bought the farm?—Mr. Morgan.

59,131. Did Mr. Pochin advance your rent 20*l.* as soon as he bought it?—Yes.

59,132. Did he make any improvements or buildings?—The buildings were bad, and the pine end of the house came down. In eight years I paid 160*l.* before he repaired.

59,133. He had made no improvements before he advanced the rent?—None, not a half-penny worth.

59,134. Do you know what that place was sold at?—I do not remember.

59,135. Then you object to game farming, that is, for the landlord to let the shooting?—I object to the same land being let to two tenants.

59,136. You would have no objection to your own landlord to go over your farm to shoot?—None. I expected sympathy, and I have had it from the old landlord, but as for strangers they care nothing for tenants nor anybody else.

59,137. They treat you just as they please, do they?—Yes.

59,138. How soon was the pine end of your house built after it fell down?—As soon as they could.

59,139. Have you made any application for a reduction of rent besides this?—Yes, many times to the agent.

59,140. What was his reply?—If I did not like to pay it, to leave it, as he could sell it to someone else.

59,141. Then, I suppose, you had no place to go to, had you?—No, and I had a lot of children.

59,142. How long do you think you can go on at this rate?—Oh, it is not paying now at all, only I have something else.

59,143. You will not be able to pay for it?—Never—not for years. In the course of this time I have been having 20*s.* per hobbit for wheat, and 16*s.* per hobbit for barley.

59,144. How many years ago is that?—16 years.

59,145. How much is it now?—The wheat 9*s.* and barley on the top land 8*s.* per hobbit.

1 September 1894.]

Mr. THOMAS ROBERTS.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

59,146. What do you call the hobbit?—168 lbs.

59,147. With all that you are obliged to pay more rent, half as much again, are you not?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,148. What was the date of the sale of this farm?—I am not sure of the date, but I paid 16½ years.

59,149. That would be about 1877 or 1878?—It might be.

59,150. Were there any other farms besides this one sold to Mr. Pochin at the same time?—Yes.

59,151. Were those farms advanced?—Some of them.

59,152. Do those tenants still pay this advanced rent?—No, they have been reduced.

59,153. Permanently reduced?—Yes, some of them.

59,154. Then they have been treated better than you have?—Yes.

59,155. Have you done anything to offend your landlord?—It seems that I have. When the house went down I went rather cross, and somebody put it in the Rhyl newspapers. I had no hand in the work, though, probably, it has done me a lot of harm.

59,156. Announcing that the house had fallen down?—Yes, on the family. My son's family lived there.

59,157. You think you have had to suffer in consequence?—Yes, I cannot account for it in any other way. I am as good a farmer as any on the estate.

59,158. Will your neighbours say that?—Yes, every one of them.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,159. Did you make any improvements upon this farm before it was sold?—Oh yes, a good deal.

59,160. In what shape?—Enclosed and cultivated land.

59,161. Did you improve any land?—Yes.

59,162. Did you drain any?—No.

59,163. Did you receive any money from your landlord for doing so?—No.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

59,164. Then do you consider that it was on your own improvements that he advanced the rent?—Yes, by all accounts.

Mr. Grove.

59,165. Do we understand that for eight years these repairs were not done, and that you paid the extra rent of 20*l.* each year?—Yes, before the house was rebuilt.

59,166. And you paid the 20*l.* extra for 16 years, did you?—Yes. This is the last receipt (producing same).

59,167. Do you complain of damage by game when you were there?—No, there is not much game at all. The place is too poor.

Professor Rhys.

59,168. Do you know at all how much Mr. Pochin gave for the farm?—No.

Sir John Llewelyn.

59,169. What was the date of the sale?—I answered the question before, and all I can say now is that I have paid the increased rent since the sale for 16½ years.

59,170. It was sold, I think, by Mr. Morgan?—Yes.

59,171. Did you make any claim upon Mr. Morgan for the improvements?—No; I could live very fairly well under the old rent, and the years were better then.

59,172. Yes, but when it was sold, did you then make any claim for the improvements you had made?—No.

Chairman.

59,173. The following questions are by Mr. Vincent: "Your landlord did put you up a new house, did he not?"—Yes.

59,174. "Was it not the old house which fell down?"—Yes.

59,175. "You are still tenant, are you not?"—Yes.

59,176. Do you consider you will be able to make a living off your farm at the rent of 60*l.* a year?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS MORGAN called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

59,177. Do you understand English?—Not very well.

59,178. Do you understand English well enough to hear this read, or would you like to give your evidence yourself?—I will try.

59,179. You will read it yourself?—No, I would prefer someone else reading it, and I would rather give my evidence in Welsh. My English is not good enough.

Chairman—continued.

59,180. We will have it read, and then any questions that may be asked will be asked in Welsh?—Thank you, my Lord.

59,181. Where do you live?—T'an Llan Farm, Cwm, near St. Asaph.

59,182. You are a tenant farmer?—I am.

59,183. And who is your landlord?—My landlord on the farm where I live is Captain Rowley Conway, of Bodrhyddan.

Chairman—continued.

(The following statement of the witness was read) :—

My evidence relates to: (1) game; (2) rent; (3) improvements; (4) charges on land.

With regard to game, I will show that considerable damage is caused to the land, and that the land is let by landlords at high rents, and they further let the right of sporting to private parties, and besides the damage committed by game damage is also committed by sporting, and no compensation whatever paid therefor. I will show that the rents in farms are too heavy; that although produce has fallen to less than one half in price compared with the prices 10 or 20 years ago, the rents remain the same, and the rents and rates and other burdens make farming a very precarious industry. About 20 years ago I followed my father as the tenant of certain charity land in Cwm Rhuddlan, and paid rent 13*l.* a year to the schoolmaster of the parish school. The vicar, Mr. Thomas Griffiths, took the management of the school into his own hands. There were no trustees of the land, and the rent was paid to the schoolmaster referred to. The vicar dismissed the schoolmaster and appointed a schoolmaster himself, and afterwards he called a vestry to appoint a trustee of the land, and he was himself appointed trustee and then gave me six months' notice to quit the land, and he then let it, one half to a workman of his and one half to a publican who lived close by for 2*l.* more rent. The land was seven acres, and I was paying 17*s.* more for this land than any other land adjoining, and though I paid my rent regularly, he gave me the notice without any reason assigned. I had improved the land to a great extent, in fact it had cost me over 10*l.* an acre in improving, and I received no compensation whatever.

About 21 years ago I took a farm with my brother in the parish of St. Asaph, called Wern Ddu, 115 acres in extent, and the rent 175*l.* This farm was in a very bad state of cultivation. Mr. Dodd, then owner, agreed that he would drain a certain field, and build a new house and repair the outbuildings. Mr. Dodd did do a little on the outbuildings, but did nothing else, and died about six or seven years afterwards. Mr. Cayley, a gentleman from Yorkshire, became the owner, and when I complained to him that certain things had not been done which had been promised by Mr. Dodd, he asked what I had to show, and I told him only the word of Mr. Dodd. I had nothing in writing. He said if I did not like the place as it was I might leave it, and I said it was very hard after I had spent so much money, but I suggested if he would appoint a respectable man I would appoint one, and let the two men go over the farm and see what had been done, and whatever they decided we were entitled to for the improvements, then both of us to agree, and I would give up the farm, but he refused to agree to that arrangement. Afterwards I got an agreement drawn up setting out terms for valuation, and I called upon Mr. Cayley and his agent, Mr. Birch, at Llanerch and asked them if they would agree to that and sign it. Mr. Cayley refused, and I was served with six months' notice to quit and was compelled to leave. We did receive 2*l.* an acre for leaving the fields under grass, but we received nothing as compensation for improvements, which amounted to at least 300*l.*

Sir John Llewelyn.

59,184. You paid 13*l.* a year to the schoolmaster. Then the vicar increased that; is that it?—Yes.

59,185. Then the vicar was acting as trustee?—Yes.

59,186. Have you a copy of the claim which you made when you went to Wern Ddu?—I do not know where it is at present.

59,187. You sent in a counterclaim for 300*l.*?—No, I said it was thoroughly lost to myself and my brother, all but 300*l.* in our opinion.

59,188. Did you put in a counterclaim at all?—No.

59,189. How long ago was it you left Wern Ddu?—13 years.

Professor Rhys.

59,190. You consider you suffered loss because you had not got a certain promise down in writing?—I consider that the state of the cultivation of the farm was at least 300*l.* better when we left it, and we lost that amount.

59,191. What I was referring to was this. You said you had had a promise from an agent or a landlord, but you had nothing in writing to show that you had had that promise when that man died?—Yes, I would have trusted his word that he would have complied with everything that he promised.

59,192. He died?—He died. In fact he was a noted gentleman in the whole country for making buildings and fences for all his tenants, particularly to a farm in such a filthy state as Wern Ddu, close to such a grand mansion as Llanerch, which was close by.

59,193. That was Mr. Dodd?—That was Mr. Dodd. I had faith in him, and I should trust anything to him, and I think no doubt if Mr. Dodd was alive the thing would have been done by degrees. It might not be done for a few years, but he would do it, I am sure of it.

59,194. Do not you think it would be well in every case, however much trust you have in your landlord, to have things down in writing?—I am of that opinion in future.

Mr. Grove.

59,195. Is there much damage by game to your knowledge?—In what place?

59,196. In the district that you know?—Yes. After we left Wern Ddu I took a farm under the late Sir Pyers Mostyn, Talacre, close by Talacre Hall, jointly with my brother, my only brother. When we were agreeing for the farm Sir Pyers Mostyn asked us would we have the kindness not to kill every hare on the place. I asked then whether such a stock of rabbits and hares were to be kept on the farm as there used to be in the past time. "No," he said "they all belong to you." "Well, I will not kill them," "Sir Pyers," I said. I never killed a hare during the last 12 years on the farm, I did not, nor did my brother either. My brother lives on that farm, and I live under Colonel Conway on another farm, but we farmed the two.

59,197. Did you get any compensation for damage done?—Never.

59,198. Did you ever ask for it?—Not yet. In a very short time after we took the farm Sir Pyers Mostyn died, and the shooting was let to a gentleman, Mr. Reynolds, of Reynolds and Cunningham, of Liverpool or Manchester, I do not know where, and his friends, and we acted towards them exactly as we would towards our landlord. To show that, the keepers used to put some hen pens round our fields, and we would allow them every convenience that we could. But it was found that the keepers were killing the rabbits and the hares without end, and some poachers as well joined them. In a very short time the keeper was dismissed by Mr. Reynolds, because he found out that there were some hampers of rabbits going to meet a certain man to go to Liverpool from him, or something of that sort. However, he was dismissed. After that there was another keeper appointed, and in a very short time after he came in we found five or six cats had been killed in the course of four or six months, and at last we found a valuable dog of mine, which I would not take 16*l.* for, killed. There was a plantation close to the front of the house, within about 120 yards. Two men, or one of the men and my brother's young boy, went to look for the dog. That was on the Tuesday evening after they had missed him on the previous Sunday, and they found in the plantation a mark of something being in a trap, and they found a stick and a bait on it within four or five yards one side, and they found the dog close by buried in the soil, and they found the dog had been entrapped, cutting his leg.

59,199. This is a long history. Kindly make haste over it?—I am sorry to take up time. However, we found the keeper had killed the dog, and he confessed that he did.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,200. The keeper confessed?—The keeper confessed that he did.

Mr. Grove.

59,201. Did you get compensation for the dog?—No. I wrote to Mr. Reynolds about it, and the end of the correspondence was this: I asked him would he be kind enough to let me know when he was coming to Talaere, as I would like to speak a few words to him privately, and he never answered my letter. I never heard anything from him.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,202. Do you suffer damage in any other way from sporting tenants besides the destruction of dogs and cats?—Yes.

59,203. Do they damage your crops?—I remember 14 of them going over the fence from the road to a field of corn within less than 20 yards to the gate, and go in two different places, and go across the corn.

59,204. I suppose these sporting tenants would be Liverpool merchants chiefly?—I believe they were.

59,205. And they would not have the same consideration for a tenant farmer as a landlord ordinarily would have?—No. I believe that my landlord would never do such a thing.

59,206. You find that there is a great objection to these sporting tenants?—There is.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,207. Will you tell me who appointed the vicar, trustee of this place?—There was some sort of vestry meeting. There were but very few in the vestry, I understand. It was very easy to get a vestry in the parish without one in a hundred in the parish knowing about it.

59,208. Is there no notice on the church door?—Yes, but nobody goes to church.

59,209. Is there a chapel in the parish?—Yes, two.

59,210. Was there no notice there?—No.

59,211. Then it was illegal was it not. What was the nature of the improvements you made amounting to 300*l.*?—We turned the land from exhausted land to a thick grass land, a good meadow. It was in the holding of my father and myself for between 50 and 60 years; well, my father held it before I knew anything—before I was born.

59,212. Was the land a wilderness before, or how did you manage to make these improvements?—Oh, it was between my father and myself.

59,213. By manuring?—Yes, and draining some of it.

59,214. And you were never paid a penny?—Never had a penny.

59,215. And never made a claim on the landlord?—No, because I understood we had no chance of getting any, because that passed about 20 or 21 years ago.

59,216. What was the reason you had notice to quit?—I cannot say, only that I am some sort of a Nonconformist member—nothing else.

59,217. Then you are a Nonconformist, are you?—I am.

59,218. Was there a Churchman replaced on the farm in your place?—Yes. The two tenants are to be seen at church sometimes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,219. In what parish is this farm that you have now got, situate?—Where my brother lives.

59,220. Yes?—In Llanasa parish.

1 September 1894.]

Mr. THOMAS MORGAN.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

59,221. Are you in the same parish?—No, I live in Cwm parish under Colonel Conway, but I took this farm jointly with my brother to help him—my only brother.

59,222. Are both these parishes Welsh-speaking parishes?—Yes.

59,223. Do you think that the majority of the tenant farmers there use Welsh in their homes?—Yes.

59,224. Do they chiefly go to church or to chapel?—Well, most of them go to chapel.

59,225. What is your estimate of the members as near as you can say. I do not want it exactly, but the general aspect of things. Do most of them go to chapel, or most of them go to church?—There is only one in 80, in the parish in which I live, who go to church.

59,226. Only one in 80?—I believe so: there are more in the parish of Llanasa, I understand.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,227. Do you consider that there are many Nonconformists who are afraid to come forward to give evidence before this Commission?—Well, there are a great many I know.

59,228. A gentleman before us yesterday said it was all false—that there were none afraid to come before the Commission?—Oh, there are a great many. There is no doubt about that.

Sir John Llewelyn.

59,229. You are not afraid, at all events. Do you think they have any good grounds for being afraid?—No.

59,230. But there is a general sort of fear that something might happen?—Yes. I only want to state the facts, and the grievances that I find in the neighbourhood where I have lived all my life.

59,231. Are they aware that there is such a thing as the Witnesses' Protection Act?—Some know it, and some do not know it.

Mr. Grove.

59,232. Why are they afraid to come forward; have they told you so personally, some of them, in conversation?—I have heard some saying that they would much rather not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,233. Did they give any reason?—They were afraid the landlord would take it unkind of them.

Chairman.

59,234. This is a question by Mr. R. Bromley. "Although no claim was made for the 300*l.* by you, did you ask for a valuation?"—I did.

59,235. "Did the landlord refuse to entertain it?"—He did.

Chairman—continued.

52,236. The following questions are by Mr. Vincent: "You never saw a Welsh sportsman walk through standing corn, did you?"—Yes, the keepers. I have seen them go through many times. It is very seldom that we see the landlord go, but the keepers, and some friends of theirs, break the fences and go through the corn in all directions, and through their doings we find that they create a deal of ill-feeling and unpleasantness between the landlord and tenant.

59,237. "Which farm was it that you improved to the value of 300*l.*?"—Wern Ddu.

59,238. "Have you two farms of your own?"—Yes, I have two farms of my own.

59,239. "What reductions or abatements have you made on these two farms of yours?"—There is one of 50 acres, reduced 10*l.*, and making a new building on it at my own expense, a new house and a lot of old buildings, and there is another farm, a small place, that has been reduced 6*l.* That is all grass land.

59,240. You have reduced one farm 10*l.* and the other 6*l.*?—Yes, 6*l.* for 16 acres, and 10*l.* for 50 acres. One farm I only bought about 12 months ago, and the rent was to be the same as it was before the tenant took it from the late Mr. Sisson about six years back.

59,241. "When you took Wern Ddu Farm, was it not at a reduced rent at first?"—For the first four years. I entered the farm for a half year's rent the first year, because one tenant took it and he came there with his horses and worked for a fortnight and ran away. We came there in the middle of February, I remember, and very late, and I wanted to pay only half a year's rent for that year, and Mr. Dodd divided the half-year's rent into four years' reduction.

59,242. "How many tenancies have you had in your life?" How many farms have you occupied during your life?—Only those three: the one I live in, Wern Ddu, and the one occupied by my brother under Sir Pyers Mostyn.

59,243. That is three?—Yes; but I have lived at the same place all my life. The other two I hold jointly with my brother.

59,244. "Was not your claim for improvements 26*l.* only?"—They paid 2*l.* an acre to leave two fields by the house unploughed up which we had laid down. We received about 25*l.* to 26*l.* That was 2*l.* an acre.

59,245. "Is that the only claim you ever made?"—We asked for a valuation. We did not make any claim. We asked for a valuation upon the improvements, and we could not get it. They had promised us for leaving those two fields 2*l.* an acre, and we found we had better take the 2*l.* than have nothing.

59,246. I think you answered that in your reply to Mr. Bromley's question—that no claim was made for the 300*l.* by you. You did ask for a valuation, but the landlord refused to entertain it?—That is so.

59,247. "Is not this your solicitor's letter, marked A" (handing same to the witness)?—I believe it is. Yes, I have seen this letter.

1 September 1894.]

Mr. THOMAS MORGAN.

Chairman—continued.

59,248. "Are you the Mr. Morgan who stopped Mr. Hughes, of Kimmel, from hunting?—I remember Mr. Hughes, of Kimmel, coming through my land and striking me. I never intended to stop him from hunting. I never thought of that; but there was a great party of hunters came across my farm and through my land. I went out and asked the first one would he allow me to speak a word or two with him. He refused to take any notice, but jumped away. I happened to take hold of the horse. He wanted me to loose his horse. I did not know who in the world the gentleman was. It was in the middle of my yard, and about half-past two in the day. He said, "Loose my horse." "Just let me speak a word to you, please," I said. He refused to do it, and struck me across the head here, and two others used their whips and knocked me down thoroughly, and went away.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,249. Did you take out a summons against them?—No, I did not.

59,250. Why not?—Well, I had seen my landlord, and Mr. Hughes did not know me, and one thing and another, and I let it drop, but the thing that vexed me was that he struck me. I was not so much against them in hunting, provided they did not open the gates and break down the fences. I worked pieces of land in the parish of Newmarket, about four miles off, at that time. I had some sheep there, and they were all astray from Saturday until Wednesday. I went to inquire about them, but the gate was open, and there were two or three gaps in the field. I had been arguing that question with some of them.

59,251. Then you had in fact suffered inconvenience?—Yes.

59,252. This person who struck you; I think you said his name was Hughes?—Mr. Hughes, of Kimmel; well, there were two other gentlemen struck me as well as him.

59,253. Has he ever apologised to you?—No, he did not, but I had some conversation with my landlord, Colonel Conway, and we dropped everything. I was very sorry that I did take hold of Mr. Hughes' horse, but I did not know in the world who he was.

59,254. But he appears to have been a trespasser, on your statement?—Well, he was, thoroughly.

59,255. And he being a trespasser you took hold of the rein?—He was a trespasser.

59,256. Of course he did not know you at first, and did not know, I understand, that you were the occupier of the farm?—So I understand.

59,257. You were within your legal rights, as far as I can make out. Had these people come through your land before at any time?—Yes, very often, and they came afterwards, and Mr. Hughes came afterwards with a company, and I was in the yard. I did not say anything to them. I remember that some other gentlemen in this room now were amongst the party.

59,258. Why did not you sue him for assault?—Well, I did not like to do it. I respect the gentleman so much as that, that I did not like to bring forward his doings. I was very much vexed at the time, though.

59,259. They appear to have been three to one at any rate, according to your story?—I am telling the truth.

Chairman.

59,260. This is another question by Mr. Vincent. "Is this document a receipt from your solicitor" (handing same)?—I do not understand the whole of this receipt; my solicitor wrote it whatever. I remember I was put in court for a half-year's tithe by the landlord or the agent, and I went to Mr. Adams to defend myself, and that belongs to that correspondence, I suppose.

Chairman.

Do you wish this read, Mr. Vincent?

Mr. J. E. Vincent.

The letter, not the receipt.

Chairman.

The letter is from Llewelyn Adams, solicitor to Messrs. G. Edwards and Western, and is as follows:—

"Denbighshire Lieutenancy Offices,

"Ruthin, 11th June 1883.

"Dear sirs, Morgan v. Cayley. I have seen Mr. Morgan to-day, and he says that, on payment of the 26*l.* and my costs, he is content that all matters between himself and Mr. Cayley shall be considered as settled. Yours faithfully, Llewelyn Adams."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,261. Were they your solicitors?—Mr. Adams was mine.

59,262. And who were Edwards and Weston solicitors for?—Mr. Cayley.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,263. As I understand, Mr. Cayley had commenced an action against you?—Yes.

59,264. Then you counterclaimed, and then there is the compromise of your counterclaim for 26*l.*?—I did not know that there was a counterclaim at all made against them. I do not understand it. I do not remember. They sued me for a half-year's tithe and for a half-year's rent as well.

59,265. As I understand, Mr. Cayley brought an action against you?—Yes, two cases.

59,266. Then it was you who counterclaimed, as far as I can see?—Well, it was in the hands of my lawyer. I do not remember what was done.

Chairman.Mr. Griffiths.

59,267. This is a question by Mr. R. Bromley: "Is there any inconvenience to farmers to attend and give evidence at the present time?"—There is. These fine days are very busy ones—it is the middle of the harvest.

59,268. It is an inconvenient time?—It is so.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. LLEWELYN JOHN HENRY called and examined.

Chairman.Chairman—continued.

59,270. Are you agent to the Duke of Westminster for the Halkyn Castle Estate?—I am.

59,271. Will you kindly give us any evidence which would be of interest to the neighbourhood and the Commission, and confine yourself as far as possible to the particulars of the estate, and not go over the whole general ground. We have had some things so many times, as, for instance, the date of entry, and so on?—I reside at Jygan y wern, in the parish of Halkyn, in the county of Flint. I am a justice of the peace for the county of Flint. I am the owner of an estate of between 400 and 500 acres in extent, situate in the parishes of Halkyn and Holywell, in the county of Flint, and I have also assisted in the management of estates in Flintshire, belonging to members of my family, of about 800 acres in the whole. Since 1889 I have been the agent of the Duke of Westminster for the Halkyn Castle estate, the whole of which is situate in the counties of Flint and Denbigh. I was born close to the Halkyn Castle estate, and have been well acquainted with the Flintshire portion of it all my life. The Denbighshire portion of the estate is purely mineral property containing coal and lead. The estate in Flintshire is known as the Halkyn Castle estate, and contains about 2,730 acres, divided into mountain farms, containing altogether about 211 acres, lowland farms 2,377 acres, accommodation land 140 acres, with 34 cottages and not more than two acres attached to each. In addition to the foregoing farms and lands the Duke is also the owner of the mines and minerals in and also in a very considerable tract of common and other lands in the neighbourhood of the Halkyn Castle estate. There are about 99 tenants of different classes occupying the surface of the Halkyn Castle estate, classified as follows:—

34	holdings	under	2	acres
9	"	of	2	acres
30	not	exceeding	20	acres
11	"	"	50	"
6	"	"	100	"
8	"	"	200	"
1	exceeding	200	acres.

The rental of the surface tenants of the Halkyn Castle estate is about 2,971*l.* per annum. The land is very variable in quality. Some of it is let for 25*s.* per acre per annum, 59,269. I suppose they are able to attend the market, are they not?—Well, they will not attend it now, if they can help it. They would rather be at home if possible.

other portions as low as 17*s.* per acre, and taking it all round it averages about 22*s.* per acre. The arable land ranges from one-half to two-thirds of the whole estate. The tithe is paid in the first instance by the Duke, but the tenants repay it when they pay their rents. The Duke does all the repairs and improvements on the estate. The tenants do the cartage and the Duke pays them for doing so. In the case of new buildings erected at the request of the tenant, the tenant carts the materials free of charge and the same with pipes for drainage, but the Duke never charges any percentage upon new buildings or for repairs or improvements. The Duke also pays all costs of drainage except as above-mentioned, the tenant carries the pipes. There are no leases, only annual agreements on the estate. I have been carefully through the estate books for a number of years past, and I find that—

There was expended on the Estate for Repairs.							There was also expended on the same Estate for Improvements during the same period.

From the last date to the present time I may safely state that 20,000*l.* have been expended in repairs and improvements.

59,272. From 1886 to 1894, 20,000*l.* has been expended in repairs and improvements?—Yes.

59,273. Could you separate them?—I am afraid I could not off-hand.

59,274. If we took it about half each, would that be about it?—I think that would be about it.

There have been no alterations made in the farm rents during the last 45 or 50 years, except in cases where lands have been added to or taken from a farm, and this to no considerable extent. The largest farm on the estate has paid the same rent for 50 years, less the large per-centage allowed from time to time by the Duke. The same families have remained tenants on the estate for very many years, in one case over 400 years, and in several others from 100 years down to 60 and 50. For many years more money has been expended on the estate in repairs, improvements, &c., than the income derived from it. The rents have never been raised. The last valuation of the estate was made in 1846, but recently the Duke has had eight of the largest farms revalued, with the result that two of them remain at the same rent and the rents of six are reduced. The Duke has always treated his tenants most liberally. Previously to 1885 he allowed for some years 20 per cent. From 1885 to 1890 inclusive he allowed 25 per cent., and if a farmer gets into trouble and is unable to carry on, and leaves his farm, his arrears are wiped out. If a tenant has any complaint or request to make, I am, as agent, always accessible. I reside almost in the middle of the estate, and, in addition, the estate office is daily open from 10 to 4. On an average 30 to 40 persons are employed on the estate in various capacities, and salaries and wages are paid every fortnight, which average from 45*l.* to 50*l.* weekly. The Duke subscribes very largely to churches, chapels, schools, and local charitable objects. The wants of the poor of the whole neighbourhood receive every consideration, whether tenants or not of his Grace, and the rabbits on the estate are divided between them. Not a single head of game is sold off the estate, the rabbits are distributed amongst the poor, and the game in the neighbourhood. A few years back the Duke erected a church and rectory-house at Halkyn, at a cost of 30,000*l.* There are three chapels on the estate, the sites of which were given by the Duke. The Duke is also a large subscriber to Nonconformist funds. With one or two exceptions the whole of the agricultural tenantry on the estate are Nonconformists. On the common land belonging to the Duke the occupiers of adjoining farms and cottagers, but very few of the Duke's tenants, turn stock on to graze. The Duke does not interfere with them, but he is very much annoyed at the unfairness with which this privilege is exercised. In one case a shopkeeper at Halkyn, who owns a house and shop and about five acres of land, turns many hundreds of sheep out, and for several years he has turned bullocks as well to the injury of the cottagers and farmers. This shopkeeper is one of the Flintshire County Council, and he ought not to turn out more than a cow and four or five sheep.

59,275. Then for many years more income has been spent on the estate than the income derived?—Yes.

59,276. That is to say, if the proprietor of this estate had no other means there would have been nothing for him or for his family?—Nothing, my Lord.

59,277. He would have had nothing to spend at all for his own living?—No; his Grace will have nothing at all this year.

Sir John Llewelyn.

59,278. Is that owing to the bad state of repairs previously?—Well, I have only had five years' experience of the Duke's estate, but for very many years beyond the five there has been this heavy expenditure upon the estate—for 26 years, I dare say.

59,279. That sort of condition of things cannot go on?—Well, I hope it will not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,280. Upon what has this great expenditure taken place? Upon buildings or fences?—New buildings, repairs and drainage, altering fences.

59,281. I take it that the buildings must have been very much out of repair when this expenditure commenced?—No doubt they were.

59,282. One question about the rental. We are not always able to get the rentals at the beginning of the century. Can you give us the rental of this estate at an early period, say 1815 or about that period?—I could not do it off-hand, but I could forward such evidence to the Commission, although I am not prepared to do it to-day.

59,283. Could you not make up a list of the farms with the rents for us for two periods besides the period with which you are dealing, say the commencement of the century and about 1850 or so?—I am afraid the returns would be very incomplete because a great deal of the property has been lately purchased and some exchanges made—so that I could not get at exact details.

Mr. Grove.

59,284. Has there been any County Council teaching of butter-making and cheese-making at Halkyn, or near there?—At Holywell there has been—in this room.

59,285. Do you approve of that? Do you think it is beneficial?—I have no doubt it would be beneficial, but I do not see people attending. I attended several lectures here myself at Holywell, and I did not see a single farmer or farmer's son in the room.

59,286. Do you think by some means the teaching might be made of more interest to the farmers?—I think you would have to pay them for their attendance at a lecture.

59,287. Do any of your tenants use a separator, so far as you know?—No, not to my knowledge.

59,288. Have you any opinion as to railway rates,—whether they are fair?—No, I have not, we are on the mountain side.

59,289. No claims under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—None.

59,290. Do you think the tenants, generally speaking, are acquainted with the provisions of the Act?—I should think they are not.

59,291. Has there been any increase in local rates of late years?—I think so; I could not tell you to what extent.

59,292. Do you grant leases?—We are never asked for them.

59,293. If you were asked for them you would?—Oh, yes.

59,294. Do you get many changes of tenancy?—Very few, and when there are changes, when a farmer dies, we always allow his widow to remain upon the farm, or take his son on.

59,295. Speaking of the district generally, are there many applications for the farms?—A very great many.

59,296. Have there been any sales of large agricultural estates in this district?—Not in this immediate neighbourhood.

Professor Rhys.

59,297. Are your tenants mostly Welsh speaking?—Mostly so.

59,298. Do you ever have any difficulties about the language?—Oh, no; I speak Welsh to them.

59,299. Then of course you have no difficulty?—No.

59,300. What is about the average size of your farms upon this estate?—Well, I have given the particulars in my evidence.

59,301. Do the farmers have a number of servants, or mostly labouring men living in cottages?—Mostly labouring men living in cottages, and their sons too.

59,302. Have you had tithe difficulties in this district lately?—We had some little time ago, but none of his Grace's tenants were engaged in it at all.

59,303. There has been no tithe difficulty lately?—No.

59,304. Do your tenants make cheese at all?—Only one.

Sir John Llewelyn.

59,305. Are there any freeholders near Halkyn?—Several on the mountain, on the common.

59,306. Are they men who have purchased within recent years, or old freeholders?—Their only title is this: the late Marquis of Westminster, father to the present Duke, purchased in 1866 the common rights from the Crown. He purchased everything, the cottages and everything else, but whether it was a mistake or intentionally done, I do not know, he never charged these people any rent, and consequently they are freeholders.

59,307. They were originally squatters?—Squatters.

59,308. Then they are small freeholders?—Small freeholders.

59,309. Have any of these freeholders sold their property?—Yes, the properties have changed hands frequently.

59,310. I take it from what you say they are mostly very small?—Small.

59,311. So small, should you say, that the people were unable to live upon them unless they had some other occupation?—Not all of them. They are all able to keep a cow or two, but many of them work in the mines—collieries.

59,312. Have you done much in laying down arable to pasture?—No.

59,313. I suppose being hill land they are mixed farms?—They are mixed farms.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,314. Is this estate entirely in the parish of Halkyn?—No, it is in three parishes, Northop, Halkyn, and Holywell. Of course the Duke has property in Denbighshire, but that is entirely mineral property.

59,315. The common that is usually known as Halkyn mountain is unenclosed?—Unenclosed.

59,316. When did the Duke purchase that?—The late Marquis of Westminster in 1866.

59,317. What was the purchase money?—I do not know.

59,318. In the return of the Crown sales I find he paid 600*l.* for the Crown's interest, and that was in 1861?—Perhaps I was wrong; it was 1861.

59,319. That is the transaction you refer to?—That is the transaction referred to.

59,320. What was the Crown's interest; do you know?—Merely the surface rights; the mineral rights belonged to his Grace.

59,321. At that time?—Yes, at that time it belonged to the Marquis, who bought the surface.

59,322. How did that come about. We have been told by the Commissioners of Woods and Forests that they recently have reserved the mineral rights in the cases of these sales?—The mineral rights were granted to the ancestors of the present Duke of Westminster, in the time of Charles II.

59,323. A grant from the Crown?—From the Crown.

59,324. Was the late Marquis of Westminster or the present Duke, lord of the Manor of Halkyn?—Yes, lord of the Manor of Halkyn.

59,325. That does not appear to have touched any land in the parish of Holywell?—That must have been a previous purchase, because we have for many years received rents from all the cottages on the Holywell Mountain, or rather most of them; I will not say all.

59,326. Then really what this 600*l.* was for was the interest in the surface, the freehold of the surface?—The surface alone.

59,327. Was this a Crown manor?—It was Crown land, but the Duke as owner of the minerals was lord of the manor at the time that the surface belonged to the Crown.

59,328. Is the mountain land, or waste land, or unenclosed land, subject to rights of common?—The common rights are exercised as I have said before, and in many cases are very much abused. Supposing there is a man who has a few hundred pounds at his disposal, he will overstock the place, and a poor man cannot get money enough for one cow.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,329. What right does this gentleman you spoke of as a county councillor claim to turn out there?—That I do not know.

59,330. Has he any land attached to the place?—He has five acres of his own.

MR. L. J. HENRY.

Chairman.

59,331. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Bromley: "Is there any common land, and has any been enclosed and let to tenants for rent?"—I may say this; that at the Duke's request I have frequently allowed people to enclose, without charging any rent whatsoever. If a man wanted to square or straighten a hedge we always allow him to do so, and do not charge any rent.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,332. Without holding a Court for the people who have the rights of common?—It is a small matter, more or less. It would not be worth more than a few shillings.

59,333. Since the recent Act a lord cannot approve without the consent of the Board of Agriculture. Do you mean you allow bits of this waste to be enclosed without such approval?—That has been done; they raise no objection; I should soon hear about it if they objected.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN DAVIES called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

59,338. Is this your statement?—Yes; my Lord.

59,339. Is it correct, and has it been translated to you?—Yes; it is quite correct.

The statement of the witness was read as follows:—

Evidence of Mr. John Davies, Garn Ychain, Gwaenyngor, Rhuddlan.

I have been tenant of my farm for 14 years.

I left Montgomeryshire, and though I had made many improvements there I received no compensation.

59,340. Whom do you farm under?—Mr. Pochin.

59,341. Whom did you farm under in Montgomeryshire?—Mr. Lloyd, who lived at Tanllan, in the Llanfihangel Parish.

59,342. In Montgomeryshire?—Yes; the farm was on Sir Watkin's estate, but it was sold, and Mr. Lloyd, the purchaser, let it to me after the sale.

59,343. It was sold by Sir Watkin to Mr. Lloyd?—Yes.

My present farm is 160 acres, and I pay 148l. Thirty-two acres of the farm consists of gorse land on a hill side, and rocky land of no use for cultivation. I consider that I am paying too high a rent, having regard to the present state of agriculture, that although produce has fallen so greatly in price, I am obliged to pay the same rent, and I consider that there should be a land court to decide many differences which exist between the landlord and the tenant.

A. 86439.

Chairman.

59,334. This is another question by Mr. Bromley: "What is the tenure of the Halkyn and Penyball Mountain, respectively?"—On the Penyball they pay an annual rent, varying from 6d. to perhaps 5s. or more per annum. The people who live there pay such rentals.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,335. What kind of tenure is it, that is the question?—I do not quite understand the question.

59,336. Under this grant from the Crown, of Charles II., were any rents reserved by the Crown?—No, I think not.

Chairman.

59,337. Another question by Mr. Bromley: "Is the rent reduced upon mining properties where the land has been affected by mining?"—No such case has occurred during my agency.

Chairman—continued.

I can confirm the evidence of the last witnesses on the question of game.

Sir John Llewelyn.

59,344. What was the name of your farm in Montgomeryshire?—Fedw, in the parish of Hirnant.

59,345. When you left it did you make any claim for compensation?—Yes, I did; but I did not get anything.

59,346. What did you claim?—I did not mention anything.

59,347. You did not mention how much?—No; I did not mention anything.

59,348. How long ago was that?—I lived in that farm 15 years.

59,349. You left it 15 years ago?—Fourteen years ago.

59,350. It is 14 years since you left it. Were you there 14 years, or is it 14 years ago since you left it?—I was in that farm 14 years.

59,351. How long ago is it since you left it?—Fourteen years.

59,352. How long had you been there before you left it?—Fifteen years I was in that farm.

59,353. Fifteen years you were there; 14 years ago you left it?—Yes.

59,354. That brings you back to 1880. During the last 14 years have you been in this neighbourhood?—Yes; I have been these last 14 years on this farm.

59,355. What is the name of your present farm?—Garn Ychain.

59,356. You say you can confirm the evidence of the last witnesses on the question of game?—I want to abolish it entirely.

F f

1 September 1894.]

Mr. JOHN DAVIES.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

59,357. To abolish the game?—Yes, they let me the farm; and they let the game to another gentleman who comes over my farm.

59,358. Does the game hurt you?—Yes.

59,359. What sort of game?—They come with three or four or five men, and break the hedges and make gaps.

59,360. It is the men and not the game that hurt you?—The men by hunting the game.

59,361. Who are the men that do the mischief?—They let it to a gentleman from Glyn Castle. His name is Mr. Bates.

59,362. Is he an Englishman or a Welshman?—He is an Englishman.

Professor Rhys.

59,363. Do you think Welshmen behave better when they are in quest of game?—I should think they ought to do so.

59,364. Do you think they do behave better?—No, not as I know—not the least—they are one as bad as the other.

59,365. You do not like to have two tenants over the same land?—No, indeed, one is plenty.

59,366. You do not complain so much of the game itself, as of the men who kill it?—No, not so much.

59,367. You complain more of the men who come to kill it?—Yes, of the keepers. They come breaking the hedges down, and the men come after them, and the sheep are frightened.

59,368. Do any of them knock you on the head sometimes, as we heard in another case?—No, they never knock me.

59,369. You would not stand that?—No.

Mr. Grove.

59,370. If the game does any damage to you you think you ought to be paid for the damage done, do you?—Well, the game does do damage of course—not so much as knocking the hedges down.

59,371. Do you make any claim for compensation for damage?—Yes, I have done so.

59,372. Have you had it paid to you?—No, not at all.

59,373. When you improve a farm yourself do you consider if you leave the farm after you have improved it, that you ought to be paid for the improvements that you have made there?—I ought to be, whatever.

59,374. You have not always had that, have you?—No, not at all.

59,375. Now as to the land court; what do you mean by a land court?—For the farmer to have the rights of his farm.

59,376. You would like the landlord and tenant first to try and agree between themselves, would you?—Yes.

59,377. Both as to the rent, and as to the terms upon which the tenant was to take the farm?—Yes.

Mr. Grove—continued.

59,378. Then if they did not agree you would like a land court to come in and say so-and-so is fair?—Yes.

59,379. That is your idea, is it?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,380. How did you know that this farm of Mr. Pochin's was vacant in Flintshire?—When Mr. Pochin bought the Bodnant estate the man from Montgomeryshire took three or four farms, and he let one to me for two years, and I took it, and he let another to another person, and he received 20*l.* more rent on it than he paid himself to Mr. Pochin.

59,381. He is a sort of middleman?—No, he took this farm and he let it; he asked that which he could let it for.

59,382. You say that a man took four farms from Mr. Pochin?—Yes.

59,383. And he sublet one of them to you?—Yes.

59,384. He was a Montgomeryshire man?—Yes.

59,385. Where was he a native of; was he a native of Llanfihangel?—He is in the grave now.

59,386. Where was he a native of then?—Meifod.

59,387. Did any more Montgomeryshire men come there besides you?—Yes, there is another man who has come there occupying a farm.

59,388. Well, how does he fare?—I do not know; he ought to come here to say how he does if he wants to say.

59,389. I should think he is pretty well satisfied, or else he would come here to tell us?—I should think he would.

59,390. Do you think that your circumstances are as good here in Flintshire as they were in Montgomeryshire?—Not now, because everything has gone so low.

59,391. You were a richer man when you were in Montgomeryshire, than you are here?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,392. When you were in Montgomeryshire, who was your landlord?—It was Mr. Lloyd, who had bought it at Sir Watkin's sale.

59,393. Yes, but I mean before that?—I never had any farm before.

59,394. Did you not have the farm under Sir Watkin?—No, not under Sir Watkin.

59,395. You never were under him?—I never was under him.

59,396. What was the nature of the improvements that you made on that farm?—I made a great deal of improvement. I laid a good deal of lime there, and manure of all sorts. It was very poor when I had it.

59,397. And it was much better when you left?—Yes, and then I put it up to have a drop in the rent, and some fellow came and took it, and he was not there more than a twelvemonth after.

1 September 1894.]

Mr. JOHN DAVIES.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

59,398. Did he come and offer more rent for it?—Yes.

59,399. Would you not like to have a law to prevent people making offers in that way?—That is the way it ought to be.

59,400. Do the people go into your corn at all when shooting?—Yes, they have been.

59,401. Do they send the dogs into the corn?—Yes, they send the dogs, too.

59,402. Have you made any complaints to your landlord about it?—We have tried to get them from there. No, I did not complain to the landlord. I told those that were shooting.

59,403. It was no use to tell them, I suppose. Have you had any abatement in your rent?—10 per cent.

59,404. For how many years?—These two or three last years.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

59,405. Which parish do you come from?—Gwaenysgor.

59,406. Is that a Welsh-speaking parish?—Yes, all Welsh.

59,407. Are you the only farmer from that parish who is coming to give evidence here, so far as you know?—I do not know. Perhaps there are many of them can do it. There are not many of them who have come here.

59,408. Have any come?—There is only one, Mr. Roberts.

59,409. Does he come from the same parish?—Yes.

59,410. Do you think, from your knowledge of the other tenant farmers in the parish, that they are a little afraid of coming forward?—I think they are, many of them.

59,411. Do you think that most of them that you have talked with share in the views that you have expressed to us about the establishment of a land court?—Yes, I believe that all agree about the game, and also about the views in regard to the rents.

59,412. Then, I take it, that in your view rents in that parish are so high that tenant farmers cannot go on paying them long?—No, they cannot. If we do not have soon an alteration, we may go somewhere.

59,413. Have the abatements that have been given been sufficient to make the rent a fair rent?—No, indeed, not enough, by far.

59,414. Then, you think there is really no remedy for this depression except a general reduction of rents in the parish?—That is so, indeed.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

59,415. Have the tenants represented that to the landlords, or to the agents?—Yes, they have, many of them.

59,416. And the only result has been the abatements that you have mentioned?—Yes. Many of them give 15 per cent., 20 per cent., and 25 per cent., too—many of the landlords do—and I think that their land is as dear as any land.

Chairman.

59,417. Mr. Owen Wynne asks a question, "You said, at first, that the farm you had in Montgomeryshire was Sir Watkin Wynn's" when you first occupied it. Was that so?—No, my Lord, I did not.

59,418. I do not think the witness said so. I will ask the shorthand writer to read his note of the evidence.

The shorthand writer read the note as follows:—

"(Q.) Whom did you farm under in Montgomeryshire. (A.) Mr. Lloyd, who lived at Tanllan, in the Llanfihangel parish. (Q.) In Montgomeryshire. (A.) Yes. The farm was on Sir Watkin's estate, but it was sold, and Mr. Lloyd, the purchaser, let it to me after the sale. (Q.) It was sold by Sir Watkin to Mr. Lloyd. (A.) Yes. (Sir John Llewelyn.) What was the name of your farm in Montgomeryshire? (A.) Fedw, in the parish of Hirnant. (Q.) When you left it, did you make any claim for compensation. (A.) Yes, I did, but I did not get anything. (Q.) What did you claim. (A.) I did not mention anything. (Q.) You did not mention how much. (A.) No, I did not mention anything."

59,418a. The following questions are by Mr. Vincent: "What Mr. Lloyd was it that bought your farm?"—He lived in the farm under Sir Watkin before he bought it. Sir Watkin sold many farms in the parish then.

59,419. He was the former tenant, who bought the farm of Sir Watkin. Is that so?—Yes, he bought it of Sir Watkin.

59,420. Mr. Lloyd bought the farm, and then he let it to you?—That is so.

59,421. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Have you not had abatements ever since 1886?"—No, my Lord.

Mr. R. EVERETT JONES called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

Chairman—continued.

59,422. Is this your evidence and is it correct?—Yes.

59,423. You are a tenant farmer. Who is your landlord?—The late Mr. Bell was my landlord.

Mr. R. EVERETT JONES.

Chairman—continued.

59,424. How is the estate managed now. Is it in Chancery, or what is the state of things?—I do not know.

Sir John Llewelyn.

59,425. Is it in the care of trustees or mortgagees?—I have not heard anything.

Chairman.

59,426. How long ago did Mr. Bell die?—A few months ago, my Lord.

The statement of the witness was read as follows:—

Evidence of Mr. R. Everett Jones, Siamber Wen, Newmarket.

I became tenant of this farm in 1889, under Mr. Bell. The farm is 26 acres in extent, and I pay 54*l.* I found that it was impossible to make the farm pay, and I therefore requested Mr. Bell to reduce the rent, and I had some correspondence; but all that I could get from him was to give the farm up, and he could easily get some one else to take it.

59,427. You have asked for a reduction of rent?—Yes, many times.

59,428. And it has always been refused?—Refused each time.

59,429. Do you consider it too high?—Yes, indeed, I consider it too high, and I could not pay the rent when he asked for it.

59,430. You cannot possibly live at the rent, in your opinion?—No, not by far.

59,431. Do you think there are many persons in this district in the same position as yourself?—A good many.

59,432. Why have they not come forward to say so before the Commissioners?—They are afraid of the landlords.

59,433. Is this a letter from your landlord [producing a letter]?—Yes, my Lord.

59,434. Do you wish it to be read?—Yes, my Lord.

“Bodrhyddan, Rhyddlan, R.S.O.”

“DEAR SIR, 3rd February 1893.

“I HAVE your letter. As you say Siamber Wen does not pay you, send me a 12 months’ notice to quit before the 29th September next, and I will let it to some one who will, perhaps, make more out of it.

“Yours truly,

“Mr. R. Everett Jones, WM. BELL.

“Siamber Wen,

“Newmarket,

“Rhyddlan, R.S.O.”

59,435. Do you consider that the farmers in this neighbourhood are afraid to come forward to give evidence before the Commission?—I know they are; I have heard them say so.

Chairman—continued.

59,436. Do the tenants in this neighbourhood know that they will be protected by the law if any case of intimidation is brought before the Commissioners?—I do not understand that. They prefer to be under the burden rather than come forward to make a complaint.

59,437. Are they not aware that the Commission would not hesitate to put the law into force if any such cases came before their notice?—I do not understand that, indeed.

59,438. They do not know that the Commission has power to protect witnesses and would not hesitate to use that power if necessary?—I do not think that they understand that.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,439. Did your landlord build or drain for you?—No, nothing.

59,440. Suppose you left as your landlord requested, you would get another farm?—I had one at the time.

59,441. Was your farm let to another man?—I am there now. I have not gone away. Soon after I received that letter from Mr. Bell he sent me a notice for the rent.

59,442. Were you in arrear with your rent?—Yes, I paid the rent as I could. I could not pay it altogether.

59,443. Do you think you made as much out of the farm as any other man would have made?—I think that I did.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,444. What kind of land is this farm. I see it is over 2*l.* an acre?—It is rather good land, but I could not make that rent out of it.

59,445. Is it grazing land?—Some is grazing land.

59,446. Would you consider it the very best class of land that could be obtained in this county?—Yes, in the neighbourhood where I lived.

59,447. What is the name of the parish?—Newmarket.

59,448. What amount of stock will the farm carry?—I kept a team of horses, to cultivate 26 acres of land, three milking cows, one heifer, and two or three calves.

59,449. What do you mean by a team of horses; how many do you mean?—Two.

59,450. Do you keep any sheep?—Four.

59,451. What were you selling off every year from that farm?—One season 20 hobbits of barley, and in the same year about 20 hobbits of oats.

59,452. How much a hobbit would the barley be?—From 7*s.* to 8*s.* I had for it.

59,453. And the oats?—6*s.* for the oats.

59,454. What else?—Perhaps I would have a heifer or two.

59,455. What would you put on those?—I sold two yearlings for 4*l.* a head this season.

59,456. We will put those at 8*l.* together. What else?—One cow for 8*l.*; nothing else.

1 September 1894.]

Mr. R. EVERETT JONES.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

59,457. What did you do with your butter?—I sold the butter.

59,458. What did you make out of the butter?—I made from 15 to 18 pounds a week from the three cows, full profit.

59,459. What did you get for that; 1s. a pound?—We have been selling it under 1s.

59,460. Would you put it at 1s. the average?—1s. would be the average, taking it all through.

59,461. That is 15s. a week, for how long?—For two or three months, and then it would be reduced.

59,462. Was that all that you made out of your farm?—We took in visitors, and did our best in that way, and all we received went to the landlord, and we could not get enough for him.

59,463. To pay the rent?—Yes.

59,464. Was your farm near the sea; was it on the seashore?—No; no sea within four or five miles of it.

59,465. But do these visitors come there annually?—They are coming to us annually.

59,466. What would you be receiving for lodging these visitors?—About 15s. a week from these people.

59,467. How long would they be there?—They stay with us from five to six weeks.

59,468. Is the house suitable for lodging visitors?—They are coming to the neighbourhood, and they choose to come to us.

59,469. But is the house suitable?—Yes, the house is suitable.

59,470. You would make something from the horses occasionally?—Yes, as much as I could; but it was very little.

59,471. That is by working out?—Yes, as much as I could get.

59,472. Did you sell any colts?—Yes, I would sell one perhaps every other year.

58,473. What would you make for one of those?—From 7*l.* to 9*l.*

59,474. That would be an average of 4*l.* a year?—I sold those when about three months old. About 4*l.* a year would be the average.

59,475. It has been frequently stated to us that in order to make a farm pay the tenant should make three rents. Do you know anything about such a calculation in this part?—I do not quite understand the question.

59,476. Do you know whether there is such a calculation as making three rents in order to make a farm pay in this part of the world—that is to make all payments?—That is necessary.

59,477. Do you know of such a state of things?—I know that many cannot pay for their holdings.

59,478. Of course if the principle is applied to your farm it would show that you are very backward indeed, because you do not even make the rent of it, without talking of ordinary payments. According to the income which you state you have made from your farm you have only made 44*l.* 5*s.*, whereas your rent alone is 54*l.*, without taking other payments into consideration?—I cannot give any other account.

59,479. The wonder to me is that you have been able to keep on so long.

Mr. Grove.

59,480. Did Mr. Bell own much land—many farms?—Not many. He had some farms.

59,481. Did he have them left to him, or did he buy them?—I cannot say how he came into possession of them.

Professor Rhys.

Mr. Bell was the agent of the Bodrhyddan estate and of Mr. Pochin.

Sir John Llewellyn.

59,482. Do you think that someone else might pay this rent?—No, and I told Mr. Bell so himself.

59,483. You think if you could not do it nobody could do it?—That is so.

59,484. How long has the rent been fixed at 54*l.*?—Since I have been there.

59,485. How long is that?—Six years.

Chairman.

59,486. The following question is by Mr. J. E. Vincent: "Your landlord put the place in "thorough repair when you entered, did he not?"—Yes, he put it in a very good state of repair, and he asked me to haul everything towards it.

59,487. You did everything with regard to the hauling of the materials?—Yes.

59,488. What do you consider that that carrying of materials cost you?—I have not made a calculation of the cost. There was not a gate on the place when I entered, and he put me to make holes for the posts and put me with a carpenter to fix them.

59,489. How far had you to draw those materials?—From Rhyl, Rhuddlan, and the neighbourhood, and from Cærwys.

59,490. How far would that be?—Six miles to Rhyl, and to Rhuddlan 5 miles, and 6 miles to Cærwys.

59,491. How long did these repairs take place in doing?—Weeks to make them all. I wish to say one thing more.

59,492. Certainly, say anything you like?—As I said before, Mr. Bell sent me a rent notice after the letter.

59,493. Do you mean a notice to quit?—No, a notice for rent, and the letter stated that I was to give him 12 months' notice. When I went down to pay the rent he had a notice ready for me, and he was going to give me the notice and told me that I wanted to leave. I replied that I did not want to leave; I wanted him to fix a rent that I could pay. After that he served me with a notice.

59,494. Are you under notice to quit now?—Yes, my Lord.

1 September 1894.]

Mr. R. EVERETT JONES.

[Continued.]

Mr. Griffiths.

59,495. Have you as much stock now as when you took that farm?—About the same.

59,496. What compensation will you receive from Mr. Bell after you leave your farm?—I have not made that up.

59,497. Will you receive any compensation for hauling the materials to build the house?—I ought to have.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. WILLIAM EDWARDS called and examined.

Chairman.

59,501. You understand English perfectly?—Certainly.

59,502. Where do you live?—29, Princes Street, Rhyl.

59,503. You have been a farmer all your life?—Yes.

59,504. In 1877 you secured the first prize at the Royal Agricultural Society for the best dairy or stock farm under 100 acres?—Yes.

59,505. And you were appointed a delegate in 1890 to go to Canada for the Canadian Government to report upon the agricultural resources of the Dominion?—Yes, my Lord.

59,506. What do you propose to deal with in your evidence?—What I have been thinking for years from my experience is that it does a great deal of injury to the tenant farmer to have a preferential creditor. It is one of the things which I want to bring before your notice.

59,507. Will you tell us what your opinion is with regard to the preferential claim for rent? In the first place it injures the tenant farmer's credit and it places an unscrupulous agent or needy landlord in a position to let his farm to the highest bidder, which, I think, is unjust on the face of it between the contracting parties. It also has far-reaching effects in other directions. For instance, a tenant farmer when he enters a farm must have implements, seed, and manure, and generally he has to get those upon credit. The landlord is in a position to distrain upon the tenant for his rent and all the goods of those people for his rent, which is the interest on his money, while the other creditors' capital, their interest and their livelihood, are in the goods that they have sold. I think upon the face of it that it is unjust towards the agricultural community in general.

59,508. You do not think it is of any advantage to the tenant farmer himself?—It cannot be. The advantages that I have heard put forward by landlords and agents in argument are that they would not allow a tenant any credit if their claim was not a preferential one, but if you consider that question it comes to this, the general calculation is that a farmer should possess at least 10*l.* an acre of capital before he enters upon a farm; in this district the rent does not amount to more in the majority

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

59,498. You ought to have, but do you expect to receive compensation for the haulage?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,499. May I ask if there is an agreement between you and your landlord?—Yes, there is.

Chairman.

59,500. Have you got it here?—Yes. (The witness produced agreement.) of cases than 2*l.* an acre, and in that case the farmer has to possess five times the amount of rent. Therefore I think that a tenant farmer would be in a great deal better position if he were to pay the rent in advance than to be under the embargo of having a preferential creditor.

59,509. Do you think that under present circumstances any farmer could pay his rent in advance and live?—No, there are not many who could. The capital of agriculturalists has vanished in the last 20 years to a very great extent, in fact they have been paying rent out of capital mostly for years.

59,510. What sort of position do you think the tenant farmers in this neighbourhood are in; are they in a good or indifferent position?—A very indifferent position, my Lord, they have to farm in the majority of cases upon borrowed capital.

59,511. Their position is not as good as it was 20 years ago?—No, not nearly.

59,512. Do you consider the rents are fair or high in this neighbourhood?—The whole of the burdens upon the land are too high altogether.

59,513. Including the rent, in your opinion?—Including the rent and all the other charges; the repairing of the roads and the poor law. Of course the land has to bear all those burdens.

59,514. Do you consider the farmers in this district will be able to go on paying the rents that they do at present?—They cannot possibly.

59,515. They cannot possibly go on in your opinion?—No. They have been paying from capital or else they have been impoverishing the land. They are the only two resources which they have to go to. They use their own private means if they have any.

59,516. What is your opinion of the tenant farmers as a class in this neighbourhood? Are they industrious, thrifty, and hardworking people?—They are industrious, thrifty, and hardworking people and they live very hard.

59,517. Have they, as a rule, improved their lands?—No, I cannot say, as a rule, that they have. In some cases you will see farms are greatly improved, but as a rule the land has not improved.

59,518. Has the land gone back in this neighbourhood; is it not as good as it was?—It cannot possibly be when the crops are sold off and they cannot afford to put the money back into it.

59,519. You have mentioned on your paper special cases of hardship. Can you give any instances?—Yes; I can give two instances where the law of distress has been put in force. The first case I remember very well; it must have been between 15 and 18 years ago, and it is the first I remember. A very thrifty tenant farmer.

59,520. Can you give his name?—Yes; I can give the name of the landlord and of the farmer.

59,521. You had better do so, I think?—The farm he took was Llynwern, within a mile of Ruthin, under Mr. Cornwallis West, and the tenant's name was John Hughes.

Chairman.

Is there anybody representing Colonel West in the room?

(Mr. Vincent.) There will be a note taken for him, my Lord.

(The Witness.) He took the farm which was adjoining the Castle grounds and the game preserves, and at the end of the first year, when he came to thresh his corn, he found that instead of having come from an upland farm to a better one, the yield of his corn was a great deal worse than it was in the upland farm, three or four miles away on the mountain, on account of the damage done by the tame pheasants, which were reared close to his land. He continued to farm for another year, and made a claim for the trespass done by game, and he paid his rent, minus this small claim, which was put down in the rent book as arrears. Shortly afterwards he was taken ill, and he died, and the time had passed within which to give him or his widow notice, the agent to get possession of this farm distrained for the amount appearing in the books as arrears. The consequence was that the widow had to leave the farm, and leave all the improvements of her husband there to the incoming tenant, and she and her family went out of farming altogether.

59,522. Have you got another instance?—Another was on the same estate about five or six years ago. That tenant came and wanted to take under Colonel West a small farm close to the town of Ruthin; he was anxious to go into the milk trade. He took this small farm, and, to make the farm more compact they gave him a few acres of an adjoining farm, from which the crops had been carried to another farm under Colonel West; but they proposed to allow him, as compensation for the crop taken off that land, the difference between the consuming value and the market value. He was to sign an agreement to consume all his crops on this land, and agreeing to take their compensation, which was the difference between the consuming value and the market value of the crop taken from those few acres that were added to his farm. Matters went on for two years.

Chairman—continued.

He improved his land greatly by carting manure from the town, and laying it down for his purposes of grazing and carrying his milk to Ruthin. In addition to the work upon his own farm, he did the haulage for all Colonel West's estate in the town and other places, being allowed so much for team work so much per day. At the end of—I forget now whether it was three or four years, but one of the two—he had run up a considerable bill against the estate for haulage, and he did not receive his cheques for them before the rents, and he allowed one half-year to run as against his claim for haulage and other matters which appeared in the rent-book as arrears. A few days before the 29th September, at which date the last half-year's rent became due under the old régime, they distrained upon his goods for the arrears. The man had nothing to do; he could not realise his corn nor his stock; his milking cattle at that time of the year were quite unmarketable; they appeared all as “barrens,” and he had nothing to do but to allow the sale to go on. In that instance when the persons who attended the sale understood his position they would not bid, and the sale was a failure; they could not sell anything. The result was that when Colonel West heard of it he came down at once from London, and inquired into matters, re-instated the tenant and paid all the expenses, and the tenant is there still. Of course they had to give him credit for his haulage, and pay him a little compensation. I may say that I knew about that compensation, having been asked by the tenant to value the difference between the market value of the straw and the consuming price, and the landlord accepted my valuation and agreed to pay him; but he never did until this event happened. Then the 11l. 15s. (I think it was, if I remember rightly) was added to his bill for hauling material for the estate, and having given credit for all those, there appears to be no debt except the current half-year, and the one to become due on the 29th September. I should have stated to you that the agent distrained before the 29th for the arrears, and after the 29th he put in another warrant for the current half-year, which was due, but not payable until the following Christmas.

59,523. When Colonel Cornwallis West heard of this he reinstated the tenant?—Yes.

59,524. And all this was done without his knowledge or sanction?—Well, we believed at the time that it was done without his sanction, but the result would have been the same; if his friends had not rallied round him, and failed to bid for his stock, the tenant would have been ruined. No doubt his stock would have been given away for an old song; his crops were all there in the stack, and he could not have realised to the best advantage anything.

59,525. From this you contend that the preferential claim is unfair to the tenant, and ought to cease; that is your view?—Yes.

59,526. Have you anything to say about compensation to tenants for improvements?—

1 September 1894.]

MR. WILLIAM EDWARDS.

Chairman—continued.

Yes; I have been assessing damages several times for compensation under the two new Agricultural Holdings Acts. The first of those two Acts I considered, when the effect of it was seen, to be not worth the paper it was written on, and the last is so cumbrous that it requires a farmer to be something more than a lawyer to understand it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,527. Something more than a farmer you mean?—More than a lawyer; he ought to be a Queen's Counsel.

Chairman.

59,528. Have you any ideas to advance or proposals to make as regards compensation to tenants?—I believe that if the contracting parties were put on equal terms to commence with, and the law of distress abolished, and the landlord brought to the position of an ordinary creditor, he would take more care a great deal. I have read a good deal of the evidence given before this Commission, and I believe those gentlemen who have come forward, and said that on many estates the highest bidder is not accepted. I know that that is so on some estates, but that does not make the case better at all. The present state of things gives a landlord who is anxious to make the best of his land (as many are), or an agent, the same handle. I have no occasion to disbelieve what Mr. Pickering said this morning, that he never took the man who bid the highest rent, and I know upon Sir Watkin's estate it is not done; but I know plenty of others who are very glad to take any offer. It creates unfair competition. A man may want to live upon a farm, and he wants to get it at a fair price; another man, if the farm is in decent condition, will offer 20*l.* or 30*l.* more for a hundred-acre farm, because he can see his way to make a living out of that land, and pay more rent for two or three years, and leave it in a bad condition. I know cases where it has been carried on in that way.

59,529. Do I understand you to say that, on many estates, you know of farms being let to the highest bidder?—Yes, I have known that.

59,530. On many? Will you go as far as that?—Yes.

59,531. On many estates?—Yes, especially the small ones.

59,532. Are you in favour of any court of arbitration between landlord and tenant in cases of dispute?—I should think that the present county court, with two practical assessors, would be quite sufficient to decide any dispute.

59,533. Their decision being final?—Well, I should think their decision might as well be final, because the expense of appealing is much more than a farmer could bear, and there is nothing else at his back in this country.

59,534. Is there anything more you want to say on the general heads of this inquiry?—No, I do not think there is.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,535. You mentioned just now the case of a widow. Had she sufficient capital to pay the rest of her creditors after the landlord had had his due?—Yes she had.

59,536. Who is the likeliest person to offer too high a rent for a farm, a man who has capital and is likely to pay for it, or another who is anxious to get the farm at any price?—The latter is more likely at present to offer too much.

59,537. Are there many such do you think?—Yes, too many by far.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,538. What do you mean by saying that the landlord or the agent uses the highest bid as a handle?—What I mean is, his position as a preferential creditor gives him a handle to act in that way. He is in this position, if I can make myself understood. He has a farm to let, and every farm that comes into the market as a rule has a few fields that are a little out of condition, which would come in for a green crop in the following year. Some part of every farm is in good condition always. The better the condition of the farm the more likely is the landlord to make a handle of it and let it to the highest bidder. In that case it creates unequal competition. The man comes in and he sees at a glance that he can make a living at it, and make something out of the land as well if it is in good heart, and the landlord is in this position; that he will certainly get his rent—the first rent is due on the 25th March, generally in this part of the country the tenant enters on the 30th November or the 1st December, and on the 25th March the first half-year's rent becomes due, before that man has an opportunity of realizing a penny of what he has spent up to then. On the 29th September, before he has realized anything for his crops, and only a few lambs or something like that from the grazing part of his farm, the second part of the rent becomes due. The landlord can pounce upon him then, and stop anybody else having a halfpenny-worth of the goods there before he is paid, and even the ironmonger's implements if they happen to be on the farm, in which the ironmonger's capital and profit are all invested, can be sold by the landlord to realize the interest on his capital.

it is getting worse. From my experience I have noticed that these periods of depression come every four years or so. I have also noticed that at the end of every fourth year, when a drop comes, the animals go below their previous condition, and they never touch the highest point that they were at four years before. I believe that comes round by the practice in this country of rearing store cattle and selling them at two years old. When stock are selling high, the farmers keep every calf; there is no veal to be had for love or money; it is overstocked, and two years afterwards down they come.

59,540. What is the difference between the depression at the present time and the depression 20 years ago, have you noticed any difference?—Yes. A good milking cow then, when they were at the lowest ebb, would make 16*l.* or 18*l.*, but now they come to 10*l.* and 12*l.*

59,541. That was hardly what I meant to ask. I meant, were there any particular features in the depression of the present time that were different to those of the depression of say 20 years ago. For instance, I will ask if you have noticed this: that 20 years ago when one thing was low another was high?—Twenty years ago we had not the foreign competition to contend with that we have at present, and every year as we go on, with the cheap rates of transit over the Atlantic and the cheapness of land there as well, and their better mode of cultivation as they learn farming, the competition will get keener in my opinion, year after year, as it has been doing for the last 20.

59,542. There is this to be observed. If it was a year of scarcity about 20 or 25 years ago, a farmer, as a rule, got a higher price for his stock?—It was so then, certainly.

59,543. But it is not so now?—No, it is not so now, and I do not believe ever will be again. We depended more then upon home produce.

59,544. When you talk about the landlord or the agent using the highest bid as a handle, I was thinking perhaps you might refer to cases which have been mentioned to us. Of course landlords and their agents tell us that farms are never let to the highest bidder, but when you talk about the highest bid being used as a handle, I thought perhaps you meant this: that where a tenant made a high bid for a farm, and he was perhaps not a desirable tenant, it was used against a man of credit, a man of capital, when he came to make his bid?—Yes.

59,545. Perhaps he would make his bid and say, "Now the farm is only worth so-and-so." The agent will say, "Oh, but so-and-so was here, and he bid so-and so; if you do not give it I shall let the farm to him?"—Yes, I have known cases occurring in that way, but I did not mean that when I made the remark.

59,546. Do you think it is used in that way?—Oh, I have no doubt about it. I have known it to be used, but not on large estates as a rule; on small ones.

59,547. And you think if the preferential claim was abolished, more care would be exercised by both the agent and the landlord in letting the farms?—Yes, and the sitting tenant would be safer. A man would not be removed for the sake of letting a stranger in. They would prefer a man they knew would pay them, before letting it to a stranger. It is not so now.

59,548. Have you any suggestions to make with respect to the amendment of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I have not.

59,549. Do you think the tenant should have more liberty in the schedules?—They certainly should have more security for their outlay, because you as a practical farmer will know perfectly well that the land will not pay without manure, and first of all if you want to clean a foul 10-acre field, it means a capital of 30*l.* to start with, an outlay in taking the dirt out of that field to commence with. Well, you will have to manure it well, and put green crops in and clean it. Perhaps if it is the four-course system, you will do it twice in five years, and the field, after the second dressing, will be in condition afterwards for years. A man who does that wants more than two years' notice. There is nothing in 12 months. He could not realise out of that field in less than five years. It must take him five or six years to bring it round into condition, and it would take that much again to work it out into his own pocket with profit. It will not pay a man to work a farm until it is as poor as a mountain, and it does not pay him at all; he must go on improving it. To do that, a man must have perfect confidence that he can spend his money and improve his land, and as a rule those men are content to remain where they are, and they are there for generations.

59,550. What you contend is that under the Act a man would not have ample compensation for the expense and labour which he lays out on the farm?—No, under even the two new Land Bills. Under the last one—I began to refer to it before—wherever it has been tried in this part of the country, first of all the tenant makes a claim for unexhausted improvements, or anything else as to which he might have thought he was hardly dealt with, in not having repairs or something of that sort, and he gives notice to his landlord of his claim, and a counter-claim is made by the landlord, and it comes before a court of arbitration or any other court. It is a very expensive process to the tenant farmer, and very unsatisfactory as far as I have seen. I have been acting in one or two cases as a witness. In one case I assessed the claim, and made, as I thought, the tenant's claim as reasonable as possible, but however, the counter-claim of the landlord was quite as much. The arbitrator was a very practical man, and they were practical farmers of course as witnesses on both sides, but the evidence was rather conflicting, and although this gentleman was a thorough practical man, he decided to split the difference between them, and the tenant went away just the same as if he had gone away without saying a word—not a penny.

1 September 1894.]

Mr. WILLIAM EDWARDS.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

59,551. You would not be in favour of depriving the landlord of the right of sending in a claim for deterioration of the land?—Certainly not. The landlord, when he risks a poor and impoverished tenant, ought to be looked after as he is worse than an arbitrary and unscrupulous landlord.

59,552. Do you think it would be more satisfactory then if the landlord had to send in his claim on the same day as the tenant farmer?—Yes, I would consider it more satisfactory, a great deal. If there is a claim let the two claims be sent in the same day, because at present a tenant has to put his claim in first, and if that claim was not put in, no other claim would have been put in. Ten to one the tenant would have been allowed to go away and leave what improvements and what expenses he had had to meet, and not a word would have been said.

59,553. Then you think this, that the Act at present encourages the landlord to send in fictitious claims?—Yes.

59,554. And you think it would meet the necessities of the case if the landlord had to send in his claim on the same day as the tenant farmer?—Yes, and send it to the court of arbitration, whatever it would be; without fixing upon arbitrators, let them bring their witnesses, and let the county court judge decide, or any other practical person who has a practical acquaintance with the law, a presiding judge with two practical assessors, or three if you like, the same as they do now in shipping questions; nautical assessors are allowed to sit there to assist the judge, and in agriculture the same experts are required, quite the same I believe as the Admiralty.

59,555. Would you prefer that process of settling claims to having, say, a public official appointed by the Board of Agriculture, say one in each county?—Yes, if there was a public official who would act as a county court judge, and let him be a practical man if possible. Somebody practical in the law, a practical man, knowing the law, would perhaps do away with some official lawyers in the country.

59,556. Would you say it would be advisable to have somebody who would be in an independent position?—Yes, that is my opinion.

Mr. Grove.

59,557. You have been speaking about amendments in the Agricultural Holdings Act. Suppose we confine ourselves for the moment to the Act as it is at present. Do you think it is beneficial to the tenant farmer in its present state?—No, it has not proved so.

59,558. Are the tenant farmers acquainted with the provisions of the Act?—No, very few.

59,559. Are you a member of the County Council?—I am not.

59,560. Do you know whether they have appointed an analyst under the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act?—No, I do not know.

Mr. Grove—continued.

55,561. You know the Act, I suppose, passed recently?—Yes.

59,562. Do you think that that is likely to be beneficial in getting analyses made of manures and feeding stuffs?—Yes; but I think it would be more beneficial still if the Government would find a means for the farmer to pay cash with. The farmers of this country, when they want to get any pecuniary assistance, have nowhere to go to but to the banks, and they borrow it through individuals; short loans for a few days at exorbitant interest.

59,563. But this Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act simply applies to analysing the stuffs, to see that you get what you pay for?—I know what you mean exactly.

59,564. The Government make certain grants to the County Councils. Could not the County Councils, out of that money, pay for the chemist?—Yes, I suppose they could.

59,565. In our county I think our fee is 7s. 6d.; the County Council pays 5s., and the farmer has to pay 2s. 6d. Do you think that the payment of 2s. 6d. to get a sufficient analysis of a fertiliser or feeding stuff, would be too heavy a payment for a farmer to pay?—No, it would not. It would be a very beneficial thing to get it.

59,566. So that you think, if they took advantage of it, it would be really beneficial?—It would be beneficial to the farmers in the long run, and those who did not make use of it, the dealers, would be afraid to sell any spurious article; once it was in vogue it would have a deterrent effect.

59,567. Do you know whether the Small Holdings Act is in operation in this county?—No.

59,568. It is not?—No; there are no small holdings here.

59,569. Are there many allotments about here?—Very few. I know of none in my neighbourhood.

59,570. You spoke of the amount of capital required for stocking a farm. Of course it varies according to the nature of the farm, certainly but just in a rough way, what would you consider it necessary to have per acre?—Now that the price of stock for the last 10 or 15 years has been lower than it used to be, 8l. will go as far as 10l. would have gone 18 years ago. It requires about 8l. to 10l. an acre to farm comfortably.

59,571. In evidence yesterday it was suggested that an expert might be appointed to go round, and to give instruction instead of the County Council lectures—an expert for each county to visit the farms themselves, and to give instruction on the spot. Do you think that would be advisable?—I believe it ought to commence earlier than that. There ought to be some sort of technical instruction in the schools.

59,572. You think that agricultural teaching in the schools themselves might be enlarged with benefit?—Yes. With the present Education Act compelling children to be at school until they have passed the Seventh Standard, some of them

1 September 1894.]

Mr. WILLIAM EDWARDS.

Mr. Grove—continued.

cannot pass till they are 15 or 16; when they come out of a school they do not know how to take hold of a spade or to handle a plough; whereas, if there were some technical education given in each school, and a field attached to each school, it would be exercise for the boys to go out and work as on a farm, as well as practical education for them.

Professor Rhys.

59,573. Do you think that something of that sort might be done without incurring a very large expense, out of all proportion?—I believe it could be made self-supporting, with decent management.

59,574. In connexion with the schools?—Yes. The strong lads that you get at school, are quite as well able to do some sort of farm work as grown-up persons, and better, especially among green crops.

59,575. You would require an allotment of land, at any rate, for them?—Certainly; you would require a few fields of land attached to each school, and a practical instructor.

59,576. Do you think that that could be successfully carried out?—I believe it could be carried out, and it would be beneficial, too.

59,577. Has that ever been broached by any member of the County Council?—No, I never heard it broached by anybody. I have been talking it over with a friend now and then, that is all.

59,578. What do you think of the breeds of cattle in the district you know of?—The breeds of cattle in this part of the country have been improving for years, and the cattle are of a very good class. They have been crossed with shorthorn bulls, so that now they are a very good class of cattle, for feeding or any other purpose.

59,579. So you do not think there is very much to be done in that direction?—Not a great deal in that direction in this part.

59,580. And with regard to horses?—With regard to horses, there would be.

59,581. There is much more to be done?—It ought to be done, I believe; but it is not as much required now. There are private gentlemen in many of these neighbourhoods now who keep a first-class shorthorn bull, and a shire entire horse, and some roadsters as well. But, on the Continent, I believe, in Germany and other parts, they have a Government inspector, and he will not allow any private individual to travel a horse unless he is perfectly sound. I believe if something like that were done here it would be beneficial to the farmers. There is a tendency even now to use the roughest sires at the lowest prices, whereas it is to their own disadvantage, in the long run, to rear mongrels of that sort.

59,582. Then, when prices are low, you cannot get rid of these animals?—You cannot get rid of them at any price when they are low, but a good animal will always sell well; and, as a rule, a well-bred animal will take less to keep than an ill-bred one.

59,583. Have you thought of any special ways in which our farmers could compete more successfully with the foreigner?—There is no way of competing with them, except encouraging the feeding of beef to bring it on the market at a very early stage. They cannot compete with them in any other way. They can mature the animals in from 18 to 24 months, and bring them on the shambles. They can do that to compete with the foreigners; but as far as the growing of cereals is concerned, and ordinary stock, they can never compete with them, with the present burdens on the land.

59,584. Have you thought of butter factories?—Yes. Butter factories, no doubt, would pay if they were frequently enough planted in the country, so that it would not take the farmer a very long distance to carry his milk. If they were within a radius of say 5 or 6 miles, it would do; but if the milk has to be carried through all sorts of weather, a long distance, it is deteriorating it.

59,585. Have you anything to say about poultry. Do our farmers make as much in that direction as they might?—No, I do not believe they do. There is not much attention paid to poultry; they are left to run about the farm to pick up any spare corn, or anything of that sort. There is not so much attention paid to poultry feeding as there is on the Continent.

59,586. Would it answer, do you think, if they did pay more attention to it?—I think there is no doubt it would.

59,587. You know that the foreigner can send us eggs and poultry very cheap?—Yes.

59,588. But you think it would pay?—Oh, I believe it would pay.

59,589. Have you thought also of fruit growing?—No; I do not think fruit growing would pay. Our seasons are too cold and too wet for it.

59,590. You do not think that could pay?—No. They are now on the Continent preparing factories to preserve all fruits which will grow in the open air, such as grapes. They can grow those in Canada in the open air, and realise as much as 6*l.* to 7*l.* an acre out of them, and sell them at 1½*d.* a pound. We cannot compete with anything of that sort in this country.

59,591. While I was mentioning butter to you just now, I ought to have asked you about cheese. Is there as much cheese making in Flintshire as might be expected or as would pay?—No, not nearly as much as there was years ago.

59,592. Would it pay to make more cheese?—Well, I do not know. I could not speak about making cheese from practical experience; I have never had the handling of cheese myself.

59,593. Which do you consider pays best, making butter or cheese?—I should say that making cheese would pay better.

59,594. Is it not the fact that our cheese holds its own, and rather more than holds its own

1 September 1894.]

Mr. WILLIAM EDWARDS.

against American cheese?—Oh, it does now. But in America they are improving their cheese every year, until at last they will make it as perfect as the best Cheshire, I expect.

Sir John Llewelyn.

59,595. Are you in business?—Yes, I am in the spirit trade.

59,596. I mean in business in agriculture?—No, I am not in the agricultural line now.

59,597. Feeding stuffs?—No.

59,598. Seeds, or anything of that sort?—No, I am not in that line. I have been selling artificial manure years ago.

59,599. You are in business as an agent?—As an agent, yes.

59,600. You have had a long experience, I think you told us, as a practical farmer?—Yes, I have.

59,601. What would be your opinion as to fixing rent. Supposing you were a valuer, what would be your principle in fixing it?—I think in the first instance of taking a farm and letting it, I would let the fight be between the two contracting parties; but with a sitting tenant, a man who has been on his farm for years, and did not want to leave, but found that he could not pay his way—that his rent was too high—I would have some sort of a court, the same as you would have a practical man appointed by the Government or the county court judge, with two assessors to say what is the rent that the man ought to pay, and then let him remain. I know of cases of hardship where men have had to move, and their labours for years have been given away to another man, or confiscated altogether.

59,602. Assuming that you were the person employed to settle the question, what principles would guide you?—One principle you have to act upon is to be as near the market as you can, but in different neighbourhoods you would have to collect evidence from the farmers. I am supposed to know something about my own home, but if I were employed in Montgomeryshire or in England, I am not supposed to know everything about the customs there, and the surroundings of the tenant farmer, and it would naturally have to be gleaned from practical men in the neighbourhood.

59,603. I suppose what you would want to know is, what the average of the next 10 years is going to be?—Of course you cannot do that.

59,604. Therefore, as a practical man, you would, perhaps, ask for the past 10 years instead of the next 10 years. What would you say to that?—I should calculate it in this way. I should take the drop in agriculture over the last 20 years, and the value of the agricultural produce in the last 10 years, and I should calculate that it would drop as much in the next 10 as it had done in the last 20.

59,605. Do you think a sliding scale feasible in fixing rent?—It is a very tedious question to get at, is that of the sliding scale. The prices vary so much, and the differences in the quality of the stuff sold are so great. Beef in one market is sold at 6d., and in another at 8d., while the difference of the quality of beef may be only a halfpenny, or there may be no difference at all in the quality, so far as the value is concerned. It depends on the surroundings, and on the market where you take it in.

59,606. What is your opinion of the Agricultural Holdings Act. Has it been of use or not?—I do not think it is of any use to the tenant farmer.

59,607. Do you think it has been too cumbrous and expensive in its machinery?—Yes.

59,608. What is your opinion of the size of the farms in this district, large and small?—Farms from 50 to 100 acres seem to answer better to the requirements of this part of the world than any other size.

59,609. We have been told of a great many different sizes, from 30 up to 200 acres?—Yes.

59,610. Is it a good thing for the district that there are many different sized farms?—Yes, I think it is.

59,611. Do you think the tendency has been for people to improve themselves by taking more land?—No, the tendency has been the other way about.

59,612. That is to say they have come down from large to small farms?—I have noticed often a small farmer who made money on a 50-acre farm and was anxious to have more land, and had taken 100 or perhaps 120 acres, after having two or three years' experience on the 100-acre farm, with only capital to handle 50 acres, he finds himself losing money instead of making money.

59,613. Is that owing to want of capital?—Want of capital.

59,614. Did I understand you to say you think a man ought to have 10l. an acre of capital, and as a rule the farmers had only 2l. an acre of capital?—No, I did not say that. The comparison I made was this, that when he required 10l. of capital of his own to take a farm, the credit given to him by his landlord for six months was only for 2l. That is the comparison I made.

59,615. What amount of capital per acre do you think a man ought to have in going into a farm?—From 8l. to 10l., not less than 8l.

59,616. There is no lack of applications for farms, I suppose?—Oh no, there are too many applications as a rule.

59,617. Are there many applications of men who have capital to that extent?—It is rather perplexing for the agents as a rule to choose between the applicants they get, especially for small sized farms from 30 to 50 acres.

59,618. Do you think there is a sufficiency of good applicants?—There are sufficient good applicants for that size, yes.

59,619. I understand you to say that in your opinion the highest bidders were generally accepted on small estates?—I think as a rule on the small farms they are.

1 September 1894.]

Mr. WILLIAM EDWARDS.

59,620. Would that be irrespective of other qualifications?—Yes, I should think so. I do not know. Perhaps the other qualifications would have some slight influence.

59,621. We have had evidence again and again repeated that the highest bidder is not looked to, but the most eligible tenant?—Well, in some instances no doubt that is the fact, but that even does not alter the case that the landlord should not be reduced to an ordinary creditor. It does not alter the case that it gives the needy landlord a handle. I do not dispute the truth of the evidence given by some gentlemen as to some estates. I know it is the case that they do not let to the highest bidder.

59,622. If a man was in other respects perfectly eligible, I suppose anybody would probably take the highest bidder?—Certainly.

59,623. You would yourself if you had the chance?—Yes, and I daresay if I were a landlord myself I would go to Parliament and make the laws the same as they have done for the last generation or two, made the law for themselves.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,624. You have told Sir John Llewelyn that one of the principles at any rate which you would apply in valuing a farm would be to take the price of stock for the next 10 years, but it would be at a reduced value?—Certainly.

59,625. Another thing you would take the situation of a farm into calculation, would you not?—Yes, of course.

59,626. And also the distance of the farm from a market town or a railway?—Yes, everything tells.

59,627. And the price of labour?—Yes.

59,628. What amount would you allow for labour if you were going to fix the price of a farm at the present time?—That is about the hardest nut to crack of the lot, because it is a very uncertain question. In fact it is a hard job to get hold of labourers to go on the land at all. They are drafted into large towns and into mining districts, where they get more wages, and there is no inducement for them to come back on the land unless this three acres and a cow business comes to work some day. I do not know, but it looks very dry work now.

59,629. Would you put the labour bill at something the same as it is at present?—Yes.

59,630. It is so uncertain altogether?—Too uncertain altogether. The labour question is a very big thing to handle.

59,631. I think you said as far as the matter of rent is concerned you would allow the landlord and the tenant to contract in the first instance?—Yes.

59,632. And supposing a dispute arose between a landlord and a sitting tenant, then the matter should be referred to the court?—To the court, certainly.

59,633. Would you fix any limit before the sitting tenant could refer the matter to the court. Perhaps in his own interest, after being there about a year or two, he might say, "Now I am paying too high a rent to the landlord?"—Any couple of practical men would be able to judge by visiting his farm what he had done there as improvements.

59,634. Yes, but would you give him the power of referring the rent in a couple of years, or would you fix any limit. Suppose that the landlord had a dispute about it, and the tenant found he was paying too much rent after being there a year or two, would you permit him to go to the court?—A tenant is very disappointed at the end of the second or third year especially. If he has been disappointed he will know the value of his own undertaking before he has been there three years. He could not know it much before then, and not properly, under the four-course system, before he has been there six years. He must have given a couple of dressings to his land before he can see exactly what it will be.

59,635. Would you fix any period, three or four years?—Yes, I would fix three.

59,636. Three years, before he should have a right to go to the court?—Yes, certainly. It would make a man more cautious in what he would bid for a farm. Of course, there are many rushing into farming, because they make money as clothiers, or drapers, they think farming a very jolly life, and very healthy, and they take a farm, and, of course, they naturally think that if the former tenant had made a living there, they could do the same, whether they are practical or not.

59,637. Having been in Canada, what is your opinion of this. Do you think a tenant farmer is better off in Wales, or in Canada?—He would be better off, 100 per cent., in Canada, in my opinion. There are many farmers on the hills in this district who, if they got their small holdings for nothing here, would be better off in Canada a lot. They have something there to look forward to for their families, if they have growing sons and daughters, but here there is nothing for them. They have no opportunity at all of possessing an acre of the land they farm in this country, but there, even if you have to buy in some of the older provinces, in Ontario, for instance, you can buy farms now with first-class buildings upon them, not 12 miles from the town of Toronto, a town of 250,000 inhabitants, for 16 $\frac{1}{2}$ an acre, with buildings and all on. My opinion was, when I saw these things in Canada, that if I owned an acre of land here, I would come back as soon as I could, and sell it.

59,638. What about the comforts that are to be had in the Dominion of Canada. Do you think that a tenant farmer would have to sacrifice any comforts if he went to Canada?—If he went to Manitoba, and the north-west, certainly he would. He would have to rough it. But in the old province of Ontario, a man of capital could go there and buy improved farms, and have just the same comforts that they have in the Vale of Clwyd, in the best part of it.

1 September 1894.]

MR. WILLIAM EDWARDS.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

59,639. Have you been advising tenant farmers to emigrate to Canada?—Yes, everyone who came to me, and asked my advice.

59,640. Are they ready to go?—Some of them have gone.

59,641. And are thriving there?—Oh, yes, from all I have heard they are doing well. They cannot help it. If they work as they do here, they cannot help doing well in Canada.

59,642. Do you find a great reluctance among the tenant farmers to emigrate?—Yes, they will stick to the hill-tops at home here. They are like old sheep, they will not move if they can help it.

59,643. Is there any particular reason why they should stick to the hills the same as the sheep?—I do not know.

59,644. You think they have not the enterprise of the Scotchmen, for instance?—No, nor the Dutch, nor the Irishmen. They have not the pluck of either of those.

59,645. Do you think that the language and the religion of the Welsh tenant farmer has something to do with it?—No, I do not believe the language has much to do with it, but in some instances religion has. It is not so as much now as it was 15 or 20 years ago. Then I remember very well that there was no chance of a farmer getting a farm in a strange parish, only through the parson. If the clergyman of the parish gave him a word, he would very probably get it, but not without. That, however, has not been so now for some years, and it is not so now.

59,646. Do you think that because the tenant farmers have their own particular form of worship, if they went, say, to Canada they would lose the ministrations that they have been accustomed to here?—Well, in some parts of course. There are all sorts of religions in Canada, and anybody can go where he likes, but of course in thinly populated districts they have to put up with what happens to be before them. But in all other respects in the thinly populated districts even, so far as school accommodation and so on is concerned, they are quite as well off there as they are here.

59,647. Do you mean the educational facilities there?—Yes, the facilities for education.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,648. If I rightly understood you, I think you said that one of the reasons that the tenant farmer did not improve the land as he should do is that he has not the means of doing it. His capital will not permit it?—Quite so.

59,649. On the other hand, do you know of instances on any estate where capital is withheld for want of security?—I know very well that many small farmers in this country, if they want assistance, have to take it from the banks in short loans at very high interest. Of course if a farmer borrows capital and has to pay it back in two or three months, he might as well be without it, as I think, because a farmer, whatever he does, has to give credit, and very long credit, for all he is doing. If he grows a field of barley, that is about the first he can realise; with wheat again he gives 12 months credit for his labour and manure and everything in growing a crop of wheat, and when it goes to the market he finds that he does not realise the rent and expenses out of it.

59,650. We have had it given by agents and landlords that the reason for the preferential claim was that they gave the tenants time to pay the rent?—Well, of course they do. I admit all that. They do give them time. The rent that is due on the 25th March is never collected till the end of June; but I say that a tenant farmer would be much better off without the embargo of having a preferential creditor, and yet having to find the extra capital, paying down his 2*l.* an acre more in cash.

59,651. Is it not the fact that the tradesman has often to wait a year or two, and more, very often?—Yes; the manure merchant and seed merchant especially. I know that for a fact.

59,652. Do you consider that the small number of stock that are reared in this country would have the effect you suggest?—It does affect it every four years. I have noticed that for the last 20 years. The small amount of stock-keeping in this country, with the increased foreign importations every year, does affect it. As I said before, this period of depression comes about every four years.

Chairman.

59,653. There is one question asked by Mr. Vincent, "Will you mind repeating for my information the name of the farm and the date of the second case at Ruthin Castle?"—I named the farm and the tenant; but I could not give you the date.

59,654. Will you give us the name of the farm?—Yes, Hugh Hughes, Pen Street; that is the name of the tenant and of the farm.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to Ruthin.

Mr. WILLIAM DAVIES.

SIXTY-NINTH DAY.

County Hall, Ruthin, Denbighshire, Monday, 3rd September 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.
 Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.
 Professor RHÛS, M.A., LL.D.

Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.
 Mr. EDWIN GROVE.
 Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. WILLIAM DAVIES called and examined.

59,655. Are you a tenant farmer under Colonel Cornwallis West?—Yes.

59,656. You farm 200 acres?—Yes.

59,657. And 300 acres sheepwalk?—Yes.

59,658. Have you any objection to state the rent?—No.

59,659. What is the rent?—300*l*.

59,660. For the 500 acres?—Yes.

59,661. How long have you lived on the Ruthin Castle estate?—32 years.

59,662. And have you been in occupation of the same farm all that time?—No, I was 10 years at Pen y graig, close to the town here, before I went to Llysfas.

59,663. Are there any rights of sheepwalk in the district without stint?—Yes, without stint.

59,664. Have you anything to say upon that?—No, nothing.

59,665. Have you anything to say about the rents of the farms, with or without sheepwalks?—I do not know of any rents, only my own.

59,666. Are farms let at more reasonable rents on large estates than on small ones?—Of the two I think they are.

59,667. Is it a good thing for the landowner to reside on his estate?—Well, I should think so.

59,668. Is there any difference made by your landlord with reference to the religion, politics, or language of the tenants?—None whatever.

59,669. May I take it that the relations between the landlord and the tenants are very friendly?—Very.

59,670. The time of entry is just the same as in the other places we have heard of?—The 30th of November.

59,671. Do you want a lease?—No, I was offered one, years ago.

59,672. And you did not take it?—No, I have every confidence in my landlord.

59,673. Is there anything in the agreement that you object to?—No, nothing.

59,674. What is the practice on the Ruthin Castle estate about ploughing up old pasture or selling hay or straw?—Well, if we are good tenants and use a lot of cake and artificial manure we are allowed to do anything. I have been allowed to sell straw.

59,675. In fact you have perfect freedom of cultivation?—Yes, quite so.

59,676. Are the penal clauses in the agreement ever enforced?—Very seldom. They are never enforced unless against a very bad farmer.

59,677. Are the rents higher on the small holdings than on the large ones?—Well, I think they are rather.

59,678. Is there any other service besides payment of rent on the Ruthin Castle estate?—None whatever.

59,679. How is the hauling done?—There is nothing asked. I have been taking a load of bark now and then—perhaps once in five years, but there is no compulsion at all.

59,680. That is a mutual agreement between you and the Lord Lieutenant?—No, no agreement; goodwill, when they are busy, or something of that.

59,681. Have you had any reduction or abatement of your rent?—Yes, I had a reduction of 16 per cent. some years ago.

59,682. Was that permanent?—Permanent, and I had 10*l* returned once in an exceptionally bad year.

59,683. Are the rates too high, do you consider?—Yes, I consider them very high.

59,684. Have they increased lately?—Well, rather so.

59,685. To any great extent or not?—Not to a very great extent; but all the rates are put on the land. I think they ought to be put on something else besides the land.

59,686. Do you think small farmers can stand out longest against depressed prices?—Well, I should think so, rather.

59,687. Your farm is considered a very large farm in this neighbourhood, is it not?—Yes, middling.

59,688. What is the ordinary size of farms should you say?—In my neighbourhood something from 80 to 100 acres would be the average.

3 September 1894.]

MR. WILLIAM DAVIES.

Chairman—continued.

59,689. A 500 acre farm is an exceptionally large farm?—Yes, considered so.

59,690. Is there any sub-letting in your neighbourhood?—I know of none.

59,691. When is the rent paid. How much time are you given to pay the rent?—We do not pay directly it is due. I remember when tenants have been complaining they have thrown it over a certain fair, or some time when it would be easier for the people to pay.

59,692. Do you get six months' credit?—About three months, or a little less, perhaps.

59,693. Have you ever known instances of farmers having to borrow money to pay the rent?—I could give no names, but I believe it is done.

59,694. Farmers have to do it?—Well, they do it sometimes, I believe. They bail one another or borrow from one another sometimes.

59,695. Do you consider the farmers in this neighbourhood are well off?—I cannot say that; when there is a farm empty there are plenty of applications for it.

59,696. What improvements are done by the landlords, and what are done by the tenants?—The landlords drain the land when it is wanted, erect buildings, sheds, and also do the necessary repairs to farmhouses, &c., and protect from river encroachment, supply tenants with gates and posts and fix them.

59,697. Then practically speaking all the improvements on a farm are done by the landlord in this part of the country?—Yes, practically.

59,698. Do you hang your own gates?—Sometimes we do that, and often they are hung by the landlord; sometimes we do them ourselves.

59,699. Are you expected to put in your own gate posts?—No, we are allowed them. I have placed them myself sometimes, and I have had them placed at other times.

59,700. The general custom is that they are placed by the landlord?—Yes, almost always.

59,701. And who does any repairs to the house?—The landlord.

59,702. Practically the tenants do nothing in the shape of improvements except keep the farm in a good state of cultivation?—Yes, a little thing now and then in papering and painting in a small way, something that is necessary we do.

59,703. But no great improvements are ever done by the tenants?—Not very many.

59,704. You say not very many, are there any?—I believe there are in a small way sometimes, but they are not compelled to do it.

59,705. What have your improvements cost you last year. Did you spend on the buildings and on the house a shilling of your own?—No, not last year at all.

59,706. Not a shilling?—I do not know about a shilling, a very little.

59,707. Did you spend five shillings?—I do not know. I do not keep accounts so close as that.

59,708. What is the custom about the sale of sheep?—The incoming tenant expects the first offer to buy the sheep on the run that belongs to the farm he takes, and then a valuer for both sides is appointed generally and an umpire if necessary to settle the bargain.

59,709. Supposing you went out of your farm and the farm was not let, and there were sheep on the mountain, is the landlord compelled to buy your sheep as he is in Scotland?—No.

59,710. There is no law of that sort?—Nothing of that sort, but the incoming tenants expect to have the first bid.

59,711. Because the sheep know the ground?—Yes, they are worth more to the new tenant than anyone else.

59,712. If you went out of your farm, and it was not taken, you would have to sell your sheep by public auction?—Yes.

59,713. There is no obligation on the landlord to take them?—No.

59,714. On the Castle estate are the tenants sufficiently compensated for game trespass?—So far as I know they are.

59,715. Do you know of any farmers who have bought their farms?—Yes, I know some.

59,716. Are the freeholders as well off as the tenant farmers?—I do not think those who bought their farms 20 years ago, or less than that, are as well off as the tenants now.

59,717. Then they bought their farms at a very high price?—Yes, and they get no reduction.

59,718. Are large sums lent on those farms still, or do you think the farmers have paid off the money they borrowed?—Oh, I believe it is left mostly. I do not think they have paid but very little off.

59,719. You do not think they have been able to live and pay off the money they borrowed for the farm?—I do not think so.

59,720. Do you think a man is better off as a tenant farmer under the present circumstances than he would be if he had bought his land 20 years ago?—Yes, I believe so.

59,721. That is because he has bought his land too dearly?—That is it.

59,722. If he had bought his land at a proper price, do you think he would be better off or worse off than a tenant farmer?—As well off.

59,723. You think about the same?—Yes.

59,724. Do the farmers' wives work very hard?—Well, on small farms I think they look after the cattle in winter, and help at harvest time.

59,725. They work at harvest time?—They help in that way in gathering the corn in.

59,726. And the children, too?—Yes, I believe so, on small farms.

59,727. Do the small farmers live very hard. Is it a hard life for them?—Yes, they live very hard, I believe.

59,728. They are an industrious hardworking set of people?—Yes, on the whole.

59,729. Are farmers able to set up their sons and daughters in business?—Yes, there have been instances of a good many doing it, or putting them on farms.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. WILLIAM DAVIES.

Chairman—continued.

59,730. They can do it?—There are instances where they have been placed in that way.

59,731. They have put their sons into farms?—Yes. The sons and daughters work on the farm without any wages, and then when they marry they hope to be placed in farms.

59,732. Have you ever thought whether a Land Court would be a good thing or a bad thing in the interest of the tenant farmers of this neighbourhood?—A very bad thing, in my opinion.

59,733. And for what reason?—Well, it would do away with the good feeling between landlord and tenant, and they meet us so well when we are badly off, they return us money and meet us. If it were not so, I believe we should have to pay the last penny, and they would come upon us as a rate collector for rates and tithes and things of that sort. They would have no interest in the farms or in the tenants.

59,734. What do you consider to be the cause of the present low prices?—I think that the chief cause of low prices is allowing the foreigners to bring to our markets corn of every kind, beef, mutton, bacon, wool, hay and straw—everything I can think of—without even paying a penny towards our rates and taxes. I think that is the chief cause.

59,735. Have you any idea that could help farmers. Have you thought of any plan that would help farmers in the present depression? Could not anything be done, do you think?—I think a very good thing would be to put a duty on some things we get from abroad.

59,736. You are in favour of protection?—Yes, I am in a small way.

59,737. Anything else?—No; I do not know of anything else, that is the chief thing, I think.

59,738. Do you consider that, in this country, so far as you know, rents are fair? Do you think the rent asked from the farmers is a fair rent generally in this neighbourhood?—Yes. I think so.

59,739. You do not think they are high?—No, I do not think so; when there are so many applications for a farm it is very hard for a landlord to let them very low—impossible almost.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,740. Are you farming under a lease, or under an agreement, at present?—Under an agreement.

59,741. Have you a copy of it?—Yes, I have handed it in.

59,742. It is a lease you handed in; it is not a yearly agreement?—Well, I am not under a lease at all.

Chairman.

59,743. Well, you have got a lease?—I have never signed a lease at all. I am not under a lease; I could not find my own, and I sent to the office at Oswestry for it, and I got that from there.

59,744. Have you got an agreement of your own?—I have got it somewhere, but I could not put my hand upon it, and I sent for this, and that is what I had from Oswestry.

59,745. I daresay we shall get an agreement put in, similar to yours?—I am under an agreement, not a lease at all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,746. You have a copy of the agreement at home?—Yes, I have.

Chairman.

59,747. This is an annual lease, I see?—Well, it is the same thing, I believe.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,748. When did you get a reduction of 16 per cent.?—I cannot say for certain; I should think about 8 or 10 years ago.

59,749. Did you get any abatement before that?—No, nothing previously, and I had 10 per cent. returned one year after that—it may be five or six years ago, about four years ago.

59,750. Was there a general reduction on the Castle estate?—I do not know as to a general reduction, but a good many got reductions, that I know.

59,751. Was it after an application had been made to the landlord for a reduction, or was it given by the landlord voluntarily?—In some cases, after application, a reduction was made; but the abatements were made by the landlord without any application.

59,752. Was there any valuation made on the estate, before making the reduction?—On some farms there were—there was not on my farm.

59,753. Were you satisfied with the reduction?—Yes, that is what I asked.

59,754. 16 per cent.?—Yes.

59,755. Do you find the farm pays you, after having a reduction of 16 per cent.?—It does not pay very much, but I am able to make both ends meet, I think.

59,756. You are satisfied with the profits you make out of farming?—Yes; times are bad now, but I think I manage to get both ends to meet.

59,757. You say that you think the tenant farmers do not do any improvements on the estate. Do you find any difference between bad times and good times, in a matter of this kind; whether tenants do any improvements in good times?—Well, they used to do more than now, I believe.

59,758. Is it for want of capital that they do not do any improvements now?—No, I do not think that; it is about the same as to that. Tenants do not do now near as much as used to be done 20 years ago.

59,759. Was there any waste land reclaimed about 20 years ago?—Yes, there used to be then—a good deal ploughed and cultivated.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. WILLIAM DAVIES.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

59,760. Corn paid better?—Yes, and labour was lower, too.

59,761. Do you find that there has been a change in the method of farming?—No, prices have been very low, of late.

59,762. I mean is there any change in the method of farming?—Yes, there are more roots grown than there used to be, and less corn growing, and more grass, because grazing seems to pay better than cultivating.

59,763. Of course, the farms carry more stock now than they used to do?—Yes, I believe so.

59,764. And that would necessitate increased accommodation in the shape of buildings?—Yes, it would.

59,765. Have the landlords met the requirements of the tenants in this respect?—Yes, I believe so, in a great many places.

59,766. Are you now supplied with corn and hay sheds?—I have not had them, but I believe in some places they have.

59,767. What improvements has the landlord carried out of late on your place?—He has made some buildings and sheds, and I was making a water-power and the landlord supplied me with pipes to make it, and I did the other part for my own use.

59,768. Do you know anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act?—Yes, I have seen it.

59,769. Is it in operation in your district. Do the farmers know anything about it?—Not very much, I believe.

59,770. Have you laid down any land to permanent grass seed?—Not with permanent seed. The first year I was yonder I had about 100 acres in corn, and now I have only 42 acres in corn this year, and I have laid it down in rotation, not for permanent pasture.

59,771. How long do you leave it lying?—As long as it keeps clean; when once it begins to get dirty, I plough it—three or four and sometimes five years.

59,772. Will it keep five years?—Some fields will, and some will not.

59,773. Is your land well adapted for laying down to permanent grass seed, do you think?—No, not very well—some of it is gravelly land, and some heavy land.

59,774. Do you know of any claims for compensation being made under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No; but I think when cake and manure is used for the first and second year when a valuation is made and a tenant is leaving he gets compensation for so much.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,775. What is the nature of your farm?—200 acres of bottom land, and 300 acres of sheep walk.

59,776. Do you keep a dairy?—No.

59,777. How many cottages have you on your farm?—Two.

59,778. Have you any young men living in the house besides?—I have one young man living in the house, but the other of my workmen are married men.

59,779. How many workmen do you employ?—Five, constant, and then I let everything else as piece-work.

59,780. You have not got enough cottages on the farm to do otherwise?—No, I have only two.

59,781. Where do the rest live?—In cottages a little distance off.

59,782. Do you think there are sufficient cottages in the neighbourhood?—There are many houses that get deserted and empty.

59,783. What is the nature of the houses—thatched cottages?—No, there are some slated houses. Since I have been in the neighbourhood I daresay there are a score of houses not used.

59,784. Good cottages?—Well they were good cottages, but they have been left—well they are not very good either.

59,785. Is there any scarcity of labour in the district?—Rather, at harvest times, sometimes, but there is not very much.

59,786. Men come from elsewhere during the harvest?—Yes, they come from the uplands—for the harvest they come down.

59,787. Do any of these labourers keep cows?—Not to my knowledge, but I do not know.

59,788. None of your labourers keep a cow?—One of them keeps a cow.

59,789. Are you in favour of a labourer keeping a cow?—Yes, I am.

59,790. Do you think it makes him cling to the land a little bit more?—I think it would make him cling to the country a little more instead of going off to Liverpool and so on.

59,791. And probably help to keep the children at home?—When the children get a little schooling and so on they go off to Liverpool or somewhere else.

Mr. Grove.

59,792. Is there much damage done by game?—Not on my farm.

59,793. Is there much game about the district?—Well, you hear complaints sometimes, but I know nothing about them. I complained once, and I was told by Colonel West to kill them, and that was about 15 years ago, I suppose.

59,794. Do the farmers take the benefit of the Ground Game Act?—I do not know much about that.

59,795. Is there any difficulty in the change of tenancy for the sheep being bought by the incoming tenant?—No, I do not think so.

59,796. We have had evidence of instances where it has been difficult, and it has been suggested that in those cases the landlord should purchase the sheep, the same as is done in Scotland. What is your view of that point?—I should think it would be a very good plan if it could be arranged in that way.

59,797. I suppose the sheep get so accustomed to their run that it is desirable to keep the same stock there?—It takes a deal of trouble to make them cling to the places.

59,798. Are you a guardian?—I have been for 20 years.

59,799. Is there any decrease in population in this union?—Well, I cannot say how many.

59,800. I think I can give you the decrease; in 1871, there were 15,372 in the population; in 1891, there were 12,922, making a decrease of 16 per cent., or 2,450. Now, is this union agricultural?—Yes.

59,801. Are there any industries; any pits, or mines, or flannel factories, or anything of that sort?—Nothing at all; only a few lime works.

59,802. So that this is really a typical agricultural union?—It is.

59,803. It seems rather serious, does it not, that the population is so decreasing?—Yes, it is.

59,804. How do you account for that?—Well, a great many of the young men have been going from the neighbourhood during the last 10 years, to the towns, and farmers are keeping less labourers than they used to do.

59,805. I suppose they would like to get more labour if they could afford to pay for it, would they not?—Yes, I suppose so; but somehow it has gone rather bad, and people have no heart to go in for it.

59,806. You speak of the small farmer being able to stand out a little bit better than the larger farmer in bad times; is that because he and his family do a great deal more of the labour themselves?—Yes; with a large farm when it goes the wrong way, it goes very fast, but a small farmer does not feel it so soon, and it comes more gradually.

59,807. When you say a small farm, about what acreage should you say?—20 to 50 acres.

59,808. When a tenant farmer does improvements of any sort, do you think it would be fair, on his leaving the farm, that he had compensation for those improvements?—Well, that is to be had under the Agricultural Holdings Act, is it not?

59,809. If they give proper notice, but you do not appear to avail yourselves of it here. You say you have not heard of many claims under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I think every farmer ought to be compensated for what he does in that way.

59,810. But, as a matter of fact, are the farmers aware of the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act, do you think?—A good many are, whatever.

59,811. Do you think many of them take advantage of it, and claim as they are entitled to under it?—Well, it is done sometimes, I believe.

59,812. Do you send much of your produce, or receive much by railway?—Yes, I send barley and wheat off, and fat cattle and sheep, and then I buy cake and artificial manure.

59,813. Do you consider that the railway rates are too high?—Yes; they are very high.

59,814. Have they been advanced lately?—No; just about the same, so far as I know.

Mr. Grove—continued.

59,815. You do not suppose they are higher than the railway companies are entitled to charge by Act of Parliament, do you?—Well; I do not know that at all.

59,816. Do you know there is a small book published by the Board of Trade, for 1s., that gives you all the information as to what they can charge you for everything?—I never saw that; I never heard of it.

59,817. It is a most unfortunate thing that it is not better known. Are there many small freeholders in this district?—Not very many; but there are several.

59,818. Do you think it is desirable that there should be more men farming their own holdings?—I could not say that.

59,819. Do you think a man if he holds the land himself, and farms it himself, would not try to make a little more of it?—Well; those who have bought about here have not done more than the others.

59,820. You do not see any improvement in that respect?—No; not with the farms that I have in my mind.

59,821. You say there are many instances where they set up their sons and daughters in business. I suppose you do not mean the last year or two, during this present depression?—No; I know of some the last two years, too.

59,822. That would be from profits made when things were a little bit better would it not?—I do not know as to that.

59,823. You say you can make two ends meet. Are you like the Quaker—able to make a little bit to lap over, which is very desirable?—Very little.

59,824. You consider there is depression in agriculture now?—Yes.

59,825. That things are in a very bad way?—Yes.

Chairman.

59,826. There are two or three questions handed in. Mr. J. E. Vincent asks: "Land is not let to the highest bidder is it?"—No.

59,827. "Except accommodation land?"—Accommodation land; nothing else.

59,828. "There is no consolidation of farms, is there?"—None whatever, so far as I know; I know of several farms that have been made new farms.

59,829. Has Colonel West made new farms?—Yes; I know of several.

59,830. These are questions by Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones: "Is there not a clause in most of Colonel West's agreements, whereby the tenant agrees to do one or two days' work for his landlord with two or four horses and cart, according to the size of the farm?"—I never saw or heard anything in that way. I have been carrying a little bark now and then, but only just for convenience sake, nothing else.

59,831. You have not seen a clause to that effect?—No.

59,832. "Is there not a clause in Colonel West's agreement that the straw and chaff

Chairman—continued.

"remaining on the farm at the close of the tenancy should be left to the landlord, or the incoming tenant without compensation?"—Indeed, I do not know, there might be; I have never read it.

59,833. Have you not read it?—Not for many years. I do not remember that now.

59,834. "Do you consider this fair?"—that in your agreement the straw or chaff should be left to the landlord or incoming tenant without allowance. That is in your agreement; Mr. Llewellyn Jones wants to know do you consider it fair?—I think the straw ought to be paid for.

59,835. "When a tenant enters a farm on the Castle estate, do the agents charge for a copy of the agreement?"—I never paid anything. I never was asked for it.

59,836. "Do you not agree in your agreement to keep all buildings, gates, stiles, bridges, and fences of the farm and plantations in as good repair and condition as when you entered?"—Yes; I do not know about plantations, but the hedges on the farm.

59,837. Is the word "plantations" in your agreement?—Yes, it is in this agreement.

59,838. "Being allowed by the landlord necessary timber and scantling and other materials—the same to be carried by the tenant at his own expense." Is that in your agreement?—Yes, the tenant does carry everything in that way always.

59,839. "The landlord allows necessary timber and scantling and other materials (the same to be carried by the tenant at his own expense)?"—They are gates ready made; I have not had any timber for making gates, but for some repairs I have carried timber there.

59,840. What is the meaning of the word "scantling"?—I do not know I am sure.

59,841. "When you put up the water-power you referred to in your evidence what amount did you spend yourself?"—I spent, I daresay, in all 40*l.* or more. I do not know the amount exactly, but I believe about that, in making the reservoir and cutting the drains for the turbine.

59,842. You put the expense at about 40*l.*?—Yes, full that, whatever.

59,843. "Did you obtain permission in writing from your landlord to make this improvement?"—No, I did not.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,844. What are we to understand by "a new farm"? Is it a farm taken from the mountain or not?—Making large farms into smaller one; taking parts and cutting them up.

59,845. Are the fences and ditches kept in as good repair now as they used to be?—A good many are much worse.

59,846. Are the labourers as capable as they were formerly?—It is very seldom you can get young men to do the work of hedging or ditching or anything of that sort.

59,847. They do not take a delight in it?—No, they go off to the towns. I suppose they get better wages, and farmers are obliged to keep a smaller number of men. Consequently they do not go to the expense of the hedges and so on.

59,848. And these young men probably get shorter hours than on the farms?—It may be.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. JOHN ROBERTS called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

59,849. Does this statement contain your evidence?—Yes, my Lord.

59,850. Has it been translated to you in the presence of Mr. Griffiths?—It has been.

59,851. You understand it perfectly?—I do.

59,852. And you vouch that it is correct?—I do.

59,853. You are willing that it should be read as your evidence?—Yes.

59,854. Who is your landlord?—Mr. Jones, now deceased.

59,855. Are your landlords now the trustees of Mr. Jones?—Yes.

59,856. How big is your farm?—86 acres.

The statement of the witness was then read as follows:—

Evidence of Mr. John Roberts, Plas Tower-bridge, Ruthin.

I am a tenant farmer, occupying a farm on the Greenfield Estate, near Ruthin.

Chairman—continued.

I was formerly tenant of Brynhedyn, a farm of 38 acres on the Llanbedr Hall estate.

59,857. Is that the deceased Mr. Jones' estate?—No.

59,858. Whose estate is that?—Mr. Jesse's.

I went to Brynhedyn about 23 years ago. The rent was then 65*l.* 10*s.* There was an agreement signed by me. I asked for a copy twice, but failed to get it. The agent told me that he would let me have a copy for 5*s.*, but I never received a copy from him. The tenancy was subject to six months' notice. After I had been there for three years the rent was raised to 66*l.* The buildings were poor, the houses and buildings being thatched. They did not repair the thatched roof during the time I was tenant. After I had been about 10 years upon the farm I pressed the agent and landlord for the house to be re-roofed with straw. They deferred giving me a reply, and finally promised me to do the work the following spring. When the spring came I went to the landlord and the agent and pressed them to repair. I offered to do the repairs myself if they would allow me a year's rent. This was refused. I accordingly gave notice. Before I had left, the place was let for 54*l.*, and a new house built for the new tenant. Since I left (some eight years ago) I have been at my present farm.

The farms on the Llanbedr estate are considered to have been rented too high, and several tenants have left the estate on that account. There is a farm called Llwynedd on the estate. This farm was formerly occupied by one Hugh Hughes. The rent had formerly been 112*l.*, but had latterly been reduced to somewhere about 60*l.*; some of the buildings were in ruins, and the landlord could not afford to re build them. The tenant got into arrears with his rent, and was ultimately compelled to sell all his stock, &c. He paid the rent in full, and then went to America with his family, consisting of 10 children. The farm was let to a neighbouring tenant on the estate, and the impression is that he only pays 60*l.* rent. If a reduction had been made to Hugh Hughes he would have been there now, and not compelled to leave his old home.

I can name several tenants of the Llanbedr estate who have become reduced in their circumstances. I know one or two who are now working as common labourers.

Tenants have suffered severely owing to the ravages of the game on the estate.

One tenant, John Roberts, occupying a farm called Rhiwlas, had a three-acre field of wheat. He only got five hobbits off the field, not quite six; he usually had from 40 to 50. He failed to get any damages for the trespass caused. The general impression is that the losses through game trespass was the cause of his failure.

At another farm, called Blaen Nant, the crops were so destroyed by game that they were not fit to be carried off.

A good deal of timber has been cut on the Llanbedr estate during the past few years. During my tenancy no compensation was allowed for damage thus caused, and if we wanted the branches we had to pay for them.

I am of opinion that agriculture has suffered seriously during the past few years owing to the decrease in small holdings and consolidation of farms. Small holdings are greatly wanted in the district.

I remember the time in the parish of Llanbedr when 20 farmers occupied small farms, where there are now but three, 17 having been consolidated.

59,859. How long ago is it since the tenant, John Roberts, complained of the loss from game on his farm?—Twenty years ago.

59,860. Has that complaint gone on up to the present time?—Yes, but not to the same extent. It is not so serious as it was at that time.

59,861. When were the crops on the other farm so destroyed by game that they were not fit to be carried home?—In some places.

Chairman—continued.

59,862. But at what time?—At the same time.

59,863. Was any compensation asked for at that time?—Yes. A little was received one year. It was asked for again, but nothing was received.

59,864. How much was received in that one year?—I cannot say.

Mr. Grove.

59,865. How much was asked for the second time?—I cannot say.

59,866. When the new tenant of the farm that you spoke of had the farm at 54*l.* a year, what was the rent that used to be paid for the farm?—66*l.*

59,867. Do you know of many instances where a new tenant has had the rent lowered when the old tenant has been refused it?—Yes, I know of several.

59,868. Do you consider that very unfair to the old tenant?—I consider it an injustice.

59,869. When this felling of timber takes place which you have mentioned, is there much damage done?—Sometimes there is.

59,870. And nothing paid for it?—Nothing.

59,871. Do they ask for anything?—I only asked for the branches.

59,872. Those are paid for when they are received, are they?—Yes.

59,873. Do you know of many claims for damage by game which have not been met?—I do not know of many; I know of two or three.

59,874. Have you mentioned the amount of rent of your present holding?—No, I did not mention it.

59,875. Have you any objection to do so?—No, I have no objection to give it. Here is the rent book, and you shall see it all through—what it has been and what it is at present. (The witness produced book.) At first the rent book shows 160*l.*

59,876. For the 86 acres?—Yes.

59,877. Is there any sheep run with it?—Only the Common at Moel Flamman.

59,878. Have you had any abatement?—It was reduced since to 72*l.*, and reduced again to 64*l.* 10*s.*

59,879. That is the present rental?—Yes. The 64*l.* 10*s.* is a half-year's rent.

Chairman.

59,880. I take it the 72*l.* was a half-year's rent also?—Yes, and the 160*l.* was the 12 months' rent.

Mr. Grove.

59,881. Then you pay 129*l.* a year for 86 acres with the right to the common?—Yes. I do not pay for the common at all.

MR. JOHN ROBERTS.

Mr. Grove—continued.

59,882. Are these trustees of the late Mr. Jones large landowners?—They have one place besides my own.

59,883. They have two farms only. As to Mr. Jesse had he a large estate?—Yes.

59,884. A good many farms?—More than half the parish.

Chairman.

59,885. Mr. Jesse owns half the parish, and the late Mr. Jones owned two farms?—Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,886. Have you many thatched houses in your district?—There are some.

59,887. Are they repaired by the landlord or by the tenants?—By the landlord.

59,888. You could not get them to repair yours for you?—No, I could not.

59,889. Did they ever promise to do it?—They did.

59,890. How many times did you make an application to have it repaired?—Many times.

59,891. Did you improve that farm at all?—I did.

59,892. Were you paid for the improvements that you made when you left there?—I did not ask to be.

59,893-4. Then with regard to the farm the tenant of which you say failed?—Which farm?

59,895. I mean the farm held by the man who went to America?—Yes, he failed.

59,896. Do you consider his farm was too highly rented?—Yes, it must have been too high, or else they would not have reduced it, as they have done.

59,897. What is the rent they have reduced it to?—I am told to 60*l*.

59,898. What amount did he pay before he left?—He had been paying 112*l*., and he had an abatement of 2*s*. in the pound.

59,899. Do you know of many farmers like that who have been reduced in circumstances?—Yes.

59,900. Do you think it is owing to high rents, or is it because they do not stick to work on their farms?—The rents are too high.

59,901. You say that there are some of them who have turned to and gone to labour instead?—Yes, some of them have.

59,902. Are they doing as well as labourers, as they were as farmers?—I cannot say that.

59,903. Are there fewer cottages in your district than there used to be?—Yes, less fit to be inhabited.

59,904. Do you know how many cottages there are less in your parish than when you first remember it?—Do you mean the small holdings, or the cottages only?

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

59,905. The cottages, I ask you?—15 or 20 less.

59,906. On what estate have these 17 farms been consolidated?—On the two estates.

59,907. Give me the names of the estates, please?—The Llanbedr Hall estate, and Mr. Lloyd's Rhagatt estate.

59,908. Do you think those farms which have been consolidated, are farmed better now than they were before?—Not so well.

59,909. There are not so many labourers employed; is that so?—No, there are not.

Chairman.

59,910. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "You say you do not pay for the common; do you not?"—I am not aware that I pay for it.

59,911. "You would have no right of common if you had not your farm, would you?"—If I lived in the parish, I would have a right.

59,912. The right of the common does not go necessarily with the farm, I understand?—Any one living in the parish can go and do what he likes on the mountain.

59,913. "Was the farm on which the man failed called Llwynedd?"—Yes.

59,914. "Is not the present tenant of it doing well?"—I cannot say.

59,915. The following questions are handed in by Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones: "Did you not fail to ask for compensation for improvements made by you, because, in your experience, tenant farmers fail to get any compensation when they apply for it?"—I had never seen anybody receiving compensation when they did ask, therefore I did not take the trouble.

59,916. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Did not John Roberts, of Rhiwlas, receive compensation?"—Once he did.

59,917. "Was that compensation given in the form of an allowance in the rent?"—I do not know in what form he received it, but he did receive it once, and once only.

59,918. "Do you, as a matter of fact, know much that is definite about these game damages?"—What I have stated is correct.

59,919. "The Llanbedr estate is in the hands of a mortgagee in possession, is it not?"—I do not know in whose hands it is, but it is not in the hands of Mr. Jesse.

59,920. "Name the farms consolidated on the Llanbedr and Rhagatt estates?"—

Aclwyd Uchaf, 6 acres, added to Fronfelin, making 38 acres.

Tycefn, 2 acres, added to Llanbedr farm, making 82 acres.

Tybach, 2 acres, added to Bryn Rhydyn, making 38 acres.

Pen Isa' Hirwaen, 7 acres, added to Tyddyn Tlodion, making 20 acres.

Tyddyn Hirwaen, 3 acres, added to Tyn y Celyn, making 40 acres.

Groes Ucha' 16 acres, Groes Isa' 20 acres, and Ffordd Las, 25 acres, added to Y Wern 19 acres, making 80 acres.

Cae Eithin, 31 acres, added to Plas Tower-bridge, making 86 acres.

Tan y Ffordd, 12 acres, added to Cae Fron 18, acres and Llwynedd, 60 acres, making together 90 acres.

59,921. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: 'Within what period has the consolidation taken place?'—During the last 40 years.

59,922. "Were these added pieces of land

The witness withdrew.

Mr. GODFREY ROBERTS called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

59,927. Is this your statement?—Yes, my Lord.

59,928. Have you had it translated to you this morning?—Yes.

59,929. You are willing that it should be read as your evidence?—Yes, I am.

59,930. Who does the Rug Estate belong to?—The Hon. C. H. Wynn is the owner.

The statement of the witness was read as follows:—

Evidence of Mr. GODFREY ROBERTS, of Ty'nllan, Llanferres, near Mold.

I was formerly a tenant farmer on the Rug estate, near Corwen.

I took a farm called "Penycoed Ucha'" in the year 1858, Mr. Owen Jones, now deceased, being the estate agent at the time. The rent was 50*l.*, and tithe 8*l.* The house was in a fair condition, but there was merely a wooden partition between the cowhouse and the house. The cow-houses were straw-thatched and the outbuildings generally very poor, so that in the winter the animals would often be covered with snow. The land was in a wild state and had been left without seed and also needed draining. In two or three years the trespass from rabbits became very serious, and at the end of six or seven years there were thousands of rabbits devouring the crops over 14 acres of land. They also trampled and injured the pasture land to such an extent that the animals would not eat it. The pheasants also became like hens in some of the fields near the woods, tamely following the plough. From one field of six acres only a waggon load of corn was carried, and this was all that was left thereon and we had to spread it out on the yard and to use it as manure, it being totally unfit for anything else. After we

Chairman—continued.

"separate farms, with houses and buildings?"

—Yes, I remember people living in each one of them.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,923. What was the compensation given to this man for?—For game trespass.

Mr. Grove.

59,924. Just one question with regard to the common rights you have mentioned. As a matter of fact, who uses the common now besides yourself?—Everybody in the parish.

59,925. Without payment of any kind?—Nothing direct.

59,926. And you consider that each parishioner has an equal right to it?—I do.

had been on this farm for about seven years, portions of the old buildings fell into ruins. The trustee of the estate (Mr. Burton) came to see them, and soon afterwards new buildings were put up. I did all the haulage and estimate my work to be worth 35*l.*, but I never received a penny towards this. I received some compensation for the damage caused by game to the land, but not a quarter of what I ought to have received. One year, when the damage caused by the game was exceptionally heavy, a gentleman of the name of Mr. Walter Jones made an estimate of the damage caused and sent a bill to Mr. Wagstaff, the gentleman who occupied the Hall and reared the game. Mr. Wagstaff, however, only rebuked me for my impudence in sending him a bill at all, and I received not a penny towards my loss. After I had been tenant for a period of 15 years, a Mr. Thomas, from Carnarvonshire, came over to re-value the land, and raised my rent 10*l.*, this, in my opinion, being in advance on account of my own improvements. I saw that I could not pay this rent and determined to give up the farm.

I then took another farm called 'Nant Fawr,' near Corwen, on the same estate. Before I entered the rent was 67*l.* I understood from Mr. Thomas that the rent was only to be raised 5*l.*, but Mr. T. R. Wynne, the agent, raised the rent 8*l.*, i.e., to 75*l.* The tithe was 12*l.* rates 8*l.* I soon found that I was little better in this place, as I again suffered from the ravages of the game. A sporting tenant, called Mr. Vosper, came to live at Rhagatt, and I can never properly estimate the damage caused by game on this farm. The agent came to me on one occasion and ordered me to send a servant man away as he had been seen chasing rabbits. On another occasion Thomas Marchant, the head keeper told me he thought there were so many rabbits there that I could take the liberty of destroying some of them. I accordingly sent two men to catch some. Marchant came up while they were at their work. They were summoned before the magistrates. Marchant denied his conversation with me, and these men were heavily fined. During the shooting season 30 and 40 men would cross my fields and break through the fences, injuring the crops, the turnips, and potatoes. At Nant Fawr I did a quantity of haulage towards building. I estimated this at 30*l.*; but I was paid nothing. In 1887, Mr. T. R. Wynne came and asked me for a half of my land, as Mr. Vosper wanted it to form a rabbit warren. He wished me to give it up in a fortnight, and stated, holding up his fist, that if I would not allow Mr. Vosper to have this land I should have to leave the place. I argued with him, but with no effect. He became very angry and unpleasant. I told him that I had 10 children, most of them young, and that I wanted to bring them up. "That does not concern me," said he, "what I require is the land." I refused to let him have it then, as the farm would be of little good to me without this land. Before the end of a fortnight I received a notice to quit. The year I left was a bad season, and I estimate that I received 240*l.* less for what I sold than if I had been allowed to remain till the following year. I was compelled to leave without being paid for the seeds. I had paid 7*l.* for lime that year, and the same sum for guano. I did not receive a penny for either of these items.

59,931. What do you mean by the pheasants following the plough?—There were so many of them that they followed the plough picking up the worms.

59,932. These game preservers that you complain of were shooting tenants?—Yes; Mr. Wagstaff had taken the Hall and the game.

59,933. Would you have had any objection to preserve game for your landlord?—Not if they were reasonable.

59,934. You mean if they were not in unreasonable quantities; but what you object to is the double rent for the land: is that it?—Yes.

59,935. When you took your first farm you said there was a wooden partition between the dwelling-house and the cowhouse, did you not?—It was so.

59,936. Did they promise to do anything to it when you went there?—I was to receive everything right.

59,937. Then when you received compensation for the damage by game you say it was not worth a fourth of what you ought to have had, I think. Do you say that?—It could really not be estimated, it was so much.

59,938. Now about Mr. Wagstaff: he was the shooting tenant: he rebuked you for your impudence in making the claim, did he?—Yes; he was on horseback, rebuking me for sending him the bill.

Mr. Grove.

59,939. You sent in a bill for how much?—I do not remember, now, the amount. It was Mr. Walter Jones who made it.

59,940. Can you not remember the amount of the claim?—It was a big amount; it was too large really; if it was smaller perhaps he would have paid it.

59,941. It was too large. I suppose the damage was very heavy, and therefore the amount of the claim was large. Is that what you mean?—Yes, that is so.

59,942. What did Mr. Wagstaff say to it?—He would not believe that the damage caused was so serious; he rebuked me for sending him such a big bill.

59,943. Now as to the second matter: when Mr. Wynne asked for half the land to be given up, did he offer you any compensation?—Only what the land was rated for.

59,944. Just one other question, please: Do you think that tenant farmers have any fear of coming forward to give evidence before this Commission?—That is certain.

59,945. Do you know that from conversation with them yourself?—I understood from them that they did not like to come forward for fear of the consequences.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,946. Did these gentlemen who had the game keep some keepers on your farm?—Yes, they had six or seven gamekeepers.

59,947. Are the farmers very fond of them?—There is no danger of that.

59,948. Did the horses occasionally trample on a pheasant?—No, never.

58,949. None of the pheasants ever came home to the pot?—It was too dangerous for us to touch them.

59,950. How long did you occupy these holdings after you did the hauling?—About six years.

59,951. Did you pay any interest on the money that was spent on the farm in buildings?—It did not cost me anything for building them, except haulage.

59,952. Were you paid at all for the haulage when you left?—Nothing at all.

59,953. Did you ask the landlord to allow you something?—I had signed contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act. I had no claim to make against him.

59,954. He did not offer you anything?—He did not.

59,955. Why did you leave?—Because I could not live there.

59,956. You could not pay for it?—I could not.

59,957. Your experience of the next farm was no better, was it?—Not much better.

59,958. The game was the cause of the ruin there again?—Yes. We had great trouble with it.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. GODFREY ROBERTS.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

59,959. Did you send your servant away when you were ordered to?—I did, straight away.

59,960. You were obliged to?—Yes, I was obliged to.

59,961. Was that at the request of the landlord or of the shooting tenant?—I cannot say. It was Mr. Wynne, the agent, who came to me.

59,962. Is the land in this district rated as high as the rent?—No, the rent is higher than the rate.

59,963. But you were only allowed as much as the rateable value of it?—I was not allowed anything. I lost the land and I lost the farm and everything.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,964. Is it a fact that the thicker the game are on the ground the tamer they are?—Yes, it is.

59,965. And you mean to say that they must be very thick on the ground for the pheasants to follow the plough?—There were thousands of them.

59,966. We were told at Holywell, by the Duke of Westminster's agent, that he gave all the game away to the tenants in the neighbourhood. Did you ever get any game from your landlord?—I have had a few couples during my lifetime.

59,967. Did you get a brace every year?—I might have had.

59,968. Are you sure that it was not to pick up the corn that the pheasants followed the plough?—When we were ploughing in spring they would follow the plough, and there would they be afterwards in the corn.

59,969. But were the sowing and harrowing done directly after the plough?—Yes, as soon as we finished ploughing.

59,970. But not the same day?—No, not the same day.

59,971. What was the date when you left this farm after you had been there 15 years?—Six years ago from now.

59,972. That would be in 1888?—Yes.

59,973. Had you been paying 67*l.* for this place all along from the time you first entered this farm until the year 1888?—The same rent from the beginning to the end, 75*l.*

59,974. Did you know of any farm being advanced during that time besides your own?—There was an advance on nearly every one of them.

59,975. Were times so good at that time that there was a justification for an advance in the rent?—It was much better then than when I left.

59,976. But you left, did you not, in 1888?—Yes, 1888.

59,977. Were other landlords making any abatements at that time?—I understood that.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

59,978. And yet your place was advanced?—Nearly all the tenants on the Rug estate were advanced in rent.

59,979. Was there general dissatisfaction among the tenants at this advance in rent?—Yes, there was.

59,980. Do you know whether any tenants made complaint to the agent or to the landlord?—I cannot say that, but I heard them complaining.

59,981. Do you think they were afraid to complain?—They might have been.

59,982. Was there any other reason, except fear, that they did not complain to the landlord or the agent?—I complained many times to the agent that my rent was too high, and his reply was that he would raise it another 5*l.* if he had his way.

59,983. So that the landlord is better than the agent?—I found the landlord better than the agent.

59,984. Is that general. Do you think that the landlords generally are better than the agents?—I should think so.

59,985. When you took this other farm at what you understood was to be an advance of 5*l.*, but as to which the agent demanded an advance of 8*l.*, did you have an agreement?—Yes, there was an agreement for me to pay 75*l.*

59,986. Was it when you saw the agreement that you discovered that the rent was 75*l.* and not 72*l.*?—I had a conversation with him, why he was advancing the rent more than it had been valued at, and he said he would advance it another 5*l.* if he could.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,987. What was the reason of the agent wishing to advance the rent another 5*l.*?—I cannot say. I was telling him that the advance that had been agreed to by the valuer was 5*l.*, and he said he would advance it another 5*l.* if he could. I cannot say why.

59,988. Do you know if there are any farmers in your neighbourhood that are afraid to come before this Commission?—Why will they not come if they are not afraid?

59,989. Then we are to understand that you think they are afraid?—I am certain of it.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,990. Do you find that farming is a profitable occupation now?—It does not pay at all; it pays nothing.

59,991. If farming does not pay, can you assign any reason why farmers hold on to the farms?—What else can we do? Where can we rear our children? We have gone too old to work.

59,992. Do you think, now in times of depression, that farmers hold on because of the sacrifice they would have to make in disposing of their stock by auction?—Yes, I do.

59,993. And they keep on in good times, hoping to cover their loss on bad times?—I do not know; we will have to live very long for that.

Mr. Griffiths.

59,994. Do you know of any farmers that have been obliged to borrow money to pay their rent?—Yes, I do.

Mr. Richard Jones.

59,995. What is the reason that there is a disinclination among farmers to come forward to give evidence?—I cannot say; but I have conversed with them and asked them to come, but they say, "No, they will only tread on us afterwards if we do."

59,996. You think they would have to suffer in some way or another?—They are obliged to suffer.

59,997. Do you find that there is a general complaint amongst farmers that farming does not pay?—I know of cases in which farmers have asked for a reduction of rent, giving the farms up unless they could get it, and the places were let under their noses to others.

59,998. At the same rent?—When I left the landlord would not reduce 1s. to me, but to the new tenant he reduced 15*l.*, according to what I hear.

59,999. Does that frequently occur?—It does occur sometimes.

Chairman.

60,000. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Vincent, and by Mr. Llewellyn Jones. Mr. Vincent's questions are as follows: "In what year did you leave the farm on the Rug estate?"—The last farm, my Lord?

60,001. No, the first?—It was about the year 1873.

60,002. "Do you know that there was no Agricultural Holdings Act at that time?"—I spoke of not being compensated for improvements only in reference to Nant Fawr, the other farm. I did not mention it in connexion with Penycod.

60,003. "It is quite 30 years since Mr. Wagstaff left Rug, is it not?"—I cannot give the date, but Mr. Wynn was coming to live at Rug, and Mr. Wagstaff was going to Plas Meifod, Llangollen.

60,004. "This did not happen in the time of the present Mr. Wynn, did it?"—Nothing, at the first farm, except the haulage and the building. Mr. Wynn had come to the estate the first year I took the farm.

60,005. The present Mr. Wynn?—It was under trustees then, but he had come there.

60,006. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "How long ago did you say you entered this farm on the Rug estate?"—The first farm?

Chairman—continued.

60,007. Yes, the first farm?—I took the farm the same Michaelmas as the death of Mr. Vaughan occurred, when Mr. Wynn followed him to the Rug.

Mr. Richard Jones.

60,008. That is Penycod?—Yes.

60,009. The date of that is 1858?—Yes.

Chairman.

60,010. Then the answer to that question of Mr. Vincent's: "How long ago did you say you entered this farm on the Rug estate," is "I entered the farm in 1858." Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "When was it that you left the second farm?"—Six years ago to this time.

60,011. "Did you speak of 30 or 40 persons taking part in a shooting party?"—There would be that. I daresay there were 30 oftener than not.

60,012. Mr. Vincent asks: "Is not that rather a large party?"—Yes, but he was shooting over the Rug and the Rhagatt estates.

60,013. The following question is by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Are you considered a good farmer by your neighbours?"—Mr. Wynn himself told the agent when I took the farm that I was a good farmer.

60,014. The following questions are handed in by Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones: "Is there a farm called Trewyn Fawr on the Rug estate?"—Yes, there is.

60,015. "What was the name of the late tenant of this farm?"—John Davies.

60,016. "When he died did a relative of his apply to the landlord for the farm?"—Yes, his son-in-law.

60,017. "What was Mr. Wynn's reply?"—I am not certain, but he would not let the farm to him at any price, because I believe he was a Liberal.

60,018. "What reason did he give for refusing to let him this farm?"—I cannot say, but I have heard that John Jones, this son-in-law, received a letter from the agent that he would only let the farm to a Conservative.

60,019. This question is from the Chair: Can you produce that letter?—The man that received it is alive now at Bwlch y Doniau, Glyn Ceiriog—John Jones, this son-in-law.

60,020. Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones' questions continued: "Do you know whether the applicant has the letter in his possession?"—I am not very certain, but I think he has it.

60,021. "They let you a second farm on the estate, whether you were a good tenant or not?"—Mr. Wynn approved of me saying that I was a good farmer, but he had not come in as agent; he came in the same year as I came in.

60,022. The following question is by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Did Mr. Wynn say you were a

"good tenant when you left the farm?"—When I took this farm at Llanferres my landlord met a gentleman at Corwen and asked that gentleman if he knew me. He said he did, and he gave me an excellent character as a farmer, so that he did not write to Mr. Wynn for my character—my character was there before me.

60,023. There are two further questions by Mr. Vincent. Mr. Vincent says he wishes to be quite clear, and he asks, "Do you say you signed a letter contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883?"—Yes, I did.

(Mr. Vincent.) The Interpreter has omitted to put the date of the Act, and there are two Agricultural Holdings Acts; he has not translated the date.

Chairman.

The witness says he signed a letter contracting out of the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, I understand.

(The Interpreter.) He does not say 1883; he says out of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

(Mr. Vincent.) I should like my question translated.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. HENRY WILLIAMS called and examined.

Chairman.

60,027. Do you speak English?—Yes.

60,028. Then we will take your evidence in English if you will kindly give it us?—I have prepared a short statement.

60,029. We will just go through it. There is a good deal of evidence that has been given several times over, and I will not trouble you to go through that, but just take the salient points of it. You are Mr. Henry Williams, of Plas-y-Ward, and a tenant farmer?—Yes.

60,030. You farm 300 acres and 170 acres, that is, 470 acres altogether?—Yes.

60,031. Can you tell us what the rent is?—The rent of the 170 acres is 160*l*.

60,032. And then the 300 acres?—512*l*.

60,033. Then I suppose you are one of the largest tenant farmers—the largest tenant farmer in the district?—Well, I may be.

60,034. There are not many farms as big as yours?—No.

60,035. You farm under Sir Watkin Williams-Wynn, and under Mr. Wickham, of Chester?—Yes.

60,036. Whose is the 300 acres?—Sir Watkin's.

60,037. And Mr. Wickham's the 170 acres?—Yes.

60,038. Are the rights of sheep walks limited in your district?—Yes, in some parts.

Chairman.

(To the Interpreter.) Will you translate that question. You had better have the question before you, and take it word for word.

[The Interpreter put the question again to the witness].

(The Witness.) I only signed one.

Chairman.

You want to know, I understand, Mr. Vincent, whether it was the 1883 Act?

(Mr. Vincent.) Yes, my Lord.

Chairman.

60,024. Which Act was it?—It was the Agricultural Holdings Act.

60,025. You do not know which year?—I do not know which year. He sent a paper round to each one of us. We were not to get anything under the Act.

Mr. Griffiths.

60,026. You said that there were 30 or 40 people who went over the farm to shoot. Did you include the men that went to beat for game? You do not mean to say there were 30 or 40 guns there, do you?—I include the beaters and all.

Re-examined,
61,952.Chairman—continued.

60,039. Are rents of farms, with sheep walks, considered lower than similar farms that have not got any?—They are.

60,040. Of course, on Sir Watkin's estate, politics, religion, and language, make no difference; and may we take it from you that it is the same on Mr. Wickham's estate?—Yes.

60,041. Of course, you have got an agreement on the Wynnstay estate, and the same on Mr. Wickham's estate, too?—Yes.

60,042. You have put down here that you consider, on some estates, agreements are as safe as leases?—I do.

60,043. But you qualify that by saying on some estates?—On some estates.

60,044. Not on all?—Not on all.

60,045. Do you object to any part of Sir Watkin's agreement, which has been put in several times?—No, I do not.

60,046. Are the strict clauses of the agreements enforced by good landlords?—Not by good landlords.

60,047. But have you ever known them enforced in your experience?—I cannot refer to any particular case, but I have felt sometimes that the landlord has been too severe towards some tenants in leaving.

60,048. You think they have been too severe?—In some instances.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. HENRY WILLIAMS.

Chairman—continued.

60,049. In some instances, the tenant has not been sufficiently protected?—Yes, but I may say the best landlords do not press the most stringent clauses of the agreement.

60,050. But you have known in your experience some tenants hardly treated?—I have.

60,051. What are the average rents in the neighbourhood?—On upland farms the rent is from 10s. to 20s. There are some, I might say, at 5s., but the average, I believe, is from 10s. to 20s. on upland farms, and on lowland farms, from 25s. to 30s. There are some higher than that for accommodation land; but that is as to farms.

60,052. There are no services required by either of your landlords, except the payment of rent?—Except the payment of rent.

60,053. And keeping the farm in a proper and husbandlike condition?—Quite so.

60,054. Then you say, "As a rule, the holding is not let to the highest bidder?"—Yes.

60,055. As a rule?—As a rule.

60,056. But does it ever happen that it is let to the highest bidder, have you ever known that to happen?—I have.

60,057. A farm has been put up, and let to the highest bidder?—Yes.

60,058. And the man who offered the most money got it?—Yes.

60,059. Whether he was a good tenant, or whether he was not?—Yes, in a few instances, whatever; but, in general, the best landlords do not do that. They look out for the best tenant and accept him.

60,060. That, I think, is the universal opinion, that the best landlords do not let to the highest bidder?—They do not.

60,061. But you have known it to happen?—Yes, I have known it to happen.

60,062. Can you tell us anything about reductions and abatements on these estates?—I have been 24 years on the farm of 170 acres.

60,063. How many on the 300?—It is four years now since I took the 300 acre farm.

60,064. Now, will you tell us a little about your reductions and abatements on the two holdings?—On the farm of 170 acres, about 15 years ago I applied for a reduction. Colonel Hughes was the agent, and I applied for 20l. reduction, and I got it. A few years after, the prices of stock went down, and I had an abatement for four years of 15 per cent. The owner of that estate died four years ago, and the owner now is Mr. Wickham, of Chester, and he returned me 10 per cent. for the last two years, and allowed tithe. I have been for four years on the farm of 300 acres, and I have had 15 per cent. back for the last two years.

60,065. For the last two years Sir Watkin has returned 15 per cent.?—Yes.

60,066. That is not permanent?—Well, I suppose it meets the bad seasons.

60,067. As a practical man, if seasons improve, could you go back to the old rent, and pay the rent without having frequent abatements?—If prices were as they were 20 years ago —

Chairman—continued.

60,068. I do not mean that, but if prices rose a little—if prices were a little brighter and better, could you pay the old rent without the 15 per cent. reduction, do you think?—Well, they must alter a good deal to what they are now.

60,069. Then farming is not a very profitable investment at the present time?—It is not.

60,070. You can make it pay, but there is no great profit to be made out of farming?—No. I might say that most of us are losers by farming.

60,071. On the whole year, do you find that you lose money at the end of the year; when you make up your accounts do you find you are to the bad?—Yes. There is no profit, but losses, these last seasons, and I doubt very much whether any farmer would say that he farms at a profit, unless he goes out for some way of farming different to what we have in this country.

60,072. In your accounts do you put in the cost of your living, and that of your family as well, or only what you make after the rent you pay?—Well, what I receive from the farm, and what I pay.

60,073. Then there is very little to live on left?—Very little from farming.

60,074. Just perhaps enough to live on, but nothing to put by?—Well, I am more inclined to say that I am a loser.

60,075. That is what I wanted to understand, that at the end of the year you are distinctly to the bad?—Yes.

60,076. Have the local rates increased or not?—They have increased. See 65,1 60,077. But to any extent?—Well, I cannot show that, but they have a tendency to increase.

60,078. I may take it from you they are going up?—Yes, and upon that point I do not feel that professional men, such as lawyers and doctors, pay their share of the local rates; it entirely falls, or mostly falls, on the land.

60,079. It falls too heavily on the land, that is your opinion?—Yes.

60,080. Now, is there any sub-letting in your district?—Very few cases.

60,081. When is the rent paid, on the day it is due, or later?—Later. It is postponed.

60,082. As a practical man do you know anything about farmers having to borrow money to meet their engagements and pay their rents?—I do.

60,083. You know that of your own knowledge?—I do.

60,084. Is that common?—Well, not very common, but I know of several cases, especially these last years.

60,085. Do they borrow the money from each other, or do they go to the banks, and pay a high rate of interest for it?—Well, they borrow from each other. In some cases I have known of some going to the bank.

60,086. What rate of interest would the bank ask for a three months' advance, say?—Indeed, I cannot tell you.

3 September 1894.]

MR. HENRY WILLIAMS.

Chairman—continued.

60,087. You have not heard that?—No.

60,088. But it is pretty high, I suppose?—It is high.

60,089. Then have you plenty of labourers?—No; labourers that will stick to farm-work are scarce.

60,090. There is a good deal of arable land, I suppose, gone down to grass?—Yes.

60,091. What is the reason of that?—Labourers are scarce, and the corn low; and I consider that grazing, with all the prices of stock having gone down, pays better than sowing corn.

60,092. Now about improvements. I suppose on Sir Watkin's estate everything is done by him—all the improvements are done by him, is that so?—Yes.

60,093. He puts up the gates and the gate-posts, and hangs the gates, and everything?—Yes.

60,094. What does the tenant do?—The haulage.

60,095. Is that supposed to be a hardship, or is that willingly done?—Oh, willingly done. I have done some improvements myself without asking the landlord.

60,096. Draining your land?—No; such as putting up a water-wheel.

60,097. What did that cost you?—About 40% to 50%.

60,098. Do you consider that you have improved your farms. Do you consider your farms are in better heart and better condition than they were when you took them?—I do.

60,099. What is your opinion of the tenant farmers as a class in the neighbourhood, are they an industrious, hardworking people?—Yes, they are.

60,100. They do the best they can for the land?—Yes.

60,101. Do you think, on the whole, that they have improved the land that they hold, or that it has gone back?—Well, I cannot say that the land has improved these last years. I know of some parts that are not cultivated to the extent they ought to have been, but the labourers' wages have been high, and the prices of stock low. I would be more inclined to say that the land is worse than it was 10 years ago in general.

60,102. Taking it generally all over the country, the land is not so good as it was 10 years ago?—That is my opinion.

60,103. Is the Agricultural Holdings Act any good to you at all?—I am not aware of anyone having much benefit from it.

60,104. Now, as regards the growing crops; is there any custom of the country in this neighbourhood?—On leaving?

60,105. Yes?—The outgoing tenant has the right to sow wheat the last year of his tenancy, and has a right to half of that crop. If it is summer fallow, then he is entitled to two-thirds of the crop.

60,106. And the outgoing tenant has a right to live in the house for a certain time after his tenancy expires?—Till the 1st of May.

Chairman—continued.

60,107. Is that a hardship or not on the incoming tenant. What do you think? We have had great differences of opinion about that. Is that a fair provision?—Generally there is good accommodation at the farm for the new tenant for his horses and his men. It is so on Sir Watkin's agreement.

60,108. But not for himself?—Not for himself. It is a very great inconvenience, particularly if the incoming tenant lives a fair distance off.

60,109. On the other hand, it is hard on the outgoing tenant if he has to clear out of the farm all at once?—It is.

60,110. So that it is really a mutual agreement between the outgoing and the incoming tenant?—Yes.

60,111. There is no great hardship in it either way?—No, I could not say that there is.

60,112. Now about the sale of sheep, is there anything that you would like to say about that?—Well, I think this is what is generally done. The landlord or the new tenant takes the sheep at a valuation—the mountain sheep.

60,113. There is no obligation on the landlord to do it, but he generally does it?—He generally does it, and I think it is very fair that the new tenant or the landlord ought to take the sheep on the mountain at a valuation.

60,114. Have you had any trouble about game in your neighbourhood?—There is trouble about game in the district, but I am not in the least troubled, nor any adjoining neighbours. I take the sporting over my two holdings at an annual rental of a little less than 6d. an acre with which arrangement I am satisfied. Some farmers in the district have suffered great loss by game, those mostly who have their farms adjoining plantations and whose landlords let the shooting to strange gentlemen who have no sympathy with the tenant farmers, nor their keepers any respect either.

60,115. The tenant farmers would preserve game for their landlords, but they object to shooting tenants, is that so?—They object to shooting tenants.

60,116. But they would not mind preserving the game for the landlord?—No, to some extent.

60,117. Do you live in a hunting country?—No.

60,118. The hounds do not come over your farms?—No, I have not seen them.

60,119. The tenant farmers do not object to fox hunting, do they, as a rule?—There is no fox hunting in our part.

60,120. But where there is, where Sir Watkin's hounds go, they do not object to them?—Indeed I cannot say; they have not been in this part at all; it is quite strange.

60,121. Have you known any farmers set up their sons in business or on other farms?—I know a few.

60,122. A few, but not many?—Not many, unless they have some income or are doing some other business, especially these last years.

60,123. Unless they had some other means of livelihood they would not be able to set up

3 September, 1894.]

MR. HENRY WILLIAMS.

their sons in business or on other farms?—A few, a very few.

60,124. What is the cause of the present depression in your opinion?—I believe foreign produce is the cause of the present low prices. Farmers are worse off than they were 20 years ago, even if they have 25 or 30 per cent. back. I have made out some tables here just to show the difference between the prices as they were in 1874 and as they are in 1894:—

Prices of beef, 1874, from 8*d.* to 9*d.*

1894, „ 5*d.* „ 7*d.*

Mutton in the same proportion.

Tub butter, 1874, 15*d.*; 1894, 10*d.*

Wool, 1874, 17*d.* (I mean Welsh wool.)

1894, 7*d.*

Store bullocks (I take the prices last spring) one-third less than they were 20 years ago.

Wheat, 1874, 19*s.*; 1894, 8*s.* 6*d.*

Barley, 1874, 16*s.*; 1894, 8*s.*

Potatoes, 1874, 12*s.* to 15*s.*; 1894, 5*s.*

Some landlords deserve great credit for their sympathy towards their tenants by returns on the rent day, and their expenditure on the buildings for the convenience of the tenant, and I am proud to say that my landlord, Sir Watkin, through his agent, Colonel Hughes, has met his tenants liberally and helped them to pull through in these hard seasons, and the best feeling prevails between us. I might also add that I am aware of a case where Colonel Hughes is the agent on the estate and where he reduced the rent of the widow, after his notice was drawn to the case, from 180*l.* to 130*l.*, and besides that he returned as an abatement what he considered the widow had paid too much for some years back.

60,125. He returned the back rent?—Yes, for some years. I might add also that I have had everything I have asked for on the two years from Sir Watkin and Mr. Wickham.

60,126. You are perfectly satisfied?—Perfectly satisfied.

60,127. From your individual experience you do not think any arbitration court would be in any way necessary?—I believe if every landlord and agent would act as Colonel Hughes does towards those under him there would be no cry to-day for a land court at all. I have not felt it required.

60,128. Have you heard any general wish or desire for such a court of arbitration?—Well, I have heard.

60,129. Is it a general wish?—I might say that there are a good many, but I have not quite understood what is meant by a land court, whether it is meant to be a court of arbitration for a tenant to refer to the court to settle some disputes between the landlord and the tenant or a court to settle rents. I am not quite satisfied in my mind what is meant by a land court.

60,130. Do you think there is a general dissatisfaction among tenants in Wales with regard to their position or not?—No, I cannot say that. I do not think there is.

60,131. You do not think there is, but at the same time there is a desire amongst a good many tenant farmers for some undefined court of arbitration?—I might say that there is amongst some, whatever.

Chairman—continued.

60,132. Amongst some portion of the tenant farmers of Wales?—Some portion.

Mr. Richard Jones.

60,133. Do you know what is in the mind of these tenants when they talk about a land court, whether it is a court for adjusting rents or simply a court for settling disputes?—That I was telling, my Lord, just now, that I do not quite understand what is meant by a land court, whether a court to settle disputes between the landlord and a tenant or a court to adjust rents.

60,134. But what I am asking you is this, you would probably be acquainted with what is in the minds of tenant farmers when they talk about a land court, whether it is a court to adjudicate upon questions of rent or not. What is in the minds of the farmers when they are talking about a land court?—Indeed I cannot answer the question decidedly what is meant.

60,135. Have you heard tenant farmers complain that the rents are too high?—I have. That is a general complaint.

60,136. And would they say afterwards that there ought to be a land court to settle the question of rent?—The tenants that are under landlords who turn a deaf ear to what they ask for generally complain and ask for such a court, but I do not think it is the general feeling amongst the tenants who are well treated.

60,137. Do you think there would be any objection to the establishment of a court to adjust rents on estates where the landlords turn a deaf ear to the applications of their tenants?—Indeed I cannot answer that question. When you speak of dissatisfaction, do you mean on the part of the landlords, or on the part of the tenants?

60,138. Dissatisfaction on the part of the tenants, because they are paying too high rents?—On those estates where the tenants are very badly treated?

60,139. Yes?—Well, those are the estates which call for such a thing as a land court.

60,140. Do you think it is possible to establish a land court to adjust rents on estates of that kind without giving offence in any way to good landlords?—I believe that good landlords would have objection to such a court.

60,141. They would object to any third party interfering?—Well, I should say so too.

60,142. But supposing that it was a court where either the landlord or the tenant might apply to have the rent settled in case they fail on the question of rent?—I know some cases where that has been done. It has been referred to a third person as an arbitrator, which almost means the same thing.

60,143. And did you find it worked satisfactorily?—Well, I know of cases where it has been done. The tenants were quite prepared to accept the person that the landlord named.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. HENRY WILLIAMS.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

That is not often, but I know of cases of that nature where the person that was nominated the tenant had good confidence in, and was a practical gentleman.

60,144. Do you think there would be any objection to this. A suggestion was made to us at Holywell that the tenant and the landlord should contract with each other for the rent, and at the end of the period of three years, if the tenant found that the place did not pay, then the question of rent should be referred to a court, either a court or a public official appointed by the Board of Agriculture?—Yes.

60,145. Do you think there would be any objection to that?—Indeed, I cannot say at all.

60,146. As a protection to the tenant?—It might be good in some cases, but I know several landlords that I would not be afraid to refer to, and state my case before them.

60,147. You could safely trust yourself in their hands?—In my landlord's hands I would.

60,148. But you would admit that there are other landlords who are not as lenient to their tenants?—Yes.

60,149. You say that the Agricultural Holdings Act is inoperative in the district?—Inoperative, yes.

60,150. But still you would admit, perhaps, that it has a certain amount of moral influence in protecting the tenant?—Yes.

60,151. Probably many landlords would act harshly towards the tenant if there was not such an Act in existence?—I cannot say that.

60,152. But I am asking your opinion?—It might be so.

60,153. Do you think the Act requires amendment in any way?—I have not studied it to a great extent, but as it is, I have not known of anyone receiving any benefit from it.

60,154. Do you know of any claims having been made under the third part of Schedule I., that is, for the consumption of cake on a farm, or for manures?—I cannot refer to any case now.

60,155. Then all questions between the outgoing and incoming tenant are referred to a valuer?—Yes, they are.

60,156. How do you act, does each party appoint his own valuer?—Each party appoints his own valuer, and an umpire is appointed by those parties.

60,157. An umpire is appointed if there is any necessity?—Quite so.

60,158. Then the two valuers value the crops?—They value the crops and anything else that the new tenant has promised to take from the outgoing tenant.

60,159. And they value the sheep?—They value the sheep.

60,160. Are the sheep valued above the market price?—The mountain sheep are valued above the market price on account that they are on the land.

60,161. They are settled?—Settled down.

60,162. How much more than the market price as a rule—Is a head?—The wethers are worth more than any other sheep, they are worth more than the ewes and the lambs, and generally the course taken is to put the price of the wethers on the whole stock, that has been the custom.

60,163. Is it provided in the agreement that the incoming tenant shall take to the sheep at a valuation?—It is in some agreements.

60,164. Do you think that should be general?—I think so.

60,165. And that if there is no incoming tenant the landlord should take them?—The landlord should take them.

60,166. Of course, it might work out badly in some cases, where there is no incoming tenant?—Yes, and in the case of any one turned out in a bad season.

60,167. Had you any understanding with your landlord or his agent respecting this water-wheel?—Not at all.

60,168. Suppose you left, say in another year would you be paid any compensation?—Well, I trust I would be paid to some extent. They were at the time spending a large amount of money on my buildings, putting up a Dutch barn, and doing every alteration that I asked them for, so I did not ask at all about this, I put it up myself.

60,169. You would have to leave it to his honour?—Entirely so.

60,170. You did not consider, as a matter of business, that it was necessary to have some sort of understanding?—I have gone on his honour.

60,171. Do you find that that is a defect among tenant farmers—that they do not work sufficiently on business principles—they do not conduct their farms on strict business lines?—Well, I cannot say that. Some are ahead of others; but I think farmers are improving on the whole in keeping a better class of stock and breeding better; they are rearing better stock on the land. I believe they are paying more attention to that than they were doing many years ago.

Mr. Griffiths.

60,172. I thought you said that you knew of tenants who had been rather severely treated; will you give us the names of any?—Well, I prefer not. I had no intention to refer to any case.

60,173. Is it the same with regard to the farms that have been let to the highest bidder?—Yes.

60,174. You would not like to name them?—No, I prefer not.

60,175. Are large farmers like yourself, or are small farmers, better able to stand the depression?—I believe that they are just in the same position.

60,176. It depends on the amount of capital they have?—Yes, it does.

60,177. One is able to pay more in labour than the other is?—Yes, that is so.

60,178. The small farmer has got to support himself as a rule?—That is so.

Mr. HENRY WILLIAMS.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

60,179. And the price of labour is very much increased?—Yes, it is.

60,180. Could more labour be advantageously employed?—Yes.

60,181. On farms generally?—Yes.

60,182. Why is it not so employed?—Well, they are not so easy to be had. Men to follow the teams, to open ditches, and do the work of the farm are not so easy to be had, and they prefer not to do it if they can get some work in towns.

60,183. They would rather lose a chance day than be tied down on a farm altogether?—Yes.

60,184. That is what is stated in Mr. Lleufer Thomas's report here. You live in the Vale of Clwyd?—I live in the Vale of Clwyd.

60,185. Have you ever added up your produce expenditure for, say the years 1874 and 1894 as well. Have you compared the total amount for two years?—Yes, I have made a rough guess at the figures.

60,186. Could you give us the benefit of your calculation?—Well, I can say so much as this, that farming paid me pretty well then.

60,187. But how much less is it now. I do not care about the amount altogether, but how much less is your produce now than it amounted to in 1874?—I was not farming then the whole of the land that I have now. I had only this farm of 170 acres.

60,188. Will you give us either farm?—I may say so much as this. I was doing very well. The farm was paying me then, and most farmers can say the same at that period, but when the time of the depression came, and even after we had this reduction, we are as a rule losers.

60,189. Then you consider you are worse off, and notwithstanding the abatements you have, you would rather have the old times, with no abatements?—Far better.

60,190. You named some instances of some widows that had been dealt very fairly with, when their landlord or agent came to understand their position. Do you think there are many such cases? Do you think that the landlord and agent really know the position of the farmers?—Well, I do believe there are cases where they do not.

60,191. The tenants do not always like to come forward and make complaints to the landlord, do they?—No, they do not.

Mr. Grove.

60,192. I think you told us you consider an agreement is quite as good as a lease?—On some estates.

60,193. I was going to ask you, suppose there were a death of the present owner, or a sale of the property, it would not be so safe then, would it?—No, but the landlords—I mean the best landlords—would act fairly towards the relations of the old tenant in a case like that.

sorts of landlords? In Anglesey we had evidence dividing them into two classes, A and B. I suppose your mind is running somewhat in that direction, but we are very pleased to think that most of your landlords are good landlords about this part, at any rate. Now as to game, although you have had no unpleasantness yourself about game, have you heard of unpleasantness anywhere in your district?—Yes, I have.

60,195. As a rule, do you think that the keepers are as considerate towards the tenant-farmers as they ought to be?—I do not believe they are.

60,196. You say also that religion and politics make no difference in the case of your farm?—No.

60,197. Could you say that of the district generally?—Well, I believe I can in general, whatever. There might be exceptions, but I am not aware of any.

60,198. Is there any disinclination amongst the tenant-farmers to come forward and give evidence before this Commission, do you think?—Well, I have not known of any.

60,199. Are there many small freeholders about this part?—Not many about here. There are a few in the Derwen district.

60,200. How long ago is it, generally speaking, since they bought those properties?—About 18 or 20 years ago.

60,201. Did they have to borrow money a good deal to do that, do you think?—Yes, most of them.

60,202. Do you think they have paid off, very many of them, by this time?—I do not think they have.

60,203. What rate of interest do you suppose they are paying?—About 4 per cent., or something like that.

60,204. Without redemption?—Without redemption.

60,205. Is it your view that if money is spent in improvements, there should be compensation given on a change of tenancy?—It is.

60,206. Then you speak of sons and daughters having been set up in business. That does not apply, I suppose, much to the present time?—No.

60,207. You consider there is a depression at the present time?—Yes.

60,208. And that they are not doing so well as they did years ago?—No, they are not.

60,209. You are a county councillor, I think?—Yes.

60,210. Have your County Council appointed an analyst under the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act?—Yes, they have.

60,211. Is it made use of by the farmers at all?—Well, I have not heard of anyone.

60,212. For instance, take your own case. You have got a very large farm, a very important farm, indeed. Have you sent in any samples to the analyst to be tested?—I have not.

60,213. In our county we have had a great many sent in already. Now, is your land very good, because you seem to pay a very heavy rent. For your 300 acres you pay 512*l.*, that is at the rate of about 34*s.* an acre?—Yes.

60,214. That is pretty well, I suppose, the maximum price of the district?—Yes.

60,215. I suppose that is an exceptionally good farm, is it?—Well, it is a fairly good farm.

Chairman.

60,216. I have a few questions to trouble you with from Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "You represent the Derwen Division of Denbighshire on the Denbigh County Council, do you not?"—Yes.

60,217. "Are you well acquainted with the circumstances of most of the farmers in this Division?"—I am partly, whatever.

60,218. "Who are the chief landlords in this Division?"—Lord Bagot, and Colonel West.

60,219. Anybody else?—And Sir Watkin.

60,220. "What is the condition of the buildings on these estates?"—Well, I have said already that on Sir Watkin's I believe they are very good.

See 62,141. 60,221. And on the other estates?—Well, I cannot say much, but there is the Llynwn Ynn estate also, that is a large estate in this district. There are good buildings set up on most of the farms there, and some new buildings continuously; but I think on Lord Bagot's and Colonel West's estate they are not so well as on the other estates.

60,222. "Do you know a farm called Fach-lwyd, in the parish of Gyffyllog?"—I do.

60,223. "Are you acquainted with the circumstances under which Lloyd, the late tenant, left the farm?"—Well, I was there valuing but I could not give any particulars to be certain. I could not give any facts that I could stand by.

60,224. "If you have been a loser during the past seasons, then your rent is too high, is it not?"—It is too high at present.

60,225. "You gave a comparative statement of the market prices of agricultural produce and farm stock in 1874 and 1894. Do you think that rents have fallen in Wales in proportion to the fall in prices?"—I do not.

60,226. Then there is a question by Mr. Owen Wynne. "Do you not think, as a rule, the farmers of Wales know nothing of a land

Chairman—continued.

"court and care nothing for a land court?"—Well they have not had any experience to know much about it. As I said before, I know that there is some talk amongst some portion of the tenants—the tenants, mostly, of the landlords who deal rather hard towards their tenants.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,227. When you refer to a land court, do you mean a court that would have power to fix rents?—Well, I have not quite understood what is meant by a land court, whether, as I said before, a court of arbitration between the landlord and the tenant, or whether it is a court to adjust rents.

Mr. Grove.

60,228. Whatever the court may be, I suppose you would like the landlords and tenants first of all to have the opportunity of agreeing to the rent and agreeing to the conditions, would you not?—I would.

60,229. The chances are then, that every good landlord, or sympathetic landlord, would agree without going to the court at all?—I think so; yes.

60,230. Then would not that remove a great deal of objection to the court if there were an opportunity of doing that first?—Well, I believe it would.

Mr. Griffiths.

60,231. Would you kindly tell us by whom you were employed to value, in the valuation that you spoke of?—I was asked by the agent and by the tenant with another gentleman.

60,232. Could you tell us what was brought before you to value. Was it the stock that you had to value, or what?—The crops.

60,233. Did the landlord take to the crops?—Yes, the agent gave instructions to us.

60,234. Did you value satisfactorily to both the landlord and the outgoing tenant?—I understand that there was a complaint on the part of the agent that it was too high.

60,235. No complaint on the tenant's side?—No.

The witness withdrew.

Colonel CORNWALLIS WEST called and examined.

Chairman.

60,236. You are lord lieutenant of the county of Denbigh?—Yes.

60,237. And you are tenant for life of the Ruthin Castle estate of about 10,500 acres in this county?—Yes.

See 60,555. 60,238. I believe your agent will give details as to the management of the estate since 1868, when you came into possession?—Yes.

Chairman—continued.

60,239. I believe you have prepared a statement; will you kindly let us hear it?—I am tenant for life of the Ruthin Castle estate of about 10,500 acres, in the county of Denbigh. My agent, who will follow me, will give the Commission full particulars of the estate, of which I have been in possession since 1868, and of its management in which I have always taken an active interest. I wish, therefore, simply to touch upon certain points connected with the inquiry, as they present themselves to my mind.

Taking the syllabus issued by the Commission, I find the first question refers to the effect on the occupation of land on an encumbered estate. The fact of an estate being encumbered would materially hamper the owner in his power to spend money upon it, if, as in some cases, the mortgages and other charges absorb 50 per cent. of the income. There are many cases in Wales, as in England, of owners with old charges to meet, mostly incurred by family settlements or in costly political contests generations ago, and where permanent reductions of rent have been made the net spendable income is, of course, affected. Land in big lots is as difficult to sell in Wales as it is in England at such a value as would make it worth the while of a tenant for life of an encumbered estate to get his trustees to sell, under Lord Cairns' Act, but I cannot see why a landowner should not be given facilities to borrow money from the State, both to pay off charges and generally to improve his property. Where the security is ample, the State could well afford to lend at such a rate of interest as would, after providing for a sinking fund be less than the 4 per cent. or $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. now usually paid to a mortgagee. Of course in suggesting this I am taking for granted that legislation will not be in the future of such a character as to affect the full, complete, and immemorial legal rights of private property in land as at present recognised and enjoyed and so lessen the security given to the State for advances made. Assistance might also be given by the State to landowners to redeem the tithe rentcharge by advances at low interest. It is unjust to ignore the claims of landowners to the consideration of Parliament. If they are impoverished by economic or any other causes beyond their control, and are unable to find purchasers for the land they possess, except at an enormous sacrifice, it would be good policy and in the interest of the State to assist them to disencumber their land from every charge upon it, whilst, on the other hand, the State might very well insist on prohibiting, in the future, any charges on land being created by settlement or otherwise above a stipulated amount, based on its rateable value.

I am well aware, however, of the outcry with which any proposed State relief to landowners would be met on the part of a certain section of politicians, and as an alternative to advances by the State, it has been suggested that trustees of settled estates should be empowered by law, after obtaining the sanction of the court, to advance money for permanent improvements even if forced to borrow it.

They should also be enabled to raise money, at the lowest rate of interest, to pay off the debts of a life-tenant, on condition that the amount so raised was covered by an insurance. Why should a tenant for life have to pay 5 per cent. to a bank in order to dower his daughter with, say 5,000*l.* besides insuring his life, when he might get the trustees to raise it from his estate at 3 per cent. or $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent.?

It is in the interest of the country that land should be able to attract capital.

As the law stands now, a tenant for life can improve his property; either (a.) By dipping into his income (often insufficient for the many calls made upon it), or (b.) By going to a land improvement company, and paying 7*l.* 5*s.* 6*d.* for 25 years on every 100*l.* spent.

As trustees can borrow at 3*l.* per cent., or $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., the life-tenant is paying for 25 years a much higher interest to a land company than he would do to the trustees. I have myself been paying for 20 years 826*l.* per annum for the use of 11,000*l.* spent on my estate, and receiving no interest upon it. At the end of the term of 25 years I shall have paid 20,870*l.* for the loan of 11,000*l.*; whereas, if the trustees had had power to raise the money on mortgage at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., receiving small annual instalments as a sinking fund besides to meet the principal, the amount repaid to the trust need not necessarily exceed the original sum raised. Considerable relief would be felt by tenants for life if trustees were given enlarged powers, and though there may be some who would prefer absolute ownership of land, there is no reason, so long as the system of "life ownership" exists, why changes should not be carried out in the land by extending the powers of trustees, so as to cause more capital to be used in improving the land and developing its resources.

With regard to land situated within manors, I happen to be lord of the manor of Ruthin, and of various other manors in the neighbourhood of Llanarmon Dyffryn Ceiriog, to all of which mineral and sporting rights are attached.

An inclosure was sanctioned by the Commissioners, in the year 1852, at this end of the Vale of Clwyd. It originated with the freeholders, and was supported by my father, who was the lord of the manor at the time. I think where the rights of the community are guarded, an inclosure of waste common land cannot fail to be a public benefit, as it creates freeholders, and so enables land to be broken up and cultivated, where it is practicable, by the freeholders to whom it is apportioned, and roads to be made through it. At the same time, it must be remembered that most of the high mountain land of Wales is only adapted for sheep pasturage, and could not possibly, owing to its altitude and the poorness of the soil be cultivated or planted at a profit. It is in fact, only of value as grouse moors and sheep-walks.

In some cases, I have seen up-land cropped with cereals for two or three years in succession, and then allowed to revert to the original heath. It was probably found too expensive to cultivate, and the farmer had not the means to buy artificial manure, and farmyard manure could not be carted to the land, except at great expense.

Mountain sheep-walks attached to farms are usually a source of considerable profit. The mountain is let at a nominal rent of about

6d. or 1s. an acre. It sometimes happens, in consequence of too many sheep being kept that many die in winter, and some carelessness is shown in not feeding the ewes before lambing, and bringing down the flocks to the lowlands before the cold weather sets in.

I think Welsh mountain farmers hardly realise sufficiently the effect on the quality of wool of keeping sheep in a low condition; it deteriorates it enormously in quality, and it cannot, of course, fetch a high price in the market.

It having been frequently stated that the landowners in Wales are what are called aliens, that is, not of Welsh birth, I refer to the return made in 1873, of persons owning land in Denbighshire, and I find the following names, clearly indicating their Welsh origin, with many others not so distinctly Welsh, but yet long connected with Wales: Davies, 99; Edwards, 80; Ellis, 18; Evans, 79; Ffoulkes, 25; Griffiths, 48; Hughes, 106; Humphreys, 15; James, 7; Jones, 367; Lewis, 26; Lloyds, 49; Morris, 36; Owen, 39; Parry, 50; Phillips, 8; Price, 18; Richards, 10; Roberts, 162; Williams, 148; Thomas, 47; Wynn, 24. There were a very large number besides that I have picked out, showing, distinctly, that the land of Wales after all is not confined to Englishmen.

The following statistics from the county of Denbigh from the same return may interest the Commission. There are—328,824 acres of cultivated land in the county of Denbigh.

179,426 acres belong to 54 persons, giving an average of about 3,323 to each of the 54.

33,826 acres are owned by 48 persons, who have more than 500, but less than 1,000 acres each.

115,502 acres are owned by 5,606 persons who have less than 500 each, giving an average of about 21 acres each.

Of course, I do not deny that circumstances have very much altered since 1873. That return is the only available return that we have. You will see there are in the whole county 386,416 acres; there are 328,824 acres of cultivated land in the county, and 179,426 acres belong to 54 persons. There are 33,896 acres owned by 48 persons who have more than 500 but less than 1,000 acres each; there are 115,502 acres owned by 5,606 persons who have less than 500 acres each, giving an average of about 21 acres to each person. I think the figures showing the number of small freeholders (and they have probably largely increased since 1873) are interesting, because from their number these freeholders must have a powerful voice in determining any land legislation for Wales. Much of what was suggested in the two Land Bills introduced into Parliament will affect them quite as much as it would affect the larger owners of land.

If, as in the Irish Acts, a part of the freehold is taken away from the original freeholder, and given to another, who, being a tenant, henceforth possesses an actual joint interest in the land—the effect must inevitably be to lessen the value of the property for selling purposes, and the small Welsh freeholder would find, if such a Land Act were ever imposed upon Wales, that he would be obliged either to work his own property himself, or run the risk, the moment he let it to a tenant, of losing half its selling value in consequence of the legal claims which are at once assumed by the tenant of the holding. For this reason, I think, the small freeholders in Wales will think twice before committing themselves to the support of any legislation likely to gravely affect their position as landowners, and the value of their property.

As to any evil effect on the occupation of land where there is a difference of language, religion, or politics between the landlord and tenant, I believe at the present time none exists. No rational landlord ever cares what particular form of religion his tenant may profess; all he considers is whether the man is a good farmer, and can pay his rent; and the ballot has long ago made the landowner politically powerless to enforce his wishes at the poll, except by the moral influence many of them possess. I consider the statements made by Mr. Thomas Ellis, M.P. (that tenants are capriciously evicted, and dare not appear on political platforms, and that Nonconformist farmers have been got rid of simply because they were Nonconformists), is utterly unwarranted by facts, and, so far as the county of Denbigh is concerned, I believe, it would be absolutely impossible to find a single well-substantiated instance of tyranny, either social or political, in recent times, and I decline to go back to 30 or 40 years ago, as many witnesses have been allowed to do, when a good deal may have been done which legislation and the more enlightened opinion of society has long since rectified or rendered impossible. Part of the charge if true, would make out the Welsh farmer to be what I, at any rate, have never found him to be, both subservient and cowardly.

The question of language does not affect us in the Vale of Clwyd as it may do elsewhere, for nearly the whole population speak English. It is found so much to the advantage of everyone to know the English language, that parents are fully alive to the necessity of having their children thoroughly taught it; and, so far as I can form an opinion from my own experience, I think the bi-lingual inconvenience, if it exists at all, is very much exaggerated. English, being the language of trade and commerce, is eagerly learnt, and I believe in North Wales at the present time there is not a single boy or girl above the age of 14 who is not conversant with it—notwithstanding that Welsh may be the language of their home. The old and the middle-aged may be less instructed, but the rising generation are fully alive to the fact that their success in life depends on their acquaintance with English.

It has been repeatedly stated that rents have been "screwed up" by competition. I believe

Colonel CORNWALLIS WEST.

Chairman—continued.

statements of this sort cannot be substantiated, but that, on the contrary, the oftener facts connected with large estates are examined, the more it will be discovered that tenants are selected from character and ability to farm well rather than from mere considerations of rent. The reductions in rent rolls during the last decade will refute the assertion as to rent. This will be further gone into at a subsequent stage of the inquiry by one who is prepared to lay before the Commission the allowances and reductions of rent, and the enormous expenditure of capital, made on 198 estates in North Wales as well as to refute the extraordinary statements made by Mr. Ellis, M.P., in his estimate of rent reduction in Wales as compared with England—based on income-tax returns. In many cases, as I will proceed to show, on my own estate, the sum paid as rent is very little above 4 per cent. on the value of the house and buildings connected with the farm, the land in some cases being nearly rent free.

It is impossible to go through the whole of the Ruthin estate, but I have taken six farms; they are none of them big ones, and I find that those farms are altogether 465 acres. The rent of those six farms is 472*l.* 10*s.*; the value of the buildings is 8,100*l.* The interest on that would be 324*l.*, and the balance of the rent would be 148*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* (The witness handed in the following table):—

Then I take the Llanarmon estate. I take 12 farms on that estate, and including the sheep-walk those 12 farms comprise 4,623 acres. The rent is 874*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*; the value of the buildings is 16,400*l.* The interest on that would be 656*l.* The balance of the rent would be 224*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* (The witness handed in the following table):—

Each tenant has received 10 per cent. abatement on these rents besides the permanent reductions made on the rent of the estate since 1883-4, so that the actual net balance of rents would be rather less than I have placed on this paper.

In order to demonstrate by a few instances the rather stationary character of rents for 75 years, I have extracted the following farms from a schedule in the certificate made by certain Commissioners in 1819, when the Chirk Castle estate was divided between three co-heiresses, one lot of which fell to my great-aunt, Miss Myddleton, and is now my property. Those farms, in 1819, comprised 1,306 acres, and the rent was 1,394*l*. Those farms, having been reduced by about 100 acres, are now 1,184 acres, and the rent is 1,267*l*. The average rent per acre for the above farms in 1819 was 1*l*. 1*s*. 4*d*., and in 1894 1*l*. 1*s*. 0*d*., so that the rent now is actually 4*d*. per acre less than it was 75 years ago.

See 55,539. Mr. Hugh Hughes, who is a freeholder and entirely unconnected with my estate, in his evidence at Llangollen, said that land in the Llanarmon district was too highly rented, besides stating that there was a want of sympathy between landlords and tenants. I deny utterly both statements so far as I am concerned. I will mention Penybryn farm, close to the village, rented by his brother, Mr. Henry Hughes, as an instance as to rental on my estate, as well as another farm at Llanarmon, called Blaenywcm.

Taking the Llanarmon estate as a whole, with an acreage of 5,979, I find the average rent per acre, if sheep-walk of 3,441 acres is included, is 4*s*. 5*d*., if excluded, 10*s*. 8*d*., and Mr. Hughes considers this estate highly rented.

The fact that the whole of the buildings have been erected and are kept in repair by the landlord, differentiates land tenure in England and Wales from the Irish land system. In Ireland, except in some of the large English-managed estates, the work has usually been done by the tenant, and the Irish Land Act has special provisions applicable to estates “where the permanent improvements have been made and substantially maintained by the landlord or his predecessors in title.” (44 and 45 Vict. c. 49, sections 7 and 8.)

Mr. Ellis has stated his belief in the existence of a tenant-right in Wales. I have never myself heard of it. The tenant under the Agricultural Holdings Act can recover the full remaining value of manures, and he can compel the landlord to execute any necessary drainage works or recoup him what he has spent on them. Any other payments made to him on leaving his farm he gets by mutual agreement from the incoming tenant, according to well-known “custom,” but I never heard of his selling any so-called tenant-right.

There is no question but that the system under which compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act is settled should be made cheaper, simpler, and more expeditious. I wish the security to the tenant for unexhausted improvements to be a reality, if he has made any, and they have been sanctioned; but to allow a tenant to carry out any so-called improvement to suit his own convenience without the consent of the owner (which may be perfectly useless to any other tenant), and charge the landlord with something he does not want, would be monstrously unfair, and lead to endless litigation.

In cases of disputes where landlord and tenant cannot come to terms, the intervention of an arbitrator, appointed by the Minister of Agriculture for a certain district, might be desirable if it were mutually agreed by landlord and tenant to call him in, and where it is mutually agreed by them to abide by his decision. I believe the appointment of an official valuer, who could upon occasion be referred to in every county or district, would lead to the adjustment of every dispute amicably, and without recourse to any legal tribunal. I am strongly of opinion that the County Council should have nothing whatever to do with appointing the district arbitrator. With regard to this suggestion, however, I wish to say that as the management of Welsh estates is precisely similar to the management of estates in England, I consider the same system of arbitration, should, if thought necessary, be made to apply to both England and Wales.

I believe that the establishment of a land court, together with "the three F's," would drive Welsh landowners out of the country; they would become nothing but rent-chargers, and they would cease to take the slightest interests in their estates, and, as is the case in Ireland now, they would refuse to spend a penny in improvements or repairs. The capital which they now use freely on their estates would be diverted in other directions, and the result would be to embitter the relations of landlord and tenant, and work great mischief on the country. Many of the gentlemen who advocate such a measure for Wales in the Press and in Parliament take a purely doctrinaire view of the subject, and have no actual personal interest in land or practical knowledge to guide them, and I firmly believe that the most intelligent and most independent of the farming community (if they are not under the influence of a certain political "ring") prefer freedom of contract as between man and man, and acknowledge the evils which would result by the establishment of a court, with its attendant expenses, to decide questions which, nine times out of ten, they are both competent and willing to decide for themselves, or at any rate have fairly decided by a system of mutual arbitration. A freehold interest in the land is the only possible way of obtaining that entire freedom of action, and that command of the situation which the so-called friends of the farmers are demanding for their clients. I am glad when tenants can buy their holdings, if they wish to do so and they are on sale—and I think the State might assist them up to, say, one-half of their value; but, as regards security for improvements, carried out by existing tenants, I believe that if certain additions and alterations were made in the Agricultural Holdings Act, tending to simplify its procedure, ample compensation would be secured to tenants in the event of their giving up the holding, or the property being sold, as well as to the landlord, in case of a farm being run out or otherwise deteriorated, a contingency which should be very carefully guarded against.

The cause of the agitation on the so-called Welsh land question has, undoubtedly (apart from the peculiar circumstances of the times) had a political character throughout. Persons have taken advantage of the depression in agriculture, and the mischief it has caused, to try and arouse ill-feeling against the landowner, who has probably suffered as much as the farmers, and have made him the scapegoat. As the landowner generally differs in politics from these so-called land reformers, he has been roundly abused and villified and condemned as a hard-hearted, rack-renting tyrant with no sympathy for his tenants, to an extent and to a degree hardly conceivable, especially in the vernacular press. There may be a few grasping landowners, but they are not easy to find, and I am confident, from personal knowledge, that in Denbighshire, at any rate, there is not a single landowner, of any character and repute, who has not shared largely in losses with his tenants, and who is not actuated by the strongest desire to act towards them in a generous, gentlemanly, and humane spirit, by remissions and allowances of a substantial character.

In my opinion the chief causes of the general depression are: 1st. The enormous importations of foreign produce at reduced freights; 2nd. Bad seasons; and 3rd. Principally to the rise in the price of gold. Wheat has gone down from 6s. 6d. a bushel to 3s. 3d. At the same time it must be remembered Wales only farms 6 per cent. of its acreage to wheat, and England 18 per cent. Wales is, therefore, not a wheat-growing country, and barley and oats have happily not fallen in price in proportion to wheat. A careful analysis of current prices for cattle, sheep, butter, cheese, oats, barley, and other products (which I shall put in), show nothing like such a fall as in wheat, and it should be remembered, as a set-off to general losses, that besides reductions and allowances in rent, the tenant gets some advantage now in the very low price of oil cake, feeding barley, maize, super-phosphate, and seed corn. Where he is fairly met by his landlord and farms intelligently, and according to the times in which he lives, especially if he is near a good market, though undoubtedly badly hit, he need not, in my humble opinion, actually despair of what the future may have in store.

I have obtained the following schedule of prices from persons of great experience. The earlier ones were obtained by me in 1887, when information was asked from competent authorities by Welsh members. (I have added the prices of 1894 to them. Well, I do not think it will be necessary to trouble you by reading all these, but I will put them in. The long and short of it, of course, is, that the prices, except in the case of certain products, is considerably less in 1894 than it was in 1876, but the year 1894 does not compare at all badly with the year 1852. I would venture to suggest, in order to meet the exceptional times, the following recommendations:—

First. Increased facilities for the transport of agricultural and horticultural products at reduced rates. These would best be accomplished in many parts of Wales by cheap light railways, subsidised by the State, as in Belgium and France, where, I believe, they are made at a price of something like 2,500*l.* per mile. An attempt was made in that direction in this neighbourhood in 1876 in which I took an interest. A scheme of a narrow-gauge railway from Ruthin to Cerrig-y-Druidion, a distance of 16½ miles, was started, and received considerable financial support. We had costly difficulties however to meet in Parliament, amounting to 877*l.*, Lord Redesdale (who was then Chairman of Committees) insisting on land sufficient for a broad-gauge line being allowed for in the Bill, although we told him it would be impossible to make one, as the gradient was to be 1 in 30 to 1 in 64. In the end, after a good deal of money was spent, the scheme had to be dropped. I think that the gradient was about 1 in 30 for some distance, and then it came up to 1 in 200. The first portion of the line was extremely steep. I believe if we had had any sort of encouragement from the Board of Trade or some public department to continue that line, it would have been now in existence. As an example, however, of what private enterprise can do in this direction, I would point to the Glyn Valley Steam Tramway—a witness at Llangollen said it had injured the farmers, but he failed to say how. The thriving condition of Glyn Ceiriog, its increase of population, and general development, is remarkable, whilst it must be an immense advantage to the farmers in bringing them nearer to the markets of England.

Secondly. I would suggest removal from land of the sole charge for the maintenance of the poor, for lunatics, for education, and for roads, and an equitable division of the burden of local taxation between income from real and personal property. Now that the death duties on real property are assimilated to those on personal property, it is common justice that real property should be largely relieved from its unfair share, as compared to personal property, in local burdens.

I produce a statement relating to my own property showing the amount paid in Imperial and local taxation. I find that on an estate of 10,000 acres, from which the actual agricultural yield in land produces 6,390*l.* per annum, that the whole of the amount paid by the tenants and the landlord come to no less a sum than 2,019*l.* 9*s.* 10*d.*, including tithe. The tithe on my estate comes to 751*l.*; the Imperial taxes to 317*l.* 11*s.* 4*d.*, and the local rates, partially paid by the tenants and myself, to 950*l.* 8*s.* 8*d.*, so that it practically comes to this, that on an estate of 6,000*l.* a year it is paying 2,000*l.* a year in taxation, 1,000*l.* a year for repairs and agency, leaving 3,000*l.* for its owner.

I may also say that land, on which the sewage of this town is utilised by me, amounting to 111 acres, has to pay 17s. per acre for rates, taxes, and tithe rent-charge.

As showing the burdens on land, I may be permitted to quote the following summary of a report issued in March 1894 by the Central Chamber of Agriculture.

The Statistical Committee of the Central Chamber of Agriculture have issued a report (which I produce) showing the burdens on land. It comprises returns from 369 farmers in 39 English and 7 Welsh counties. The average rent of the farms reported upon is 1*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.* an acre, and the average rate 3*s.* 2*d.* per acre. Adding income-tax and land-tax to the rates, the total is equal to 16·94 per cent. of the rent, and if we put the farmer's income as one-half of his rent, as the Income Tax Commissioners do, we find that his rates amount to 25 per cent. of his income, or rates and direct taxes to 34 per cent. To compare with this, the rates of urban rate-payers are estimated at 2 to 3 per cent. of their income, or, if Imperial charges are added to their local taxation, to less than 5 per cent. Such is the present state of affairs, and it is not surprising that the committee conclude their report by saying that any addition to the heavy weight of taxation under which the distressed industry of agriculture labours would be absolutely intolerable and flagrantly unjust.

Thirdly. My third recommendation is one which I acknowledge is of a very complex and difficult nature, and that is the currency. Without pretending for one moment to be an authority on the subject, I cannot help urging the Commission to consider whether the change in the value of money must not account for many of the evils we deplore. It is acknowledged by everyone, and history proves it, that abundance of the precious metals leads to a general rise in prices. The gold discoveries in Australia and California in 1847 rescued agriculture from a period of great depression, but since the United States, France, Italy, Austria, and Germany, and lastly, India, have adopted legislation against silver, and made gold their standard of exchange, prices have steadily gone down, bringing financial difficulties upon landlords and farmers and universal decline in trade. It has been stated on high authority that gold has been so raised in value, owing to its scarcity as a circulating medium, that 66 sovereigns to-day would buy as many commodities as 100 would buy 20 or 30 years ago. Now what the farmer does is to sell his wheat to buy gold. Twenty years ago he bought with a quarter of wheat two sovereigns and three quarters, he now buys with a quarter of wheat one sovereign and one quarter; or in other words, he has to bring to market double the quantity of wheat to buy the same quantity of gold. He has practically to pay wages, interest on borrowed capital, rates and taxes, and rent, in gold, and if gold is scarce (as it is now), and he has to give a much larger quantity of wheat for the gold he requires to purchase, he is seriously hit. Protection would not send up prices so long as gold is scarce, but statesmen will sooner or later realise that an alteration in the currency laws is inevitable before we can see any material alleviation of the depression under which we have so long suffered. It is plain, from the history of the past, that the appreciation of gold and fall in prices are synonymous terms. It is an error to say that a period of low prices is of advantage to the working classes, or that the farmer can possibly be benefited because he can buy some commodities cheaply, since the fall in prices is caused by scarcity of money, which affects the producer and consumer alike. The one will produce at a loss, the other will have less money to spend. What we should aim at is a stable standard of value at a fixed ratio. Whether 15½ of silver to 1 of gold, experts must decide. The British farmer never can compete with the Indian grower so long as Indian wheat per quarter is paid for by a sovereign and a half in gold, which in India is changed for 24 rupees, or 48*s.* The condition of the currency gives a bonus to the Indian trader, whilst the English producer is being ruined by the unfair competition. I trust the Commission will report on the necessity for an early and full inquiry on this very important question, connected so intimately with the prosperity of English agriculture. The expansion of the currency would mean increased trade, relief to landowners and farmers, and a stimulus to the employment of the labouring classes of the country consequent on the great industrial revival which would follow any international agreement for the re-monetization of silver.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,240. Am I to understand, Colonel West, from your evidence, that you are in favour of increasing the number of small freeholders?—Certainly.

60,241. I think I understood that you also are in favour of advances by the State to the trustees of encumbered estates?—Yes.

60,242. Why should the State advance money to the trustees of encumbered estates?—I do not quite understand the question.

60,243. Why, on what grounds should the State advance money to the trustees of encumbered estates. Is it in order to keep the big estates together, and to prevent large encumbered estates from being broken up by mortgages, sales, or otherwise?—Well, it would have that effect.

60,244. But the sale of encumbered estates would tend to increase small freeholders, would it not?—Up to a certain point that is so, but at the same time you will not ever get a very large estate cut up into such small parcels as would enable persons of moderate means to buy, I think.

60,245. How do you propose to increase the number of small freeholders. You have said you are in favour of that policy?—It would be possible to do it in certain portions of an estate—the outlying portions.

60,246. On what ground of public interest do you advocate the advancing of public money to trustees of encumbered estates?—I think, myself, it is a great misfortune when a man owns an estate and is unable to expend sufficient to put it into good order, which very often is the case.

60,247. Supposing the State does nothing, what would take place in such a case; would it not be this, that the estate would have to be broken up and sold in lots?—Not necessarily so; it would go on in the same condition for years.

60,248. At any rate, you have no reluctance in advocating a policy of State interference with the ownership of land—with a policy that prevents the play of economic causes?—No, I have no objection to it.

60,249. Now, you have challenged some of the assertions of Mr. Ellis. I have the speech here, to which, I think, you refer, and I should like to know how far you agree with it. He says, among other things, “After the election of 1859 some of the best tenant-farmers in my county were ruthlessly turned from their farms simply because they did not vote for the Conservative candidate?”—How long ago is that?

60,250. 1859?—I really cannot go so far back as that.

60,251. You are not prepared to contradict the evidence given before the Commission at other places in reference to the election of 1859?—No. I am not in a position to do it.

60,252. Mr. Ellis says: “After the election of 1868, in the counties of Carnarvon, Cardigan, and Carmarthen notices to quit came like ‘snowflakes.’”—That is a great many years ago.

60,253. 1868?—Yes, that is much too far to go back.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

60,254. You do not deny that statement of Mr. Ellis’s?—It may be true or not true.

60,255. I thought you challenged his statements?—I did challenge it, so far as I stated.

60,256. “These terrible evictions naturally sent a thrill of horror through the tenantry of Wales, and taught them to know very well what a notice to quit means.” Then he goes on to refer to the effect of a political representation, and then goes on to say: “You may say these things happened more than 20 years ago, but we know what has arisen in connexion with the tithe agitation. Into the merits or demerits of that question I am not going to enter; we have had that question before us, but we know that tenant farmers have been evicted from their farms simply and solely because they have refused to pay tithe voluntarily, and have allowed the agents of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and of the Clergy Defence Association, to sell their stock under distress.” Do you deny that statement?—Which statement? That farmers have been turned out of their farms because they would not pay the tithe?

60,257. Yes?—I do. I have never heard of a case.

60,258. Do you remember anything else that Mr. Ellis said that you do contradict?—He has made such a very large number of attacks on landlords that really I cannot recollect them all—wherever he goes he does.

60,259. This was a speech made in the House of Commons, and evidently a considered speech. I cannot find anything that is not fairly substantiated by the evidence brought before us, so far?—I am sorry to hear it.

60,260. In giving his evidence at Bala he says, after referring to the more ancient evictions: “We have now the ballot, but over a large area of Wales a large percentage of the farmers dare not appear publicly on platforms. I do not desire for a moment to say that the landlords would visit them with punishment, but the fear is very deeply imbedded in their hearts and their minds.” Do you agree with that?—I say it is a gross insult upon the farmers. I do not believe a word of it. I believe they are much more independent than he thinks.

60,261. We have had a large body of testimony as to the farmers being afraid to come before this Commission?—I do not believe a word of it. I am certain they are not in the least. There is not a tenant on my estate or on any other gentleman’s estate, who, if he had any actual grievance, would not come here and tell you of it.

60,262. I observe you state that Welsh farmers are not in the least subservient and cowardly?—I do not think they are.

60,263. Let me test that for a moment. We had a case before us on Saturday of a man of the name of Thomas Morgan, who appears to have been horsewhipped by three gentlemen in his own yard, and then his landlord sees him, and he never asks for an apology, he does not sue, and he does not take out a summons before the justices?—That is one individual case. I do not deny there may be cases like that. You cannot bring one case to prove a statement that all the Welsh farmers are afraid to appear before you.

60,264. You say that is a solitary case?—Yes.

60,265. Well, take another case, vouched for by Mr. Ellis himself. "I can give an instance which comes very nearly home to myself, where, because the straying dog of a tenant caught a rabbit, the tenant received notice to quit, and he was not allowed to re-enter his own farm until he had made a humiliating apology, had the dog shot in the presence of the landlord, and agreed to pay an additional 10*l.* a year in rent." Is that subservient conduct?—Well, it certainly sounds so; but that is an exceptional case too, I should think.

60,266. Then, what you say really is this, the cases that have come before us are exceptional cases?—I do, really.

60,267. You say in your experience you do not think the tenant farmer is so much afraid of appearing on a political platform, or appearing before us?—I think not.

60,268. I do not find so much contradiction between you and Mr. Ellis, after all?—I am glad of it.

60,269. Am I to understand from your evidence that no legislative changes are necessary in the interests of tenant-farmers?—The only legislative changes I suggested in my paper were that the Agricultural Holdings Act should be made rather simpler in procedure, and also, as I stated, I think it would be a very good plan if an arbitrator were appointed for each district or county by the Board of Agriculture. I think that would be an advantage.

60,270. You do not think that any measure giving greater fixity of tenure or providing for an impartial tribunal to decide questions of rent is necessary?—No, I do not. I cannot see that there is any necessity for it at all.

60,271. Did you in the year 1885 advocate any such changes?—I do not think I ought to go back to anything I said in 1885 during a political contest. I decline to say anything as to that, whatever I said then—I may have altered my views.

60,272. But may I take it that you advocated changes in the year 1885?—I may have done so.

Mr. Griffiths.

60,273. Did I rightly understand you to say that it is as difficult to sell land in Wales as it is in England?—I said there was the same difficulty to sell large estates in Wales as there was in England. That is what I meant to say.

60,274. Do you mean to say there are not so many bidders for estates in Wales as there are in England?—No, not for large properties.

60,275. It is not so with small properties?—No, they do sell well.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

60,276. With regard to the Welsh language being spoken by the tenants, did you say that you believed the farmers often understand English?—Most of them about here do.

60,277. How can you account for it, then, that we are obliged to interpret for so many?—Because they prefer to talk Welsh; it is only natural. They almost all of them speak English.

60,278. We have had a great number that we have had to interpret for?—That is only natural, I think.

60,279. Then with regard to the repairs, did I understand you rightly to say that the repairs in England were done by the tenants?—No, the repairs in Wales and in England, too, generally speaking, are done by the landlord as a rule.

60,280. As to the table of prices which you handed in, did you take them from your own farm, or where did you take them from?—The table of prices, from the year 1852 up to 1857, I got from different farmers, and the table of 1894 I got from three other men of considerable experience.

60,281. We have not heard your tables read, but are they something similar to the tables we had from the gentleman who preceded you. Did you compare them at all?—No, I had not an opportunity, I shall be happy to supply you with them.

60,282. Do you consider that the income of the Welsh tenants can be taken at half the rent?—That is the usual calculation, but I cannot say whether it is a fair one or not.

60,283. Do you think it possible that one in 50 of the tenants in Wales can do it?—Well, it is the usual practice, I believe, by the Commissioners, whether it is fair or not is a question for them to decide.

Mr. Richard Jones.

60,284. Do you think that it is better for some tenants to suffer than that the State should interfere in any way between the landlord and the tenant?—I think if the State were to interfere there would be a great deal more suffering than there is now.

60,285. Do you think that the demand for reform of the land laws is nothing more than political?—To a great extent I do think so.

60,286. You think there is no foundation at all for the complaint that farms do not pay?—The complaint that farms do not pay is caused, as I have ventured to point out, by different reasons. I pointed out three: the extremely low and depreciated price of everything caused by cheapness of freights; secondly, by bad seasons; and, principally, as I ventured to point out, by the appreciation of gold, which I believe has been the cause of all the distress which is now prevalent in the country.

60,287. Do you admit that there is any foundation for the complaints made by farmers that there is distress?—No doubt there is distress; there is not the least doubt about it.

3 September 1894.]

Colonel CORNWALLIS WEST.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

60,288. So that, really, it is something more than political, in that case?—So far as that goes that is perfectly true, but I say that the question of distress and the question of applying for a land court are distinct. We do not deny that there is a great deal of agricultural distress, but we say that a land court would not do it the least service.

60,289. Do you think there would be any demand for a land court unless there was distress?—There might be.

60,290. Did you hear any demand for a land court during the period from 1872 to 1876—during the prosperous period?—That I cannot say; I cannot answer that question.

60,291. But is it not the fact that the cry for a land court is louder at certain times?—The cry for a land court in Wales in my opinion arose subsequent to the legislation in Ireland; it is simply a cry based upon that.

60,292. And you think that the distress had but little to do with it?—Very little.

60,293. Have you any tenants in arrear on your estate?—Yes; I have.

60,294. To a large extent?—Yes.

60,295. What inference do you draw from that?—That they cannot pay.

60,296. And why can they not pay?—Because they are hard up.

60,297. The rents are too high?—Not at all.

Mr. Grove.

60,298. I think, Colonel West, you advocate the advance of money by the State in the case of encumbered estates?—I do.

60,299. I conclude that the leading idea in your mind is to make the most of the land and to make it as productive as possible?—Just so.

60,300. Therefore would you say that that money should be spent on improving the land?—I do.

60,301. Distinctly in increasing the value of the land?—I do.

60,302. Then what rate of interest do you think it would be fair to get that money at, including redemption, if you like, or otherwise?—At the present time, if I want to improve an estate, as I said in my statement, I have to pay 7l. 10s. per cent. I say that the State could advance money to landowners at 3 or 3½ per cent., and that the sinking fund might be 2 per cent. We should then have to pay 5 per cent. interest instead of having to pay 7l. 5s. as we do now. 7l. 5s. is what we pay now.

60,303. 7l. 5s. would be for a very short redemption, would it not?—25 years.

60,304. Would you advocate that it should be borrowed at a much lower rate of interest and that redemption should be spread over a longer term of years?—I should say that was an excellent plan.

60,305. Then you think we might ask reasonably for money say at 3 or 3½ per cent.—something like that?—I do.

Mr. Grove—continued.

60,306. What proportion of the value of the estate do you think it would be reasonable to advance. Supposing an estate is worth say 50,000l. or 100,000l.—take whichever figure you like—what amount should you say ought to be advanced?—Half its worth, I should say.

60,307. Then suppose that small freeholders were to approach the Government in the same way and say: "We have bought our farms and we want an advance from the Government"; what proportion of the value of the purchased farm do you think it would be reasonable for them to ask for?—Half the value.

60,308. Not more than half its value?—I should say not.

60,309. Do you think that half the value would meet the present depressed state of things?—I think that is about all that they can expect the State to pay.

60,310. You would consider that they ought to be placed on the same terms as to interest and repayment as the landlord?—Yes, most certainly.

60,311. It has been put in evidence before us several times over that the Ballot Act is not understood. Is that your opinion—that the secrecy of the Ballot Act is not understood?—I should think that is not the case now; I should think they all understand it now. I know, I for one, have tried my best to explain it, and to declare that it is secret; and I should say that every voter now knew it.

60,312. Touching upon the question of light railways and the great expense that there is now in carrying a thing through with any view of getting an effective result, do you suppose that some part of that matter might be remitted to the County Council or local authority so as to prevent this concentration of matters, which is so expensive?—I should think something of that sort might be done; I should think it would be rather a good plan.

60,313. Do you think that the County Council might deal with it?—Yes, I should think that they would be an admirable body to go into the matter, as it is so purely local.

60,314. You would enlarge their powers to waterworks and other matters, probably?—Yes, I should not object to that.

60,315. That is beyond the matter of railways. In enumerating the burdens upon the land I think you mentioned the expense of maintaining lunatics?—I did.

60,316. That does not quite come upon the land. The County Council pay the expenses of lunatics at a certain rate to the unions; the County Councils make a payment, and therefore it is spread over the full county rate. You mean the proportion of lunatics that becomes chargeable upon the land?—Yes, it comes upon the land.

60,317. But, of course, we cannot say that the county rate comes all upon the land—only a proportion falls upon it?—Yes, not entirely, but the proportion is larger.

60,318. I suppose you think that workingmen never have had things so cheap as they

3 September 1894.]

Colonel CORNWALLIS WEST.

Mr. Grove—continued.

have them to-day—food, clothing, and all those kind of things?—That is true.

60,319. This very morning, I think, three witnesses have said that to their certain knowledge tenant-farmers are afraid to come forward to give evidence. Perhaps you have heard that said in this court yourself. Do you consider that that is an unfounded statement?—It really does seem to be such an aspersion upon the Welsh farmer that I cannot believe it. I must honestly say so, from what I know of them. They are not cowardly men; they are men of independent means, and all I can say is, that if they are afraid to come before you, it is a remarkable state of things.

60,320. Yes, but should I suggest to you that probably, from your position as a landlord, you would not be able to gauge the feeling of the ordinary tenant farmer closely enough to say that; would you?—It is a matter of opinion, I suppose.

60,321. Exactly so. I suppose you consider that there is very grave agricultural depression now?—I do

Professor Rhys.

60,322. You mentioned the sewage-farm just now; the rates and taxes have been very high upon that farm?—I am afraid they are.

60,323. Would that be an exception?—That is so, I believe. I cannot explain to you why, but it is so. They are actually rated from 16s. 8d. to 17s. per acre—the rates, taxes, and the tithe.

60,324. With regard to the light railway from Ruthin to Cerrig-y-Druidion, has that been entirely given up?—Yes, years ago.

60,325. It cost you over 800*l.* to bring the matter before Parliament?—Yes, 970*l.*, or something like that.

60,326. That seems to be a large sum to be expended in that way. I suppose you would suggest that there should be some cheaper way of getting those things done?—Undoubtedly, if it could be so arranged.

60,327. Have you thought it out at all?—I would consider that the suggestion which has just been made by your colleague is one that deserves attention—that the County Council should have power to make local inquiries into the necessities of localities, and that there should not be such an enormous cost in going to Parliament. The whole of the fees that are now paid are too high.

60,328. We have heard about a light railway being proposed in another part of the country, it was talked about, but it came to nothing, because some of the landowners seemed to ask absurdly high prices for their land?—I think that is entirely wrong. I think they should either give the land free, or they should take it out in shares.

60,329. Such would not be the case here?—No, I do not think so.

60,330. Would it follow the highway most of the way?—No, it would not.

Professor Rhys—continued.

60,331. You mentioned increased postal facilities for the farmers, I think. I do not know that I quite followed that?—What I suggested was that postal facilities for sending away vegetables might be arranged, so that vegetables might be sent to the big towns by post in considerable parcels.

60,332. Do you know anything about the German plan of managing with regard to that?—No, I do not know about that.

60,333. I understand they manage those things much better than we do. You spoke of encumbered estates. Did I understand you rightly to say that the effect of an estate being encumbered is probably unfavourable to the best being got out of the land?—It is so, and it must be so.

60,334. We have had different opinions. I think one man firmly maintained that it had nothing to do with the cultivation of the land. You do not think so?—I do not say it has anything to do with the cultivation of the land. All I say is that any owner of a mortgaged estate cannot possibly have the same amount of cash to spend upon it as a man who has not got a mortgaged property. That is the only view I have of it. I say that on a great many mortgaged estates the owners are so badly off that they cannot spend upon the estate half that they would desire to.

60,335. Indirectly it must have that effect upon the land?—It must have that effect.

60,336. So long as the landlord is prepared to spend anything at all?—Yes, just so.

Professor Rhys.

60,337. I only wanted to be clear as to what you meant. We have had two views on the subject, I think.

Sir John Llewelyn.

60,338. I think there are two Llanarmons, one about 5 miles from here, and one about 15 miles from here?—That is so.

60,339. Which Llanarmon are you speaking of?—Llanarmon Dyffryn Ceiriog is the one I was alluding to. That is not near here.

60,340. That is down in the south part of the county. Was it with regard to that property that you gave us the amount of rent; I think I worked out that the rent of the buildings would come to 75 per cent. of the whole rent?—That is actually so.

60,341. And that would leave 25 per cent. of the rent applicable to the land?—That is so.

60,342. I think that applies, if I follow you correctly, to the southern corner of the county?—I stated that 12 farms of 4,623 acres produce a rent of 87*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* The interest of that was 656*l.*, so that practically the balance would be 218*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*

60,343. You went on a little later to say you did not recognise tenant-right?—None at all.

60,344. With regard to what you do on your estate, do you pay for the haulage or not?—Sometimes I do, and at other times it is given.

3 September 1894.]

Colonel CORNWALLIS WEST.

60,345. May I ask you, supposing there was a disturbance a short time after a repair had been made, and the tenant paid for the haulage, would you recognise that as a tenant-right—that he should be compensated for the haulage?—Well, I think he should be paid, I must confess. I think that unless it is willingly done, no landowner ought to expect the man actually to do it.

60,346. Then you would recognise a tenant-right?—I certainly would, and I should certainly pay for it. If, as is very often the case, a tenant says to me: "I shall be very glad indeed to send my cart horses; but I am busy now and I cannot do it for the next 10 days, and I will do it then." That is a question between him and me; but otherwise I should certainly pay it.

60,347. What is your opinion of the Agricultural Holdings Act; has it been of use or not?—I do not believe we have ever had a case of it here. I have never had one on my estate.

60,348. Do you think that the tenant-farmers are afraid of the expense attaching to it?—I think a great many of them do not realise that it exists, somehow or another. It is a very curious fact; but they do not seem to me to realise that there is such an Act.

60,349. Do you consider it is a sufficient protection to the tenant-farmer?—As I said just now, I think it should be made very much more expeditious; there is a great deal of trouble about it; I think it could be very much improved.

60,350. You spoke of an official valuer in case of dispute. By whom would you have such an official appointed?—By the Minister of Agriculture—the Agricultural Department.

60,351. I did not quite follow you, as to whether you thought his decision ought to be final or not?—I should say so, certainly.

60,352. You think so?—Yes.

60,353. Are there many freeholders in the county?—There are 5,000.

60,354. Those figures I shall find in the statistics which you have handed in?—Yes.

Chairman.

60,355. I have a few questions to trouble you with, two being from Mr. Owen Wynne: "Do you not think it has been the business of some people to hunt up and bring these exceptional cases, which Mr. Brynmor Jones has just quoted, before the Commission?"—I think it is very likely. I cannot say for a certainty; but I should think it is likely.

60,356. "Do you think that any of the witnesses who have given evidence before this Commission have been influenced by political or sectarian hostility towards the landowners?"—I really cannot give an opinion as to that. I would rather not give a general opinion.

60,357. The following questions are put by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Do you know whether any squatters' cottages in this district have been taken possession of by your predecessors?"—I have not the least idea. I have never heard of such a thing.

Chairman—continued.

60,358. "Have you ever heard any complaints from Aberwheeler and Graig Adwy Wynt, on this account?"—Never.

60,359. "Was there a common called Gellifor Common, in the Vale of Clwyd?"—I do not understand the question. I cannot tell you, I have not the least idea.

60,360. "Did your predecessors claim this common as lord of the manor or as owner of the fee?"—I cannot answer these questions at all. I have no idea.

60,361. "Was the common sold by your predecessors to various purchasers?" Can you answer that?—No, I cannot.

60,362. "Were squatters on this common compelled to buy their holdings, or lose their homes?"—How long ago was all this, may I ask?

60,363. "Have the tenants on your estate contributed by haulage and labour to the value of the buildings on your estate?"—Some of them, possibly, but I do not think all have.

60,364. "Do you include the value of this haulage in the sums you have given in your evidence as to the value of buildings on your farms?"—I am not sure that it has been done: it may, or may not have been. I do not think we have had any haulage there.

60,365. "In the year 1885 or 1886, did you not address a public meeting in the town of Denbigh in favour of a Land Bill for Wales?"—I decline to answer; it was a contested election.

60,366. "Was not Mr. Bryn Roberts, M.P., present, and was not his Land Bill for Wales practically framed in consequence of various suggestions made at this meeting?"—I do not know whether it was so or was not. There was a meeting there, but I do not know whether Mr. Roberts' Bill was brought before it, or not.

60,367. "Your estate agreement of tenancy contains a clause of the following character:—

'And further that the tenant will, during his tenancy keep all buildings, gates, stiles, bridges . . . and fences of the farm and plantations in as good repair and condition as when he entered'?"—

?—That is not acted upon.

60,368. That has never been acted upon, you say?—It has never been acted upon. I do not know why it is there; I shall have it struck out; it is an absurd thing to keep it in. It has been there for years and years, from carelessness, or some cause or another, and there it remains.

60,369. I will finish reading the quotation from the agreement—"or as the same may be put into by the landlord during his tenancy, and so leave them on quitting . . . being allowed by the landlord necessary timber in scantling and other materials (the same to be carried at his own expense)." That is never acted upon?—Never.

60,370. The next question is: "Is not this clause rather harsh in view of the fact that

Chairman—continued.

"the tenancy may be determined by one year's notice?"—Yes, certainly.

60,371. "Does your agreement contain a clause providing that the tenant shall, upon the determination of his tenancy, leave all straw and chaff on his farm for the landlord or incoming tenant without allowance?"—I believe that is so.

60,372. "Could you say whether any tenants on your Llanarmon estate have built new buildings and repaired old buildings at their own expense?"—I do not think so.

60,373. "Did Mr. Jenkins of Plas y Ward, make a re-valuation of your Llanarmon estate some years ago?"—Yes.

60,374. "Could you say by what per centage the rents were raised?"—I am afraid I cannot answer that now. It can be given if necessary.

60,375. "After this valuation, was the estate for some years advertised for sale?"—Yes.

See 55,321.

60,376. "Mr. Richard Edwards, a tenant of yours, on the Llanarmon estate, in his evidence at Llangollen, said as follows: 'Colonel West, appointed Mr. Williams to value the remainder of the farms. Mr. Williams was acquainted with the circumstances, &c., of the district, as he had himself been farming in the neighbourhood, but I cannot say whether his valuation was allowed to stand, as I was refused to see it, although the book containing it lay on the Chairman—continued.

'table before me.' The question is: 'Is there any truth in the suggestion of Mr. Edwards that Mr. Williams's valuation was not observed, and that the rents were not reduced in accordance with his recommendation?'—No, they were all reduced—every one of them—generally.

60,377. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "Mr. Ellis said farmers dare not appear on [political platforms.] Do you agree?"—No, I do not.

60,378. "Whether they are afraid to come here," that means, I suppose, before the Commission, "or not; is there anything for them to fear?"—Nothing at all, that I know of.

60,379. "With regard to the case of turning down pheasants mentioned at Llangollen, have some inquiries been made?"—I do not know whether you will read this letter, or whether it can be put in. (Producing letter.)

60,381. Mr. Vincent goes on to ask: "Is that matter to be dealt with by you or Mr. Probert?"—By Mr. Probert, I think, if you do not mind.

See 60,774-6.

60,382. Very well. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "As to the alleged distraints mentioned on Saturday, your solicitors have been communicated with, have they not?"—Yes.

60,383. "Is not Mr. Jenkins of Plas y Ward, one of the most trusted valuers in the district?"—He is.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

Mr. JOHN MORRIS called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

60,384. Is this your evidence?—Yes.

60,385. It has been read over to you and translated?—Yes.

60,386. And you certify that it is correct?—Yes, I say so.

[The following statement of the witness was read.]

Evidence of Mr. John Morris, Garthgynan, Llanfair Dyffryn Clwyd, Ruthin:—

I am a tenant-farmer, and rent a farm of 293 acres, together with unlimited right of a sheep-walk of 247 acres, from Sir Watkin; and as my farm is part of a large estate, I am of opinion that matters relating to landlord and tenant are managed so well on Sir Watkin's estate, that I consider that things are managed better on large estates than on small ones, and in my opinion they need not be improved on this estate. Politics, religion, and language make no difference between me and my landlord, nor anywhere on the estate, as facts prove. I have an agreement which I consider most fair. Sir Watkin always gives copies of the agreements and a full explanation where it is wanted. Under Sir Watkin, an agreement is considered as good as a lease, and at present, I think, an agreement is better for the farmer. My landlord has spent a very large sum of money on my farm in draining and repairing, and also in bringing water into the house and yard, and placing drinking troughs in several places about the farm. I am able to say that everything I have asked for has been readily granted by my landlord. I am against a land court being established in Wales. Under Sir Watkin I feel perfectly safe and satisfied without a land court in any shape or form, and should a land court ever be established while I am a tenant farmer, I would give up my farm rather than have to do with anybody or anything connected with a land court. I want all good landlords to have the same fair play as all good tenants.

60,387. Have you lived long in this neighbourhood?—Yes, I have, six years.

60,388. Where did you live before that time?—Llanfechain, Montgomeryshire.

60,389. Whom did you live under before you came to Sir Watkin?—Mr. Evans. He was a farmer.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. J. MORRIS.

Chairman—continued.

60,390. Had you any difficulty with the tenure of your farm under Mr. Evans?—No, none at all.

60,391. How long did you rent under him?—25 years.

60,392. Your experience has always been of very cordial relations with your landlords?—It has always been so.

60,393. You felt perfectly satisfied under them, and you did not wish for any other authority?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

60,394. Are you of the same religion and politics as your landlord?—I know nothing about that.

60,395. What is your reason for being so much against a land court?—Because I would not care to have anything between me and my landlord.

60,396. Have you considered the conditions under which the land court would be likely to be carried on?—No. I would rather like to know. I do not know the terms on which it could be carried on.

60,397. It may be you would like them if you did know?—I do not think I would like anything to place me under two masters.

60,398. But would this land court place you under two masters?—I doubt very much whether it would?—No, I would like to be as I am; that is my choice.

60,399. But why do you dislike a thing when you do not know what it is?—I would prefer what I know. Perhaps I would not like what I do not know.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,400. Have you heard farmers talk about a land court?—No, I have not heard anything.

60,401. You have never heard any farmer talk about a land court?—No, I have not heard anyone speak about a land court.

60,402. How came you to put anything about a land court in your evidence when you say you do not know anything about a land court?—I had heard, when I had to prepare this evidence, about a land court.

60,403. From whom did you hear, when you had to prepare your evidence, about a land court?—I cannot give you any account as to from whom I heard.

60,404. Then, when you prepared your evidence, you had heard of a land court, had you?—Oh, yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

60,405. Then why did you tell me that you had never heard anyone talk about a land court?—I did not hear any farmer or anybody else say anything about it.

60,406. That is what you told me first. Now you tell me that before you had prepared your evidence somebody had mentioned a land court to you. You say in your evidence: "I would give up my farm rather than have to do with anybody or anything connected with a land court?"—Yes, I still do so.

60,407. What is a land court?—I should like to know what it is.

60,408. When did you first hear anybody mentioning a land court?—You are asking a question that I cannot answer.

60,409. Was it five years ago, or two years ago, or was it when you prepared your evidence?—Just now, a little before I prepared my evidence.

60,410. A little before! Was it not when you prepared your evidence?—Yes.

60,411. Then the first time that you heard anything about a land court was when you sat down to prepare your evidence?—Yes.

60,412. Would you think it hard to get a notice to quit?—There would be nothing but to take it.

60,413. But supposing your landlord said your rent was to be raised 20*l.*, would you like to have some impartial valuer to go to, as between yourself and your landlord, who might say whether it was wrong to raise your rent 20*l.*?—I would know better than anyone else would know.

60,414. Supposing you said the rent ought not to be raised?—I would only have to leave.

60,415. You would rather do that than have anybody else to go to?—Yes.

60,416. You do not care much for your farm?—I would not be agreeable to have my rent raised. I would rather go away.

60,417. Suppose you do care for your farm, and that you prefer to stay there if you can, and that your landlord insists on raising the rent by 20*l.*, would not you like to have somebody to go to and say whether the 20*l.* extra was a fair rent or not?—I should like to live there. That is all. I have nothing more to add.

60,418. You do not want any third party to appeal to?—Not if I could help it.

60,419. I will just ask you this. Do you think the Welsh tenant-farmers are brave fellows or not?—I do not know.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. SAMUEL MOSS called and examined.

Chairman.

60,420. You are chairman of the Denbighshire County Council, and you are a justice of the peace?—That is so.

60,421. You are a barrister-at-law, and a master of arts, of what university?—Of Oxford.

Chairman—continued.

60,421*a.* Do you wish to make any statement to the Commission?—I do. I wish to state at the outset, that I had no intention of giving evidence before the Commission until my attention had been drawn to the evidence of

3 September 1894.]

Mr. S. Moss.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. William Parker, of Chirk, agent to the Chirk Castle estate, the property of Mr. Myddelton Biddulph.

Chairman.

Is Mr. Parker in Court?

Mr. Parker. I am here, my Lord.

60,422. Please continue?—This gentleman gave evidence at Llangollen, on Tuesday, the 28th ult., and in the "Oswestry Advertiser," of 29th ult., is reported (inter alia) to have made the following statements:—"Neither politics nor religion influenced the choice of tenants, who were never questioned on religious or political subjects," and again: "No cases of hardship had arisen, to his knowledge, in consequence of changes in tenants." The point to which I particularly wish to draw attention is the statement that there have been no cases of hardship in consequence of changes in tenants. As this statement hardly seems consistent with the following facts which upon investigation I have been assured are quite correct, I deem it my duty to give them in evidence for the information of the Commission. The late Mr. John Thomas, of Chirk, who died last summer, was tenant of a shop at Chirk, belonging to Mr. Biddulph. He had been there 14 years. He carried on the business of cornfactor, grocer, and general merchant. The shop was closed when he took possession. There was no business connexion at all. His predecessor had failed to make one, and had become bankrupt. Mr. Thomas had a most extensive business, built up entirely by himself and his wife. His business connexion extended all round the neighbourhood of Chirk, and right into the very heart of the Ceiriog Valley. Mr. Thomas had a niece, who, at the date of his death, had been with him for a period of over 10 years. The name of the niece is Mrs. Jerman. She knew all the customers and was familiar with the district, and thoroughly understood the business. It had been the intention of Mr. Thomas, just before his death, to make arrangements to transfer the business to Mr. and Mrs. Jerman. Mr. Thomas took a very active interest in political and religious work. He was an advanced Radical and Nonconformist, and a prominent member of our County Council. Mr. and Mrs. Jerman are also Nonconformists and Radicals. Mr. Thomas was a yearly tenant, and on his death the widow and the executors were anxious to sell the goodwill and sub-let the business premises to Mr. and Mrs. Jerman. Permission was applied for to do this, but both the agent and Mr. Biddulph refused to allow this to be done. I have had a personal interview with the widow, and she informs me that after this Mr. and Mrs. Jerman themselves tried to become tenants directly under Mr. Biddulph, and after having failed with the agent, they, with the agent's permission, wrote directly to Mr. Biddulph, asking to be allowed to become his tenant, but were refused. No reason whatever was given for this refusal.

Chairman—continued.

The agent told Mrs. Thomas that the only way she could rid herself of the business would be by giving the landlord notice of her intention to quit. She replied: "That means an enforced sale." He answered: "Yes." Under the circumstances she was compelled to make arrangements to leave, as before his death her husband had expressed a wish that she should not carry on the business after his death. She asked the agent who the incoming tenant was, but only got to know a few days before the sale, so that she had no opportunity of making any arrangements with him as to his taking over the stock-in-trade. Mr. Thomas kept an enormous stock of corn and provisions of every description, grocery, drapery, &c. All these had to be sold by public auction. She got nothing for the goodwill of a business built up entirely by herself and her husband during 14 years, and what was left of the stock-in-trade was sold under the hammer at a tremendous sacrifice. The new tenant is a Churchman. I leave the Commission to draw their own inference from these facts. I may also add that I have personally known several cases in my own district (Rossett) where farmers and labourers have been unduly interfered with by agents, during election times, and where farm labourers have been led to believe that the ballot is not really secret.

60,423. You do not put in any cases of farmers and labourers having been unduly interfered with. Are there any that you can state?—I can state them, but I have promised not to mention the names of the farmers who have been influenced. I will give the names to the Commission, on the condition that they are not made public.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,424. You mean on condition of their not being publicly mentioned?—Quite so.

Sir John Llewelyn.

60,425. Is Mrs. Jerman alive?—She is.

60,426. Is she prepared to come forward herself?—I have not seen Mrs. Jerman herself. The time has been so short, between when I first saw this evidence and now; that I have not had time to see Mrs. Jerman herself personally.

60,427. Then to what extent is that hearsay, and who gave you this information?—The widow of Mr. John Thomas is my informant.

60,428. Is she alive?—She is alive.

60,429. Is she here?—I do not think she is. She is not in very strong health, and I question very much whether she would agree to undergo the trouble of being here.

60,430. How long ago did this take place?—Quite recently—comparatively recently.

60,431. You mean within a year?—A few months ago I am informed.

60,432. Who is the new tenant?—Mr. Snowdon, I think, the name is.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. S. Moss.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

60,433. Do you know from him anything about it. I think you mentioned that he is a Churchman?—He is a Churchman.

60,434. You say nothing about his politics?—No, I have not seen him personally.

Mr. Grove.

60,435. Was this holding of Mr. Thomas's during his lifetime a yearly tenancy?—It was.

60,436. Have you seen Mrs. Thomas lately, and had a confirmation of the details—I mean just quite recently?—After this evidence of Mr. Parker was given I saw her.

60,437. Do we gather from you that it is supposed that efforts are made to make it appear that the Ballot Act is not secret?—That is within my own knowledge; I have known many cases in my own district of Rossett where working-men have come to me asking me if it is true that it can be found out in which way they have voted—farm labourers.

60,438. And do you really think then that in the minds of a great many voters there is a serious question as to the secrecy of the Ballot Act at the present moment?—I think there is in the case of farm labourers. I think that opinion is very much more extensive than the general public have any idea of, especially in agricultural districts.

60,439. Would it apply to the smaller tenant-farmers too, do you think?—Not so much as to the farm labourers.

60,440. Would you permit me to ask you one or two other questions, as chairman of the County Council. Are there any allotments in the county?—I do not know of any.

60,441. Have you the Small Holdings Act at all in operation?—No.

60,442. Under the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act, I suppose you have appointed your analyst?—There has been one appointed, but not very long ago.

60,443. Has there been any advantage taken of it?—I do not think so. I have not heard of any. I do not think the appointment of the analyst has been made a sufficient time for it to have been taken advantage of much.

60,444. Have you thought of giving in the county journals, or something of that kind, details showing the operation of the Act?—I am not quite sure whether that has been done or not.

60,445. We are doing so in our county of Monmouthshire with very good effect. We had some 20 samples almost the first quarter, and we are looking forward to very great benefit upon that continued check upon the quality of manures and feeding stuffs?—The neighbouring county of Cheshire have done what you are asking about, but I do not know whether we have done that or not.

60,446. As to railway rates, do you know, generally speaking, whether the ratepayers of your county consider them oppressive in any way?—The farmers do. They consider them very oppressive, especially in the matter of the milk traffic.

60,447. Supposing a farmer having a rate as he considers too high, sent a letter to the clerk of your council, would the clerk of your council look into the question and see whether the rate was according to the maximum powers?—The letter would be laid, I take it, before the council.

60,448. You have given no instructions to the clerk of the council so far?—To my knowledge, we have not.

60,449. Do you consider that there is real depression in agriculture at the present time?—I do.

60,450. And you confirm what has been said as to the decrease of population in the rural districts of this part?—As to this part of Denbighshire I am not in a position to speak. In my own part the population has not increased. It is pretty much the same.

Mr. Richard Jones.

60,451. Has the appointment of the analyst been sanctioned by the Board of Agriculture?—I think so.

60,452. Do you recollect the terms upon which you have engaged the analyst?—I do not remember them.

60,453. You do not remember what proportion the tenant farmer would have to pay for the analysis?—I do not—about a third I am told.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,454. You have referred to the doubt which possesses the minds of the labourers as to the secrecy of the ballot?—Yes.

60,455. Do you think that this doubt in fact influences their vote?—Yes, I have known it to influence votes in my own district. Where agricultural labourers have a fairly large family, the larger portion of the family being young, and where the farm labourer is employed by some landowner in the district, where it has been represented to him that his vote can be found out, I have known him vote in a way which he would not have done, had he been convinced of the secrecy of the ballot.

60,456. Have any cases of persecution, small or great—petty persecution particularly, say—come under your notice?—Yes, many cases, one especially where a man who was in my father's employment during an election, was punished in what may apparently seem a trivial way, but what was to him a very serious matter. This man had a cow.

60,457. Will you give his name?—His name was Peter Pearce. I am not anxious to give the names of these people in my own village. It might create some bitterness, but I will if the Commission requires it. The man's name was Peter Pearce. He had been in the habit of sending a cow into a ley for a period of 17 years, after the first County Council election the man was told that there was no room for his cow in the ley.

Chairman.

60,458. Where did he send this cow?—To a summer's ley—a grass ley.

60,459. To whom did that belong?—It belonged to Mr. Griffith Boscawen, the chairman of quarter sessions.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,460. Then you were saying after the first county council election he was stopped?—That is so, in the spring, after the first county council election. I will read the statement made by the man if you will allow me. "It had always been the custom when taking the cow out of the ley in the autumn, for Mrs. Pearce to ask the gardener (John Finchett) if there would be a ley for them the following year, and the answer had always been 'Yes,' and the gardener came every year, in the month of March, to inquire if one or two was to be sent, because some times a young heifer was sent to the ley along with the cows. The answer "Yes" was given as usual in the autumn previous to the first county council election. But at the election time Mrs. Boscawen, in company with"—another lady's name is mentioned, but I will not give it—"met Peter Pearce and said, 'Remember the cow, Peter; you have always had the ley.' To which Peter replied, 'Yes, and I have always paid for it.' Then Miss So-and-So said, 'Remember on which side your bread is buttered.' Peter replied, 'Our Poll (meaning his wife) always minds to butter the right side.' Then Miss So-and-So charged Peter with being a paid canvasser and Mrs. Boscawen said, 'Moss will not pay the fine for you being a paid canvasser.' Pearce replied he was not a paid canvasser, therefore did not fear the fine. After this, March passed, but the gardener did not call as usual (no change in gardener, Finchett still there). So, early in April, Mrs. Pearce went to Trevalyn Hall and there saw Captain Griffith Boscawen. She asked him if they were to have ley as usual. He answered: 'I am afraid you have come too late. I thought you did not require it, and I have promised it to another party.' He was a Tory, of course. The other parties that had been in the habit of sending their cows to the ley (being Tories) were allowed to send them as usual, but Peter Pearce was shut out. The above is a correct statement of what took place." That is a statement made by the man himself.

Chairman.

Is there any representative of Mr. Boscawen in the room? (No answer.)

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,461. As I understand, the Mr. Thomas of Chirk, that you refer to, was what may be called an active politician on the Liberal side?—A very active politician.

60,462. To what extent does the Chirk estate extend in the parish of Chirk. Does it extend over the whole parish, or nearly the whole parish?—The agent is here, but I believe it is practically the whole parish.

Sir John Llewelyn.

60,463. May I just clear up one point that I did not quite understand. Mr. John Thomas was never disturbed during his own lifetime. I think it was after his death that this took place?—It was after his death. He was not disturbed during his lifetime, but was remonstrated with by Mr. Biddulph.

60,464. I understood he was there 14 years?—He was there 14 years.

60,465. It was not during his life?—It was not.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,466. You said he was remonstrated with?—That is so.

60,467. By whom—what kind of remonstrance do you refer to?—The statement made was by Mr. Thomas himself to the effect that Mr. Biddulph had given him hints that he ought not to be quite so active in politics as he was.

60,468. The deceased Mr. Thomas himself said that?—Mr. Thomas himself said that many times to me.

60,469. To you, yourself?—To me, personally.

60,470. What kind of hints did you gather?—Well, it was not made very clear to me what was intended; but he expressed himself in this way, that Mr. Biddulph was somewhat annoyed with him for being so actively engaged with politics, and more especially in the county council contests, and had given him a hint that it might be better if he let them alone.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,471. That is the statement that the deceased man made to you?—That is the statement made to me.

Chairman.

60,472. I have some questions put in by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Was the late Mr. Thomas an agricultural tenant, or was he merely a shop-keeper, holding a shop in the village of Chirk?"—He held a shop in the village of Chirk. I do not think he held land as an agricultural tenant under Mr. Biddulph.

60,473. "Then am I to infer from your reply to my last question that you would be in

3 September 1894.]

Mr. S. Moss.

Chairman—continued.

"favour of a court to adjudicate between shopkeepers and their landlords, as well as between farmers and their landlords?"—I think that I would be in favour of a land court, or whatever court it might be termed, to decide between landlord and tenant, even in the case of shopkeepers.

60,474. As well as in agricultural matters?—
Yes.

60,475. Then there are some questions by Mr. Vincent: "Do you say that any part of your evidence—any single sentence from beginning to end—is not hearsay?"—Hearsay in this way, that I am not the actual party who has suffered.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

But the witness spoke of a conversation between the deceased, Thomas, and himself. That is not hearsay evidence except in the sense that Thomas's statement was not given on oath, and it is relevant to our inquiry.

The Witness.

The widow of the deceased person was my informant. It is hearsay only in that way.

Chairman.

60,476. Kindly give your answer to this question: "Do you say that any part of your evidence—any single sentence from beginning to end—is not hearsay?"—The widow of the deceased party is my informant; and what I have stated relating to the cases of interference during election times is not hearsay evidence.

60,477. These are questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Are there a sufficient number of cottages on the estates in your neighbourhood?"—No, they are exceedingly short of cottages. There are a large number of labourers living in the parish in small cottages which belong to small holders who work on the large estates in the district. I mean the cottages are not on the estates themselves, but are the property of small freeholders in the village in many cases.

60,478. And in these cottages the men live who work on the land?—Who work on the large estates; that is so.

60,479. "Is labour scarce?"—At times labour is very scarce. When trade is fairly good, labour is very scarce, because the labourers drift into the towns.

60,480. "What, in your opinion, makes labour scarce?"—Chiefly the reason I have mentioned—that there is a lack of cottage accommodation. There is a lack of anything to interest a labourer to make him stay in the villages; and when trade is good the labourers get higher wages in the towns and they leave the villages. They have nothing to keep them there in the shape of either large gardens or plots of land, and they drift towards the large towns where they get better wages and shorter hours.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,481. Your evidence is attacked by Mr. Vincent on the ground that it consists of hearsay evidence. Of course, it is true that some portion of your evidence did consist of what would in a court of law be called hearsay; but you are here, I understand, as chairman of the County Council of this county, and I should like to ask you, therefore, this question: have you, before making the statements you have done to-day, taken every reasonable care to verify the statements of others that you have relied upon?—I have; and I have gone directly to the widow herself to ask if the reports which had reached me were corroborated by herself.

Mr. Griffiths.

60,482. Do you think there is any truth in what we have heard this morning, that there are many farmers who are afraid to come forward and give evidence before this Commission?—I do.

60,483. You believe they are afraid to come forward?—I have asked farmers myself, and they have told me that they would rather not.

60,484. What is it they are afraid of?—They are afraid of—afterwards, on some pretext or other—being disturbed in their holdings for giving evidence at the various sittings of the Commission.

60,485. Their coming here would not be agreeable to their landlords?—That is so; that is their reason.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,486. You are not thinking of the people who think the Ballot Act is not secret and so forth?—Oh, no; I am speaking of farmers who hold even, say 400 or 500 acres of land, men of good position who have a large amount of capital at stake, and would not like to be disturbed in any way.

60,487. It really comes to this, that the mere fact that they are tenants from year to year makes it imprudent in their judgment to come forward?—That is their opinion. They say so to me.

Professor Rhys.

60,488. If those farmers came forward who think it more prudent not to, would they have any grievances to complain of do you think?—I think so; in fact I am sure they would—the men I mean. I am quite willing to give the names of the men to the Commission themselves, on condition that they are not made public.

Mr. Griffiths.

60,489. Are you a native of the county?—The other end of the county.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. M. BIDDULPH.

Mr. MYDDELTON BIDDULPH called and examined.

Chairman.

60,490. You wish to rebut the evidence of the last witness?—No; I wish to say a word.

60,491. But the evidence must be confined to rebutting evidence?—Yes, so far as this. My agent gave evidence before the Welsh Land Commission, last week. An attack has been made upon his evidence in the case of a man who held no land. This is not an agricultural case. He held no land; therefore, I decline to answer or to say anything whatever on the subject.

60,492. What will be the exact statement that you wish to go down on the minutes?—That your Commission is an inquiry into the state of Welsh agriculture and land tenure, and this case is not within the scope of your inquiry,

The witness withdrew.

Chairman.

I will read the terms of the reference to this Commission. The Royal Commission on Land in Wales and Monmouthshire was appointed by as this person who is referred to, held no land; he held a house and shop only.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,493. Was the shop built on land?—I fancy, sir, that all shops do have some foundation on land.

60,494. This Commission is authorised to inquire into "the conditions and circumstances under which land in Wales and Monmouthshire is held, occupied, and cultivated"?—This man held no land for agricultural purposes.

60,495. He held a shop, and the shop was on land?—There was no land to cultivate? You cannot cultivate bricks and mortar that I know of.

Chairman—continued.

the Queen—"To inquire into the conditions and circumstances under which land in Wales and Monmouthshire is held, occupied, and cultivated."

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

60,496. Is this your statement?—Yes.

60,497. Have you had it read over to you and translated?—Yes.

60,498. And it is correct?—Yes.

60,499. You have no objection to its being read?—I have none.

[The statement of the witness was then read as follows]:—

I John Williams, of Caerddinen, tenant farmer, am deputed by the tenants of Llwyn Ynn estate to give the following evidence on their behalf.

We, as the tenants of Canon Haygarth, on the Llwyn Ynn Estate, wish to say that during the last 10 years we have received an abatement of from 5 to 15 per cent. in our rents annually. The following is a list of the abatements.

At Michaelmas, 1886, there was an abatement of 10 per cent. Lady Day, 1887, to Michaelmas, 1888, 15 per cent. 1889, 10 per cent. 1890, 5 per cent. 1892 and 1893, 10 per cent. and 1894, Lady Day 10 per cent. Seeing that we have long credit on this estate, the Lady Day rents as yet (August, 17th 1894) remain unpaid, but intimation has been received from our agent, Colonel Hughes, that the annual return of 10 per cent. will be made at the audit in September next.

We have the buildings and gates on our farms kept in perfect repair by the landlord, and in the course of the past 12 months, three large reservoirs have been made on the estate and most of the tenants supplied with pure water. With regard to the establishment of a land court, we wish to state that no misunderstanding of any kind has ever taken place between us and our landlord or agent, as they have treated us fairly in every way. Therefore, we do not wish for a land court. Signed this 17th day of August 1894, on behalf of the tenants—

John Williams, Caerddinen.
Robert Jones, Penygraig.
Edward Owen, Hendre.
John Williams, Plas Einion.
David Thomas, Plas Isa.

60,500. This is signed by four other gentlemen besides yourself, is it not?—It is.

60,501. But you appear with some 20 or 30 other gentlemen who support you, and they are all in the room?—Yes, they are about. [The gentlemen here all stood up.]

60,502. And they are all ready to sign if they have not already signed this statement?—They are.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,503. What is the name of the gentleman who directed the other people to stand up—that gentleman there in the light coat. It was he who commanded the tenants to stand up. What is his name?—He is a stranger to me.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. JOHN WILLIAMS.

Chairman.

60,504. Was this glebe or private land?—His own farm.

60,505. The land belonging to this reverend gentleman; was it glebe land or private land?—Private land.

60,506. You mentioned a land court. Can you give the Commissioners any idea what you mean by a land court?—No, very little.

Mr. Griffiths.

60,507. Have any of these tenants ever improved their farms?—Yes, many of them.

60,508. Have you done so?—I tried to.

60,509. Have you ever heard of any farms on this estate being sold?—No.

60,510. Never a farm on this estate has been sold?—Well, there might have been a few. I only remember one small farm being sold.

60,511. Perhaps it might be the turn of your farm to be sold next?—I should be very vexed.

60,512. Would you expect any payment for your improvements?—Yes, to some extent.

60,513. Is it the custom on the estate to give payment to the tenants for the improvements?—I am not aware that anybody asked for any.

60,514. Then would you not like to have some outside authority to appeal to?—Yes, I would.

Mr. Richard Jones.

60,515. What course was taken to depute you to appear on behalf of these tenants?—They asked would I appear for them as I am the oldest tenant.

60,516. Was there a meeting of the tenants convened?—Yes.

60,517. Who convened the meeting?—Some of the Llwyn Ynn tenants.

60,518. Do you not know who?—I think it was Mr. Thomas, of Plas Isaf.

60,519. Where was the meeting convened?—At the school room of Pentre Celyn.

60,520. Were all the tenants invited to attend?—Yes, they were.

60,521. Did they all appear?—Not all of them.

60,522. What were you authorised to do?—Only that I was the oldest tenant, and they asked me to come here to-day.

60,523. What were you to say?—Everything that they asked me to.

60,524. Was it understood that they were to say "Amen" to everything you said here to-day on their behalf?—Yes.

60,525. If you were to say that everyone was making his fortune on his farm they were to say "Amen" to that?—Oh, yes, they were.

60,526. Are you satisfied that your farm has been paying you for the last eight or ten years?—Well, it was very hard during the last 10 years.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

60,527. Are you a richer man to day than you were 10 years ago?—Very little.

60,528. Are you any?—I have not made my accounts yet.

60,529. How often do you make your accounts?—When I get time.

Mr. Grove.

60,530. I suppose you are all agreed that things are very bad with farming just now, are you not?—We are.

Professor Rhys.

60,531. Do you, as farmers, keep any accounts?—Not all of us.

60,532. Do many of you keep accounts?—Yes, many of us do.

60,533. Who was the owner of the estate before the reverend gentlemen who owns it now?—Squire Parry, of Llwyn Ynn.

60,534. Is that an old Welsh family?—I believe it is.

Sir John Llewelyn.

60,535. Do you look upon Canon Haygarth as a good landlord?—Splendid.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

60,536. I understand that you have become the representative of these gentlemen in consequence of what took place at a public meeting?—Yes.

60,537. Was it Mr. Thomas, of Plas isaf, who called the meeting together?—He sent to the tenants.

60,538. Is he the National School master?—Not at that place.

60,539. But he is a National School master, is he not?—Yes, I believe so.

60,540. Is he the local Conservative agent?—I do not know.

60,541. Is he the local Conservative secretary?—I do not believe so.

Chairman.

60,542. There are some questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Who takes the shooting over the Llwyn Ynn estate?"—A stranger—a man from Liverpool; I do not know who he is now.

60,543. "Is he a shooting tenant?"—He is the shooting tenant at the present time. This is his first season.

60,544. "Is there any complaint with regard to the game?"—None.

60,545. "Do you think the rents on this estate are low enough in view of the fall of prices?"—The times are so bad that the rents are scarcely low enough.

The witness withdrew.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. JOHN LLOYD WILLIAMS.

Mr. JOHN LLOYD WILLIAMS called and examined.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

See 60,501.

60,546. You have been acting as interpreter here to-day?—Yes.

60,547. What is the name of the gentleman now sitting there in front of Mr. Vincent?—I believe it is Mr. Owen.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

60,548. Mr. George Owen, the secretary of the North Wales Property Defence Association?—Yes.

60,549. Did you observe him waive to that reluctant phalanx to get up?—I did observe him motion to them.

The witness withdrew.

Rev. IVAN T. DAVIES recalled and further examined.

Chairman.

60,550. Are you the Reverend Ivan T. Davies?—Yes, my Lord.

See 6,832 and 7,417.

60,551. Do you wish to make a statement?—Yes, my Lord. I beg to inform the Commission that Colonel Hughes, Sir Watkin's head agent, has recently paid Jane Rowlands, Havod yr haidd, Llanuwchllyn, 60*l.* expenses incurred in building a house on her holding, as narrated at Bala, and she desires to publicly thank Sir Watkin, Colonel Hughes, and Mr. Morris, the local agent, for their very great kindness. In justice to Colonel Hughes, it is only fair to add that his kind action is in no wise the outcome of this Commission, as he had made the promise two or three years ago to compensate her and to rectify matters to the best of his ability, which promise was renewed last year, and we all know that the Colonel's word is his bond.

Chairman.

60,552. You wish that to go on the notes of the Commission?—If you please. We think it is only fair that the same publicity should be given to the great kindness of Colonel Hughes, as was given to the injustice of the other party.

Quite so. We are very glad to get your statement, and will take care that it shall appear on the notes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

60,553. You gave evidence at Bala, I think?—Yes.

Chairman.

60,554. There is nothing further you wish to say?—I have nothing more to say.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. J. PROBERT called and examined.

Chairman.

60,555. How would you wish us to take your evidence; would you like to read it through, or would you like to state any points that occur to you?—As you like, my Lord, I will leave it entirely to you.

60,556. You can either be questioned on it or read it through?—Perhaps I should be questioned upon it.

60,557. Very good, because there are certain points that we have heard over and over again. If I miss out anything that is of interest to the neighbourhood or to the Commission, you will call me back?—I will.

60,558. You are local agent to the Ruthin Castle estate?—I am.

60,559. And you give evidence for the districts of Ruthin, Denbigh, Ruabon, and Llanarmon, Dyffryn Ceiirig?—I do.

60,560. What is the acreage in the county of Denbigh?—10,500 acres.

60,561. Do you inquire into the political and religious opinions of tenants before accepting them as tenants?—None whatever.

60,562. Never?—Never.

60,563. Do you know of any cases of hardship or inconvenience experienced by tenants as to the employment of agents on this estate?—Not that I am aware of.

60,564. The usual date of entry is the 30th of November?—It is.

60,565. They are yearly tenancies, of course, as usual?—Yes.

60,566. You have no demand for leases, and you know of no leaseholders?—No applications whatsoever.

60,567. Tell the Commission, please, about the changes in tenancy. You say they have become more frequent than in former years owing to low prices and consequent losses in farming. Is that so?—That is so.

60,568. And through anything else?—Through the large importation of grain and cattle from abroad, also a continued increase of local rates levied on the land.

60,569. Then you are not one of those who think that local rates have decreased?—No, I do not think so.

60,570. Have you any case of hardship?—Not in my experience.

60,571. I suppose where land has been taken on your estate compensation has been paid?—It has.

3 September 1894.]

MR. J. PROBERT.

Chairman—continued.

60,572. When any damage by timber cutting has been done, the tenant is compensated likewise?—Yes.

60,573. And in the case of mining or brick-fields the same?—Yes.

60,574. Have you got your agreement?—I have.

60,575. Will you kindly hand it in?—Yes. [Producing agreement.]

60,576. Have you ever heard of any complaints about the agreement? Have any clauses of the agreement been complained of?—None have been complained of, to me at all; in fact there are no restrictions.

60,577. You have no restrictions?—Well, the penalising clauses are not adhered to.

60,578. But the penalising clauses, I take it, are in the agreement?—They are in the agreement, but they are never adhered to—not in a single case I know.

60,579. Never in your experience?—No.

60,580. They are practically a dead letter?—They are.

60,581. Cultivation is allowed free?—Yes.

60,582. They can sell hay and straw as much as they like?—Perfect freedom. If a man cultivates his land properly there is not the slightest restriction.

60,583. Who maintains the gates and does the drainage?—The landlord.

60,584. Though they are in the agreement?—Yes, they are.

60,585. Then, practically, that is a dead letter drainage?—as well?—It is.

60,586. You give tenants a copy of the agreement?—Yes, if they ask for it.

60,587. But not unless they ask for it?—If they ask for it I always give it them in a moment.

60,588. You make no charge for it?—Never. I never make any charge for it at all. I always let them take it home to read if they like to take it home and study it thoroughly. I give them every privilege.

60,589. But unless they ask for it you do not give them a copy?—No, I do not.

60,590. Does an interpreter usually come with a Welsh-speaking applicant?—Oh, frequently.

60,591. Do you speak Welsh yourself?—I am sorry to say I do not.

60,592. Do you find that an inconvenience?—Occasionally it is.

60,593. How do you fix the rent?—We are usually guided by the valuation of a practical valuer, such as Mr. Rigby, of Sutton Weaver, Mr. Samuel Williams, of Oswestry, and in two instances by Colonel Hughes, of Ystrad, who goes over the land, makes his calculation, and advises what rent should be asked.

60,594. Is the rent of the smaller tenantry higher or lower than that of the larger farmers?—Slightly higher.

60,595. On account of extra expense in buildings?—Extra expense in buildings and so on.

60,596. Each farm is separately assessed and valued?—It is, according to the situation and quality of the land, climate, and other circumstances.

60,597. How are rents fixed?—By valuation as a rule, or mutual agreement occasionally.

60,598. On your estate do you let farms to the highest bidder?—Certainly not.

60,599. You get the best men you can?—The most practical men.

60,600. When any complaint is made to the landlord, what happens?—It is not to let to the highest bidder. When any complaint as to rent is made the landlord authorises a fresh valuation of the farm by a well-known and competent man, and after that is made the rent is mutually agreed upon between landlord and tenant, taking the valuation as a basis to go upon.

60,601. Then I suppose you try and ascertain as far as possible the stability of each tenant as regards money?—Care is taken to ascertain as far as possible the financial condition and suitability of each tenant, but still in some instances we have been misled by untrue or fallacious statements made by friends of the proposed tenant.

60,602. Do you ever refer to arbitration?—We have several times called in an arbitrator as a means of settling or re-adjusting the rent, and have found the tenant satisfied with the decision come to.

60,603. Have rents gone up or have they gone down?—During my time there has been a gradual decrease, a list of which I beg to hand you for perusal.

60,604. According to this scale there is nothing under 10 per cent. reduction in rent, and it goes on, 19 per cent., 28 per cent., 29 per cent., 23 per cent., 19 per cent., 20 per cent., 30 per cent., 20 per cent., 25 per cent., 18 per cent., 15 per cent., 28 per cent., &c. That is over the whole estate?—Yes, and on one estate,—Llanarmon,—they have also had 10 per cent. besides.

60,605. They have been allowed an extra 10 per cent. for some years past, that is, in addition to this?—In addition to the permanent reductions.

60,606. Can you tell us anything about temporary abatements and permanent reductions?—We have not made any temporary abatements as a rule; we have put it permanently for the time—we have reduced it permanently with the view to the tenant getting a reduction as regards assessments.

60,607. Which he would not do otherwise?—Which he would not do otherwise, if they were temporary.

60,608. Then is there any notice given to the tenant previously of intended abatements?—Where a decision is arrived at before the audit, notice is given, but each case is considered on its own merits after permanent reductions are made. That is, for temporary abatements.

60,609. Then I suppose these farms have been revalued?—They have.

60,610. Since 1873 have any rents been raised at all?—No, they have not, they have gradually decreased.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. J. PROBERT.

Chairman—continued.

60,611. When do you insist on the rent being paid, do you give them any time, or are the rents paid at once?—We give them three months, or in some instances six months.

60,612. After it falls due?—After it falls due.

60,613. Have you any idea about the preferential claim for rent. We have heard a good deal about that on both sides?—Payment, when rent became due, would be insisted upon and sureties required if the landlord had not the preferential claim.

60,614. Has the tithe been merged in the rent, or do you make that separate?—It has been merged in the rent.

60,615. Land tax and local rates are paid by the tenant?—Yes.

60,616. And income tax by the landlord?—That is so.

60,617. What do you say about the local rates, have they gone down or gone up?—They have gone up, as far as I can make out, about 3d. in the £.

60,618. What can you tell us about the size of farms on the Ruthin estate?—On the Ruthin estate the farms vary from 15 to 350 acres; on the Denbigh estate the farms vary from 34 to 365 acres; on the Llanarmon estate the farms vary from 18 to 1,670 acres, including sheep-walks.

60,619. Is there a farm of 1,670 acres?—Well, with a sheep-walk of near 1,000 acres.

60,620. But is that entirely confined to one farm?—One farm.

60,621. That is not common?—Not common—well, yes, it would be—there are a few other sheep-walks, certainly, included in this, but the highest acreage would be 1,670 in one individual farm.

60,622. Then Ruabon?—At Ruabon the farms vary from 20 up to 40 acres.

60,623. Have you anything to say about consolidation of holdings?—Not on the estate with which I am connected; on the contrary a number of small holdings have been carved out of large ones, the landlord putting up new buildings, including the cartage in each case.

60,624. With what result?—Where smaller farms have been carved out of larger, the result has been to enable men with less capital to become tenants who, generally speaking, have done better than those in large holdings as they work themselves and employ no labourers.

60,625. About the state of cultivation and the nature of farming pursued?—I prefer not to go into that question, I have not given any answers of that sort. Colonel West does not wish me to interfere at all with the tenants, but to give them all the freedom possible, therefore I have not troubled with that.

60,626. Do you consider the tenants on your estate a hard-working and industrious people?—I do.

60,627. They do the best they can for the land?—They really do—I think so.

60,628. Do you think they have improved the land on the whole?—Well, I think they have held their own—that is what I think—they are a most industrious class of tenantry.

60,629. Are the labourers stopping in the villages or are they going away?—A great many labourers go to the large towns and colliery districts on the estate with which I am connected. The fences are kept in very fair order.

60,630. Now, tell us about the improvements?—As different estates have different rules, I cannot say generally what is done. On the Ruthin Castle estate, drainage and buildings for stock, implements and cart sheds, protection from river encroachments, iron and wire fences in special cases, gates and posts, attending to roofs and chimneys, and sometimes seed: the improvements made were 11,170*l.* and about 35,000*l.* in reconstruction and repairs since 1868, for which the landlord receives no interest. That 11,170*l.* is in drainage principally and new buildings.

60,631. Do the new buildings come in reconstruction and repairs?—No.

60,632. In the 11,170*l.*?—In the 11,170*l.*

60,633. What is the 35,000*l.*?—The 35,000*l.* is in repairs to buildings and increased accommodation now and then, but the 11,170*l.* was borrowed money at the time, repayable by instalments covering 25 years, which I think Colonel West referred to in his evidence.

60,634. Do you insist on the hauling being done by the tenants?—Not in all cases.

60,635. Is there any objection to that or not?—Usually, on the Ruthin Castle estate, no actual co-operation is insisted on, the landlord doing the whole improvements at his own expense. The tenants are expected to do any necessary carting, but this is not insisted upon; in most cases it is given willingly, and in some cases paid for. As regards new buildings absolutely, where we have carved out small farms from large ones, Colonel West has done the whole of the cartage independent of anybody.

60,635. The whole of the cartage himself?—The whole expense of everybody.

60,637. Including cartage?—Including cartage.

60,638. About notice to quit, do any of the tenants prefer a short notice or a six months' notice?—They prefer a six months' notice.

60,639. Tell the Commission why that is. I cannot give any reason for it; they want to get released as soon as possible. They have every confidence in Colonel West, and it appears to me that they much prefer the six months to the 12 months.

60,640. What is your experience?—That is my experience.

60,641. Is there any custom of the country?—Not that I am aware of.

60,642. As to outgoing tenants, is there any custom of the country in respect to growing crops?—I believe that is in the agreement.

60,643. It is settled by the outgoing and incoming tenant?—Yes. In fact, I do not know of any dispute at all in my time; they are always amicably settled between them.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. J. PROBERT.

Chairman—continued.

60,644. Do you know of any instances where compensation has been given for the improved condition of a holding?—No, I do not.

60,645. Is there any tenant-right on this estate?—None whatever.

60,646. Do you know anything about the Agricultural Holdings Act?—We have never had anything to do with that; I mean it has been quite a dead letter.

60,647. Now, about game; is game generally preserved?—Yes.

60,648. Is the Ground Game Act availed of? Do the tenants generally kill the hares and rabbits?—Yes, they do.

60,649. If there is any damage done, I suppose you compensate?—We do. We call in a competent valuer, unless we settle quietly amongst ourselves. As a rule we do mutually agree upon someone.

60,650. Are tenants expected to beat the coverts?—I have never heard of any such proceeding. Many tenants join the day's sport and get their luncheon and some game.

60,651. Have you any idea about the preservation of game as regards the public? Do you wish to say anything on that head?—I believe, if game was not preserved in Wales, fewer men of wealth would reside in it. Many shootings are let to gentlemen from large manufacturing towns who spend a good deal of money in the neighbourhood, and thus benefit local tradesmen and other people dependent on them.

60,652. I suppose the railway rates are not satisfactory: they are too high, are they not?—They are rather high—that is, according to what our tenants say.

60,653. Is that the general opinion of the tenant farmers of the district?—It is, on and off our estate. They themselves will be better able to answer as to that.

60,654. Then as regards the tenants of small holdings, do you think the tenants of small holdings who work for themselves have generally succeeded better in bad times than the tenants of large farms?—I think so.

60,655. Do you think that the interest on the value of the houses and buildings would absorb the rent, as we were told this morning?—It would nearly, if not entirely.

60,656. Very nearly?—Very nearly.

60,657. What is paid to the labourers in cash if they board themselves?—With our farmers, as a rule, the general average is 15s. a week if they board themselves. That is about the general average wage on our estate—on our farms.

60,658. What do they pay for a cottage?—From 2l. 10s. 0d. to 3l.

60,659. About 1s. a week?—About 1s. a week.

60,660. Do you think the cottages are as good as they were, or are they worse or better?—I think they have very much improved.

60,661. Is the condition of the cottages on the estate good?—Yes; the condition of all the cottages is very good and the construction as follows: Each cottage has (where possible) a kitchen, back kitchen, pantry and three bedrooms, with out-offices. They are built of brick, or stone, and slated.

Chairman—continued.

60,662. Of course they have got gardens?—Yes.

60,663. Any allotments?—They have gardens, but in my experience there is no demand for allotments. We tried from 1868 when Colonel West succeeded to the property, to 1887 in a field near Ruthin, and had to give up the experiment as they were evidently not wanted.

60,664. You tried it for 20 years?—We did.

60,666. Do you let the cottages direct, or do the farmers let them?—As a rule they are let direct from the landlord subject to three and six months. There are one or two not let direct, they are let through the farmer.

60,667. For his carter and shepherd and so forth?—Yes.

60,668. The notice for a cottage is six months?—Yes.

60,669. When did the depression begin?—About 1882 as far as I know.

60,670. What was the principal cause of this depression?—Principally low prices caused by foreign importation and bad harvests. All classes were affected by it, the landlord, the tenant, the tradesman, and the labouring population owing to the impoverishment of their former employers.

60,671. The general relations between landlord and tenant are very friendly indeed?—Yes; I know of nothing unfriendly.

60,672. Very satisfactory indeed?—Yes.

60,673. You told us about money spent in improvements, 11,170l. and 35,000l.; that is exclusive of the cost of superintendence and value of timber, and materials supplied by the estate, and no interest is charged?—That is so.

60,674. Do many of the families remain on the land for generations or not?—Yes, I will read out the Llanarmon estate:—

Present Tenant.	Farm.	Previous Tenant.
J. T. Evans	Llwythdere Ucha and Tynyfedw.	His uncle.
Margaret Davies	Pantiau	Her father.
Thomas Evans	Fodwen	His father.
Richard Edwards	Pentrebach issa	Ditto.
Rd. Edwards, sen.	Tyntwill	Ditto.
Lewis Edwards	Cwm Canol	Ditto.
Evan Edwards	Dolwen	Ditto.
T. and R. Hughes	Aelycorran	Their father.
John Jones	Sarple	His uncle.

On the Ruthin and Denbigh and Ruabon estates, there are several farms held by tenants from 35 years and downwards.

60,675. In your agreement the tenant in the last year of his tenancy leaves the straw and chaff to the landlord or incoming tenant without any allowance?—That is so in the agreement, and has always been so ever since I have been here.

60,676. Do you adhere to that?—It is done; we leave that always to the incoming and outgoing tenant.

3 September 1894.]

MR. J. PROBERT.

60,677. To settle between them?—Yes, we have never had any difference whatever since I have been here, at all events.

60,678. Does the outgoing tenant have the house to the 1st of May?—To the 1st of May; but he has a right to stable room according to the size of the farm, that would be inserted in the agreement, of course, with the old tenant. If he had the right for four horses, he would have it so as to cultivate his land after the expiration of the tenancy, from the 30th of November previous to the 1st day of May.

60,679. Is that supposed to be a hardship?—I cannot see how it can be a hardship, it meets both sides.

60,680. We have had other evidence, but it seems to be a fair thing in your opinion?—I should say so, it has been the custom about here ever since I have been here.

Sir John Llewelyn.

60,681. Have there been many changes of tenancy on the estate?—There have been of late, I mean to say, the last ten or twelve years.

60,682. There have been several?—Several.

60,683. Do you generally find one of the same family continue in the farm, or do you get strangers?—As a rule the family have preference, unless there is no one to succeed.

60,684. Do you say the majority of the tenants have been a long time on the estate?—Yes.

60,685. And attached to it?—Yes.

60,686. Have you ever had any difficulty in settling with the tenants?—None whatsoever.

60,687. You spoke of arbitration by mutual arrangement?—Yes.

60,688. Has that been found to be satisfactory?—We have had two cases. Yes, it has been found to be perfectly satisfactory.

60,689. What was the nature of the arbitration; who appointed the arbitrators?—We and the tenant agreed to name a certain gentleman.

60,690. Only one?—Only one.

60,691. You did not each appoint one, and let them appoint an umpire?—No, we did not, one was appointed, and he settled the difference between the landlord and tenant.

60,692. Have you many competent men in the neighbourhood to undertake that duty?—Oh, yes.

60,693. Have you a sufficiency of cottages on the estate?—Colonel West has built, I think, 12 new cottages since he succeeded to the property.

60,694. Are they in villages, or are they scattered about on the estate near their work?—Near their work; a good many of them, and some on the outskirts of the town, because a good many of them prefer to live in the town rather than to live in the country. Of course if their work was, say, about a mile away, they would much prefer to go and live in the town than reside in the country.

60,695. Why is that?—I cannot understand it.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

60,696. It is, perhaps, society and company?—Most probably.

60,697. And perhaps there are advantages in the way of reading rooms?—Well, probably there may be something in it.

60,698. Have you done anything in that way?—No, not that I am aware of.

60,699. Where are these cottages, because the chairman of the County Council said that there was a lack of such cottages in the county. To a certain extent you agree with him, because you say Colonel West has been supplying cottages?—Yes, he has been supplying them.

60,700. By that action he has shown that he felt there was a want to some extent?—Quite so.

60,701. And he has been remedying that want?—Yes, quite so.

60,702. Can you speak for any other portion of the county besides Colonel West's estate?—I prefer to confine myself to Colonel West's estate.

60,703. But you know the county generally?—I do. I am in the western division.

60,704. Have the cottages been allowed to fall down?—In some places.

60,705. On the estate you know it has been the other way—the old sites have been built upon?—Yes, it is the other way.

60,706. Are they entirely new, or has the improvement been in the nature of repairing the old cottages?—Several entirely new; nine, I believe, entirely new, and the remainder have been renovated as it were, reconstructed—repaired.

Mr. Grove.

60,707. In speaking about giving a copy of the agreement, you say you gave a copy of the agreement to each tenant when he asked for it?—If they asked for it.

60,708. Do you not tender them a copy?—Well they have never even asked me for a copy, and I have never found a difficulty about it. If it has been an oversight it has been an oversight on my part as well as that of the tenant.

60,709. We have found the evidence different in different places, but I think it would be most advisable for a copy always to be given to the tenant, and he might take it home and have it in his own possession?—I entirely agree with you.

60,710. And given to him without charge, I suppose?—Yes.

60,711. As to valuing land, you say the estates were valued some time ago. Do you think the valuer ought to go over the land once or twice at two different seasons in order to get a proper estimate?—Our valuers have gone over twice in one instance and only once in another instance; but of course we leave that entirely to their judgment. We have not interfered.

60,712. If a man was called in from some distance away, the probability is he ought to see it twice to arrive at a fair estimate?—I

3 September 1894.]

Mr. J. PROBERT.

Mr. Grove—continued.

agree with you, sir; I think it would be a proper course.

60,713. Is labour scarce?—It is. They flock to the towns and collieries, and brickyards, and such like.

60,714. Did you say you had had many claims for damage by game?—We have had a few.

60,715. Do you manage to settle them in most cases without calling in anyone to arbitrate between the two parties?—We have called in an arbitrator on two occasions, and they are perfectly satisfied; the remainder we have mutually settled without any friction.

60,716. Do the tenant-farmers know the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I do not think they are generally known.

60,717. Did you say that the railway rates were considered rather high?—Yes, that is what our tenantry think. They frequently mention them to me.

60,718. Have you in your office the Board of Trade book; it is a small book published at one shilling?—I heard you refer to it on a previous occasion. I have not got one.

60,719. Your reductions in rent appear to be very liberal. Do you consider that is any proof that the rents were rather high before?—Most probably.

60,720. Would it be reasonable for us to expect a cottage to be put on every farm of 100 acres, say, do you think as a rule—I know there are exceptions, of course?—I could not say exactly, but I must say it is a great convenience to a tenant-farmer to have a cottage for his workmen; I entirely agree with that myself.

60,721. To attend to the stock and so on?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

60,722. What training have you had for the office of agent?—I was under my predecessor nine years, and for 13 years I have acted in the capacities I now hold. I have been 22 years altogether in Colonel West's employ.

60,723. Have you had anything more than an office training?—Oh yes, I have been frequently out with my predecessor. We have had lands on our hands to cultivate, and have had lands to cultivate for Colonel West.

60,724. Do you think many of the tenant farmers would consult you upon agricultural matters if they were in difficulties?—I do not think they would. I am pleased to say we have not an inch of land at present unlet, therefore we have not farmed to any extent. We never have any farm which is left for us to cultivate. If we have over a farm we have 20 applicants for it, more or less.

60,725. Do you think your practical acquaintance with agriculture would enable you to know the value of land?—I do not say, I am a judge at all of land. I much prefer to take a back seat in that respect. I should not like to put my ideas in front of anyone's.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

60,726. You will admit this, that it would be a desirable thing in an agent that he should have a practical knowledge?—Yes, I quite agree, but then Colonel West has always left the valuations to be done by independent parties.

60,727. You say that seeds in some cases have been supplied by the landlord?—Yes, he has given seeds—now and then, as a matter of mutual arrangement—say, when a change of tenancy has occurred, or something of that sort. A tenant would say, to Colonel West, "Well, this field is rather dirty, what do you say about giving me the seeds, if I clean it, and seed it down," and Colonel West has said, "Yes, I will do so." That is the sort of arrangement I mean.

60,728. You say that compensation has been given for damage done by the timber cutting?—Yes, in one instance there was a valuation made, and it was paid; in the other cases, as a rule, we give the tree tops—the tenant is perfectly satisfied. If they say "We must have two or three trees," as the case may be, we arrange it straight away; we never leave without giving them, something, if we go across the fields. Colonel West particularly wishes that.

60,729. Who fills up the gaps?—We do,—Colonel West's woodmen.

60,730. You say you know of no case where compensation has been paid for general improvement of a farm?—Not in my time. I know of no such case on our estate.

60,731. Do you think there would be any objection to include that as an item in Part 3, Schedule 1 of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—I could not say. We have never worked it at all in the county. It has been a perfect dead letter in every way. I should not like to offer an opinion about it.

60,732. You know the Act only provides for specific improvements?—Yes.

60,733. Do you not think it would be rather hard in some cases that a tenant should not be compensated for the general improvements of a farm?—That is if he left—a change of tenancy.

60,734. Yes, a change of tenancy?—I rather agree with you—there is no doubt it should be so.

60,735. Of course, I am only wanting your opinion; it is rather an important matter. You say that in a few cases arbitration has been resorted to to settle the question of rent between the landlord and tenant, and I think you mentioned one instance?—Yes.

60,736. What place was that?—I forget now. I really could not say exactly, but I know there was an instance of it some years ago. Probably I shall be in a position to hand it to you tomorrow, but I cannot say straight away. There have been so many valuations made in different ways with us—but I believe there was one.

60,737. You do not remember anything of the particulars—what was the former rent, and what was the result of the valuation?—I could not say exactly. I have been left out entirely as regards these valuations more or less because Colonel West has independent parties to carry this out, so as to give entire satisfaction.

60,738. Would it be Blaenycwm do you think?—I am not at all certain. Probably it was. I would not swear to it.

60,739. That is the only case you are aware of?—Yes, I only remember one case.

60,740. Do you know a place called Tyhwnt-i'rafon in Llanarmon?—Very well.

60,741. Did the tenant leave there some seven years ago?—Yes.

60,742. Under what circumstances?—I could not tell you straight away. I have not had anything to do with the Llanarmon estate, except the buildings on that part of the property. It has been managed from Oswestry more or less. I do not know what arrangement or under what circumstances they did leave, so as to be accurate.

60,743. Do you remember the former rent of the place?—No, I do not.

60,744. What is the rent at present?—98l.

60,745. You do not remember the former rent?—I cannot tell you. I have not the rentals here.

60,746. Do you confirm Colonel West's statement this morning that there are many tenants in arrear?—There are a few, but I do not consider them very large myself.

60,747. How long have they been in arrear?—They have been paying on account for two or three years.

60,748. Do you think those tenants are as industrious as the other tenants on the estate?—So far as I can judge. I never took that particular notice to see whether there were any better than the others, or any worse, but I should say myself that they are hard-working people.

60,749. Do you think they are as fairly rented as the other tenants?—I think more so. That is the general opinion in the neighbourhood all down to Oswestry.

60,750. I mean the tenants that are in arrear?—I beg your pardon. I did not understand.

60,751. Do you think they are as fairly rented as the other tenants on the estate?—Well, I could not say exactly, but all the rents all through the property have been re-adjusted, and I suppose it is the old balance they owe.

60,752. Do you think they started with sufficient capital?—Well, I rather fancy they have not. That is my opinion.

60,753. Do you think the farmers have not so much capital when entering a farm at present as they had years ago?—No, I do not think they have.

Mr. Griffiths.

60,754. Is there any lime used in this district?—Yes.

60,755. There are some lime kilns here?—There are several lime kilns on several of our own farms.

60,756. Are they always used?—Yes, as a rule; where there is a lime kiln on the farm it is always used.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

60,757. Is there as much lime used now as there was 20 years ago?—I do not think there is.

60,758. What is the reason?—I cannot tell you the reason. They have gone to artificial manure and one thing and another. I cannot account for it.

60,759. They find too much labour attached to it?—Very probably.

60,760. Are labourers plentiful?—They are not very plentiful here.

60,761. I think you said the hedges and ditches were kept well?—Yes, fairly well I must say; we have no ground of complaint on our estates at all.

60,762. Have you anything in your agreement to compel a man to cut the thistles on your farms?—No, there are no thistles mentioned in the agreement, but I suppose good husbandry would cover them.

60,763. Well, this is my first experience of the Vale of Clwyd, which I have heard highly spoken of since my childhood, but I must say the best crop I saw this morning was a crop of thistles. I think it is a disgrace to the neighbourhood and that they should be compelled to cut them. If the rent is too high, then it should be lowered. It was just as you enter from Morfa Rhuddlan?—Colonel West has no property down there for miles.

60,764. Then you ought to be thankful. Your statement with regard to the labourers does not quite confirm what the Labour Commission have given us. "But from the point of view of a thorough cultivation, many farmers regard the supply as very inadequate. 'There 'is scarcely half enough to do justice to the 'land, and it has been so for the last 10 years 'or more.' " Are there any of your farms at this place called Yale?—No.

60,765. Here again I see: "The inhabitants of the Yale district are generally credited with being more industrious than the men of the Vale of Clwyd, the latter having in fact, both as farmers and labourers, but a poor reputation in respect of industry. 'Other 'Welshmen (according to one writer) say that 'in the Vale of Clwyd the worst of farmers 'thrive upon the best of land.' " Is that correct, do you think?—I should not like to give an opinion upon it.

60,766. Then with regard to the cottage accommodation. I see the cottage accommodation is very bad in some parts here?—I believe so.

60,767. In the same report I find: "The only complaint with reference to cottages—and it is a most serious one—is that the accommodation and the number of partitioned rooms are utterly inadequate for the requirements of ordinary decency. According to the rector of Llandyrnog, 'where there is a room 'upstairs there are no partitions; beds cannot 'be partitioned off, so that even grown-up 'children who have left the district, when 'they return for a visit, have to sleep in the “ same common open bedroom. Decency and “ morality are often simply impossible under “ such circumstances.” That is a sad state of affairs, is it not?—I fancy that is the report made by your Secretary. I have read it.

60,768. Made very lately?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

60,769. Do I understand you to think that a tenant should receive compensation for general improvements?—I think he ought to do.

60,770. As distinct from specific improvements?—Yes, I think so.

60,771. Will you explain how? I have always thought that the general improvements were the aggregate of the specific improvements, or should be so?—If he put any extra buildings on the place or houses for stock.

60,772. Surely they are specific improvements?—Yes, they are, but that is all I referred to.

Mr. Richard Jones.

60,773. Supposing a farmer went into a farm which was in a very filthy state, and he was there years 8 or 10 years, and he cultivated that farm and expended a great deal of labour upon it and brought it into a high condition, so far as production is concerned, although probably he could not make a claim for any specific improvement, yet for the general improvements of the farm one would think that he should be entitled to compensation, would you be prepared to admit his claim?—I think, under the circumstances, in the way you put it, it would be an injustice to the man if he did not receive a little compensation. Where he has improved the tenancy, I think, on leaving, he should do; I quite agree with you.

Chairman.

60,774. I have two or three questions handed in by Mr. Vincent. “ Have you got a letter “ about the pheasant case which was mentioned “ at Llangollen?”—This is a copy of it. I do not know whether you would understand the original.

60,776. What we understand is that there were six pheasants turned down in the corn?—That is his statement. I take his statement.

60,777. Mr. Owen Wynne puts this question: “ A great deal has been said before this Com- “ mission as to the value of small holdings. Do “ you know that out of about 60,000, the total “ holdings in Wales, about 40,000 or two-thirds “ are small holdings of 50 acres and under?” Can you answer that question?—I should say, my Lord, that Mr. Owen Wynne is not very far out of it, I should think about two-thirds.

60,778. You think it is about two-thirds?—That is what I have been told, or heard from various people.

60,779. Mr. Llewellyn Jones asks these questions: “ Have you any objection to stating what “ rent per acre is paid for the sewage farm and “ the accommodation land near the town of “ Ruthin?”—It all depends, from 4*l.* 5*s.* to 4*l.* 10*s.* It is irrigated from the town sewer. We are compelled to keep it on our own account in consequence of the sewage pouring on it, and we have to let it in plots.

60,780. “ Is there a farm called Galchog on “ the Ruthin estate?”—There is.

60,781. “ Does this farm stand in the middle “ of the Ruthin estate game preserves?”—It does.

60,782. “ Is it not a well-known fact in the “ neighbourhood that the tenant of this farm “ has suffered considerably owing to the “ damages of the game from the adjacent pre- “ serves?”—His rent has been fixed according to the position of his farm, because it is surrounded by covers.

60,783. “ Is there any truth in the suggestion “ made by Mr. Richard Edwards, at Llangollen “ that Mr. Williams’s valuation has not been “ observed, and that the rents were not reduced “ to the figure recommended by him?”—I do not know anything at all about it.

60,784. “ Have the tenants on the Llanarmon “ estate built new buildings and repaired old “ buildings at their own expense?”—Not a sixpence during my time, or before; neither have I heard of it.

60,785. “ Have not buildings been erected by “ tenants on the following farms: Penybryn, “ Tyntwll —?”—Not a farthing I know of.

60,786. “ And Llwythdir Isaf?”—I am not aware of it—not in my time.

The area of the district is 10,509 acres of cultivated land, and 3,961 acres of mountain land.
This year, there are 4,795 acres under crops, and 5,714 acres of grazing land.

Chairman—continued.

Because of scarcity of hired labour, and the agricultural depression of late years, farmers have taken to breeding cattle and have laid down their land for hay crops and grazing at their own cost. It will be seen from the foregoing statistics that there is only 2,257 acres of corn and root crops in comparison to 8,262 acres of hay and grazing land, while the land is capable of growing corn, especially barley and oats.
In my opinion—apart from the agricultural returns for this year—that because of the deficiency of crops of last year, and the very low prices of stock, farmers have over-sold off their cattle last winter; in consequence, there is more land under hay and corn this year in these two parishes. But the farmers will not be any better off, as the price of corn is now, and probably will continue, at a very low ebb.

The maximum rent of the district is 2*l.* per acre, and the minimum is 7*s.* 6*d.*

The principal landlords of the two parishes are Lord Bagot, Colonel Parr Lynes, William Kerr, Esq., Colonel C. S. Mainwaring, Mrs. Charles Lloyd and Alfred Lloyd, Esq. Of this number there are two resident landlords.

There are other, 26, landowners of from one to four farms, which are not occupiers; and 17, freeholders, which are occupiers, and two leaseholders.

In my opinion, freeholders are better off on the whole than yearly tenants, because they can and they do venture to cultivate their land, without fear of advance in their rents, and are having all the benefit of good times, to meet the bad times of depression, whether their land is mortgaged or not.

Chairman—continued.

As to Lord Bagot's Estate.

The general complaint is that the buildings are in very bad repair, and that rents are too high.

All the estate in the two parishes is let by yearly agreements; the 29th September being the fixed day for beginning and terminating the tenancy.

Some tenants in the parish of Llanfihangel complain sorely of losing their sheep-walk. It seems that the sheep-walks were awarded under the Allotment Act to Lord Bagot. They measured 120 acres, and were let for the sum of 10*l.* to the tenant of Cefnpost, without giving any reduction of rent nor any compensation to the parties that were losing their sheep-walks. Some of these farms used to keep 50 sheep, but now they cannot keep any at all.

There have been considerable advances in rents on this estate in the course of the last 30 years, owing to the advance in prices of agricultural produce, and betterment of the land by the tenants, this advance is from 25 per cent. to 40 per cent., but there has been an abatement of 10 per cent. now and then since 1890, although no permanent reduction.

I laid my hand on an old rent book of a farm belonging to the estate. The book shows that the rent from the year 1729 to 1758 was 5*l.* 10*s.* I cannot say for how long this rent continued after 1758, but the present rent is 18*l.*, nearly equal to 200 per cent. A new house has been built since 1758. The former tenant had inclosed and cultivated 3 acres of land out of the common, but under the award of the Allotment Act, he lost the land, and had to pay yearly rent for his own labour and on his own outlay. His son also had inclosed six acres of mountain land, and built a house and a cowshed—he also lost the whole, and was evicted from his own house, but was allowed to re-enter on payment of 1*l.* a year rent. Since 1878 he pays 2*l.*, and I am told that this small farm did not cost a penny to Lord Bagot, in repair nor anything else.

I am not aware that any of the tenants of the estate in these two parishes has a copy of the agreement that is signed by them.

The agreement contains hard clauses, such as the following:—

“The landlord reserves all game, rabbits, fish, and eggs of game,” &c.

“The tenant to use his best endeavour to preserve all game, fish, and eggs of game, upon the farm, and to warn off all persons not duly authorised from sporting or trespassing thereon, and not to allow dogs to run loose about the farm, or to go with the workmen employed in ploughing or other farm work. The tenant to permit his name to be made use of at the landlord’s expense, in any action or information which may be commenced or prosecuted against any person or persons, for sporting or trespassing on the farm.

“The tenant to keep and leave in good order and repair the house, buildings, gates, stiles, rails, ditches, bridges, drains, fences, and river fencing, belonging to the said premises, being allowed timber and other necessary materials to be supplied by the landlord, the tenant doing the carriage of the said materials at his own expense.

“The tenant not to plough or break-up any of the meadow or pasture land without the consent in writing of the landlord or his agent under the penalty of 50*s.* per acre as additional rent.

“The tenant not to sell any hay, straw, green crops, or manure, off the farm, but to consume and expend the same on the farm every year, in a proper and husbandman-like manner; any hay or straw left unconsumed at the expiration of the tenancy, to be paid for by the landlord, or the incoming tenant, at two-thirds of its value to go off.

“The manure belongs to the landlord, and is to be left by the tenant on quitting, without any compensation for it.

“In case the tenant shall underlet, or assign over, or part with the possession of the premises, or any part thereof, or suffer the same, or any of the crops or other effects thereon to be taken in execution, or if the tenant shall become insolvent, or shall commit any act of bankruptcy, or make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, or suffer his person or effects to be taken in execution, the tenancy shall thereon cease, and the landlord be at liberty immediately to enter and take possession as if the tenancy had been terminated by a notice to quit, the tenant nevertheless to pay all rent, rates, taxes, and tithe rentcharges, which may become due to the end of the then current half-year, the landlord to take any crops which may then be growing on the premises at a valuation.

“And it is hereby expressly agreed between the said landlord and tenant, that in case any of the hay, straw, or green crops shall be taken in distress for rent, or under any executive process of law or assignment, such hay, straw, or green crops shall be sold subject to the same being consumed on the said premises, notwithstanding any law, custom, or usage to the contrary thereof.”

Garthmeilio Estate.

This estate has been under the control of the solicitors of the late John Wynne, Esq. Whether they were mortgagees or not I cannot say. The present owner is Colonel Parr Lynes, of Tarporey, Cheshire. The buildings of the estate have been neglected seriously, for many years before the present owner came into possession of the estate, but the present owner expends a substantial sum every year in repairing and erecting new buildings and farmhouses.

Rents have been advanced on the estate to the extent of 45 per cent. in two instalments. Notwithstanding the reduction of 20 per cent. made about two years ago on the estate, the complaint still is that the rents are too high.

The first advance of 20 per cent. was made about 30 years ago, and in a short time after a seven years’ lease was forced on all the tenants, and the agent demanded 12*l.* from every tenant as legal charge for the document.

There was a clause in the lease binding the tenant to do all repairs necessary during the seven years at his own expense.

The object of forcing this lease upon the tenants was to increase the takings from the estate, and to save money by compelling the tenants to repair the buildings for seven years. Some of the tenants at that time expended 50*l.* to 60*l.* on the buildings.

The second advance of 25 per cent. was made about 20 years ago.

In 1890 and 1891 an abatement of 10 per cent. was given to all the tenants that paid their rent in full on the appointed day; others that could not pay in full did not receive any abatement at all.

There is no agreement signed by any of the tenants after the estate came to the possession of the present owner; but I am told that a new agreement has been taken round by the agent for the tenants to know what it contains. If the agreement, as it was shown to the tenants, will not be revised, it will contain oppressive clauses, such as that the ground game will be preserved, that all straw and manure shall be the property of the landlord on the termination of the tenancy, and that only six months’ notice to quit will be given.

In case of change of tenancy on this estate, as well as on all surrounding estates, the rent is reduced to the incoming tenant after refusing reduction to the outgoing tenant. One tenant some years ago had carted all materials to build a new house on his farm, but after the house was finished the rent was raised, and the tenant refused to agree to the advance and left the farm without any compensation. The farm, after being vacant for some time, was taken at a reduction of 33 per cent.

3 September 1894.]

MR. THOMAS THOMAS.

Chairman—continued.

The custom of the estate as to erecting new buildings is that the tenant must cart the whole of the materials, and if he fails to do so himself he is responsible to have the help of other tenants of the estate to do the work.

There is not much drainage done on the estate. The landlord provides the pipes, and all other expense falls upon the tenant, without any understanding as to compensation.

Maesmor Estate.

This estate belongs to Mr. William Kerr and the buildings on many farms are in a very dilapidated state. Some of the tenants have erected buildings at their own expense, the landlord providing timber in the rough.

The tenants have signed to exempt themselves from the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

There has been an advance of rents made on this estate of from 15 to 25 per cent., and an abatement of 10 per cent. in 1887, 1888, 1892, and 1893; but no abatement was made to those tenants that did not pay their tithe rentcharge to the vicar of Llangwm. No permanent reduction at all was made only to incoming tenants, for whom repairs are made as well. After refusing to reduce the rent, and to repair the buildings to the old tenants, who also had for many years toiled and laboured on the farms, and had unexhausted interest in their farms, it seems that Mr. William Kerr has taken to hate and to boycott anyone that attempts to be a medium or to help in any way his tenants to approach him with their humble cry for reduction or abatement of rent. In the year 1885 his tenants came to me asking would I write out to them a petition addressed to their landlord, conveying their grievance, and humbly begging for reduction of rent. At that time he was a good customer to me, but as soon as he knew that it was I that had drawn out the petition, he ordered not to buy any more goods off me, and since that time the order is still in force. He declared to me personally that the cause he did not buy any goods off me was that I had written the petition for his tenants. He has since done his utmost against me in every way he could. As only very few of his tenants are conversant with the English language, he sought to deprive them of the means of petitioning him on the point, by making me an example to all others that would attempt to do the same as I did, and to stamp out every idea of combination amongst his tenants. The general complaint of the tenants of this estate also is that rents are too high. Game are preserved closely on the estate, and considerable trespass has been done to crops without any compensation to tenants. The tenants are too much afraid of offending the landlord to take advantage of the Ground Game

Chairman—continued.

Act, and are not allowed to set traps, snares, nor to shoot on their farms, and a dog in the wood is as much of an enemy as a thief in a house.

As to drainage, the landlord provides pipes, all other expenses to be borne by the tenant.

The tenants have not a copy of the agreement, in which there are some very oppressive clauses. The third clause in the agreement is as follows: "The tenant always to maintain the buildings, gates, fences, and ditches in good repair, and the landlord reserves to himself and his agents, the right of entering to examine the same."

Clause 4.—"On the expiration of a tenancy, the tenant shall be entitled to a customary interest in the crop of winter corn (provided it does not exceed the average extent of sowing of the two previous years), and to the value of clover and grass seeds sown the previous spring, if they have not been grazed, the bill for the same to be produced, and his hay and straw of the current year only, but not to be removed from the premises, and if sold, the landlord or the incoming tenant shall have the first offer of purchasing the same, or any part of them, at consuming price, to be fixed by valuation. The farm-yard manure shall be the property of the landlord."

Clause 8.—"The tenant shall keep a dog, send a fat goose to the Hall, at Maesmor, and cart for a day in each year, if required to do so, and protect the game, fisheries, and trees from being injured or destroyed by unauthorised persons, and shall prosecute such trespassers, or allow the landlord to do so in his name."

Clause 10.—"Should the tenant suffer any injury to be done, or commit a breach of the foregoing conditions, he shall be subject to a penalty of five pounds as liquidated damage, and to double the cost of the injury done, and the same may be distrained for as rent or arrear."

It seems to me that Clause 4 binds the landlord to take the hay at consuming value, but he has refused to take crops by valuation from an out-tenant under warrant of distress from himself, which terminated the tenancy at a very unreasonable time of the year, while the tenant himself had taken hay from him by valuation on the same farm about two years previously.

As to the farm-yard manure to be the property of the landlord, it seems to me that it would be quite as just for the landlord to demand the hay and straw as well. I fail to see any principle whatever in such terms, because the cost of feeding the animals with the hay and straw adds to the value of manure to the tenant while the tenant is bound to consume the hay and straw on the premises. The tenant gets only the benefit of keeping his stock alive, then to sell them for, perhaps, less than what he could get for them in the autumn.

The obligations under Clause 8 are numerous, and very trying for the tenant, and by Clause 10, in case of breach of the conditions even in Clause 8, a penalty of five pounds would be imposed upon the tenant if he happens to forget to send a goose to the Hall, or to refuse to feed a dog, or to kill a pheasant or a partridge.

Mr. Alfred Lloyd's Estate.

The estate comprises eight farms. Considerable advances have been made on the rents of the estate some years ago, and they have since reduced the rents, and have also given abatements of 10 per cent.

The same complaint as to high rent is heard from the tenants, and last year a deputation of the farmers went to the agent asking for further reduction.

The agreement contains clauses which are not to the best advantage of the tenant. But I think that this agreement is better on the whole than those of Lord Bagot and Mr. Kerr. The ground game are not preserved according to the terms of the agreement.

Clause 9 is as follows: "All hay grass, hay, clover, straw, turnips, or other green crops and fodder, grown or produced upon the demised premises, shall be consumed thereon, and none carried off without the landlord's written consent. And all dung, manure, soil, and compost, arising or made upon, or brought to the demised premises, shall yearly, in a husband-like manner, be spread and used on the demised land. And all such dung, manure, soil, and compost, as in the last year of the tenancy, shall not have been so used, shall be left in the usual places for the landlord or incoming tenant, who is to pay for the same as herein-after provided for."

Clause 14.—"Inasmuch as, notwithstanding the inhibition herein contained, some hay grass, hay, clover, straw, turnips, or other green crops or fodder may be sold or carried off the demised premises either by or through the tenant, or under legal process, or a distress for rent or otherwise it is hereby (as additional security to the landlord) stipulated and agreed that the demised premises shall be considered to have been deteriorated thereby to the extent of one fourth part of the value of all such matters as aforesaid, as may be so sold or carried off, and that the full amount of such fourth part shall forthwith, after every or any such sale or carrying off, be paid to or retained by the landlord as rent, or otherwise may be recovered by action or distress in like manner as the rent hereby reserved is recoverable."

To the outgoing tenant one fourth of the value of crops that are sold out is very hard to suffer to pay.

This estate was considerably enlarged by the awards under the Inclosure Act. The landlord has charged six shillings per acre on the land that was closed and cultivated before the award was made, and has taken to his possession a farm that was inclosed and a house and outbuildings built on same, without giving any compensation to the one that had inclosed, cultivated, and built. In 1840 a farmer inclosed 14 acres of the common, and had it in his possession for over 30 years, but at the time of the award the agent of this estate demanded the inclosure of 14 acres from the farmer, and it was given up to him and he only received the value of the fence although the 14 acres were not allotted to the estate nor to any other estate, as it was recognised by the commission that it was the property of the farmer who had inclosed it.

Mrs. Charles Lloyd's Estate.

During the last 50 years there has been an advance of rents to the extent of 50 per cent. made on the estate. This was due, as in most cases, to the better cultivation, draining, fencing, and inclosing mountain land, all at their expense except pipes, wires, and poles. Twelve months ago two of the largest farms of this estate were given up because the rents were too high. One of the tenants managed to come to terms on having a reduction of 25 per cent. with other considerations, before the end of September, but the other failed to have the reduction he thought adequate. He had been living there for fifty years and had cultivated, drained, and fenced about 120 acres (one-half of his holding). He had also carted all the materials to erect all the buildings.

He is a well-known farmer and is recognised to be one of the best farmers of the neighbourhood, but for the last ten years he had lost on an average 50% every year. He showed his accounts, which he kept of his takings and expenditure, to the agent, and tried his best to get the old home at a reasonable rent, but all in vain until the day when his stock was sold by auction. There was a very indignant and sympathetic feeling in his favour demonstrated by all who attended the sale, and when the agent came to the sale, six or seven farmers took his part with the agent and acted as arbitrators, they succeeded to take the farm for the old tenant, at a reduction of 50 per cent. off what it was a few years ago; but the arbitrators were obliged to be security for the rent; though every tradesman that was doing business with the tenant considered his credit always to be safe. I feel that the treatment he had was very hard indeed, after he had given all the best of his life to cultivate the land and to do so much to improve the farm, and lost so much money in waiting for a reduction, and if it had not happened that the neighbours mentioned had acted as arbitrators, the old tenant would be obliged to leave his old home which he loved so much, and perhaps the consequences would be that he would die sooner than his time.

The following terms are included in the agreement of this estate: "Provided always that on non-payment of any part of the rent, hereby reserved for twenty-one days after the same shall accrue due (whether the same shall have been legally or formally demanded or not), or on the breach by the tenant of any of the conditions and provisions herein contained, or if the tenant shall become bankrupt or compound or make an arrangement with creditors, then and in any such case the landlord may re-enter and determine the tenancy without given any notice to quit."

Chairman—continued.Galltfaenan Estate.

This estate belongs to Colonel Mainwaring. Some of the farm buildings and houses are in very bad repair. There are some complaints of high rents. There has been an abatement given for some years to the tenants, but no permanent reduction, which has been promised. Colonel Mainwaring is on good terms with most of his tenants as he is able to converse in the vernacular, and is, as a rule, able to please the majority of them to a certain extent by good promises and abatements of 10 per cent. and 15 per cent. in the rents.

General Condition of Tenant Farmers.

The tenant farmer, under all the conditions that are quoted from the different agreements, cannot in any way say that he lives on the land of freedom in his farm, but lives by the rivers of Babylon all his life long, and finds no pleasant song to be sung there; but expecting a small gleam of light and freedom to dawn upon him from beyond the cloudy skies, where he imagines that he sees all his grievances and troubles falling upon him in torrents and is ready to leave the land and try some other profession. But what can he do? He is digging and starving at the same time, but is yet too proud and too good to beg.

This state is a critical one, from my personal experience I am able to testify that the farmers, for some years, are sinking fast to hopeless debts. The terms that landlords give to their tenants induces them to borrow money to pay the rent, whatever else may not be paid for, by giving 10 per cent. or 15 per cent. abatement to those that pay the rent in full, come what may of those that fail to pay nor to borrow. They labour and toil from morning till night. They live as cheap as ever they can, all the family that are able to work, including the wives, daughters, and domestic servants, are taking part in out-door labour, especially at harvest time; but at the end of the year, after all the anxiety, worry, and hard labour they find themselves worse off than at the beginning of the year. This is their case now for some years.

There are many striking instances of farmers' sons and daughters helping their parents on the farm, without having any wages whatever, only their food and clothing and a small sum for pocket-money. Other farmers' sons and daughters that are in service send money home to their parents to help them to pay the rent, and when the sons and daughters get married and start on to the battle of life, in cases where they succeed to get a small farm they are obliged to borrow money, and the father is obliged to be the security.

The landlords and agents are against any form of associations and combinations amongst the farmers where co-operation could be organised to the benefit of the farmers at large, having their position as tenants in view. This is distinctly observed in their attitude against petitions from their tenants, and in their speeches on the rent days. All this is well understood by the tenant, who is very keen in this respect, as circumstances have taught him to be so. The effect of it is to cause him to be too shy and too much disheartened to fight his own battle for his rights. He is so much afraid of offending the landlord and agent that he has no courage whatever to stand alone, nor to let, or help others to work on his behalf, in any important movement, such as giving evidence before the present Royal Commission on Land. I have been told much evidence of importance; but the tenants would not appear themselves, nor allow me to state their special grievances, the reason they give me for refusing is, that there are many ways and means for the landlords and agents to give effect to their dissatisfaction if any of them will appear.

Besides that, there are the inhuman deeds of the past of many landlords and agents which overawe the present tenants, that they cannot trust the class, and it is, in my opinion, evident that the Welsh nation cannot forget cases of revenge and oppression. The following incident occurred in the parish of Llangwm about 60 to 70 years ago (and it is now well remembered by some and well known as a fact to the most); there lived, at the foot of the mountain, in the top of the parish, a large family in a farm. They had no bread in the house, and no wheat, barley, or oats to make any bread, and had failed to purchase any in the whole parish, but they heard that there was some barley for sale at Druid Mill, a distance of eight miles. The farmer started on horseback to procure some, but the miller refused to sell only on the condition that he should grind the barley. The farmer had nothing to do but to agree to the terms, and he paid 2*l.* 2*s.* 0*d.* for 140*lbs.*; he took the barley meal home as soon as he could to make some bread for himself and his family. The next day he was called to go and see the agent, who lived at Glynahan, there he was questioned how he dared to suffer the barley to be ground at Druid Mill, instead of taking it to Llangwm Mill, on the estate. The tenant explained the terms of purchase, but to no good effect. He was compelled there and then to pay 2*l.* penalty, and had also an advance that day in his rent of 9*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.* This advance he was obliged to pay for twelve years. So, the barley to make bread for himself and family to keep them from starvation cost him 118*l.* 2*s.* 0*d.* Incidents of this kind cannot be very soon forgotten.

Because of difference in religion, politics, and language between landlord and tenant, strange and distant feelings as well as disadvantage to both parties must prevail. Party politics of the age, and the controversial question of the Church rise to such heat, that the idea of opposition in politics and religion is unavoidable, and the rank and file of humanity cannot very easily rise beyond a treatment of an opponent only as such. It is a well-known fact all over Wales that the Tory Churchmen tenants get the favours where the landlord is of the same creed.

3 September 1894.]

MR. THOMAS THOMAS.

Chairman—continued.

It is also understood by many Nonconformist domestic servants of Church people, that they are allowed to attend only the Church services. Whether they are engaged on those terms I cannot say, but it is a fact, to my notice, that they are not attending the chapel in which they are members when the landlord is at home.

The tithe question also is a source of unhappy feelings between landlords which are Churchmen and tenants who are Nonconformists. At the time of the tithe agitation in the parish of Llangwm landlords and agents exercised their influence with tenants to induce them to pay the tithe against their convictions, and some tenants under this influence paid the tithe to the agent as collector and so deprived themselves of their right to protest, in a legal way, against the payment of tithes to the Church. I have pointed out already that Mr. Kerr refused to give 10 per cent. abatement in the rent to tenants that had not paid the tithe. The clergy also added fuel to the flames in this question, in several ways.

When rents are reduced, the change as a rule is not based on the appraisalment, but the landlords try to make the best bargain they can for themselves, as they find themselves in a position where they should do something to dispel the uproar of the tenants for reduction of rents.

If the few reductions that are made were based on the value of the farms, according to value of stock and farm produce on an average for the last few years, the reduction, for one thing, would be general, and also would be nearer 40 per cent. than 10 per cent. or 20 per cent on an average.

If it is maintained that the present rents in general are fair rents, then it must be said that rents were too low 15 years ago, when prices of stock were very near the double of the present prices; but I do not think that any one will venture to say that rents were too low after the general advance at that time.

There are as many as 30 or more farms that have been consolidated during the last 50 years: this was done, in my opinion, to save building expenses in the majority of cases. The consequences are that the population decreases, labour is scarce, and the land falls out of cultivation.

There are 40 to 50 cottages fallen down into ruins in the same period, and only four new cottages built.

Cottages for labourers are very scarce in the agricultural districts, this causes the flow of the population to the towns and villages where they can get a dwelling.

Small holdings are better cultivated than large ones, and more labour is expended on the small farm in comparison to the large farm.

There are no means to have agricultural teaching in these two parishes, only extension lectures arranged by the Bangor University and the travelling daily school, which was well attended and a great success.

The landlord takes advantage of the improvements made by tenants. For instance, I was a leaseholder of a corn mill under Mr. R. J. Lloyd Price, of Rhiwlas, Bala. At the termination of the lease, the value of my invested interest in improvements was about 60*l*. I wrote to the estate office asking for extension of lease, or to be a yearly tenant, or if they preferred that I would buy all the premises, and I stated the amount of my invested improvements, but had no reply at all; forthwith I called at the office, and was told by the agent that he had promised the mill to the miller for 30*l*. (the rent under the lease was 25*l*.), and that he would not let the mill to me unless I would give more rent than what was offered. I thought the place was not worth more rent, and so refused to offer more, although it was very annoying to see the value of my improvements going by instalments of 5*l*. every year to Mr. Price's purse, whilst I felt they belonged to me.

Chairman—continued.

Mr. Grove:

60,789. You say, as I understand, that the children help their parents to pay the rent. You think that is so?—Yes.

60,790. You think the difference in religion and politics does cause some unpleasantness occasionally, even now, do you?—I do not quite understand you.

60,791. The difference between the agent or the landlord in religion and in politics, you consider does make some unpleasantness occasionally, do you not?—I do.

Professor Rhys:

60,792. Are there many tenants in arrears, do you think, on these estates?—Yes, there are.

60,793. And is that because of the rents being too high?—It is my opinion that it is so.

60,794. Do you know the farmers in those parishes?—I know some of them have been in arrears for years.

60,795. Do you think it is from the rents being too high?—It is so in my opinion—the rents being too high, the agricultural depression and low prices of produce.

60,796. Do you think the tenants are afraid to come forward to give evidence?—They are afraid.

60,797. Have you any evidence of that?—I have said so, and I have private letters that I could hand in for you to see to prove it.

Sir John Llewellyn:

60,798. You said the tenants were too shy and too despondent to fight their own battles?—Yes.

60,799. Did they depute you to come here to fight the battle for them?—They asked me would I come here to state their case. They have refused to come themselves.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. THOMAS THOMAS.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

60,800. I think you said because there were many ways in which a landlord could hurt them?—Yes, that is the reason.

60,801. What are the ways in which a landlord could hurt them?—There are many ways for them to do it without being direct ways—without breaking the law in any way.

60,802. What are those ways?—Suppose the tenant wants a gate, or some repairs done to the buildings; there are so many ways in which a landlord would be able to take his revenge upon his tenants.

60,803. Do you think a landlord would abstain from doing permanent repairs upon his own estate because a tenant came here to give evidence?—It is my opinion that many would—not all.

60,804. Have you known of any capricious evictions?—Yes, I know of some.

60,805. Of people being turned out of their holdings?—Yes, I have known of it.

60,806. You have known of such cases?—Yes.

60,807. Would you give any instances?—There is Hugh Roberts, who was at Cesailgwm, and who was evicted from there. He will be here giving evidence to-morrow.

60,808. He will tell us about his own eviction; therefore I will not go any further into that case. Will you give us any other instances of what I call capricious evictions for political or other reasons—I do not mean for the non-payment of rent, of course?—I have no case now that I could venture to name to you. There is a case in which the landlord distrained for some rent, as I have mentioned in my statement, and that was at a very unreasonable time of the year to fall upon the tenant. That was done at Pentrellawen.

60,809. Do you think the cottage accommodation in the neighbourhood is at fault. It is not sufficient, I understand you to say?—Not sufficient at all.

60,810. It ought to be increased?—It ought to be increased by all means.

60,811. With whose money. Who ought to build these cottages?—I think the landlord ought to build them on the estate.

60,812. Whether he likes it or not?—I am not going to compel him to do so, but for the convenience of his tenants I should think he ought to do that.

60,813. We have had other instances in which landlords do, for the convenience of their own estates, build cottages?—Yes, but there are no cottages whatever upon these estates for that purpose—for the labourers.

60,814. Had there been cottages?—There had been.

60,815. And had they been allowed to fall down?—They had been allowed to fall down. There are only very few of them in comparison with what there were. I pointed out that, I think, there were 40 fell down in the course of the last 50 years.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

60,816. And were any built in the place of them?—Only four.

60,817. That was, I suppose, because the landlord was of opinion that they were not wanted?—I suppose he was of that opinion, or else it was to save the expense of repairing them—I do not know which.

60,818. Would you go so far as to advocate cottages being erected with public money?—I think I would under these present circumstances for the benefit of agriculture in general, because population flows to villages and towns, and then it is very difficult for the farmer to get hired labour. Wages, especially at the harvest time, run very high.

60,819. How would the taxpayer be secured?—It would be to the benefit, I should say, of agriculture, for the workman to have a cottage for the purpose of agriculture, and then, I think, the farmer would have no occasion to complain much, as it would be, to a certain extent, to his own benefit.

60,820. If for the benefit of the public these cottages were built with public money a return would have to come from somewhere?—Of course, but the farmer himself pays a portion of the public money, such as rates and taxes. Then I do not think the farmer would complain, as he would have the benefit himself from it.

60,821. Have you the Small Holdings Act in operation?—No, there is no case at all.

60,822. Has that been discussed by your County Council?—It has been, and pamphlets have been printed and circulated all over the county. So far as I am aware, there has been no claim whatever made for an allotment—for a holding.

Chairman

60,823. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Vincent: "If there is a preference for Churchmen as tenants, how is it there are so few of them?"—Because they are not to be had. The majority of farmers in Wales are Nonconformists, especially in our portion of the county, whatever.

60,824. I think that is a very good answer. "How ancient is your mill grievance; was it 70 years ago?"—It was eight years before the termination of the lease that I had expended about 100*l.* or more on the place, and this was a portion of the 100*l.*

60,825. How many years ago was that?—That is about six years ago, I think.

60,826. "Can you mention any case of the kind now?"—That is very recently—my own case.

60,827-8. That is so, no doubt. Mr. A. O. Evans has handed in two questions. Mr. Evans is the son of Lord Bagot's agent, I understand. His first question is: "Has Mr. Thomas ever heard of the politics or religion of any applicant for a farm on Lord Bagot's estate being inquired into?"—No, never.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. THOMAS THOMAS.

Chairman—continued.

60,829. "Mr. Thomas has spoken of increases of rents on Lord Bagot's estate. Is he aware that in each instance where there has been an increase additional land was given to the tenant?" Do you know that?—I pointed out one case. It was this allotment of 120 acres. The rent of that farm was advanced 10*l.*, and at another farm 3*l.* I am not aware that in all cases land has been added to the farm—that that is the cause of the rent being raised.

60,830. You are not aware of that. Mr. Llewellyn Jones asks: "Do you know of any cases where prospective tenants have been compelled to pay estate agents a small sum for being allowed to become tenants?"—Yes, I know it.

60,831. "On what estate did this occur?"—Garth Meilio estate.

60,832. Whose is that?—Colonel Parr Lynes' property; but this was before he came into possession.

Sir John Llewellyn.

60,833. How long ago was that?—Say, in the course of the last 20 years. Now and then, as farms became vacant, the new tenant would have to give a certain sum to the agent.

60,834. Is that agent alive now?—He is alive.

Chairman.

60,835. Mr. Llewellyn Jones's questions continued: "On what estate did this occur?"—Garth Meilio estate.

60,836. What was the name of the agent?—Mr. H. O. Jones.

60,837. "Could you mention any of the names of the tenants who paid such a sum?"—I can give the name of an old tenant that has paid them, but other tenants that have paid them and since received the money back again refused to give their names. I can give the name of one.

60,838. What is his name?—David Jones, Ty Du, Cerrig-y-Drudion.

60,839. "Have any of the tenants received back the amount they have paid in the course of the past few months?"—They have, since this Commission has been appointed and began to sit to inquire into the land question.

60,840. Has this happened since the first visit of the Welsh Land Commission to North Wales?—It has.

60,841. "Is the agent's fee popularly known as 'cil-dwrn'?"—Yes, they call it so.

60,842. What is the name of this agent?—I have given it—Mr. H. O. Jones.

60,843. And what is his address?—Tyn y Celyn, Cynwyd, near Corwen.

60,844. The following questions are put by Mr. Vincent: "What is the name of the farm rented at 5*l.* 10*s.* over a century ago, now rented at 18*l.* a year?"—Blodnant.

60,845. "To what farms do you refer as having bad buildings?"—On what estate, my Lord?

Chairman—continued.

60,846. It refers to Lord Bagot estate?—They are in Llanfihangel. There is Tyn y Ffordd, for one.

60,847. Is there any other you wish to mention?—Blodnant has been very bad. I think some portion of the buildings there have been bettered a bit. There are two farmhouses that have been very lately re-built, just on the side of the road, in the parish of Llangwm, and Llangwm I should say, now, is in a better condition; it was in a very bad condition three years ago. The same may be said, now, of Llanfihangel again, and that the buildings are in a bad state.

60,848. There is one question of Mr. Vincent's that I had better put to you at once: "Do you mean to say that the fine for not going to the lord's mill was imposed six years ago?"—60 years ago.

Chairman.

That is with regard to the question that Mr. Vincent asked before.

Mr. Vincent.—That is what I referred to in the first question.

Chairman.

60,849. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "Have you ever heard of the penal clauses of Lord Bagot's agreement being enforced?"—No, I have not heard of them being enforced—only with regard to the dogs. Farmers have been complaining very much that the keepers—that is some years ago (they are not so now)—would not allow them to take dogs out on the mountain. I am talking about the parish of Llanfihangel now; I cannot say about the other portion of the estate.

60,850. "Were you a sporting tenant yourself last year?"—I was.

60,851. "You took 1,000 to 1,500 acres for 40*l.*, did you not?"—I did.

60,852. "And did you keep a keeper?"—I did, but I ought to explain; I had this keeper to kill game for myself—not to look after the mountain so much, but to kill game for me. I took the shooting to re-let again, and have a bit of sport myself, and to go out for the sake of my health—that is the cause of my taking the place.

60,853. Then you were a sporting tenant, and you kept a keeper?—Yes.

60,854. The following questions are by Mr. Owen Wynne: "All the information which you have given to the Commission is hearsay evidence, gathered by going round among the farmers, I take it, and not from your own knowledge?"—It is not all by hearsay. Some is hearsay, and I have letters here to prove the matters—I have private letters here to prove what I say.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. THOMAS THOMAS.

Chairman—continued.

60,855. You have letters there to prove what you have stated?—Yes. The other portion is, of course, from my personal knowledge, such as the tenant I mentioned on Mr. Charles Lloyd's estate. Of course I am not here authorised by the tenant himself to put the statement in, but this is all known to me personally. He is an uncle of mine.

60,856. Mr. Owen Wynne also asks: "Are you a shopkeeper?"—I am.

60,857. "Do you know anything about agriculture yourself?"—Not practically, I do not; but I take much interest in agriculture, and take much notice of what this farmer or the other is doing, and of course I am in a position as shopkeeper to know all the circumstances of the farmer, and I can testify, as I have said, that he is sinking hopelessly into debt year after year at present. The farmer, of course, will tell me things that he will never tell his landlord or anyone else connected with him.

60,858. "Do you hold any land?"—I do not.

60,859. "You must have some oldish people in the neighbourhood if they can distinctly remember things which happened 70 years ago?"—We have—very noted. They remember everything in the parish from, I should say, when they were about ten years of age—not by remembering, so much, but by gathering from their forefathers. I am sure Professor Rhys would enjoy it very much. We have two or three of them in the parish of Llangwm. They are historians.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. E. T. JONES called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

60,865. Does this statement contain your evidence?—Yes.

60,866. Have you had it read and translated to you?—Yes, in the next room.

60,867. Are you satisfied that it is correct?—Yes.

60,868. Are you willing that it should be read?—Yes.

The statement of the witness was then read as follows:—

Evidence of Mr. E. T. Jones, Bronderwen, Derwen.

I am a freeholder living at Derwen. I formerly owned a small farm called Fron Newydd, in the parish of Llansantffraid, also occupying some land on the Rhagatt estate. When the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, came into operation, I was requested by the agent to assent to the exclusion of the Act. I declined to do so, but ultimately agreed. In 1881 I came to Pantygynne farm, Derwen, a farm then belonging to a Mr. Jones, Oaklands, Llanfair Dyffryn Clwyd; and afterwards to Mr. John Jones, Ynysfa, Penrhyndeudraeth. The farm is about 112 acres. The rent was 130*l*. About 100 are cultivated

Sir John Llewelyn.

60,860. Your point, I think, was this, that all these matters rankled and were remembered?—Yes, quite so.

Chairman.

60,861. Mr. Owen Wynne's questions continued: "Do many Nonconformists in your district employ Church-going servants?"—Yes, there are some, and they are allowed to go to Church.

60,862. "Did you inform these gentlemen that you were going to give this evidence, and would it not have been right to have done so?"—That question refers to the evidence you have given with regard to landlords. I did not give them notice. I did not think at all about that matter, or else if I felt that it was right of me to do it I would have had great pleasure in doing so, but it did not come to my mind at all.

60,863. Mr. A. O. Evans asks: "Is Mr. Thomas aware that a sheep-farm of 70 acres was added to Blodnant when the rent was increased?"—Are you aware of that?—The tenant did not tell me so, whatever it might be the case, but I do not know. He said to me the cause of the advance was that he had cultivated the land, and that the house was built.

Mr. Richard Jones.

60,864. One question with regard to a question of Mr. Vincent's: Has Colonel Lynes an agent whose Christian name is John?—No, he has not. His name is H. O. Jones.

Chairman—continued.

land, the rest being waste land. After I had been tenant for three years, I asked for a reduction in the rent. This was refused, but abatements varying from 1*s*. to 3*s*. in the pound were allowed. For four years I repeatedly tried to get a reduction. I told my landlord that I wanted 30*l*. reduction. About six years ago I bought my present holding, leaving Pantygynne a year afterwards. The farm was let to my successor for 110*l*., but I understand that 5*l*. of this represents the rent for game. My present holding is 33 or 34 acres, with good house and fair outbuildings. I bought the place by private treaty, paying 1,600*l*. for it. I paid the whole of the purchase money, and my holding is not encumbered in any way. Since I entered I have re-roofed most of the outbuildings.

Consolidation of farms.—In this district many holdings have been consolidated of late years. If necessary, I will give the names of the farms consolidated. The reason, no doubt, is to save the landlord the expense of building and keeping them in repair. It is the testimony of all farmers in the district that this consolidation decreases the amount of produce yielded. As a general rule, one may say that

3 September 1894.]

Mr. E. T. JONES.

small holdings produce more than the large holdings. This consolidation also brings about the reduction of labourers in the district, as in most cases we find small holdings are added to large holdings. Many labourers have left the district on this account. The population is decreasing yearly.

Buildings.—On many farms the buildings are inadequate and unsuitable for the keeping of stock. The farmer is unable to deal with his stock as he otherwise would owing to the unsuitability of the buildings. Many of these buildings are too small, and others are left to fall out of repair, so that in some cases it is dangerous to allow the animals to remain in them. I can mention farms in this district on which inadequate buildings exist.

Freeholders.—There are not many freehold occupiers in the district. The few that are here are fairly successful, and as comfortably off as the tenant-farmers. There are several small holdings owned by their occupiers.

If a Land Purchase Bill was passed, I think many farmers would be very ready to buy their holdings if they were sold at a reasonable figure and a low rate of interest charged for the money lent.

60,869. Do you know the condition of farms well in the neighbourhood?—Yes, I have been in this neighbourhood for the last 12 years.

60,870. What is the present condition of farms?—Do you mean the cultivation of land?

60,871. Yes, is it prosperous or not?—It has not been successful for the last 10 years.

60,872. Do you consider that the rents are too high, or are the farms fairly rented in the neighbourhood?—They are too high to meet the present depression.

Mr. Richard Jones.

60,873. When did you buy this farm. What was the date?—Five years ago.

60,874. What did you pay for it?—1,600*l*.

60,875. How many acres is it?—From 33 to 34 acres.

60,876. Did you occupy this place as a tenant previously?—No.

60,877. Do you know what was the rent of this place?—The rent was higher before I went there, but some of the land that then belonged to it had been sold before I got it.

60,878. What prompted you to buy this farm?—Because I could not pay for the other farm. I saw myself going backwards every year.

60,879. Did you occupy a big farm previously?—112 acres.

60,880. Had you sufficient money to pay for this place?—I had another farm which I sold to buy this.

60,881. You bought this because it was a more desirable place than the place you owned previously?—That was in a highland, and very far from chapel.

60,882. Do you think farms that are situated somewhere near a chapel let better than places that are further away from a chapel?—There is more call, as a rule, for such farms.

60,883. Do you think that that would weigh with the majority of Welsh tenant-farmers?—It depends a great deal on the size of the family. I had a very large family, and my children were young.

Professor Rhys.

60,884. Is there any difficulty about the tithes in your district now?—There are plenty of complaints about it all the time.

60,885. But they are paid, are they not?—Some pay and some do not.

60,886. Have you a mill as well as a farm?—No.

60,887. Is there a mill opposite your house?—Yes.

60,888. What about it?—Well, the buildings are in a very bad condition.

Sir John Llewelyn.

60,889. You are an occupier of land as well as a freeholder?—Yes.

60,890. How much land?—I only occupy my own farm.

60,891. Have you got any cottage property on your land?—I have one little cottage where a cow is milked and kept.

60,892. Was that a cottage that people used to inhabit?—Yes, always.

60,893. And now a cow inhabits it?—The people who are in the cottage keep the cow.

60,894. Then there are people living in the cottage now?—Yes.

Mr. Richard Jones.

60,895. Is this mill worked that Professor Rhys asked a question about?—Yes.

60,896. Who owns it?—Am I to say?

Professor Rhys.

60,897. Yes, by all means. Tell us all about it?—Jesus College, Oxford.

Chairman.

60,898. There are some questions by Mr Owen Wynne. "Would the farmers, who have had the small farms added to their holdings be willing to give them up, so that they might be made small farms again?"—It is difficult for me to state what the feelings of the farmers are on that question.

60,899. "You own your own farm?"—Yes.

60,900. "Did you refuse to pay the tithes and why?"—Yes, because I thought it was an unjust law.

60,901. "Do you know the agent of the Jesus College estate?"—I believe it is Mr. Clough, of Denbigh.

60,902. This is a question by Mr. Llewellyn Jones. "Could you mention any farms in your district on which the buildings are in a poor condition?"—Yes, I could.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. E. T. JONES.

Mr. Richard Jones.

60,903. What are they?—Garw-Fynydd, Fawnogrydd, and Tyn-y-Graig. They are three farms that have been consolidated, and the three sets of buildings are in very bad repair.

60,904. On whose estate?—Mr. Savin's.

60,905. Is he a resident landowner?—He is not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. CORBET YALE called and examined.

Chairman.

60,908. You are owner of the Plas-yn-Yale estate, Denbighshire?—Yes.

60,909. What parishes are you prepared to give evidence for?—For Bryn Eglwys and part of the parish of Llantysilio, in the district of Yale or Iâl.

60,910. What is the acreage of your estate?—1,021 acres.

60,911. Where is it situated?—In the parish of Bryn Eglwys, in Yale.

60,912. Who is the lady of the manor?—Her Majesty the Queen.

60,913. Is there a steward?—Yes, there is a steward; Sir Robert Cunliffe, I believe.

60,914. I believe you are a pure-bred Welshman?—I am.

60,915. You know your countrymen of all classes?—Yes, I do all my business with my tenants and labourers in the Welsh language.

60,916. Do you think that politics, religion, or language make any difference in the relations between landlord and tenant?—Not the least; and I know the neighbouring county well and my fellow countrymen, and I have opportunities of judging and knowing. Besides, some of my neighbours have servants who go to chapel, and so have I sometimes.

60,917. You are a practical farmer for 27 years now?—I am.

60,918. You are your own agent?—Yes.

60,919. And can speak to your tenants in Welsh?—Yes.

60,920. What do you say about changes of tenancy?—They are not more frequent than in former years. I have answered that question at length here, but I need not go into it. Changes are not more frequent.

60,921. Any cases of hardship?—I have had no complaints at all. I am not aware of any.

60,922. Compensation is given in all cases for cutting timber and in resuming occupation and so forth?—Yes.

60,923. Will you give us your agreement?—This is it. [Producing same.] I should like to mention that is the agreement I found lithographed when I came into the property, 27 years ago, and a great deal of it is not enforced at all—the penalising clauses and some other provisions.

60,924. You gave your tenants power to destroy rabbits long before the Ground Game Act came into operation?—More than 20 years ago.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

60,906. Does he employ an agent?—I believe Mr. Humphreys, of Ruthin, is his agent.

60,907. Is the landlord acquainted with the state of the buildings?—Yes, there have been plenty of complaints.

60,925. Have you any prohibition against ploughing up gorse land?—I have scratched that out of all agreements. It is in the original agreement, but I have long abandoned it. It has not been enforced for 27 years.

60,926. Do your tenants spend much in repairs themselves?—Nothing. The agreement requires them to do small repairs, if a slate becomes loose or anything like that; but they do not even do that, or very rarely.

60,927. You have never had any complaints from your tenants?—No.

60,928. Do you give them a copy of the agreement?—Yes, but I find they are very slow now in taking a copy. I think I may have one or two who have got copies, but I always offer them copies and say they ought to have them, and they always have them in fact, to read them—to show their friends before they come to see me, and if they do not understand it, they bring a Welshman, one of my countrymen, to explain everything.

60,929. Have they all signed it?—Yes, they have all signed it.

60,930. Rent is usually fixed at a gross sum I suppose?—Yes.

60,931. The rent of the small tenants is higher perhaps than the rent of the larger farmers?—Yes, a little.

60,932. What is the average rent of your district?—14s. an acre. It varies from 9s. to 14s. on my farms.

60,933. Meadow land is let at what?—Meadows are let for about 25s. an acre. I have some meadows round my house let at 25s. an acre.

60,934. Your farm rents vary from 9s. to 19s. an acre?—Yes.

60,935. About services. Do they give you a fat goose at Michaelmas?—Yes, they have been in the habit of doing that, and they never complained at all, and two fat pullets at Shrove-time. That is the ancient custom of the property.

60,936. Do they carry a load of coal for you as well?—Yes, they do; but where I buy a farm I do not put these things in, I merely put these things in because I found them in 27 years ago.

60,937. The goose goes with the old farms at any rate?—Yes, but I am not very particular about the goose. I have not had any this year, I mean.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. W. CORBET YALE.

Chairman—continued.

60,938. You have not had a goose?—I have not asked for one, I think.

60,939. Do you ever play off one applicant against another?—Never; in fact, they are quite the other way. They are very sensitive indeed. They ask at once: "Has anybody else been after the farm?" Sometimes I am obliged to say, "Well, somebody else has been talking about it." Then they go away at once. If I do not let to that other person, then they have an opportunity of coming again. They never offer me more. They offer me less—as much as they can less—than the rent that I have been having and asking; but they have never offered to give more than I asked—never.

60,940. Of course, you inquire about character and so forth?—Yes. It is very difficult to get at. In fact, as to pecuniary means, it is impossible.

60,941. Have your rents been raised or lowered on your estate?—They are exactly the same as they were in 1822. I have got the valuation of every field showing all the crops, when there were about a dozen acres of wheat on that property—that is all; so that they cannot have suffered from the repeal of the Corn Laws at all, because they did not grow wheat except in very small quantities.

60,942. Have you made permanent or temporary reductions or abatements?—Yes, there is a table handed in. I have made some permanent and some temporary reductions.

60,943. Perhaps you will be good enough to hand in the table?—Yes. I should say I offered the temporary abatements two or three years ago for the first time, without their asking me, which pleased them very much.

60,944. You have given notice of the abatements, of course, to the tenants?—Yes, I do that.

60,945. When does the rent become due, and when is it payable?—I receive them three or four months after they become due—after they enter the tenancy.

60,946. Is the preferential claim for rent an advantage do you think?—A very great advantage. I think it is well that it was reduced. It was formerly six years, I believe. It was well that it should be reduced, but I think that 18 months or two years would have been better than one. I think it is quite fair to other creditors as well, for the landlord loans or lets his land and parts with the possession of it, and it is a very difficult thing to get it back again, and he trusts to the tenant and it protects him as well, I think.

60,947. Now, about poor rates and county rates. Have they gone up or down?—About two years ago, or about that time, they were, I think, about 3s. in the £—all the rates, the highway, poor rates, and everything—and now they are about 2s. 2d. I think for the last two or three years they have been 2s. 2d., and they were three shillings formerly. We have no school boards, I am happy to say, and that accounts for the rates being so low.

Chairman—continued.

60,948. Now, the size of the farms. How large are the farms?—They vary from 45 acres upwards. My largest is 140 acres. I have put down here from 45 to 80 acres. I have several farms about 80 acres.

60,949. You have no consolidation?—No, none.

60,950. Labourers are scarce I suppose?—I do not think that we can complain, although we are so near the works—about eight miles away—that we are rather short, but not very inconveniently so. The farmers, when times are bad, are very glad to have less to pay, I think.

60,951. What are they paid a week?—I pay 15s. and they find themselves.

60,952. Anything more in the harvest?—Yes, I give 1l. in the hay harvest, and 1l. in the corn harvest as a bonus, whatever length of time the harvest may take, I give 4s. or 5s. extra a week during the harvest. I farm myself, I should say.

60,953. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—No, not any.

60,954. There is no considerable change in the nature of the agriculture pursued I suppose in this district: they go on just as they did?—Yes, very much the same. I have a very interesting valuation which shows for every field what the crop was in 1822. It is very much the same except that we have roots now and they had not then.

60,955-6. About improvements. Do you do all the improvements?—Yes, I do all the improvements, and I have drained at the earnest solicitation of my tenants. When they found that I drained so much myself and improved the land so much they asked me to do more draining and offered to pay interest. I asked, after two or three years, for the interest, and they said they really could not pay, and I do not get a farthing now for my drains, not a farthing, and I have not increased the rent either.

60,957. Then what do you charge for gates?—I charge them 1s. 6d., the cost of making them. They are really by the agreement bound to do those things and make gates if I give them the material, but sometimes I have a carpenter to make for me, and I get them done much cheaper in that way. They cost me 1s. 6d. to make, and I charge that to them.

60,958. What do you think a gate will cost you to make?—I can make them for about I think 6s. 6d., not more than 7s., at any rate, but I have often had to pay 10s., and I gave a tenant not long ago 12s. for gates, but they were oak.

60,959. Do the tenants do the haulage?—When I am repairing or enlarging a house to please a tenant, he does the haulage, or if it is very heavy work—new building—what I used to do was to have a good team and do my share to most of it too.

60,960. What do you think of the Agricultural Holdings Act. Is that any use?—I do not think it is with us, but they do know something about it, because I have heard them asking about it, and they know that if they put up a building and give me notice, they will be recompensed. They do know of it, and I think it might be improved very much for the advantage of the landlord and tenant.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. W. CORBET YALE.

Chairman—continued.

60,961. What is the custom of the country in your district as to growing crops?—If wheat is sown, the outgoing tenant gets half the crop, and also is paid for his seeds at a valuation if he has put seeds down.

60,962. You have no tenant-right?—No, there is no tenant-right.

60,963. Will you tell us about game preservation?—I do not preserve. I have only one old keeper, who is as old as myself or a little older, for all my property, and there is no damage done. I have no complaints except just about my covers, and there I put wire netting for my tenant, and make him pleased with that. We only kill about 60 or 70 pheasants on the whole property in the year.

60,964. Is the law of trespass satisfactory?—No. I have heard complaints at Ruthin, or near Ruthin, of a field of grass or clover being very much destroyed and damaged by people going to pick mushrooms. The trespassers were taken before the magistrates, and the magistrates said they could do nothing. It was not worth while to go to the county court. I think there ought to be something else, and I think, further, that the law of boundary fences ought to be looked into. It is a source of great annoyance. The best friend you can have is a good fence; and it is very hard, if A has a fence in good order and B does not do his part of the fence, then A's cattle trespass across into B's land, and B turns them out on the turnpike road, and all that sort of thing.

60,965. Is any attention being paid to agricultural education?—In towns like Corwen, Ruthin, and so on, they give lectures, I believe, on dairy work. I have sent my son, I may mention, to Bangor Agricultural College to learn farming. He has been practising under me for two or three years to learn how to treat the tenants, as a land agent, and I am very pleased with the education he is getting there.

60,966. Are 'railway rates' satisfactory?—I hear great complaints about them. I cannot get manures and feeding stuffs. I decline to do so, because the rates are so heavy, especially if you have anything less than two tons. Two tons is a very inconvenient quantity. Your team may bring a ton and a half and be unable to bring two tons. I have to send nine or ten miles from everywhere, and, therefore, I am very remote.

60,967. Is there any combination in the nature of trades unions among landlords, farmers, or labourers?—I do not know of any.

60,968. Are tenants who have bought their own holdings prosperous?—I know a few freeholders, and I feel confident that they are not more prosperous than the tenants and their neighbours.

Chairman—continued.

60,969. I suppose the tenant farmers work very hard?—Very. I work hard myself. I am a practical farmer.

60,970. Do the children work hard?—Yes.

60,971. Have you ever known children provided for on marriage by the tenant-farmers?—Oh, yes; and their sons, some of them, go into professions, into the ministry of different denominations, and the Church of England, and doctors, too.

60,972. Could the present rents be maintained if the children did not work?—Yes; I have known farms worse than any other farms where they have had too many children; the farm might have been a garden, and it was a bear-garden in consequence.

60,973. Is the cottage accommodation pretty good?—It is sufficient, and the rents are very low. My cottages go from 14s. to 2l. a year, I think. I have only a few.

60,974. Have they got gardens?—Yes, about a third of an acre of garden—all my cottages. I have not many.

60,975. In construction are they pretty good or not?—Mine are very old; but there is no lack of cottages. I have known new cottages to be vacant.

60,976. They hold under you?—Of course my own cottagers do; but my workmen, some of them, live in other people's cottages in the village.

60,977. Where the workmen live in your cottages they are not let to the tenant-farmers?—No, they are not.

60,978. House accommodation is good?—Yes.

60,979. You think that labourers are comfortably housed?—Yes, I do.

60,980. Do they go out of the country much?—No, they only go down to the works, to Brymbo, to the coal works and the iron works.

60,981. When did the present depression in agriculture begin in this district?—I have put in my answer two years ago, but my answer was written two years since; it is about four years ago, I think.

60,982. What are the principal causes of this depression?—Our tying our hands behind our backs and allowing the foreigner to import, under favourable conditions for him, meat and butter and different things. We have no supervision over those countries at all. We do not know what sort of stuff they send us in the shape of butter, and we give them the best market in the world. We have got to pay heavy rates and taxes, and to keep up a good government at a great expense. Further than that they give a bonus to induce their people further to flood us, and the Americans, too. Perhaps a small protective charge might do us some good, and keep the American corn out of this country. Till recent years I have read that their harvests were so abundant that they often burnt the surplus. Now they can send us the surplus, even at no cost at all, hardly—just enough to cover the freight, and 1s. or 2s. a quarter possibly. I am in favour of fair trade.

3 September 1894.]

Mr. W. CORBET YALE.

Chairman—continued.

I know it is not popular to talk in that manner, but I am in favour of fair trade—and I am a very old Liberal, I have been a Liberal for 60 years.

60,983. Those are the things you suggest for improving the position?—Yes, and the railway rates ought to be fairer, the foreigner ought not to have the advantage of sending his corn and his stuff from America to London at a cheaper rate than we can send from Ruthin to London. That is not fair.

60,984. And I need hardly ask what the relations are between you and your tenants?—Excellent.

Sir John Llewelyn.

60,985. Has your name been imported into the inquiry before to-day?—What?

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

60,986. Was not something said about the state of buildings on your estate?—No. I think people say that my buildings are better than my neighbours', but I do not wish to say that. Anyhow I have had no complaints.

60,987. You have a sufficiency of cottage accommodation on your property?—Oh, yes, and there are in the parish and neighbourhood empty cottages.

60,988. Have you had any changes of tenancy on your property?—No, very seldom. I think I have answered that here—that the changes are not more frequent than they were formerly. The fact is, I am very high up. My farm is 1,000 feet—part of it 1,300 feet—above the level of the sea. They make some money in our neighbourhood, and they go down to the Vale of Clwyd.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned to to-morrow at 9.30.

Mr. GOMER ROBERTS.

SEVENTIETH DAY.

County Hall, Ruthin, Denbighshire, Tuesday, 4th September 1894.

PRESENT:

LORD CARRINGTON, G.C.M.G. (CHAIRMAN).

Lord KENYON.

Sir JOHN TALBOT DILLWYN LLEWELYN, Bart.

Mr. DAVID BRYNMOR JONES, Q.C., M.P.

Professor RHŶS, M.A., LL.D.

Mr. JOHN MORGAN GRIFFITHS.

Mr. EDWIN GROVE.

Mr. RICHARD JONES.

Mr. D. LLEUFER THOMAS, Secretary.

Mr. CECIL E. OWEN, Assistant Secretary.

Mr. GOMER ROBERTS called and examined.

Chairman.Chairman—continued.

60,989. Where do you live?—At Cefn-y-Griolen.

60,990. Are you a tenant farmer?—I am.

60,991. Do you hold 130 acres without sheep run under Mrs. Naylor Leyland, Nant Clwyd Hall, Denbighshire?—Yes.

60,992. Do you give evidence about the whole of the estates, and the tenants of Mrs. Naylor Leyland?—For myself and other tenants.

60,993. There is one other witness coming on the estate?—Yes.

60,994. Do you think matters are best managed on large estates?—I do.

60,995. And on estates on which the landowner lives?—I do.

60,996. Do politics, religion, or language make any difference between you and the lady who owns the land?—Not in the least.

60,997. And the usual time of entering your farm is the same as we have generally had; and leases are not common?—No.

60,998. Have you an agreement?—Yes. (Handed.)

60,999. Is there anything in this agreement to which you object?—No, but we should prefer 12 months' notice to six months' notice.

61,000. You only get six months' notice to quit. That is a very short time certainly. Can you sell hay and straw on your farm?—No.

61,001. I suppose you practically do do it?—No.

61,002. You do not?—No, my Lord.

61,003. Is not that rather hard in these times?—The most part of the Nant Clwyd estate is very inconvenient for selling any produce, such as straw, hay, and roots; and the tenants find it better to consume than to sell.

61,004. With straw at these fabulous prices it is almost waste of money to convert it into manure, is it not?—When it is so very high as it has been last spring it might have been an advantage if a tenant had some to spare, but the case generally is we keep so much stock, and we prepare the stock according to the crops.

61,005. You consume the whole of the crops on the holding?—Yes, the whole on the holding.

61,006. This is your own agreement?—Yes.

61,007. And the tenants can get copies of them?—Yes.

61,008. Is the rent of small holders generally larger than that of larger farms in proportion?—In my opinion it is.

61,009. Now tell us a little about the rent. Do you consider the rent high in proportion to the bad times, or not?—Yes, I do.

61,010. The rents generally in the neighbourhood are too high in your opinion?—Yes, in my opinion.

61,011. And they ought to come down?—They ought to come down.

61,012. They will probably come down?—Most likely.

61,013. Have farmers a very hard time of it to make both ends meet?—Very.

61,014. This is a personal question, and you need not answer it unless you like, but have you made any money during the last 12 months off your farm alone?—I have not.

61,015. Have you paid the working expenses of the farm?—I have.

61,016. But no more?—No more.

61,017. There was nothing left for yourself and your children?—Nothing.

61,018. And nothing, left to put by?—Nothing.

61,019. You managed to live and pay your rent, that is all?—That is all.

61,020. There was nothing left for yourself?—Nothing.

61,021. Do you think the rents generally in this neighbourhood are too high?—I believe so.

61,022. What is the usual rent on average lands in the district?—On upland farms it averages from 8s., or it may be less than 8s., to 12s. 6d., and on low lands—in this statement I mean our lowlands; that does not mean the same as lowlands in the vale here—what we call the lowlands are from 400 to 600 feet above the level and the uplands are from 800 to 1,000 feet above the level.

61,023. We are told that the land in the Vale of Clwyd is about the finest land in the Principality. Is that so?—Well, a great many think so, but I do not think it is.

61,024. You do not think it is better than in other parts of the country?—If we take the Vale of Clwyd, I do not think it is as good as other valleys.

61,025. That is your opinion?—That is my opinion.

61,026. Are there any services besides payment of rent which are enforced by Mrs. Naylor Leyland?—There is a clause in the agreement that requires one day's haulage for every 50*l.* rent annually—one man and two horses, if called upon to do so.

61,027. Where is that in your agreement?—It is under the special conditions at the end.

61,028. Just read that out?—"One day's haulage for every 50*l.* rent annually; one man and two horses if called upon to do so." But I may state that it is not very often we are called upon to do it; perhaps once in two or three years.

61,029. But if you are called upon to do a day's work you are obliged to do it?—Yes.

61,030. There is no question about it. It may be very inconvenient, but it has to be done?—Yes, it has to be done if called upon.

61,031. You think that ought to come out of the agreement. You think, perhaps, that is rather hard to be in the agreement?—No.

61,032. You do not object to it?—No, I do not object to it.

61,033. What reductions or abatements have you had on your farm?—In my case I became a tenant on that estate 10 years ago. I understand there was an abatement in the year 1880 or 1881—I am not quite sure—of 20 per cent. That is not in my statement.

61,034. We need not go back to that; let us take your own case. What happened in your case?—Our rents were reduced at Lady Day, 1886. I believe it was a general reduction of about 15 per cent., it may be more or less, and we have received an abatement of 10 per cent. from 1885, and on the reduced rent since Michaelmas, 1892. There is a bit of an error in my statement, but I did not find it out until I had sent it in. We have received abatements of 10 per cent. since Michaelmas, 1892, up to now, and our next rent audit is next Friday, and we have had notice that we are going to get it this time.

61,035. That is very good. What permanent reduction can I put down that there has been on your farm. Is there anything permanent?—Yes.

61,036. Just tell me what the permanent reduction is?—10*l.*

61,037. How many acres have you?—130 acres.

61,038. Do you mind stating the rent?—The rent in this agreement is 70*l.*, but what I really pay is 60*l.* I get an abatement of 10 per cent. from the 60*l.*

61,039. I am putting down that you have 130 acres and 60*l.* rent?—Yes; what I pay is 60*l.*

Chairman—continued.

61,040. What did you pay before?—70*l.*

61,041. You have 10*l.* reduction on the 70*l.*?—Yes.

61,042. Is there any other reduction on the 60*l.*?—Abatements of 10 per cent. on that since Michaelmas, 1892.

61,043. How about the local rates. Have they increased or not?—No, they have not increased, but very slight. On the average I do not think they have increased.

61,044. Have you ever sub-let any portion of your farm?—No.

61,045. When do you pay the rent?—Five months after it is due.

61,046. Are labourers plentiful or scarce?—Scarce.

61,047. Is there any land going out of cultivation?—Upland and inconvenient land is going out of cultivation.

61,048. There has been a good deal of land laid down to grass, I take it?—There has been in the last 10 years more than before that time.

61,049. Because of the low prices of grain and high rate of wages?—Yes.

61,050. And there are more cattle and sheep reared than there used to be?—Yes.

61,051. Do you do any dairy farming?—Not in the same way as they do in Cheshire. In our case it is mixed farming. We depend a little upon almost everything.

61,052. I take it the landlord does most of the improvements?—Yes.

61,053. Now tell the Commissioners what improvements you do yourself. Have you done anything on your farm to improve it?—I have in the way of manuring and putting down grass land.

61,054. You have put down grass land?—I have.

61,055. If you left the farm you would not have the right to plough up that land?—Yes, according to the agreement.

61,056. And you would be compensated for not ploughing it up?—I believe I should.

61,057. But you have no right to be compensated?—I have no right to be compensated for what I put down in seeds, but I have according to the special condition for what I spend in manures.

61,058. Are you satisfied with your agreement on the whole?—I am.

61,059. Does Mrs. Naylor Leyland preserve the game very highly?—She does preserve game.

61,060. Have you any trouble about it?—No.

61,061. Have you got a shooting tenant, or do any of the family shoot over the land, or is it let?—Not let, but it has been let once or twice.

61,062. Do the tenant farmers in the district object to the shooting being let?—Yes.

61,063. They do not mind preserving in moderation for the landowners, but they object to a second rent being asked for the land?—Yes.

61,064. And sometimes they are troubled with keepers?—I never had an instance of any trouble with keepers when they were in Mrs. Naylor Leyland's employ, but when they followed the shooting tenant I had trouble.

61,065. Do the shooting tenants ever go into standing corn?—I have seen them in my own standing corn.

61,066. Without your leave?—Without asking me, and after they had come out of it they denied that they had been there.

61,067. Did they take the dogs there?—Yes.

61,068. And did a certain amount of damage?—It is impossible for them to go into standing corn without doing damage.

61,069. And dogs do a great deal of damage in the corn?—Well, yes, but there was never any trouble when the owner was shooting there.

61,070. I may take it that the farmers in this district would not object in any way to their landlords sporting over the farms?—No.

61,071. Is yours a hunting country; do the hounds come over your district?—No.

61,072. Is there any objection to hunting?—I would object to it.

61,073. You have never heard any opposition to it from the tenant farmers?—For the last 40 years at least there has been no hunting in our district.

61,074. Who hunts the country now?—No one hunts our district.

61,075. Who hunts the nearest hounds?—Sir Watkin, I believe.

61,076. It is all Sir Watkin's?—I believe so.

61,077. Have you ever thought anything about a land court?—I have.

61,078. What is your opinion about a land court?—That it is necessary in case of a failure to agree as to terms and as to the rent between landlord and tenant. I may also state, because I am appearing for others as well as myself, that there is a division of opinion on that point amongst the tenantry; some believe that it is not required, and some believe that it is required.

61,079. I take it that on an estate like yours where the relations between the landlady and the tenants are good, it would not be taken advantage of?—I do not believe it would.

61,080. You think it would be practically what is called a dead letter, that it would not be taken advantage of on good estates?—No, I do not think so. I may say on our estate that I have never known a case but that it could be settled friendly between the agent and the tenant.

61,081. And on an estate like Sir Watkin's estate, with Colonel Hughes as agent, it would never be taken advantage of?—I do not think it would.

61,082. And you do not think it would cause any bad feeling between the landlord and the tenant if such a court was established?—I cannot see that it would.

Chairman—continued.

61,083. On the other hand, if a landlord was hard on his tenants you think it would be a fair thing that there should be some court to go to where a final settlement might be made?—That is my opinion.

61,084. You say that there is a division of opinion about this?—Yes, there is.

61,085. But you think that more farmers in your district would be in favour of a land court than would be against it?—Yes.

61,086. Do you think, as we are often told, that if a land court were established, all the landlords would leave the country, and go and live in London, or go and live abroad?—No, I do not believe it, I cannot see that it would make any difference at all. A good landlord and a good tenant can agree quite as well with a land court as without it.

61,087. You do not think that the landlords would cease to take the present interest they do in their tenants?—No, I do not believe it.

61,088. Foreign competition and high railway rates have been very injurious to the agricultural profession, have they not?—They have.

61,089. Have you any other recommendations to make besides the establishment of a land court?—Yes, in the way of agricultural education. In my opinion, we farmers as a class have not enough science of agriculture. We have the practice, but we have not the science, and I believe more could be done in this way than by putting protection on any foreign produce. I would recommend a further extension of the Merchandise Marks Act. I believe it would be in the interest of the Welsh farmer that foreign goods ought to be marked as foreign goods, and not pushed on the purchaser as British or Welsh, especially in the case of mutton and butter. In our district we have had the assistance of a few lectures, organised by the Bangor University. I think they have done much good, and, in my opinion more education in that respect would be very desirable.

Mr. Griffiths.

61,090. Why would you like to have 12 months' notice in preference to six months. What is the reason for it?—My reason is this. On some estates in this part there is 12 months' notice, and on the others, six months' notice, and in the case of the tenant changing he might be under a disadvantage. Suppose I was leaving on six months' notice, I might be six months out of a farm.

61,091. That is a very good reason. Do farmers as a rule take their improvements out from a farm in 12 months. Does a farmer as a rule take what he has laid out on the farm along with him with 12 months' notice—I mean in improved farming?—No.

61,092. Twelve months' notice is short enough, is it not?—Yes.

61,093. Rather too short?—Yes.

61,094. Is any part of your farm down in the vale?—No, my farm is between 800 and 950 feet above the sea level.

4 September 1894.]

MR. GOMER ROBERTS.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

61,095. You have had an abatement of your rent, I see, of 10 per cent.—We have.

61,096. Do you consider that abatement is sufficient to meet the present depression?—No.

61,097. It is not sufficient, but you are pleased that your landlady should meet you?—Yes, we are very much obliged.

61,098. Still you would rather see old times with the high rent, would you not?—I would.

61,099. You say that you improve your farm by manuring and laying down to grass. Does the landlord ever assist in giving seeds, and so on?—I may state in my case it was laid down in this way: I did not know the country well when I came there, and I tried it as an experiment, and I find it does answer well. No doubt, if I had asked for the seeds, I should have received them.

61,100. But you never made an application?—I never made an application, because I tried it as an experiment on my own account.

61,101. Some landlords do it, but when the landlords do, they generally put a clause in that you are not to plough up that land again?—They generally do that.

61,102. Do you find other tenants have much trouble with game?—No.

61,103. You do not know of any in your neighbourhood?—No.

61,104. With regard to agricultural education, do the schoolmasters in this district teach agricultural chemistry?—Yes, some.

61,105. In night schools?—No, not at night schools, but there are some teachers in the district qualified in that respect.

61,106. Do they get any grant from Government for the pupils they are able to pass?—I cannot answer for that.

61,107. In our part of the country some schoolmasters do uncommonly well. I know one teacher who has earned 48*l.* last year, and who is earning much more this year in that respect?—I cannot say for that.

61,108. Do you think the farmers' sons would attend the classes if they were held in the evening?—I believe they would, and I believe it would be a most desirable thing, because, as a rule, I may say in this district the science of agriculture is very backward.

61,109. Then, with regard to the foreign goods, you recommend that they should be all marked, so as to distinguish them as foreign goods?—Yes.

61,110. Is there any margarine coming to this part of the country, instead of butter?—No, not in the country. There may be in the towns, but we are obliged to sell our produce. It goes down to the collieries, and Manchester, and far from here. No doubt we have to compete with margarine, but not at our own doors.

61,111. Do you ask any of your butter, or do you sell it by the pound?—The rule of the district is generally to tub it for four or five months in the summer.

61,112. How much a pound can they get for it at that time?—For the last few years it has been awfully bad to sell. It has been as low as

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

7*d.* a pound. I think the average price for the last four years was 10*d.* or 10½*d.*

61,113. It has been much higher?—Yes, as high as 16*d.*

61,114. What do you think is the cause of its being lower?—For the last season no doubt it was the importation of Danish butter.

61,115. Cannot you make butter in this part of the country as well as Danish butter?—I am afraid that our dairy system is not up to the Dutch system now.

61,116. What kind of dairies have you? Have you convenient roomy dairies?—Our dairies are not the same as they are made in Cheshire, and such dairying parts, where they live principally on dairying. We do not live particularly on that here. It is one out of six or seven other products.

61,117. Are most of them in the most suitable part of the dwelling?—I believe they are.

61,118. Is there a room opening from the living room into the dairy, or is it detached from the house?—Well, it is a part of the house; but I have not seen a dairy that opens from either the kitchen, the parlour, or anywhere.

61,119. There is butter-making taught in this neighbourhood, is there not?—Further down the vale there is a dairy school.

61,120. There is a school at Denbigh, I know, and they have a travelling dairy?—Yes.

61,121. Do many of the farmers attend the lectures?—Yes.

61,122. Do any of the servants attend the lectures?—Yes.

61,123. Do you think the lectures are rather too scientific? Do the people understand them well?—It all depends upon the lecturer. In our case they were explained remarkably well.

61,124. Would the farmers freely ask questions of the lecturer?—The younger ones would. The older ones are a bit conservative in that respect.

61,125. Rather backward; they cannot talk English quite as well as the young men, I suppose?—The lectures were in Welsh.

61,126. Who was it gave the lectures?—Mr. John Owen.

61,127. Then they were very good, and they could understand them fully?—I think if these colleges appoint a lecturer at all for Wales, he ought to be able to converse in Welsh, otherwise he is no good at all.

Mr. Richard Jones.

61,128. Has Mr. John Owen resigned his appointment at Bangor?—I am afraid he has. There is an advertisement for another one.

61,129. Is there any other lecturer at Bangor who is able to deliver Welsh lectures?—There may be, but Mr. John Owen used to attend our district. He was the lecturer from Bangor College that attended our district.

61,130. It is very important to have a Welsh lecturer in this district?—It is the all important thing—of course provided that he has the science himself.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. GOMER ROBERTS.

[Continued.]

Mr. Grove.

61,131. You say that for the last year or two you have just managed to pay expenses, and that only, or thereabouts?—Yes.

61,132. Are there any members of your family—any children—who help you in the labour?—No.

61,133. So that you had to pay for your labour?—Yes.

61,134. Are there many farmers in your district who have bought their own farms?—Very few.

61,135. And did those who have bought their farms buy them, so far as you know, with borrowed money?—So far as I can recollect there were only two farms bought in the last 10 years, and they were bought by tenant farmers; but they preferred to let them afterwards.

61,136. Were they the sitting tenants—were they the tenants who occupied the farms?—No.

Professor Rhys.

61,137. What becomes of the farmers' sons who cannot get farms themselves; suppose a farmer has four or five sons—they could scarcely get farms every one of them—what becomes of them generally, what trades do they take to?—Different trades; one may be a mechanic, or shopkeeper, or draper, or grocer.

61,138. Are the farmers able to give their sons a fairly good education?—Only elementary, as a rule.

61,139. Is there a good elementary school in your district?—Yes.

61,140. Which is it?—It is the Llanellidan National School.

61,141. Have you any servant men upon your farm?—I have,

61,142. How many?—Three regularly.

61,143. Three servant men?—Three servant men regularly.

61,144. Where do they sleep?—Two of them sleep in the house, and the other is a man that lives in a cottage.

61,145. He has a cottage of his own on your farm?—Not on my farm. There is a cottage on my farm, but he does not live in that. He lives in a cottage near.

61,146. You have two servant men living in the house?—Living in the house.

61,147. Have they a separate entrance; can they come in at any time of night that they like, or do they come in through the same door as yourself?—There are different doors, but only one staircase.

61,148. So that you have got command of the house?—I have.

61,149. So that they must be in by a certain time?—They must.

61,150. Is that the usual arrangement in the district?—I believe it is.

61,151. At some places we have heard that the servant men sleep in rooms in the outhouse?—I do not know of a case.

61,152. Not in your neighbourhood?—Not in our neighbourhood.

Professor Rhys—continued.

61,153. You have been brought up as a farmer?—I have.

61,154. In that neighbourhood?—No, in Merionethshire.

61,155. You have been in your neighbours' houses in that neighbourhood I dare say, and you know how they live, do you not?—I do.

61,156. Would you mind telling me what is the usual fare of a small farmer and his family; what they have for breakfast now. I have been asking this kind of questions in different districts, because we like to compare the different ways of living. I dare say they live very much better with you than in some parts of the country?—They have generally (I am sure you will understand me) bara llaeth or potes the first thing.

61,157. Bara llaeth is bread and milk?—Yes.

61,158. Potes is a kind of soup or broth?—Yes.

61,159. What is it? It is not porridge?—No. Afterwards they have bread and butter and tea.

61,160. That is for breakfast?—For breakfast.

61,161. When is the next meal, about the middle of the day, 12 o'clock or one o'clock?—12 o'clock.

61,162. What do they have then?—Meat always, bacon or mutton or beef.

61,163. Do they have salt meat or fresh meat?—Salt meat generally, and fresh meat on occasions.

61,164. I suppose they kill a cow or an ox, and they kill some sheep themselves, do they not?—Sheep mostly.

61,165. How often do they have fresh meat—on Sundays?—Well, it is impossible to answer that because it depends on circumstances. It has been in this way: the last few years beef was so very low in price and perhaps the farmers would come to market and the butcher would push on them so many pounds of beef at a very low price—at a lower price than you could cure your own bacon.

61,166. You have mentioned bacon, by the way. I suppose farmers cure their own bacon?—All of them.

61,167. They eat some bacon, do they not?—Yes, that is the backbone of the meal.

61,168. At dinner time?—Yes.

61,169. Do they have anything in the afternoon?—Yes, bread and butter and tea, that is the general rule.

61,170. Is that in the house or in the fields?—In the house when it is practicable; in the summer times we take it down in the fields.

61,171. Then what meal have they after that—supper?—Yes. That is just the same thing as the first course for breakfast—they always have that for supper.

61,172. You did mention porridge I think?—I believe there is less of that used in this district than in Merionethshire—a good deal less.

61,173. The district is not famous for its porridge then?—For my own part I do use it.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. GOMER ROBERTS.

Professor Rhys—continued.

61,174. But you are a Merionethshire man?
—I am.

61,175. You do not find that the farmers round about eat so much porridge in your district as they do in Merionethshire?—No, they do not.

61,176. The bread you have is good, I suppose; is it wheat or barley?—All wheat for the last few years.

61,177. Do they make much oatmeal bread?
—very little in this district.

61,178. More in Merionethshire?—More a good deal.

Sir John Llewelyn.

61,179. Is Mrs. Naylor Leyland's estate a very large one?—I cannot say.

61,180. How many tenants are there upon it?
—I believe there are about 60.

61,181. Do you know of any instances of farmers who are afraid of coming forward to give evidence?—No, I cannot mention a specific instance.

61,182. You have heard it so stated, perhaps?
—I have.

61,183. Do you think there was any ground for it?—In our district I do not think there is, but I believe there is in other districts.

61,184. You are satisfied with your agreement?—I am.

61,185. Even though there are some what I call restrictive clauses?—Yes.

61,186. You do not think they are unduly enforced?—They are never unduly enforced on our estate.

61,187. Do you think as a farmer that you could get substantial justice from your landlord?
—I would.

61,188. In what way do you think a land court would benefit you?—I do not think it would benefit me personally.

61,189. You put it extremely fairly that you thought a good landlord and a good tenant would agree equally well without it?—Yes.

61,190. But that for others it might be useful?
—It might be useful.

61,191. You put it I think in a sensible and fair way, but I should very much like to know your view with regard to the answer which you yourself gave as to what your opinion of the constitution of a land court is. The words which I think you used were that it would be necessary in case of a failure to agree "as to terms of rent" between landlord and tenant?—As to terms and as to the rent, I believe it is.

61,192. I understand you to say that it is as to terms and rent?—Yes; that is what I meant.

61,193. Then I want to ask you how you think the rent ought to be assessed. Do you think it should be assessed on an average of years?—Yes; on an average of years.

61,194. I suppose it would not be just to assess it on the best season—the highest season?
—No.

61,195. Or on the worst season?—No.

61,196. But on an average?—On an average.

Sir John Llewelyn—continued.

61,197. Do you think it would be possible to assess the rent on a sliding scale?—I believe it would lead to a great deal of friction to fix it on a sliding scale.

61,198. Then if it is left to a court or any third party, how would it be assessed?—By valuers.

61,199. Over a series of past years?—In my opinion it could only be assessed by practical valuers in a case of disagreement between a landlord and a tenant, on account of what the farm was worth; it could only be valued the same as anything else.

61,200. No, because anything else you can value upon the past, and here you want to value upon the prospective future. You see rent is to be in the future; anything else that it is wished to value is a thing that is there and in the present, and you can value the existing thing?—But any other commodity is valued not exactly in the present, but in the future; suppose a lot of sheep are valued or a lot of cattle.

61,201. You have the value there?—Yes; but they do value them in some respects according to the future.

61,202. And you think the same might be done with regard to the land?—I do.

61,203. How would you guard against a landlord going to a court in an exceptionally good season, or against a tenant going to a court in an exceptionally bad season?—Well; I must say I have not thought of it in that light.

61,204. Do you think that the sliding-scale arrangement is impossible?—I do not think it is impossible.

61,205. But you think it would lead to friction?—Yes.

61,206. Are there any instances that you can speak of, of difficulty in adjusting arrangements between landlord and tenant?—Not in our district.

61,207. We have heard of some instances being referred to arbitration?—I do not know of one.

61,208. You do not know of any?—No.

61,209. Then there has been no difficulty in your neighbourhood with regard to private arrangements between landlord and tenant?—No.

Mr. Richard Jones.

61,210. Just one question: you say that you think the existence of a land court would not benefit you personally nor tenants on estates of good landlords. I think you said that, did you not?—Yes.

61,211. I do not know whether it has occurred to you, but I put the question to you in this way: do you not think that the existence of a land court would strengthen the tenants to deal with their landlords, and that the landlords would not be so exacting on a question of rent, knowing there was such a thing as a land court in existence?—That is my opinion.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. GOMER ROBERTS.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

61,212. You think it would strengthen the tenants in dealing with their landlords?—Yes, and I do not believe it would lead to any ill-feeling between them.

61,213. That is your opinion?—That is my opinion.

61,214. Sir John Llewelyn put to you a question as to how you would assess the rent of a farm—whether on the past, or whether on the future. Would you not take the present value of a farm?—Of course that would be the first thing to take into consideration—the present.

61,215. The present value of the farm, according to the price of stock and produce?—Yes, according to the price of stock and produce.

61,216. And the price of labour would you take into consideration also?—Yes.

61,217. Do you think it is possible to fix the rent, say, for five or seven years?—I do not believe it ought to be fixed for more than five.

61,218. Because of the fact that prices fluctuate so much?—Yes.

61,219. Do you think that justice is more likely to be done between a landlord and a tenant by fixing the rent for a short period of five years, than it is at the present time, for a period of, say, 50 years?—I believe so—justice to both.

61,220. You think that it would be more equitable to both parties than the present method of fixing it?—Yes.

Sir John Llewelyn.

61,221. Might not that be arrived at by a system of five years' leases?—No, I cannot say it would lie in the same way. Supposing the rent of a farm were fixed, say, by valuers, it may turn out a great deal too low, or too high—it may turn out so. With a lease, every party is obliged to stick to it, but I cannot see that the other would lead to any unfriendly relations between the landlord and tenant afterwards; they might arrange, and supposing the price was too high, the landlord might step in and say, "I will allow you so much;" and the tenant on the other hand, if he considered it too low, might say to his landlord, "It is too low, and I will give you more."

61,222. I am much obliged to you. Your evidence is given in an extremely fair spirit to my mind, and I want really to follow what is in your mind as to how binding the decision of a land court would be, if there was one, without a lease, because surely, if I understand you rightly, the arrangement of five years is to be binding between landlord and tenant, just as a lease might be. I suppose the decision of the land court would be binding for five years upon both parties?—The decision of the court is binding, but, in my opinion, the appealing to the court between a landlord and tenant ought not to interfere with their friendly relations as landlord and tenant. We have had cases of arbitration as to the farm stock, and things of that sort, and it does not lead to ill-feeling; we do that generally when one tenant goes out of a farm and another goes in; two practical men are told to value it, and even if the valuation is not satisfactory to either party, I do not see that it leads to ill-feeling.

61,223. I am not intending to suggest anything of the kind, far from it. I want to know from you whether you think the decision of the land court should be binding upon landlord and upon tenant. Say they fix what is called a fair rent for a period of five years, as you told us it was your opinion the time should be?—Yes.

61,224. It should be equally binding upon landlord and tenant?—Yes.

Professor Rhys.

61,225. Just to bring you back to the kind of questions I have asked you before, you pointed out an important difference between the fare of the people in the district where you live now, and in Merionethshire, where you come from. Which kind of food do you think tends to produce the better race of men—the stronger men—the Merionethshire food or the food that they eat in the district you are in now?—My opinion is the less tea that they get, and the more milk and meat the better; that is the strongest food and the best.

61,226. You said that they do not eat much porridge, and that they eat more in Merionethshire?—They do.

61,227. What is the result of that, do you think?—I believe they are healthier and stronger.

61,228. You mean those who live more as they do in Merionethshire?—Yes.

61,229. You notice that in your district?—Yes.

Chairman.

61,230. I have some questions to put to you from Mr. Owen Wynne, Mr. Llewellyn Jones, and Mr. Vincent. Mr. Owen Wynne asks, "If anything is wanted would not an official arbitrator suffice?" Do you understand that; that is, if any arbitration is wanted, would not an official arbitrator be sufficient?—In my opinion a court consisting of three or five or seven would be more able to value a farm than one.

61,231. "Have you any cause at all for complaint, either against your landlady or her agent?"—I have not, my Lord.

61,232. Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones has handed in the following questions: "Was there formerly a limestone quarry on the estate?"—There was.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. GOMER ROBERTS.

Chairman—continued.

61,233. "Was not this quarry a great convenience to the tenant farmers in the district?"—Yes.

61,234. "Has this quarry been closed lately?"—It has been. It was worked by a company.

61,235. The quarry has been closed lately?—It has been worked by a company, I believe—I am not quite sure—on a lease, and that lease came to an end, and that is how the quarry was closed.

61,236. "Did the quarry belong to Mrs. Naylor Leyland, of Nant Clwyd?"—It did.

61,237. "Have you heard any complaints in the district with reference to the closing of the quarry?"—I heard no complaints, but at the time it was rather inconvenient for the tenants and for other districts, but since that there is a great deal less lime used on the land, and other manures are in my opinion used to better advantage than the lime.

61,238. "Do you know whether the late tenant of Pwll Naid has lived there for 28 years?"—I do not know how long he lived there.

61,239. "Had he improved the farm in various ways?"—Well, there might be a difference of opinion upon that point.

61,240. "Did his widow receive any compensation for improvements?"—I cannot answer that question, but I believe she did receive compensation.

61,241. All these questions relate to the same farm, "What was the former rent of this farm?"—I cannot say.

61,242. "Did the tenant, David Jones, die in 1890?"—I believe his name was Robert Jones. I believe he did die then, but I am not quite sure of the date.

61,243. "Do you know whether his widow applied for the farm?"—I do not know.

61,244. "Was she accepted as a tenant." She could not have been if she did not apply; so that those questions need not be put. Questions by Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones continued, "Was a new agreement brought to the various tenants on the estate some five or six years ago?" That is on the estate on which you are?—There was, on the death of Colonel Leyland when Mrs. Naylor Leyland succeeded to the property, and an agreement between the tenants and her was arrived at.

61,245. She was the widow of Colonel Leyland?—She was the widow of Colonel Leyland.

61,246. "Do you know whether this agreement was brought, a few days before the date on which the notice to quit should be served under the old agreement?"—The agreement was brought round in November, but it was actually the same (except in one simple clause) as the one that we had before. The only difference was as to the rent; it was made on the reduced rent, there being a fresh landlord or landlady.

Chairman.

Do you press the next question Mr. Jones?—(Mr. Llewellyn Jones) Yes, my Lord; I think it should be asked.

Chairman.

61,247. "Had the messenger who brought the agreement to the tenants a notice to quit for service upon any tenants who were reluctant to sign?"—Can you answer that?—I cannot answer that. See 63,943

61,248. What was the new clause in the agreement?—It was a little different, or it may be there were two clauses consolidated; I believe that was it. It was the last sentence in clause 17: "And will not have, or suffer to be, on any part of the said farm any stock of which he is not the sole and absolute owner without the written consent of the said landlady or her agent." That was the only difference.

61,249. It was to the effect that he was not to take an interest in stock without the consent of the landlady or her agent?—Yes.

61,250. Mr. Llewellyn Jones' questions continued: "Would you not prefer an agreement without the restrictive clauses?"—I believe in my case I should not, because I am sure they could not enforce whatever you call restrictive clauses. In my case I farm up to this agreement, but it is my opinion that an agreement with half these clauses would be quite as good.

61,251. You mean quite as safe for the landlord?—Quite as safe for both.

61,252. "Might there not be a danger of these clauses being enforced in case of a new landlord and agent, who might not be on such cordial terms with the tenants as the present landlady and agent?"—There may be.

61,253. Mr. Vincent has handed in the following questions, some of which are with regard to the land court: "If the tenant was dissatisfied with the rent fixed by the court he could leave his farm, could he not?" That is to say, it would be in the power of the tenant to leave his farm if he were dissatisfied with the rent fixed by the land court?—I cannot answer that question. According to the custom now he might leave; but it is another thing when a land court is established, if it will ever be established. It may be there will be a rule —.

61,254. To prevent a tenant leaving?—I do not know what he means by that question. A man is not likely to go to the land court on the point of leaving his farm.

Chairman.

No. What Mr. Vincent means, I think, is, that supposing the land court fixed a rent at a certain price and the tenant was dissatisfied, he need not go on farming the farm. That is what you mean, is it not? (Mr. Vincent.) That is it, my Lord.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. GOMER ROBERTS,

[Continued.]

Chairman.

61,255. There is no obligation on him to remain?—I would not answer that question, because I do not know its meaning.

61,256. You would rather not commit yourself by answering that question. Then Mr. Vincent's next question is: "If the landlord was dissatisfied with the rent fixed by this court he could not leave, could he?"—That is a brother of the last question.

61,257. "If there was a court, do you not think some of the best landlords would put their tenants into that court at once?"—No, I do not think so.

61,258. You do not agree with that?—No.

61,259. "What encouragement would a landlord have to spend money in improvements if there were a court of that kind?"—This encouragement: that even a good landlord might be saddled with a very unsatisfactory tenant, and he could apply to the land court for the fixing of terms and rent; he would have that encouragement.

61,260. Do I understand you to mean that the landlord would have a better chance of getting his rent from a bad tenant with a land court than he has under the present conditions?—Yes, and better terms.

61,261. Mr. Vincent's questions continued: "An agreement without restrictive clauses might serve very well with a good tenant like you, but what about the bad tenant?"—I am of opinion there ought to be some restrictions so as not to let a man run a farm down to make it less valuable. There ought to be some restrictions. I do not say they ought to be as severe as they are in most agreements, but I say the landlord ought to be protected against a tenant who would take a farm, run it down for three or four years, and then leave it.

61,262. Mr. Vincent asks: "A bad tenant can do some mischief, can he not?"—He can.

61,263. Then I will put a question from the chair: one reason that you think a land court ought to be established is for the protection of a landlord against a bad tenant, just the same as the protection of a good tenant against a bad landlord?—Exactly, my Lord.

62,264. I follow your meaning. Mr. Owen Wynne asks: "Referring to Professor Rhys' question on the subject of food, do you not think the Merionethshire men are far superior to those of the Vale of Clwyd?"—No, if he drew that from what I said it was a wrong calculation. I did not say that; I say this in answer to Professor Rhys' question, that I believe that that sort of food is better and healthier than what is used mostly in this district.

61,265. The food used in Merionethshire is more nourishing food than what is used in this Vale?—Yes.

Mr. Griffiths.

61,266. Is it not the fact that the conditions of a Welsh land court have not yet been written?—Yes.

61,267. Then we are going a little too fast, are we not?—Well of course we cannot make it up here.

Mr. Richard Jones.

61,268. What was the object of inserting that clause in the agreement on Mrs. Naylor Leyland's estate?—I cannot answer that question.

61,269. Were there any of the tenants in the habit of taking sheep to winter?—Not to my knowledge.

61,270. Was it thought to be a hardship by any of the tenants?—It was not at all.

61,271. No complaint was made?—I have never heard of a single complaint against it, but it was pointed out, at the time of this agreement, that it was different or additional to any clause that was in the old agreements. It was pointed out in that way.

61,272. Just one question, about the land court: Difficulties have been pointed out to you by Sir John Llewelyn, that possibly if the rent was fixed for a period of five years prices might fluctuate, and in one year it might work badly for the tenant, and in another year it might work badly for the landlord. Would you, to meet cases of that kind, give the landlord and the tenant power of appeal, within the period of five years, to have the rent altered, that is, to work in the principle of a sliding scale, without having the actual sliding scale; would that meet the case?—I believe it would.

61,273. Of course it has been pointed out to us repeatedly that a sliding scale would not work because there is such a difference between the price of a good product and the price of a bad product, that it would be very difficult to settle the price according a sliding scale?—Yes.

61,274. By the means suggested you would have the principle of a sliding scale without having the actual sliding scale?—Yes.

Mr. ENOCH JONES (of Hendre Isá) called and examined through an interpreter.

Chairman.

61,275. Is this your statement?—Yes.

61,276. Has it been interpreted to you?—Yes.

61,277. You perfectly understand it?—I understand it as it was said to me.

61,278. Have you any objection to its being read aloud in English?—No.

Chairman—continued.

The following statement of the witness was then read:—

Evidence of Enoch Jones, tenant farmer, of Hendre Isa farm.

Acreage of holding 67a. 2r. 26p. No sheep run. Owner, Mrs. Naylor Leyland.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. ENOCH JONES.

Chairman—continued.

61,279. Have you any objection to state what rent you pay for the 67 acres?—I have no objection.

61,280. What is it?—My rent is 90*l.*; but it has been reduced to 70*l.*

61,281. The present rent is 70*l.*?—The present rent is 70*l.* They have also given me an abatement on that of 10 per cent.

61,282. 10 per cent. on the 70*l.*?—Yes.

Statement continued.

I wish to give evidence touching the Nant-clwyd estate.

I think matters are managed best on estates on which the landlords reside.

Politics, religion, or language make no difference whatever between me and my landlord.

Date of entry for the land, 30th November; for the house, 1st May.

Agreements are the most common.

I know of no cases in which tenants have asked for leases and been refused.

Agreements quite as safe under landlords of large estates.

I do not object to any part of my agreement (agreement produced).

Tenants can obtain a copy of their agreements.

Agreements are explained to tenants if required.

Rent is fixed at a lump sum.

There are services other than payment of rent rendered, but they are not enforced.

Believe the holding is not let to the highest bidder.

My rent was lowered Michaelmas 1885 permanently. Temporary reductions were given previously.

Farmers do not sub-let their holdings.

Rent is never paid on the day it is due, and the time is sometimes specially postponed when requested.

Farmers would borrow if they could.

61,283. What do you mean by "farmers would borrow if they could"?—That is the custom of our country. If they are short of money they would ask for a loan from a neighbour.

Statement continued.

Labourers are scarce.

Land is not going out of cultivation but it might be better cultivated.

Arable land has been laid down in pasture to a small extent. Low price of corn.

Root crops have increased.

Fallowing has fallen into disuse. Root crops instead.

Buildings, gates, fences, tanks are generally made by the landlord.

I am aware of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

Chairman—continued.

If agreeements contract out of the custom of the country it is because it may be more convenient.

The custom as to growing crops is that the outgoing tenant is entitled to half crop of wheat.

I do not think there is any real trouble about game.

Wives and children always help on the farms. The children receive food, clothing, and money and are set up in life afterwards.

I would rather be without a land court.

61,284. What are your relations with your landlady—very friendly?—Yes, I am really fond of her; she acts very cleverly towards me.

61,285. Is the agent a practical man, doing what he can in the interests of the tenants as well as in the interests of his employer?—I believe he does to the fullest possible extent.

61,286. Then you are quite satisfied, as far as you are personally concerned, with your position?—I am.

61,287. Are you well acquainted with the farmers in the district?—At all events I know some of them.

61,288. Do you consider that the general condition of farmers in your district is satisfactory?—Yes, they are given to praising the landlord on our estate.

61,289. I do not mean so much on your estate, but on other estates. Are the farmers generally on other estates making money?—I cannot say.

61,290. You only speak for yourself?—That is all.

Professor Rhys.

61,291. Have you made any money in the last year or two from the farm?—I have succeeded in paying every bill that I have received.

61,292. Have you managed to make anything beyond the expenses. You need not answer if you do not like to?—I have done pretty well.

61,293. Do you find that farming does not pay as well as it did?—Not to a large extent.

61,294. Are any of your neighbours known to be in arrears with their rent?—I do not believe there is a single one in arrear.

61,295. So your rents must be reasonable, or else they are well-to-do farmers?—We have good farmers who exert themselves to pay, and the farms are let to us reasonably.

Mr. Grove.

61,296. You said that land could be better cultivated. Do you mean if more capital was thrown into it, or what do you mean by that?—Yes, it is impossible to cultivate it without expense.

61,297. Do the farmers generally understand the provisions of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—That I cannot answer.

61,298. Do you understand it yourself?—I do to some extent.

61,299. You prefer an agreement to a lease, do you?—Yes, I do.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. ENOCH JONES.

[Continued.]

Mr. Richard Jones.

61,300. Did you sign this agreement?—Yes.

61,301. When?—When I took the farm.

61,302. When did you take the farm?—It is three years and six months since I came to the present farm, but I was under this estate for years before that.

61,303. What is the rent in the agreement?—90l.

61,304. I thought you said it had been reduced to 70l. in 1885?—Yes, and we have still got the reduction.

61,305. But if you only signed the agreement three years ago, I should have thought that 70l. would have been inserted in the agreement, and not 90l.?—90l. is the rent, but it has been reduced to 70l.

61,306. But is that a permanent reduction to 70l.?—Until times improve.

61,307. It has not occurred to you to ask to have a new agreement with the rent fixed at 70l. instead of 90l.?—I did not apply for that.

61,308. Do you know that you have not signed the agreement?—Yes, I have. That is only a copy of the agreement.

61,309. Is this clause enforced on the estate: "The tenant to paint the doors, gates, and painted fences, and external woodwork, and house, cottages, and buildings, with two coats of good oil-paint once at least every five years"?—It is never enforced.

61,310. Is it done?—It is done by the landlady.

61,311. What is the custom with regard to gates?—They put up the gates first of all, and then the tenant has to look after them.

61,312. So that really this clause is not enforced against the tenant?—It is not.

61,313. Is there a home-farm attached to the mansion?—The parks are in the occupation of the Hall.

61,314. Mrs. Naylor Leyland has not got a home-farm then?—No.

61,315. Are you troubled by game?—They are far better than I expected them to be.

61,316. But they are a trouble to some extent?—They are very good indeed.

61,317. Do you get a present of a brace of pheasants, or something like that?—Yes, every year.

Mr. Griffiths.

61,318. Are you not on the same estate as the last witness, Mr. Roberts?—Yes.

61,319. I see in his agreement he had to pay 5s. for every gate. That is not the case with you?—My agreement is the same, but we are never called upon to pay a halfpenny.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

61,320. Why put all these things in the agreement if they are never enforced?—I cannot answer that.

61,321. When you had your rent reduced to 70l., did you have the rates reduced as well?—Yes, the rates are also lowered.

61,322. Did you appeal to the assessment committee to have your rates reduced?—Yes.

61,323. Will they reduce the rates on abatements?—No, they will not on abatements.

61,324. But they have reduced yours to the 70l.?—Yes, the rate has been lowered.

61,325. Why cannot the farmers borrow when they are short of money?—I do not understand the question.

61,326. You said in your evidence that farmers could not borrow. Why is that?—Because no one is inclined to give it them, I suppose.

61,327. Because of the want of security?—Well, there are a good many people who are bad payers, but who have plenty of money.

61,328. You say farmers could cultivate the land better. Why do not they do so?—I cannot give a satisfactory answer to that, but I believe it could be better cultivated, and I am going to endeavour to do so myself.

61,329. You think the better a farmer cultivates the land, the better it will pay him?—Yes, I do think so.

61,330. Why would you like to be without a land court?—Because I prefer an agreement between the landlord and the tenant.

61,331. But you would have no occasion to go to the court except you wished to do so yourself?—I look after the welfare of others. I think it would be better for all.

61,332. How would you manage in the case of a tenant when he fails to get payment for improvements that he has made on the farm. What is he to do?—Our agreement provides for that.

61,333. But you were speaking of others, not for yourself, you said?—No, I did not.

Chairman.

61,334. I have two questions sent in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones. "You said, 'there is no real trouble about game'?"—There is none—not to me.

61,335. "Is there any trouble at all?"—Nothing worth taking any notice of.

61,336. "Have you heard any complaints?"—No, it is very good about us.

61,337. "Was not the landlord of the estate non-resident for some years, and the Hall let to a sporting tenant?"—Yes, for several years, three years perhaps. I do not remember very well.

The witness withdrew.

4 September, 1894.]

Mr. JOHN JONES.

Mr. JOHN JONES (of Plas Newydd) recalled and further examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

61,338. You have, I think, received a letter from Mr. Lloyd, of Rhagatt?—I have.

61,339. Have you any objection to its being read publicly?—I have not.

61,340. Is this the letter (handing same)?—It is the letter.

61,341. Have you had the letter interpreted to you, and do you quite understand it?—I do.

61,342. And you wish it read?—I do.

Chairman.

The letter is addressed to Mr. John Jones, Plas Newydd, Bryneglwys, from Mr. E. O. V. Lloyd; and is as follows:—

"Rhagatt, Corwen, North Wales,
29th August, 1894.

"SIR,
"I GREATLY regret and grieve to see that you have been giving evidence at Llangollen that you were ejected from Tanyfoel on the Rhagatt estate, and that your wife and one of your sons had died through fretting over it. Perhaps you will kindly give me all particulars; and if I have a farm vacant let me know, and you shall have it forthwith (if you want one). You must be aware that I have no sympathy with such conduct, and that I cannot help what was done before I came of age, 16 years ago. Will you please do me the justice to go and explain this at Ruthin, when the Commission meets, otherwise you may do me harm.

Yours truly,
E. O. V. LLOYD.

"Please take this letter and show it to the Commission at Ruthin next week.

"E. O. V. L."

Chairman.

Is Mr. Lloyd in the room. (No answer.) If he wishes to make any statement upon this, we shall be very glad for him to do so. See 61,475-61,484.

The witness withdrew.

Colonel GEORGE MOUSLEY called and examined.

Chairman.

61,343. You are the agent on the estate of Mrs. Naylor Leyland?—If you will allow me, I have written out my evidence in a condensed form, and I should like to read it.

61,344. I will just ask you two or three questions first?—Very well, my Lord.

61,345. You are a practical agent, and you are well versed in farming?—I am.

61,346. You have had an education in farming and you are well versed in your business?—I am.

61,347. Will you kindly give us your evidence?—The estate which I represent is situate in the parishes of Llanellidan, Llanfair, Clocfenog and Derwen, comprising in extent about 3,900 acres. There are 28 tenants holding less than 50 acres; 17 tenants holding 50 and under 100 acres; eight tenants holding 100 and under 200 acres; one tenant holding over 200 acres; making a total of 53. There are three cottage tenants holding land under 10 acres; 29 without land; making a total of 32. Neither language, politics, nor religion have any influence in the selection of tenants, and such a practice as that of letting land to the highest bidder is unknown in my experience. Farms are usually let under agreements from year to year, and leases are not demanded. I believe there is a perfectly friendly and confidential feeling existing between the landlady and her tenants, and addresses have on several occasions been presented by the tenant, to the late Colonel Naylor Leyland, and to Mrs.

Chairman—continued.

Naylor Leyland, thanking them for their kind sympathy, and that the present system of management is perfectly satisfactory, and meets the requirements of each, and that the establishment of a land court would be highly prejudicial to the interests of both, and of the Principality in general. There are few disturbances of tenants from any cause, except that of death, and in such cases the nearest relative is generally selected to succeed to the holding. Most of the farms are held by representatives of families who have been tenants on the estate for generations. Many of the cottages are occupied by aged and infirm widows, who are allowed to live rent free, or pay merely nominal rents. Very liberal distributions of coal, clothing, and food are made every year by Mrs. Naylor Leyland to the poor on her own estate, and others residing within a radius of two or three miles. This statement is perfectly gratuitous and unauthorised on my part, and I merely submit it with a view of showing the kind and generous disposition Mrs. Naylor Leyland has always evinced towards those by whom she is surrounded. I have, however, been specially requested by Mrs. Naylor Leyland to state that ever since she has held the property it has been her determination to treat her tenantry with the utmost liberality, and to contribute in every possible way to their comfort and prosperity, and that she would be glad to do even more than hitherto, if it could be pointed out to her

4 September 1894.]

Colonel GEORGE MOUSLEY.

in what way it could be accomplished, without drawing still more heavily upon the resources of her own private income. After deducting the cost of rates, taxes, maintenance and other charges for the past year, there remained a balance of only 700*l.* out of the income from the estate.

61,348. Is there any objection to putting in the income of the estate?—Well, I have had no authority to do so; I do not suppose there would be any real objection to it.

61,349. I would not ask you to do it without authority of course, but what you say is that when everything is paid there is so much left?—That is so.

61,350. How much did you say there was?—700*l.*

61,351. Out of the 4,000 acres more or less?—Yes. 700*l.* out of the income from the estate and in several years the expenditure under the various heads has exceeded the income to a very considerable extent. Rents at the present time are about 25 per cent. lower than they were from 30 to 50 years back, although in the meantime a railway has been constructed running through the heart of the estate, with a station in a central position, affording access to all parts of the Kingdom. The following abatements and reductions of rent have been made:—

1881. 10 per cent. abatement on the year's rent.

1885. 10 per cent. abatement on the year's rent.

1886. Permanent reduction of rents varying in amounts up to 20 per cent.

1892. 10 per cent. abatements of half year's rent due Michaelmas.

1893. 10 per cent. abatements of half year's rent due Michaelmas.

1894. 10 per cent. abatements of half year's rent due Michaelmas.

During the past 29 years there has been expended a sum of 33,375*l.* 18*s.* 6*d.* on new buildings and repairs, and a further sum of 7,926*l.* 16*s.* 11*d.* on drainage and other improvements, making a total of 41,302*l.* 15*s.* 11*d.*, which gives an average expenditure of 1,424*l.* 4*s.* 8*d.* The above sum of 41,302*l.* 15*s.* 11*d.* includes the cost of building eight new farm houses and nine new cottages. No interest has ever been charged on monies expended in buildings and improvement excepting as to the sum of 1,920*l.* spent upon draining in 1869, on which 5 per cent. interest, amounting to 96*l.*, was charged, but that has long since been absorbed.

61,352. Is that your statement?—That is.

61,353. There are a great many questions that you have been good enough to answer in this syllabus that we have had answered several times, and in your case by the tenants of the estate, so I do not think I need trouble you to go through them; the particulars about the date of entry, and compensation and so on, and we have had your agreement handed in. Shall we just go through this, or have you finished your statement?—I have finished my statement, but I am prepared to be examined upon the syllabus if you desire it.

Chairman—continued.

61,354. We have been told by the tenants pretty well everything, I think. The arrangement appears to be entirely satisfactory between the landlady and yourself and the tenants. You speak very highly of the tenants, I suppose?—Certainly; as a body I speak most highly of them.

61,355. You consider them a hard-working industrious class of men?—Yes, very much so.

61,356. Have they improved their farms as a rule?—Many of them have very considerably improved their farms.

61,357. And they seem quite satisfied, so long as Mrs. Naylor Leyland lives, with the state of things; they do not want any alterations?—They have always so expressed themselves.

61,358. You tell us that when everything is paid on this 4,000 acres there were only 700*l.* this year?—Last year.

61,359. And on some years nothing has been left at all?—Less than nothing.

61,360. It was a minus quantity?—Yes.

61,361. It brought in nothing?—Yes.

61,362. We have heard the same about the Duke of Westminster's property, the Halkyn Castle estate; it brings in nothing, so that if this property belonged to a man who had no other income, there would be nothing whatever left for the landlord or his family to live on?—That would be so.

61,363. If a commercial business were carried on on those principles, it could not possibly last very long?—Quite so.

61,364. Would you consider that this is a satisfactory state of things?—No, I consider it is highly unsatisfactory, but when you speak of a commercial concern, I should say that the principle upon this estate would be very much changed. In lieu of so much being expended as has been hitherto expended upon the tenants for their comforts and conveniences, less would be spent upon them and more upon the landlord.

61,365. Then would the rents go down, or would the rents keep up to their present standard?—I think there is a certain margin under which they would not go down.

61,366. On your own estate?—On this estate.

61,367. Do you think that the estate could be worked on conditions fair to the tenant, and that there would be a sufficient margin left to the landlord to support himself and his family and live at the mansion—I suppose there is a mansion?—There is a mansion, yes.

61,368. Could the mansion be kept up out of the estate?—No, not possibly under any circumstances.

61,369. Do you consider that a satisfactory state of things?—Well I must explain. The mansion is larger than the estate would under any circumstances maintain, but I think, with a fair amount of consideration for the tenants, more money might be put by than has been. If any landlord took the estate and had to live upon the proceeds of the estate, in all probability

4 September 1894.]

Colonel GEORGE MOUSLEY.

less would be done for the tenants. The estate might be carried on, but certainly not so comfortably, and probably not quite so profitably, to the tenants.

61,370. Under these circumstances could the landlord live in the big house on the property if he had only the property to depend on?—Certainly not.

61,371. That would be an impossibility?—Perfectly impossible.

Mr. Grove.

61,372. When you speak of the net sum of 700*l.*, we may assume, I suppose correctly, that a large amount has been spent in keeping up the repairs and improvements on the estate?—Certainly, yes.

61,373. May we assume that the estate was in a worse condition than estates generally, so as to cause a larger amount to be expended?—No, I do not think that would be the fair inference. I account for it in this way to a great extent: that the system of farming has very much altered within the last few years. Land, as you have heard, has been laid down to pasture, and consequently more stock has been kept, and has to be housed, therefore additional accommodation has had to be provided in consequence of the change in cultivation.

61,374. Did you hear the evidence of Mr. Henry Williams yesterday, in which he gave us the prices of agricultural produce for 1874 and 1894?—I did, but I have not gone into that subject; I thought that was more a matter for a practical farmer of the neighbourhood; but, from my own knowledge, I should say that that is a very fair statement.

61,375. He said that barley was 16*s.*, and is now 8*s.*, and potatoes were 12*s.* to 15*s.*, and they are now 5*s.* I suppose, generally speaking, you would confirm that, would you?—I should.

61,376. Should you consider there is great depression in agriculture at the present time?—Oh, undoubtedly.

Mr. Richard Jones.

61,377. What was the object in altering the agreements?—Because of the alteration in proprietorship, owing to the death of the late Colonel Leyland, whose widow succeeded to the estate. That was the only object there was at the time for altering the agreement.

61,378. At whose suggestion was the agreement altered?—I beg your pardon. I did not mean altered, I meant that a new agreement was put forward. The opportunity of a new agreement being put in probably suggested that small alteration which has been pointed out.

61,379. When was there a change in proprietorship?—In 1886–87.

61,380. You heard a question put to one of the witnesses, whether it was true that the messenger who took the agreements round for signature, also had a notice to quit in his pocket?—I did hear the question, but I do not believe there is any truth in the statement.

Mr. Richard Jones—continued.

61,381. You know nothing of it?—I know nothing of it. If he went round with a notice to quit I ought to know, and probably did know something about it, but at the present moment I do not recollect, and I do not believe that it was so. The messenger who took these agreements round is in the Court, and if you would like to ask him the question I am sure he will answer it.

61,382. What is the rent of Enoch Jones' place?—The rent of Enoch Jones' farm has been reduced to 70*l.*

61,383. What is the rental in the agreement?—90*l.* I believe.

61,384. You have not altered that sum to 70*l.*?—I have not altered the original sums in any agreements. I have never been asked to do so, and the reason why the original sum was left in the agreement was simply because it appeared so in all other agreements.

61,385. Do you regard it as a permanent reduction?—Yes, certainly, at the present moment I have no doubt about it. Unless prices and times alter very considerably for the better it must be a permanent reduction.

61,386. So that in a case of bankruptcy you would easily come forward as a creditor for 90*l.*, and not for 70*l.*?—We might, but I do not suppose we should.

61,387. But it is very likely?—No, it is not, sir.

Mr. Griffiths.

61,388. Are you in favour of small holdings, up to about 20 acres?—Not if I could maintain large ones. In a district where large ones would prevail, I would not be in favour of small holdings.

61,389. What is the condition generally of these people who occupy land up to about 20 acres; are they better off than the labourers, do you think?—No, I do not think they are at the present time. Wages are higher, and food is cheaper than it has ever been before.

61,390. And these people live very hard, do they?—The tenants—the farmers?

61,391. Those who occupy these small farms up to 20 acres?—Oh, I think they look in fairly good condition.

61,392. In the report of Mr. Doyle, to the Royal Commission on Agriculture, in 1882, he speaks of them as being worse off than the labourers a good deal, and living harder than the labourers do?—Yes, I think that is so to a certain extent.

61,393. Have you any cottagers on the estate who keep cows?—I think I said that there were three cottages with land—labouring men with cottages and land attached—but only three.

61,394. How much land would they have?—Up to about 10 acres.

61,395. Just a little place to keep a cow or two?—Yes; I may say that there have been no applications for cottages with land beyond that.

61,396. Do you not think, if there were more of those established on every farm it would tend to keep the labourers on the farms, instead of their flocking from the country into the towns?

—No doubt it would.

Lord Kenyon.

61,397. I want, if I can, to go a little further into the matter of these expenses on improvements, and so on, which seem to be so very high on the Naylor Leyland estate. Could you tell me what these improvements are more in detail?
—Well, I could not tell you more in detail now beyond what I have told you—that we have built entirely eight new farmhouses, and nine new cottages, and that we have added very considerably to other farmhouses on the estate.

61,398. In how many years are you speaking of?—I am speaking of within the last 29 years.

61,399. How many farms are there altogether?
—About 53.

61,400. As Lord Carrington has very wisely said, unless there were some other resources no landowner could possibly exist under these circumstances, spending more than he received. The house, I think, is a new house, Nant Clwyd?
—It is.

61,401. I mean comparatively new?—Yes.

61,402. And is much bigger, as you said, than the estate itself could keep up?—Yes.

61,403. It would not be fair to compare that with a purely landowner's house?—Oh no, not at all.

61,404. It seems a little unfair possibly on surrounding landowners who manage to live on their estates within their means, and yet manage to keep on good terms with their tenants?
—Yes.

61,405. I mean the comparison of expenditure would be to their detriment, would it not?—Probably it might, but I daresay it would be capable of explanation in some way.

61,406. These eight new farmhouses were rather an expensive class of farmhouse?—Yes.

61,407. Rather ornamental?—Yes, rather ornamental.

61,408. Perhaps a little more is expended on them than would be necessary for a farmhouse?
—In repairs.

61,409. I do not want to object to the expenditure in the least. I merely want to try and see how far it gives a basis of comparison?—I should be very pleased to help you in any way I could.

61,410. Of course there are several landowners who have nothing but their incomes from the land to depend upon, and yet they manage to exist?—Yes; but in a very different way—a very different mode of life.

61,411. But their tenants seem equally satisfied?—I cannot say whether they are or not. I take it on a neighbouring estate—say the estate of Lord Bagot—there is I imagine very little balance left, and there is not so very much done for the tenants.

61,412. On the other hand, that I fancy is a heavily mortgaged estate?—That may be. I think in the case of Colonel West you heard that he had not very much to put in his own pocket after he had satisfied all the requirements of the tenantry.

61,413. If he manages to keep his estate in good order?—Yes, the estate certainly, but it does not leave much balance for him, I should imagine.

61,414. Have you thought at all of any remedies for the present state of things?—I do not know that one could suggest remedies. We cannot compete at the present time, and in the present mode, with foreign competition. There are preferential rates given and freights are very low, and in fact in some instances corn has been landed in Liverpool as ballast, and had a bonus upon it for the purpose of coming over as ballast. Well, we cannot possibly compete against that. Then, our own home railway rates are very irregular and very oppressive. I believe cheese can be brought from New York to London for less money than it could be conveyed from Chester to London. All those sort of things tell very much against the prospect of farming profitably.

61,415. Do you see any possibility of amending those railway rates?—I do not, because an attempt was made sometime ago, and I think the result of that was that rates went up instead of down.

61,416. I suppose the Agricultural Holdings Act on your estate has not been made use of at all?—There is nothing to bring us within the Agricultural Holdings Act so far.

61,417. You have your own schedule?—We have our own schedule.

61,418. Is that the Vale of Clwyd schedule?
—No, we have our own special allowances.

61,419. Perhaps you will kindly put that in?
—You have it in one of the agreements that have been put in.

61,420. That, as a rule, you find perfectly satisfactory, do you?—I find they are perfectly satisfied with it; I have never had any objection to it in any way whatever.

61,421. One thing more with regard to these eight new farmhouses, did the tenants do the haulage for them?—Yes, in many cases they did.

61,422. Willingly?—Oh, perfectly willingly.

61,423. I suppose they have none of them left, or anything of that sort; there has been no application for compensation?—No.

61,424. Were the tenants paid for the haulage in anyway?—No. The only thing is that the circumstances of the tenant are always taken into account. If a man does not possess a team, then the haulage is done for him, but if he has a team he is consulted as to the time, and he is asked to perform the haulage at a time when it is convenient for him to do the work.

61,425. Have you any clause in your schedule giving compensation to tenants for haulage in case of their leaving their farms?—No, none.

61,426. You would not object to one being put in?—Not in the least.

61,427. Say a seven years' clause?—Not in the least.

4 September 1894.]

Colonel GEORGE MOUSLEY.

[Continued.]

Mr. Richard Jones.

Mr. Grove—continued.

61,428. Is the land on Mrs. Naylor Leyland's estate about as good as any in the vale?—No, the land lower down, nearer to this town, in the vale, is better than Mrs. Naylor Leyland's land.

61,429. What is the highest rental; how much per acre more than Mrs. Naylor Leyland's estate?—I think it is about 25s. an acre.

61,430. There is no sheepwalk included in that?—No, not at all.

61,431. What is the lowest?—The lowest will be about 7s. 6d. or 10s. an acre.

61,432. That would be the highly-situated farms?—Yes.

61,433. You say here: "The general relations between landlord and tenant are friendly. Witness will give opinion as to when they are most friendly." What is the meaning of that?—I did not frame that note.

61,434. It is here: "I thought you made some distinction?—I might say they are most friendly when they are nearest together, that is when the owners reside continually upon their estates. I say here in my own notes—"Friendly mostly" where landlords reside on their own estates."

61,435. Is it true that there is not sufficient accommodation in the farmhouses for the men servants on your estate?—I think there is sufficient accommodation in the farmhouses, and out of them, in cottages, for all the labourers required on the estate.

61,436. The reply here is to this effect: "Females in house, and males in adjoining house?"—That means that there is, generally speaking, a separate staircase for the males. The females live nearer to the family, and the males have an approach to their own rooms separate and distinct from the house.

61,437. But is it really a part of the house?—Oh yes, certainly.

Professor Rhys.

61,438. Do you think that that is a desirable arrangement, does that work all right—that the servant men should have a separate door to go in and out when they like?—I do not say of necessity a separate door, but a separate staircase—it may be the ordinary door of the house.

Mr. Grove.

61,439. One question as to railway rates. You speak of the very low charge for bringing foreign produce from America to London. Do you complain also of the railway rates on local lines?

—Yes. I have not thought of going to that subject or being asked about it, but incidentally I have made a few inquiries as to railway charges; and I took a note of them. I have gone upon hearing complaints of the farmers in the neighbourhood to the effect that they cannot dispose of their produce excepting very near home on account of the high railway rates. I have taken the places that they have most used to send produce to from this neighbourhood; railway rates to and from Nantclwyd Station and Widnes for manure in lots of two tons is charged for at the rate of 7s. 1d. per ton.

61,440. What would be the distance?—It would be from about 50 to 60 miles. Do you wish to have this table of rates all through so far as I have taken them.

61,441. If you will kindly refer to the table and put it in it may be useful?—Yes. (The witness handed in the following table):

Railway rates to and from Nantclwyd Station.

From Widnes:—Manure in lots of two tons 7s. 1d. per ton—four tons 7s. 11d. per ton.

From Liverpool:—Cotton cake in two-ton lots, 12s. per ton. Corn, flour, meat, &c., in two-ton lots, 10s. 5d. per ton.

To Wrexham:—Barley in four-ton lots 5s. 8d. per ton.

To Rhyl:—Sheep, small truck, 13s. 6d.; medium, 15s. 6d.; large, 17s. 3d.

To Manchester:—Sheep: Small truck, 1l. 17s. 3d.; medium, 2l. 2s. 4d.; large, 2l. 9s. 1d.

To Llandudno:—Sheep: Small truck, 1l. 0s. 10d.; medium, 1l. 4s. 2d.; large, 1l. 7s. 7d.

From Vron collieries:—Coal. Four-ton lots, 3s. 2d.

September, 1894.

Chairman.

61,442. I have three or four questions to ask you, Colonel Mousley, the first few being from Mr. Owen Wynne—"Do you not think that a land court would tend to alienate landlord and tenant and cause a great diminution in the landlord's interest in his estate?"—I do, my Lord, most certainly. I think it would alienate the landlord's interest in his estate; it would deprive him of a great deal of pleasure and interest that he would take in it; and in all probability it would result in his removing to other parts of the country, and it would depopulate the Principality as regards occupying landowners. In fact I do not see what position the landowner under those circumstances would occupy; he would have nothing to interest him in the land, and the only thing that he would be required to do would be to receive this sort of rent charge which would be fixed for him, and the tenants would be thrust upon him at a certain rate of interest whether he liked it or whether he did not. I think that would reduce the position of a landowner to that of the tin case to hold the title deeds; he would have no other position with reference to the estate which is called his own.

61,443. "Do you think farmers would willingly give up part of their farms for the sake of creating cow holdings for labourers?"—I have never asked them in that particular light, or canvassed them in any way as to the cow holdings for labourers; but I know under other circumstances they are most jealous of every acre they have, and as soon as there is the slightest chance of getting their slice out of a neighbouring farm they are only too ready to be after it. The tendency is to increase their holdings and not to diminish them.

4 September 1894.]

Colonel GEORGE MOUSLEY.

Chairman—continued.

61,444. The following questions are handed in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones, "What is the present rent of Pwll Naid?" Have you a farm of that name?—There is a farm of that name, my Lord, but I really forget at the present moment what the rent is. It is very considerably less than what it used to be; if that is the point of the question.

61,445. Have you got the rental of the estate?—I have not.

61,446. Can you answer this question, "What was the rent before 1890?"—No, I really cannot.

61,447. Mr. Llewellyn Jones' questions continued, "Did the former tenant die in the year 1890?"—I think he did.

61,448. "Did his widow apply to you for the farm?"—No, never.

61,449. "Did you take her as tenant?"—No.

61,450. "How long had her husband been tenant of the farm?"—I should think about 25 or 26 years.

61,451. "Had he greatly improved his holding?"—I think I may answer that by saying that the present tenant has very considerably improved it since he came, and concessions have been made to him for doing so.

61,452. I am afraid I must ask you to answer the question whether the deceased man had greatly improved his holding in his time?—I cannot answer you, my Lord, nearer than that, because I do not recollect exactly what the condition of it was.

61,453. You cannot answer that. That is sufficient. Mr. Llewellyn Jones' questions continued, "Did you grant the widow any compensation?"—In this way, that the arrears of rent were not collected from her.

61,454. Then there are two questions which are of a private nature. I will hand them to you, and will you kindly read them as they are of a personal nature.

(Mr. Llewellyn Jones.) I do not press those questions, my Lord.

Chairman.

No, of course not.

[The questions were handed to the witness.]

(The Witness.) I have no particular objection to answering them if they are asked.

61,455. "When did you cease to be the trustee of the Llanbedr Hall and Bathafarn Hall estates?"—I have not ceased to be the trustee at all.

61,456. You are still the trustee?—I am.

61,457. These are Mr. Llewellyn Jones' questions continued, "You are trustee of the Llanbedr Hall and Bathafarn Hall estates, are you not?"—I am.

61,458. "When you became trustee was a new agreement prepared for or by you?"—It was

Chairman—continued.

61,459. "Does this agreement contain the following clause:—'All claims or matters in dispute under this agreement, and all compensation, allowances, payments, and valuations to which either party may claim to be entitled under this agreement, or under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883 or otherwise, and all questions as to the construction of this agreement, &c. . . . shall be settled in the matter provided by the said Act, but without any appeal in any case to the county court, and the provisions of section 23 of such Act, relating to notices and appeals to the county court, shall not apply to this tenancy.'"

In the Act the appeal to the county court is allowed "where the sum claimed for compensation exceeds 100*l.*, either party may within seven days after delivery of the award appeal against it to the judge of the county court on all or any of the following grounds:—(1.) That the award is invalid. (2.) That the award proceeds wholly or in part upon an improper application of or upon the omission properly to apply the special provisions of sections 3, 4, or 5 of this Act. (3.) That compensation has been awarded for improvements, acts, or things, breaches of covenants or agreements, or for committing or permitting waste, in respect of which the party claiming was not entitled to compensation. (4.) That compensation has not been awarded for improvements, acts, or things, breaches of covenants or agreements, or for committing or permitting waste, in respect of which the party claiming was entitled to compensation; and the judge shall hear and determine the appeal, and may, in his discretion, remit the case to be re-heard as to the whole or any part thereof by the referee or referees, or umpire, with such directions as he may think fit. If no appeal is so brought, the award shall be final."

The question which Mr. Llewellyn Jones asks upon that is: "Do you not think this is an attempt to exclude the Agricultural Holdings Act, and therefore void?"—It possibly may be void in point of law, but it was not the spirit and disposition with which that clause was put in. It was merely put in to avoid unnecessary and vexatious costs of appealing to a county court when it might be done otherwise.

61,460. Mr. Llewellyn Jones' questions continued: "Do you consider it fair to insert a clause of this nature?"—I think it is perfectly fair; if it was fair on one side, it would be on the other. If it is admitted that the object of that was to prevent expense, it is as much the object of the tenant to be protected from unnecessary expense as for the landlord to be protected.

61,461. You consider it fair?—I do, my Lord.

61,462. "Do you still act as agent on these estates." That is the two estates you have mentioned as being trustee of?—No.

61,463. "If not, when did you cease to act as agent?"—Nearly two years ago.

4 September 1894.]

Colonel GEORGE MOUSLEY.

Lord Kenyon.

61,464. With regard to this clause of yours in the agreement, I suppose it would militate quite as much against the landlord as against the tenant?—Every bit; if it is against one it would be against the other, and, as I said, if it is in favour of one it must be in favour of the other.

61,465. Did you insert this clause after taking legal advice?—I really could not say how I came to, probably not.

61,466. It occurred in an agreement that we were looking at two or three days ago; I forget which agreement it was now. The provisions in the Act which would make it null and void, if any, is of course section 55, which is as follows: "Any contract, agreement, or covenant, made by a tenant, by virtue of which he is deprived of his right to claim compensation under this Act in respect of any improvement mentioned in the first schedule hereto (except an agreement providing such compensation as is by this Act permitted to be substituted for compensation under this Act), shall, as far as it deprives him of such right, be void both at law and in equity." And the question is whether this is an agreement made by the tenant which will deprive him of compensation. As a matter of fact, it only deprives him of a right of appeal?—The process of appealing?

61,467. Yes?—There is no penalty imposed nor injury done to anybody if it is null and void; there is an end of it.

Mr. Griffiths.

61,468. On what ground do you consider that either landlord or tenant would be compelled to appeal to a land court if neither chose to do so?—Is that in reference to the last question that was asked?

61,469. No, it is with regard to the land court?—Because I think the present system answers—

61,470. What I mean is that there would be no compulsion on any estate. Perhaps on your estate neither the landlord nor the tenants would want to appeal to a land court?—No, but there is this cloud hanging over the heads of both; there would be the fear and the threat of it. You may just as well have a land court once for all as to have one that is to be appealed to if either party feels inclined; you may just as well admit the principle at once and establish

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

it. We say we do not want one, because we feel at present there is every prospect of being able to satisfy the tenants without a land court, and that a land court would not possibly be established without creating what we call a scare on the part of the landowners.

61,471. Why should there not be a prospect so long as they can agree with you as well as they do at present?—On the other hand, why, so long as they do agree as well as at present, should there be this institution established.

61,472. On the ground that others cannot agree?—But I think you will take it from all the evidence you have heard, and the expressions of opinion from everybody, that those who cannot agree are very considerably in the minority.

61,473. I quite agree with you; we are fully satisfied with regard to that, but we have so many cases that really some outside authority should be brought to bear upon?—The subject has been named in various ways, first of all as to what is meant by a land court. I take it—at least I am arguing on that assumption—that a land court would be established to say, between a landlord and tenant who could not agree, what the rent should be, and the landlord must of necessity accept that tenant at a particular rent, that is, that it would tie him not only to the amount of rent, but also to the applicant, we will say, under a reduced rent. If a sitting tenant comes to his landlord and wants his rent reduced, and the landlord refuses, then it is perfectly at the option of the tenant to change his landlord. A landlord would not be likely to allow a good tenant to leave him for the sake of a little difference in rent. A landlord is capable of judging what his rent should be, and in all probability he would be advised by someone else as to what would be a fair rent, and if a tenant is not willing to give a fair rent, the sooner he and the landlord part the better.

61,474. But it is very hard upon a tenant that almost his whole lifetime should be spent on a farm, and that he should be obliged to leave that farm in bad times?—Yes, it would be if he had no chance of being recompensed.

Mr. Griffiths.

We have met with many of those cases, and that is the worst of it. That is all I have to ask.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EDWARD OWEN VAUGHAN LLOYD called and examined.

Chairman.

61,475. Where do you live?—Rhagatt, Corwen.

61,476. You wish, I believe, to make a statement?—I do, my Lord.

61,477. I am afraid I must keep you entirely to any rebutting evidence. Do you understand that that is so?—Yes, that is all I desire.

Chairman—continued.

61,478. Not to go into any general topics?—No.

61,479. But only to deal with anything that has been said, and which you wish to contradict or qualify?—Yes. I wish to make a statement with regard to the remarks made by a former tenant on the Rhagatt estate, at the Llangollen sitting of the Commission the other day, the 28th of August.

61,480. Is that in the evidence of Mr. John Jones?—It is. I immediately wrote to him asking further particulars, and I have had no answer, but I believe the then agent of the estate, Mr. Richard Wynne, is present. At any rate he came by the train this morning, and I believe he is ready to speak for himself as to what did transpire. I may say that what Mr. John Jones referred to occurred two years before I came of age, in fact about the year 1876, and so far as I understand it, Mr. Richard Wynne tells me that he was an undesirable tenant. There appears to have been a quarrel between the then tenant and the agent.

61,481. Will you kindly tell us what is entirely within your own knowledge please. Do not mention anything that anybody has told you?—Well, my Lord, I was very much shocked to hear that a former tenant on the Rhagatt estate should attend at the Llangollen sitting of the Commission and make the statement that he made. I would have been present there if I had known such evidence was to be given, or known that it was to be stated that an eviction took place on the estate, which ultimately resulted in the death of his wife and son, who grieved over it very much. I was particularly shocked at hearing this, and I wish it to be perfectly understood that I had nothing to do with the estate at the time, but I believe it to

I wrote at once to the “Liverpool Courier,” where I had seen this account, in order to make this explanation. I am not going to offer further evidence before the Commission, but I wish to say that other remarks have been made about my estate with regard to shooting and consolidation, and I shall be glad to put in any written evidence that may be desired, or to answer any questions. Chairman.

61,490. You are Major Birch, and you gave evidence, I think, at Mold?—Yes, I gave rebutting evidence there.

61,491. As agent to Mr. Cooke?—Yes. This is with regard to an affair connected with the Gellygynan estate, the owner of which is Mr. Carstairs Jones.

61,492. Is that the estate on which the last gentleman we have seen is a tenant?—Yes, Evan Goodwin is a tenant of Mr. Carstairs Jones.

61,493. You appear for Mr. Carstairs Jones?—Yes. Mr. Goodwin has said that he is subject to a very hard agreement, and I think in the interests of Mr. Carstairs Jones he should explain to the Commission what that agreement is, because I am totally in ignorance of it myself. I do not know what he has to complain of in any way, but with regard to any complaint he has to make I am here as representing Mr. Carstairs Jones to go into it and answer it.

61,494. I think he is quite satisfied now; I do not think we need go any further into the matter?—If he is quite satisfied I am, but I do not wish it to be supposed that there is any hard or unreasonable agreement. Mr. Carstairs Jones agreement will be put before you tomorrow at Denbigh, and you will have an

Chairman.

61,499. You are a freeholder and occupy a farm jointly with your brother in the parish of Llanarmon, and you are also an alderman of the Denbighshire County Council?—That is so, my Lord.

61,500. I think you have prepared a statement?—Yes.

61,501. Will you kindly give us your statement?—My father became tenant of Plas Llanarmon farm, on the Gellygynan estate, on the 23rd day of November, 1866, and continued to be tenant of the said farm until his death, which took place on the 17th day of March, 1870. After his death a brother of mine and I became co-tenants of the same farm. Everything went on smoothly until the school board question was raised in our parish. I took a prominent part in favour of forming a school board. The vicar, the rector, and my landlord, Mr. John Carstairs Jones, were strongly against such board. Mr. John Carstairs Jones was chairman of the parish vestry at which the parishioners decided in favour of a school board.

61,502. I understand Mr. Carstairs Jones' representative, his agent, Major Birch, is present?—After this I had a notice to quit. I cannot say such notice was given because of the part I took in the school-board controversy, but I opportunity of considering it then, and if there is anything in it which is objectionable no doubt you will find it out.

61,495. So far as we can see you are both perfectly satisfied?—Yes, I suppose I am.

Lord Kenyon

61,496. Have you had any conversation with him since?—Most certainly not, until I saw his name as a witness I had no idea that he was coming forward.

61,497. Because the connexion between the two letters seems to imply that there had been some arrangement made in consequence of his saying he would give evidence?—None whatever. He wrote a letter to me saying he was leaving the farm, and he wanted to know about the away-going crop, and he said he had taken some things on the farm, and he also made the remark that the farm was better than when he went to it. That is a matter of opinion, or rather I do not think there can be much matter of opinion about it.

61,498. Did you answer that letter?—I answered that letter, and I said that when the Land Commission was over I should have great pleasure in going up to see him, but before that I had not any time to do so.

experienced a marked change in my landlord's attitude towards me after the vestry meeting referred to, which ended in giving me a notice. In a short time after this we retook the farm.

On the 21st day of September, 1879, the local agent of the estate died, and in a few weeks after I was engaged in his stead, and continued in that trust until the tithe dispute arose.

61,503. Kindly tell us what was the date of the tithe dispute?—It was in 1886. This dispute troubled Mr. Carstairs Jones very much, for he remarked to me one day when we were together talking of the dispute; said he, "I wish, John, you would give it up—I cannot have peace; I am poked on all sides, I am poked all round." "It is a political question," I said, "and you are not to interfere,"—because there was an understanding between us that he was not to interfere with me in any political or religious questions,—"I know a great deal more about the clergymen of Wales than you do, and you must leave me alone in my dealing with them."

Chairman.

61,504. That is what you said?—That is what I said, my Lord. After this the "Land" and "Labour League" was formed, and I was elected president. At the beginning of the second year of this league its rules and tenets were published in Welsh and English. I have copies of them which I can hand in. (The witness handed in several copies of printed pamphlets.)

61,505. This was published in Welsh and in English?—It was published in Welsh and in English, and in several newspapers. Then I had a letter from Mr. Edmund Swetenham, the agent and managing trustee of the estate, dated from Cam yr Alyn, Rossett, Wrexham, December 27th, 1887.

61,506. Have you got that letter?—Yes, my Lord.

61,507. You had better put that in, I think?—Yes. (The witness handed in the original letter.)

61,508. We will mark that A.?—The letter is as follows:—

“ 27th December, 1887. “ Cam yr Alyn
(Private) Rossett,

Dear Sir, Wrexham.

Thanks for sending me John Jones' address about Bwlch Farm. I have not written to him, as I fear the days of tenant farmers on the Gelly estate may be numbered.

I read in yesterday's 'Times' the enclosed cutting “that was a cutting of the rules” and a leading article thereon. I hope and trust your name has been used without your knowledge and consent, and that you will allow me to repudiate it, as the idea of your being the “president” of such a scheme will cause Mr. Carstairs Jones great pain and distrust.

He has always valued you as a conscientious man, but it must be at once apparent to you that the league you are proposing to introduce into Wales will be as prejudicial to the free action of landlords and tenants as the National League is injurious to Ireland.

Your position as president or member of such a league would be entirely at variance with the position of a loyal farmer and manager on his estate, and would be injurious to the interest of his tenants whom he values so much.

When he let you the farm again he told me you had stipulated (rightly enough) for absolute freedom of conscience, but on the other hand he stipulated for absolute loyalty to him and his estate.

As an independent man you are at liberty to advance any opinions and take any action you think right—as “president” you will be bound to introduce your league into Llanarmon and do all you can to forward its interests.

Mr. Carstairs Jones will be equally obliged to depend upon himself and frustrate his own tenants' schemes.

The resignation of your farm would, I fear, not meet the case, because under your rules it would be boycotted and no one would take it!!

There seems to me only one, and that a sad course open, which is to take up the whole estate on the 30th November next, and to get a Company to farm it, which I think can be done with great pecuniary advantage to the landlord. I never thought to live to see the peaceable, hitherto loyal tenants cast out of their farms by the action of one of their number. I pray you may be able to prevent such a catastrophe.

Yours truly,
EDMUND SWETENHAM.”

Mr. John Parry.”

The day after the receipt of the above I received the following from my landlord:—

“ Hartsheath,

John Parry, December 28th, 1887.

I have read in the “Times” you occupy the position of president of the Welsh Land League, and I cannot express the sorrow and annoyance it has given me. The position of trust you have held on my property for so long should have prevented you taking such a step—our connexion will have to cease.

Yours truly,
J. C. JONES.”

Without going further into the correspondence that took place between us, it is quite enough to say it terminated in my quitting the farm, the land on the 30th November 1888, and the house on the 1st May 1889, on being paid 90*l.* in full discharge of all my claims for improvements, &c.

61,509. We will take this second statement now, and then the Commissioners will deal with the whole statement together?—With regard to the Gellygynan estate.

61,510. That is the estate of which you were agent?—Yes, my Lord.

The Gellygynan estate contains about 2,200 acres of land, and is divided into 26 holdings or tenements. One holding contains over 350 acres, one other contains over 250 acres, three others over 100 acres, two others over 60 acres, five others from 10 to 20 acres, and three others over 4 acres. Besides the 26 holdings mentioned, there are five cottages with plots of land belonging to them under 4 acres.

The soil is comparatively cold and poor, the subsoil in many parts is black gravel. Most of the estate is more than 800 feet above the sea level. Rents are considered high, especially on the small holdings, the rental of some of these exceeds 20*s.* an acre, while the largest farms are under 15*s.* per acre. All the farms are let by the year, under a special agreement.

61,511. Do you put in the agreement?—I will hand in the agreement, my Lord. (Handed.)

61,512. We will mark that “C.”?—The conditions of which appear very hard, but they are never enforced. Five of the present holdings are consolidated. The effects of this, evidently, is to reduce the population by five families. There was no trouble nor trespass with game while the landlord lived upon the estate. But when the Hall and the shooting was let to a sporting tenant, the rabbits increased fearfully and caused a considerable trespass. I may add to this, that one tenant in less than three months killed over 3,500 rabbits on his farm.

61,513. Can you give us the name of the tenant and the name of the farm?—John Lewis, Gellygynan.

Mr. J. PARRY.

Chairman—continued.

61,514. How big was this holding?—It was the biggest farm on the estate.

61,515. How many acres was it?—About 3,500.

61,516. And he killed over 3,000 rabbits?—Over 3,500.

61,517. Have you any other evidence besides this to give us?—I have, my Lord.

61,518. The Commissioners propose to take this personal evidence first. Any questions they wish to ask upon it they will ask now, and have the general evidence afterwards. I myself have only two questions to ask you: Was the claim of 90% that you made, and which was met, as much as you had a right to claim, or did you claim more?—We believed that we could claim more, my Lord, but we preferred to have an amicable settlement.

61,519. You did get practically what you asked for?—Yes.

61,520. You were satisfied with that?—We were satisfied.

61,521. Then that settles that matter?—Because as for Mr. Carstairs Jones himself he was one of the best landlords in North Wales, and one of the nicest gentlemen, but, as he said to me, he was “poked” by others.

61,522. But what did this Welsh League refer to. Did it refer to anything besides tithes?—Oh, yes, to a land-purchase scheme and several other things.

61,523. It was a scheme that interfered with land tenure generally?—It was, my Lord.

61,524. As well as the tithe question?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

61,525. There are one or two things in your evidence which I should like to ask you a few questions about. You say in 1870 or thereabouts—after the meeting with regard to the school board—you experienced a marked change in your landlord's attitude towards you?—I did, my Lord.

61,526. But a few years afterwards he made you local agent—He did after I had notice to quit, and after I retook the farm. We got over the school board difficulty, and he and I were elected members of it.

61,527. Was that why you retook the farm?—Well, I cannot say that. I do not suppose he could get an applicant for the farm then. It was really a biggish farm, and had been on their hands for some time before we took it the first time.

61,528. Was this the farm upon which by any chance there was this enormous quantity of rabbits?—No, my Lord.

61,529. Did you retake it at the same rent?—We did.

61,530. Were you surprised that your landlord did not quite like your being president of this society?—No my Lord.

61,531. You did not think he would agree to the tenets expressed?—Well, as to the landlord himself, he would agree.

61,532. He would agree?—He would.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

61,533. Do you mean with everything contained in this pamphlet?—Not with everything in that, but with my being president.

61,534. Did you know that he did?—Yes, I knew that he did.

61,535. There are several things that I should think a landowner would not quite agree with at present or at that time at any rate; for instance, that game laws should be abolished. Did he go in for shooting at all?—On a small scale, but he was against keeping rabbits.

61,536. I daresay?—He killed all the rabbits whilst he was living amongst us.

61,537. With regard to the large number of rabbits that were killed which you spoke about, did the shooting tenant kill them, or did the tenant himself?—The tenant himself.

61,538. Did the shooting tenant kill any?—He killed on our farm, the Plas farm, and Gellygynan farm, in two days, something between 800 and 1,000 rabbits.

61,539. How did they get up to such a head; did you not take steps to keep them down?—It was because we were amongst the mountains and the plantations.

61,540. This was before the Ground Game Act?—No.

61,541. Do you think the Ground Game Act would prevent anything of that kind happening now?—The Ground Game Act had been passed then.

61,542. I understood you to say it was before that?—It had been passed then.

61,543. How was it that the tenants did not keep them down?—Because the tenants did not take advantage of that. While the landlord lived amongst us we had nothing to complain of, but when the Hall and the estate were let to a shooting tenant they became very troublesome.

61,544. Why did they not take advantage of the Act then?—They did afterwards, but that was the first year. I was commissioned to go round among the tenants after that to order them to protect themselves.

61,545. That would be Mr. Jones' wish I take it?—Yes, Mr. Jones' wish.

61,546. Did Mr. Jones agree with you on the tithe question; I think you said he did not?—He did not, my Lord.

61,547. You say, with regard to the Gellygynan estate, that the rents are considered high, especially on the small holdings. I suppose you would say that the small holdings are rather more expensive to the landowner than the large ones?—Yes, they are a great deal more expensive.

61,548. That is the reason, no doubt, of their being more highly rented?—There is no doubt about it.

61,549. At the same time, I suppose, you would like to see plenty of small holdings?—I should like to see more.

61,550. There is one matter in your league as to which I should like to know your opinion. With regard to the railway companies, you say: “The same terms should be secured to the

- Lord Kenyon—continued.

"farmers of this country from railway companies for the transit of animals, corn, and all other agricultural produce along their lines, as are charged for the conveyance of foreign produce, &c." That would be an excellent thing if you could get it; but how do you propose to arrive at it?—By the interference of Parliament. I do not suppose there is any other means, my Lord.

61,551. Parliament does limit their rates at present, as you know?—Yes; but then it did not.

61,552. Do you mean at the date of this; did it not limit them then?—I do not suppose it did.

61,553. This was in 1887?—It was after that I believe, that Parliament interfered with the rates.

61,554. I think it would be an excellent thing if we could get agricultural produce carried cheaper; but I should be very glad to know how to do, it?—There is another thing; I should very much like to have more railways—we are 7 miles from Mold, 7 miles from Ruthin, and the district is very outlandish.

61,555. Now you are referring to your general evidence, are you not. I was merely asking you how to obtain this feature, which I see mentioned in your pamphlet?—Our scheme was (whether it was right or wrong is another thing) to get Parliament—to get the State—to buy up all the railways, and to give all the facilities necessary for the transit of agricultural produce.

61,556. Do not you believe in private enterprise?—I do.

61,557. You would like private enterprise to start it, and then the State to buy it up. Is that so?—Well, unless it could be done otherwise.

61,558. Then you say: "No further loans from the public exchequer to be paid by Parliament to landlords." Why; what loans are you referring to?—Something similar to what I understand landlords have in Ireland.

61,559. With regard to improving their property, do you mean?—Yes.

61,560. Why should not they have any further loans?—Our case is that it should be extended to the tenant farmers and not to the landlords.

61,561. But why should not the landlords have it as well; you do not say that as well. You say facilities should be given to the tenants to purchase their farms; but you also say, "No further loans from the public exchequer should be made by Parliament to landlords"?—Yes, we considered (whether we are right or wrong is another question) that the landlords were favoured rather too much in comparison with what the tenant farmers were.

61,562. Would it not be better to level up instead of levelling down?—Yes, to level the tenants up.

61,563. I mean instead of taking it away from the one you might have granted it to both?—We did not want to take it away.

61,564. Then there is another thing at the end that I do not quite understand. Perhaps you will explain to me what it means: "In conclusion, the members of the League are most anxious to call the attention of tenant farmers to this fact—that there is nothing more important to them and their families, and the interest of the country generally, than that they should be perfectly faithful to one another, and abstain from interfering with each other's farms when tenants apply for reductions, until they have ascertained from the tenants themselves that they are free?"—Yes; it is a complaint in the country, that when a tenant farmer gives up his farm because of the high rent, and tries for better conditions and lower rent, his neighbours sneakingly will go behind him and take his farm.

61,565. But the tenant has to give notice first, do you mean?—The tenant has to give notice first.

61,566. Would not he be free then?—The tenant would be free; but he gives notice in order to get better terms. Generally he speaks to his landlord first of all, and is advised by his landlord or his agent to give notice in order to try and arrive at the better conditions—better terms.

61,567. Do not you think that a tenant farmer sometimes gets a reduction without having to give notice?—Very seldom.

61,568. Really?—Very seldom. In my own case I had to give notice when I had a reduction, although I was local agent.

61,569. Is that your own experience as sub-agent?—Yes.

61,570. You never granted an abatement or advised an abatement of rent without advising the tenant to give notice?—Abatements we have been having.

61,571. But when you were local agent did you never advise Mr. Carstairs Jones to give a reduction of rent without the tenant previously giving you notice?—Dear me, yes, several times.

61,572. It is a very curious way of doing it. If the reduction is fair and reasonable, and not unwarranted, it might have been got at without the tenant having to give notice?—It appeared so to me, but the landlord would not do it. In this part of the country they are generally against lowering the rent to a sitting tenant.

61,573. They are generally against lowering the rent without reason, I suppose, to sitting tenants or otherwise?—Yes, but who is to decide upon the question?

61,574. You say that some neighbours came sneakingly behind them. Did not that go to show that the farm was worth what the landlord considered it?—No.

61,575. Do you mean that they took it on the chance of farming at a loss?—Well, I cannot say what their views were. Perhaps they had a grudge against their neighbour. In some instances they had, I knew, but there were several farms on the Gellygynan estate, for which I had several applications before anything was heard about the sitting tenants giving the farms up.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. J. PARRY.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

61,576. You think they would injure themselves by paying too high a rent in order to pay off a grudge against their neighbours?—They have done it.

61,577. Had this league of yours many members?—Dear me, yes, many hundreds—many thousands.

61,578. Is it in existence now?—No.

61,579. It has come to an end?—It has come to an end.

61,580. How is that?—Well, I cannot say, except that the Liberal Federation was got up and the members joined that and left the Land and Labour League, thinking that to keep up one political machinery was quite enough?

61,581. They thought the Liberal Federation expressed the views contained in this pamphlet. Is that so?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

61,582. I think that Mr. Swetenham in his letter says—"The resignation of your farm will, I fear, not meet the case, because under your rules it would be boycotted and no one would take it." Do you know of any rule that bears the construction placed upon it by Mr. Swetenham?—No, there is no rule to that effect.

61,583. I can find nothing except the words which my Lord Kenyon read—"There is nothing more important to them and their families, and the interests of the country generally, than that they should be perfectly faithful to one another, and abstain from interfering with each other's farms when tenants apply for reductions, until they have ascertained from the tenants themselves that they are free." That seems to me the only part of the pamphlet that Mr. Swetenham could have referred to. What construction do you place upon that?—What I said to Lord Kenyon, that it only meant to stop farmers from interfering while the sitting tenants were trying for better terms.

61,584. These words, I think, bear that out. It says "Until they have ascertained from the tenants themselves that they are free?—Yes.

61,585. You did not mean to interfere with the letting of the farms when once they were free from the sitting tenants?—Not in the least.

Lord Kenyon.

61,586. You told me just now that you did not consider they were free although they had given notice to quit. When do you consider they would be free?—When the landlord would refuse to lower the rents and to alter the terms.

61,587. But how long are these transactions to go on?—In our case it took six months, and something over six months.

61,588. I think the notice to quit had expired. Is that so?—No. Mr. Swetenham told me this—"Well, I will accept your notice to-day; stay on and we shall talk over it at the next audit, and in the meantime, until things have im-

Lord Kenyon—continued.

"proved, I must reduce all round to all the tenants, and you will have a reduction, the same as others."

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

61,589. I can see nothing else in the pamphlet except that phrase that you have explained. Now you have been the president of this association, and I will ask you this: did it ever attempt to boycott any landlord or any farm?—No.

61,590. Are we to understand that you complain of being dismissed from the tenancy?—Well, I did not complain; but I was dismissed.

61,591. You are complaining of the notice to quit?—We had notice to quit.

61,592. The farm?—The farm and the agency as well.

61,593. In what way do you think you could fairly complain of Mr. Carstairs Jones dismissing you, seeing the line that you were taking under this as a politician?—I do not quite understand you.

61,594. You say you complain of being dismissed from the agency?—I do not complain, only I have been dismissed. I do not complain at all.

61,595. But you do complain of receiving notices to quit your farm?—I do.

Mr. Griffiths.

61,596. Do you know of any tenants who are afraid to avail themselves of the privileges of the Ground Game Act?—I do, a great many.

61,597. Why?—Because they are afraid of their landlords.

61,598. Although the law permits them, they are afraid that the landlord will not submit to it?—Yes.

61,599. Is it your opinion that there are some tenant farmers that are afraid to come forward to give evidence before this Commission?—I know it is so.

61,600. Do you think that some of the landlords view the Welsh Land Commission as something like the thin end of the wedge to this land reform that you are speaking of?—I believe so; that is my opinion.

61,601. And therefore it makes the tenants afraid?—Well, the tenant is afraid of his landlord here again. He is afraid of the same treatment as what I had.

61,602. And there are many such instances, I suppose?—I know of several.

Mr. Richard Jones.

61,603. Do you find that the way in which the tithe is settled works out unfairly to the tenant farmer?—It does.

61,604. In what way?—Do you refer to the last Bill?

61,605. No; I mean the method of settling the averages of the tithe?—Oh, dear me, very unsatisfactory.

61,606. In what way?—It is settled in Wales according to the price of wheat from the best places for wheat—from the best land in England and in Wales. There is no consideration whatever for the uplands and poor farms. The amount of tithes upon our farms in Llanarmon is decided by the value of wheat from the very best markets in Wales and in England.

61,607. And your contention is this, that the corn raised in Wales is of such a quality that it would not attain the price of those best markets?—That is so.

61,608. Have you any objection to the septennial averages. The average is taken for the seven years?—Yes, I do object to that.

61,609. You think it should be shorter?—It should be less—the previous year.

61,610. I see you advocate—at least one of the objects of this league is to have the averages fixed by the county boards, or what we would now call the County Council. County boards I believe were in contemplation when this league was established?—Yes.

61,611. You think the County Council is the best body to fix the averages in each county?—It would be fairer a great deal; each county would be valued according to its own produce to the value of the sample wheat of its own production.

61,612. And you would get witnesses from different parts of the county to give evidence before the County Council?—Yes, we should get witnesses from the upland districts, and get the upland districts valued according to their own samples and the lowlands the same according to theirs.

61,613. You mentioned about the action which you had taken in the formation of a school board. Do you think that there is a hostility amongst the landlords against the establishment of school boards?—Yes.

61,614. Why?—I believe it is because it interferes to a very great extent with the vicar or rector of the parish, and it has been prompted, in my opinion, by these officials.

61,615. You think that they object to a school board because it is a sort of disestablishment of the parson?—Yes it was so in our parish. Our landlord did not intend to interfere at all until the vicar went to him. The vicar himself acknowledged that to me personally.

Mr. Grove.

61,616. On the question of tithe I suppose we may take it for granted that it is the best wheat generally that comes to the market to be sold? Are inferior wheats sold much?—No, the inferior wheat is used as fodder for the animals.

61,617. Therefore by fixing the tithes upon the market price of wheat they are fixed on the very highest scale possible?—That is so.

61,618. And it does not show the average value of the wheat grown in the country?—No.

61,619. Then in addition to that being an unfair basis you consider that the seven years' average is too long altogether, do you?—I do.

61,620. With regard to these rabbits, who had the money for those rabbits—the tenant farmer?—The tenant farmer for those that were fit to be sold, because the big and small were counted in the number I have given. They hired a man purposely for killing them.

61,621. It would come to a big sum, would it not—100%?—No, I do not suppose it would come to one third of that, because most of them were young ones, not marketable at all.

61,622. You advocate that without the State taking over the railways it should subsidise the railways, so as to enable the companies to carry English produce at the same rate as foreign produce?—Yes.

61,623. In the same way that in Germany they do in carrying iron; they carry it at a very, very low rate on purpose to compete with other countries. Some arrangement of that sort you think might be made?—Well I believe it could be made.

61,624. You speak of the witnesses being afraid to come forward. Do they generally know of the Witnesses' Protection Act?—They do.

61,625. But they consider that that does not give sufficient protection as there are many ways in which a landlord might show his displeasure that would not be covered by that Act. Is that what you refer to?—Yes.

Professor Rhys.

62,626. When was the tithe agitation at its height?—In 1887 and 1888.

61,627. Do you remember Sir John Bridge's commission of inquiry?—I do.

61,628. I forget now whether you gave evidence or not then?—I did not.

61,629. But you followed it?—I did.

61,630. I ought to be well acquainted with the doctrines of your league because we heard a great deal about it then. When did the league come to an end?—About 1880, I believe, or 1881.

61,631. I think you said that the Liberal Federation came in?—Yes.

61,632. Had that been started then?—Yes.

61,633. Was there any formal transference of membership from your league to that, or did your league simply die out?—No; a resolution was passed at the annual meeting of the Federation to take the work of the league.

61,634. So you felt that as a league you had nothing more to do?—Nothing more to do.

61,635. Do you know of any small freeholders in these parts?—Well, I know a few.

61,636. What do you think of them. How are they doing?—They are doing well.

61,637. They are doing well; you say that?—They are doing well.

61,638. Of course your views are very comprehensive, but short of having all that you contemplate or contemplated, you think it would be a good thing if the number of small freeholders were increased?—Certainly.

61,639. I asked that same question the other day of an advocate of "Land Nationalisation," I think that is the term, and he did not approve. Would you explain your view?—I am more in favour of small holdings and small freeholders. They are the most settled in the land. There are several in our parish. Their ancestors have been there for generations, and they are the most well-to-do men of the country to-day.

61,640. Do they make the best use of the land?—Oh, yes, they do.

61,641. Do they manage their land better?—Yes, they do.

61,642. And get more out of it than the tenant farmer?—It looks tidier and produces more.

61,643. I think you just answered that some of the tenant farmers are afraid of their landlords. We have heard a great difference of opinion on that point. But how about these freeholders; are they more independent?—More independent—a great deal more independent.

61,644. I am now perhaps encroaching on the political side. Some people are afraid that small freeholders would be very Conservative?—They are different in our parts; that is all I can say.

61,645. Even then I suppose you put the political question on one side as compared with the welfare of the community at large?—I do.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

61,646. I want to ask you one question about the common land in Llanarmon?—We have no common land.

61,647. Was there not a Llanarmon Common at one time?—Yes, there was.

61,648. We find it in the list, and I find that the Enclosure Act dates as far back as 1811?—Yes.

61,649. By section 18 of that Act there is a provision for an allotment for getting materials. The Commissioners who carried out the enclosure were to allot lands in each of the parishes not exceeding in the whole 67 acres in such places as they might think most expedient to be used and enjoyed by proprietors and their tenants for the purpose of getting limestone and other stones described for repair of buildings, and so forth. Do you know whether any such allotments were in fact made?—Yes, I know.

61,650. And are the quarries still used by the public?—They hold good most of them to-day.

61,651. And the public are allowed to use them, are they?—Yes, but in some places a few of them have been encroached.

Mr. Griffiths.

61,652. Do you think that there are sufficient farms for the requirements of the Welsh people generally?—No.

61,653. That is the reason you think that they come forward and try to deal with the landlords before the sitting tenants have settled with them?—I believe so. In some instances I know that they have children in want of farms.

61,654. I was going to ask you from what class are those generally who come to take a farm. Are they people that are already in possession of farms, or are they farmers' sons waiting to have a chance?—The farmers apply for farms for their children—for their sons.

61,655. When you lost the agency of this estate, did the landlord form a company to take the farm?—He did not.

61,656. Why?—I do not believe he could, and it was not necessary.

61,657. Is it not the fact that the average wheat grown in Wales is only equal to what we term the tithe wheat in England?—Quite so; I know it for a fact.

61,658. That is, taking all the years together, from wet seasons and the like, very often our wheat is practically useless?—Very little used.

61,659. Is the wheat generally used for bread now where it is grown, or is it used for feeding cattle and pigs?—For feeding cattle and pigs. In some places—the best of the places in the vale—they get good prices; but that is about 2s. per quarter under the average of the English market.

Chairman.

61,660. This is your schedule?—It is.

61,661. Would you like it to be read?—Thank you.

61,662. What is this: is it your own average, or is it anything that you can vouch for?—It is the farm which we held.

61,663. That is the profit-and-loss account, is it?—Yes. See 61,733.

61,664. In 1876 the rent was 100*l.*, the tithe was 17*l.*, the rates were 17*l.*, the labour paid 80*l.*, the unpaid labour valued at 80*l.*, and "lost by accident"—what do you mean by that?—Animals dying.

61,665. Lost by accident 20*l.* The total of that is 314*l.* The produce sold in 1876 amounted to 360*l.* So the profit to the tenant farmer was about 40*l.* Now in that do you include your cost of living?—Yes.

61,666. I mean that is the profit after all expenses?—That is the profit.

61,667. You have put in your living expenses?—Yes.

61,668. Your living expenses are in that?—The living expenses are in.

61,669. After you had fed your family and clothed them and lived, you had 40*l.* to the good; is that it?—Yes, in 1876.

61,670. That was the profit on the year when everything was paid?—Quite so.

61,671. Schooling and everything?—Everything.

61,672. Now in 1893 the rent was 90*l.*?—An abatement of 10 per cent. was made.

61,673. The tithe was 15*l.*?—Yes.

61,674. The rates about 17*l.*?—About the same.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. J. PARRY.

Chairman—continued.

61,675. Exactly the same; the paid labour was 80*l.*, exactly the same; the unpaid labour was 80*l.*, exactly the same; the losses by accident that year were 10*l.*?—Yes.

61,676. That was a lucky year, was it?—No, it was because of the reduction in the price of animals.

61,677. You lost as many animals, only they were half the value; they had depreciated 50 per cent.?—Half the value.

61,678. The total of that is 292*l.*, as against 314*l.*. Then the produce sold off the same farm in 1893 was 180*l.*, as against 360*l.*?—Yes.

61,679. The loss to the farmer in that year was 110*l.* instead of a profit of 40*l.*?—Quite so.

61,680. You put as a note at the bottom of that, "The farmer in order to avoid this loss has to reduce the paid labour bill, and he is not able to pay his children for their work?" That is the case.

61,681. Are you a married man?—I am not; but I know of instances, I am sorry to say, where the tenant farmer has children at home to do the work, and he has children in service in the big towns of England who send home their earnings to help him to pay his rent and tithes and taxes.

61,682. Then you say that without those earnings of the children who are in service a tenant farmer would be unable to pay his rent?—He would be unable to pay his rent in these last years.

61,683. In some cases, or in many cases?—In many cases.

61,684. That you know from your own personal knowledge?—I know it from my own knowledge.

Lord Kenyon.

61,685. This is your own case that you have given here?—It is my experience.

61,686. But this bill, I mean?—Yes, sure—my experience on our own farm.

61,687. What is the unpaid labour?—80*l.*

61,688. Yes; but what is it?—The children.

61,689. Whose children?—The tenant farmer's children.

61,690. But I thought this was your own case?—My own experience.

61,691. Is not this your own farm?—My brother and I were together.

61,692. Then you refer to your brother's children, do you?—My brother's children—at any rate he had a child.

61,693. I want to know what the unpaid labour is so as to arrive at whether it is a fair estimate or not; what was the unpaid labour?—Myself, my brother, an uncle of mine, and my sister-in-law. We were all working hard.

61,694. In 1893 was that the case?—In 1876.

61,695. Was that the same in 1893?—The same in 1893.

61,696. What was the paid labour; how many hands were there?—We had more in the harvest. We had two servant girls round the year and a young man and a lad with the horses, and at the harvest we had to get more.

61,697. Did you sell as much stuff in 1893 as you did in 1876?—About the same.

61,698. About the same quantity of stuff?—About the same quantity of stuff.

61,699. And it only realised half?—It only realised half.

61,700. Being a bad year, 1893, perhaps you did not keep very much in hand. Did you keep more stock in hand hoping for a better year?—No.

61,701. You really sacrificed it?—Yes, we really could not keep more.

61,702. The farm was stocked up as far as it would hold?—Yes.

61,703. I want to ask a question about those tithe averages of yours. Do you consider this a wheat-growing country?—No, it is not.

61,704. So you think it is unfair that the averages should be based upon corn; is that it?—It is very unfair.

61,705. Suppose it was based upon other things, would not the inclination be up instead of down?—No.

61,706. I thought wheat was about as low as it could go?—Are not cattle as low as they can go?

61,707. Not this year?—I believe they are.

61,708. Oh, no; they are better than they were last year anyhow?—Very little.

61,709. And sheep are not bad this year. Sheep are rather dear?—Well, not dear; but they fetch better prices.

61,710. If you happened to want to buy them, as I do, you would find they are not so very cheap?—We had to buy some the week before last. We deal in Welsh sheep.

61,711. At any rate if the averages were based upon stock they would be higher, probably, than the averages in corn?—Very likely they would have been when the high prices were upon cattle; but now it would not be so.

61,712. You think not?—Oh, no, because cattle are down 50 per cent.

61,713. And how about the wheat-growing counties, Lincolnshire and Essex, in England?—There are many farms in England out of cultivation on that account.

61,714. Yes, out of cultivation simply because they cannot make wheat pay?—Yes.

61,715. Nothing could be worse than that. I think you have got the lowest point that you can get in corn averages?—I believe so.

Chairman.

61,716. There are some questions handed in by Mr. Owen Wynne: "Did the tenant sell the 3,500 rabbits?" You said he did sell them. If so, could you say what he got for them?—He sold only those that were marketable.

61,717. That is what I understood you to say. Then Mr. Owen Wynne would like to know if you can answer this: "What did he

4 September 1894.]

Mr. J. PARRY.

Chairman—continued.

get for those rabbits?"—I do not know that, I cannot say.

61,718. Do you know what his rent was?—Well, I do not remember now.

61,719. "Is it not a fact now that, if a farm is vacant on the Gellygynan estate, there are many applicants for it?"—Yes.

61,720. "Are the tenants satisfied with the present management of the estate?"—They are very highly pleased. The present manager is one of the best agents I believe in all Wales.

Professor Rhys.

61,721. What is his name?—Major Birch. If he will be spared for a short time the estate will be a model to all Wales.

Chairman.

61,722. These are questions by Mr. Owen Wynne—"Were you at a meeting at Ffyn-nongroyw, near Mostyn, in February 1888, with Dr. Pan Jones and Rev. Spinther Jones in support of your Land League?"—I remembered being there in company with those gentlemen.

61,723. "And did you second a resolution of Dr. Pan Jones, in the course of proposing which he said, 'There was an unholy Trinity in existence in the county, the clergy, the landlords, and the stewards, and it was composed of the most ungodly people the world had ever seen.' Do you remember that?"—I do not remember what the resolution was. I do not suppose such terms would be used in a resolution at all.

61,724. But Mr. Owen Wynne says that Dr. Pan Jones used these words in the course of proposing a resolution. He does not say it was in the resolution. Do you remember that or not?—I remember being there, and maybe he did use those words, but such words as those would never be in a resolution.

61,725. Mr. Owen Wynne does not say that. He wants to know, do you remember those words?—I do not remember.

61,726. And did you say "at present the farmer, the landlord, and the clergy live upon the land, and some of them must go. The farmer must remain, and who should quit—the landlord or the clergyman? Well, they would try without the parson first?"—Very likely I did say that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

61,727. When was this meeting?—The meeting at Ffyn-nongroyw do you mean.

61,728. The meeting to which Mr. Owen Wynne's questions refer?—Oh, I said that several times over. I cannot mention a particular case, because our contention was this, that the present rate of prices was such that the land could not keep up this Trinity—that unless the expenditure were reduced one of the three would have to go.

Chairman.

61,729. Then I have some questions by Mr. Vincent—"Did you hold the same farm in 1876, and in 1893?"—I did not.

61,730. "In fact Mr. Carstairs Jones turned you out before 1893, did he not?"—He did.

61,731. "Then what is the basis of your comparison of expenses?" I suppose that refers to this schedule?—The expenses of cultivation of the farm would be the same in 1893 as in 1876, because in our neighbourhood there was no rise in the wages of labourers; the expenses of cultivation would be exactly the same.

61,732. What Mr. Vincent means is, that you have given an account of the rent of a farm in 1876 and in 1893, and it was not the same farm?—I am taking the same farm, but my basis was the expenditure in 1876. It would be the same expenditure in 1893.

61,733. They are not actual figures. They are estimated figures?—Estimated figures.

61,734. I understood this to be the regular return of the farm—the same farm?—Oh, no.

61,735. We must get that quite clear. It is what you would estimate the same farm would produce in 1893 with a 10 per cent. reduction?—Yes, that is what it is.

61,736. Lord Kenyon would like to know whether those are your actual figures on the farm in 1876?—Oh, no.

Lord Kenyon.

61,737. It is purely an estimate for both years?—Purely an estimate for both years.

61,738. I thought you kept accounts?—No, but it is based upon my experience.

Chairman.

61,739. Questions by Mr. Vincent continued—"Do you consider a landlord ought to have no interest in his capital invested in houses and buildings?"—Oh, he ought to have interest.

61,740. "Do you know such interest all but absorbs the rent?"—In some instances I know it does.

61,741. That the interest on the buildings alone does?—The interest on the buildings alone.

61,742. So that the landlord gets practically nothing from the land. That is what it comes to?—Yes.

61,743. "The Land League was in favour of the three Fs, land courts, limitation of royal-ties, abolition of entail, abolition of loans by Parliament to landowners, the abolition of all game laws, of throwing open rivers to all fishermen, was it not?"—Yes.

61,744. "Mr. Gee, of Denbigh and the 'Baner,' was the treasurer of the league, was he not?"—He was.

4 September 1894.]

MR. J. PARRY.

Chairman—continued.

61,745. "The 'Baner' is not exactly a friendly paper towards landowners, is it?"—I believe it is.

61,746. "Do you remember the following passage, quoted in Lord Penrhyn's evidence, 'from the 'Baner' November 1887—'One of the chief duties of these associations and friends of the farmers is to publish the 'villainous and horrible acts of landlordism'?' Do you remember that?—I do not remember it just now.

61,747. "Do you think that the position of land-agent is possible for a man holding your views?"—Oh, certainly, yes.

61,748. "The 'Baner' recommended boycotting, did it not?"—I do not believe it did.

61,749. "Did the 'Baner' (August 31st, 1887, see Lord Penrhyn's evidence), 'We ought to stand out for a general reduction in our farms. And if any Judas happens to come to sight he ought to be chased out of the country'?"—I do not remember; but it might be in letters from correspondents or something of the kind.

61,750. That might have occurred in letters from correspondents?—Yes.

61,751. But you do not know of your own knowledge?—I do not remember it.

61,752. "The Land League is and always was a failure, was it not?"—Well, I cannot say it was a failure, because it was taken up by the Federation. That is why the Land League stopped.

61,753. "Did the 'Baner' say (November 2nd, 1887)—'A kind landlord; he is a Liberal among Tories, a John Howard among slave owners, a kind John amongst bums and scamps'?"—Well, I do not remember seeing such a thing in the "Baner." I do not always read letters from correspondents.

61,754. You do not remember that?—No, I do not remember reading that.

61,755. "Was the following description given of landlords, 'a man with the mouth of a hog, the teeth of a lion, the nails of a bear, the hoofs of an ass, the sting of a serpent, and the greed of the grave'?" Do you remember that?—No, I do not, and I am quite certain that if they were at all they must have been in the letters from correspondents.

Professor Rhys.

61,756. You mean anonymous correspondents?—Anonymous correspondents.

61,757. And would these letters be mostly during the great agitation about tithes?—They might be.

61,758. While feeling ran very high?—Yes.

Chairman.

61,759. Questions by Mr. Vincent continued—"Is it reasonable to expect landlords to keep on their estates, if they can help themselves, men holding your views?"—Well, I do not know why not, because we are great friends of landlords always, if they are reasonable and fair.

Chairman—continued.

I did my best faithfully,—I have letters from Mr. Carstairs Jones saying, that although I was in favour of a Land League I did my duty faithfully to him as long as I was in his employment

Lord Kenyon.

That is much to your credit.

Chairman.

61,760. Questions by Mr. Vincent continued—"You know, do you not, that if you did get rid of the parson you would have to pay tithe just the same?"—Exactly the same.

61,761. "So that to get rid of the parson would be no gain financially?"—In one way it would not and in another way it would, because it creates a good deal of ill-feeling between the landlord and tenant.

61,762. "Do you still say the 'Baner' is friendly towards landowners?"—I always understood it to be so.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

61,763. I just want to ask a question arising out of the answer you gave in reference to Mr. Vincent's question concerning tithes. The question I think was, whether there would be any relief proposing a measure of Disestablishment and disendowment were passed—I suppose that is the meaning of the question. That would depend of course on the application of the tithes would it not?—It would.

61,764. It is one thing to pay tithes to the clergymen, who receives them for his own benefit, and another to pay tithe to the State. Is that what you mean?—Quite so; yes.

61,765. How would you apply the tithes?—Well, I would apply part of it for educational purposes. That would reduce the expenditure of a farmer to a very great extent. He would have education for his children much cheaper.

Chairman.

61,766. Then I have some questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones—"Do English and Scotch farmers, as a rule, succeed in your district?"—They do not.

61,767. "To what do you attribute their failure?"—They do not understand the land in our part. It is high, cold, mountainous land, and they do not understand how to cultivate it. They know very well how to take out what has been put in, and when it fails to produce, they go and leave the rent unpaid.

61,768. That is your experience of English and Scotch farmers?—Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

61,769. And perhaps they are not so thrifty?—They are not so thrifty, and they have been accustomed to different land.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. J. PARRY.

[Continued.]

Chairman.

61,770. There are two other questions by Mr. Owen Wynne—"Do you know that the 'letter to the 'Baner,' in which landlords are so 'flatteringly described, is signed 'D. Oliver 'Edwards'?"—Oh, no.

61,771. You know nothing about it?—I know nothing about it. That is a correspondent of the "Baner."

Lord Kenyon.

61,772. Do you know him?—I do not.

Chairman.

61,773. Then Mr. Owen Wynne asks: "Is he a minister of the Gospel?"—I do not know him.

61,774. Now you have something to say about a place called Plas Llanarmon, where you lived?—Yes. In the beginning of the present century Plas Llanarmon contained something over 350 acres in extent, and was leased to a man named Edward Humphreys, at a yearly rent of 70*l.*, and two good fat geese at Christmas.

61,775. What is the date of this?—1775, or something like that.

61,776. Is it necessary to go back as far as that?—It expired in the fifth year of this century.

61,777. Do you wish to go back as far as that?—No. I only just mentioned that. The ease expired in the year 1805. Then another ease was offered to the tenant, and a reduction of 10*l.* in the rent. This he refused because he considered the rent too high. Another man, named Jonathan Oldfield, came forward and took the farm, and became insolvent. In the year 1855 this farm was re-valued after it had been reduced in extent by about 100 acres or more. According to that valuation, the gross estimated rental was 159*l.* In the year 1866 this farm, after it had been reduced again by something over 100 acres, was let at a rental of 130*l.* In the year 1886, after it had been increased in extent by 17 acres, it was let at a rental of 126*l.* I do not think the different owners of this farm could have spent upon it in repairs, from 1800 to 1886 more than from 100*l.* to 150*l.* The increase in the value of this farm is due entirely to matters other than any outlay of the owners thereof.

61,778. Now, shall we take your general evidence?—If you please.

61,779. I will ask you questions upon the document you have handed in, but a great deal of the information you have given we have had repeatedly before us already. We know all about the usual date of entry and changes of tenancy and reduction in prices, and so on. Now, about the agreement and lease. Will you put in an agreement?—I believe I have put in a copy of the agreement. I object to some clauses in the agreement as being rather hard, but I must say that it is very seldom they enforce any. They tried to enforce one upon me.

61,780. They did?—They did.

Chairman—continued.

61,781. What was it?—It was because we had not a sufficient number of acres under green crop. You will see a notice in the schedule at the end; they allow 82 or 83 acres to be arable, while the rest is to be pasture, and of that 80 acres only 40 acres was allowed to us to be under tillage in one and the same year, and out of that one fourth of the whole arable land was to be under green crops, and, therefore, we could not have more than 20 acres under white crop altogether, and 20 under green crop. That is very unfair, and a very great disadvantage to us in the uplands.

Lord Kenyon.

61,782. Is that the usual clause in these agreements?—It is in all of them.

61,783. And does the landlord usually try to enforce them?—No, I am not aware of any instance except in my own case, and here is the rent book, showing that I was charged 200*l.* That was before the election in 1868. It was entered in the book by the agent and scratched off by the landlord at the time of the election.

Professor Rhys.

61,784. Would you mind passing me up the book. Have you any objection to my seeing it?—No (handing book).

Lord Kenyon.

61,785. Was it a 200*l.* fine?—Yes.

61,786. A fine for infringing that clause?—Yes.

Chairman.

61,787. There is one thing we should like to know; have changes of tenancy become more or less frequent?—I believe they are about the same.

61,788. The temporary abatements, I think you have told us, were 10 per cent.?—Yes.

61,789. Then you pay the rent six months after it becomes due?—Yes.

61,790. The charges are paid in the usual way, and rates are very much the same?—Yes.

61,791. What is the average size of farms in your district?—About 50 acres, I should think—from 40 to 50.

61,792. What is the production?—It is grazing land, mostly; very poor arable land.

61,793. You have told us that farming has depreciated very much. You have shown us that in the tables you were good enough to prepare for us?—Yes.

61,794. Which does best, a small or a big farm?—A small one in these years.

61,795. Then you have told us about their condition. You have told us your experience in having to work very hard, and so forth. Are skilled labourers scarce or not?—I cannot say they are scarce. There is nothing for them to do.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. J. PARRY.

[1894] Continued.Chairman—continued.

61,796. The landlords, I take it, do all the improvements—the house and buildings?—The tenant farmers do a great deal.

61,797. What do they do. We should like to hear about that. We are generally told that the landlords do everything, even to hanging gates. Is that your experience?—They hang the gates, no doubt, but during Mr. Swetenham's time they did not. The tenant had to buy the gates, and pay for them, and hang them himself.

61,798. To pay for his own gates?—To pay for his own gates.

61,799. What did a gate cost?—Five shillings.

61,800. Do they ever do anything to the house; painting or whitewashing?—Yes, tenants have to paint the house.

61,801. But do they ever do it?—They do it.

61,802. Do they?—At all events some of them do it, but others do not.

61,803. It is not general, I take it?—No.

61,804. A man who paints his house is the exception, rather than the rule?—Well, I believe he is.

61,805. Then we have had all the information about the custom of the country; about growing crops, and so on. Have you ever known an instance where compensation has been given for the general improved condition of a holding?—No; except what Mr. Carstairs Jones allowed to us on that account.

61,806. That was the 90% that you got?—And that is a very great deficiency in the Agricultural Holdings Act. There is no compensation for general improvement.

61,807. Still you told us that you were satisfied with it?—We were satisfied.

61,808. We have heard all about the rabbits, and so on, and that no attention is paid to bee-keeping. Then you have told us about the railway rates, I think?—There is one thing I mentioned, and that is the interference of clergymen between the landlord and tenant.

61,809. Yes, tell us about that?—I want to bring that out, if you please.

61,810. Yes, tell us all about it?—I hold in my hand a letter from Mr. Swetenham, which plainly shows that our vicar had been interfering in this matter (handing in a letter).

61,811. Do you wish that read?—Yes, please.

61,812. This is the original letter, is it?—That is the original letter.

Professor Rhys.

61,813. Is the Mr. Swetenham referred to the late Member of Parliament?—Yes.

Chairman.

61,814. This is a letter from Mr. Swetenham to yourself?—To myself.

61,815. And you vouch for its accuracy?—Yes.

61,816. This is dated the 14th of November; what year was that, do you remember?—I do not remember.

61,817. How many years ago, approximately?—About 10 years ago.

Chairman—continued.

61,818. "Cam yr Alyn, Rossett, Wrexham. Dear Sir,—Please let the man who the vicar recommends for Gwaenyffynon meet me at the 'Butchers' Arms' on Thursday next at 10 a.m. I am, yours truly, Edward Swetenham." You infer from that, that the vicar had put his own man into that farm?—It means he did not know the name of the man, but the man the vicar recommended, whoever he was, or whatever he was. We had several applicants for the farm, but he preferred to let it to the man recommended by the vicar.

61,819. To the vicar's man?—To the vicar's man. Here is another letter (handing in another letter).

Lord Kenyon.

61,820. Was this a farm near the church?—No, it was about two miles from the church.

61,821. Had the vicar any private knowledge of this man?—He had.

61,822. He had given him a character, had he?—Yes, he had written him a character, he had been vicar of the parish in which this man resided at the time.

61,823. It is not an unusual thing for a Churchman to apply to the vicar for a character, is it?—It is not.

Chairman.

61,824. Then this other letter is a letter from whom?—From our vicar.

61,825. What is his name?—Evan Evans.

61,826. This is a letter from the reverend gentleman to you?—No, to Mr. E. O. V. Lloyd.

61,827. Have we the power to read this letter. Is there any objection to it?—No, not the least.

61,828. You guarantee that?—I guarantee that.

61,829. "The Vicarage, Llanarmon, Mold, March 10th, 1891. Dear Sir,—I now find no difficulty in obtaining my tithes from your tenants; indeed, they are all very nice, but I fail to get it from the tenant of Bryniau, Francis Beech. I write because I understand you much object to have tithe riots on your estate, but I cannot do without my money, and must take steps soon with a view to recover it unless it is paid. I thought he might be poor and somewhat hard up, but I learn such is not the case; he has an excellent farm and that on very moderate terms. We were sorry to hear Mrs. Lloyd has been a sufferer this winter, and sincerely trust she is better by this time. Yours faithfully, E. Evans." I have got another document to hand in (handing a document).

61,830. What is this?—This is a circular from a certain office that was set up at Aberdovey to enable landlords to have Conservative and Church of England tenants to their farms.

61,831. This is the circular that was referred to in Mr. Walter Jones' evidence on the 14th of September, 1893, and I think I ought to read what Mr. Vincent said about it. Mr. Vincent said: "It has no connexion whatever with the 'North Wales Property Defence Association,' and as a member of that I strongly disapprove of it."

See 8808-8817, and 70,597.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. J. PARRY.

[Continued.]

Lord Kenyon.

It was unsigned, I think.

Chairman.

61,832. This is signed by a gentleman named John Davies; is that a real name, or what we might call a nom de plume?—It is Mr. John Davies's name. There is a letter from Mr. John Davies on the other side.

61,833. It is a Mr. John Davies?—It is a Mr. John Davies.

61,834. He is a real man?—A real man.

61,835. Is Mr. John Davies alive?—No, he is dead now.

61,836. Do you think this ought to be read, would it give any one pain?—I think the printed part ought to be read.

Lord Kenyon.

We have had the printed part already.

Chairman.

61,837. Would this cause any pain to his relations, do you think?—I do not suppose it would.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

If the letter is to show that the circular was sent out by a responsible person, I think we ought to have it.

Chairman.

61,838. I think it is important. "Three Tuns, Aberystwyth, August 24th, 1888." This is a letter from a Mr. John Davies—to whom, do you know?—To a friend of mine.

61,839. Will you give his name?—Well, I prefer not.

61,840-1. But you will vouch that this is the letter that this gentleman received?—I will, yes.

"Dear Sir,—The circulars were at Aberdovey, and my state of health would not allow to go so far, that is reason why I have been so long replying to your letter. I have not as yet fixed any fee so far, indeed neither incumbents nor landowners seem to act on the enclosed principle as yet, but I hope I shall be able soon to convince some of them. You do not say in yours in what locality the farm is which you say will soon become vacant. Kindly say where the farm is. I have been very ill all the winter and summer, therefore I have not been able to do much hitherto; but, now, I intend to work in earnest. I am, Sir, yours respectfully, John Davies. On the other side is this circular: (Private.) No. 20, Church Street, Aberdovey. To the clergy, landowners, and tenants.—When the Church and all landed property are so severely and relentlessly attacked, and the spirit of socialism is so rapidly spreading in the Principality, it has become highly necessary for the clergy and the wealthier among the laity to know who are their true friends and loyal "supporters, and to act accordingly. Landowners in particular should be on their guard as to the persons to whom they let their land, and should ascertain whether candidates for their farms are the friends of order and justice, or of anarchy and confiscation. At the urgent request of several persons of influence I have opened a Conservative Registry as a medium of communication between landowners wanting tenants, and tenants wanting farms; and with the view of carrying out the suggested scheme, I have to request—(1.) That incumbents inform me of any farm vacant, or about to become vacant in their parishes. (2.) That all Churchmen and Conservatives be made acquainted with the existence of such an office. (3.) That Conservative landowners and their agents communicate with me whenever a tenant may be required. I remain, yours faithfully, John Davies."

Chairman—continued.

Lord Kenyon.

61,842. I think we ought to be very much obliged to you for clearing up this case. At Delgelley, I think it was, we had the same circular produced before us, only it was unsigned. The answer was given in this way: "I suppose you are not acquainted with the name of the author of this circular." Mr. Jones answered—"I am not." Mr. Seeborn then asked him: "And you consider it a hoax?" And the answer was: "I consider it a regular humbug," and that, I think, was the impression left on our minds. Here we find that it is signed by Mr. John Davies, but do you know anything more of this circular. Have you heard anything more of this association?—Yes.

61,843. Did it have existence?—It had existence.

61,844. He says: "I have not as yet fixed any fee so far, indeed neither incumbents nor landowners seem to act on the enclosed principal as yet." So apparently he did not get much sympathy from the landowners or incumbents?—There are two ways of explaining that. The friend of mine who wrote for the circular was an unknown person to Mr. Davies, and that may be put in as a take off. I know of a family who had to leave a farm, and it was in connexion with that that I got hold of the circular.

61,845. Can you give us the names of any people who belonged to this association?—Oh, no, I cannot.

61,846. Do you know where its offices were any further than that they were at Church Street, Aberdovey?—No, I do not.

61,847. You do know of any other members except this Mr. John Davies?—I do not.

61,848. Now tell us about the interference that you speak of?—A family had to leave this country; they had to leave the farm. They had to give it up in consequence of low prices, and wanting better terms. They failed with the landlord to get any better terms, and by the means of that office a tenant was found for the farm.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. J. PARRY.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

61,849. Who was the landlord?—I cannot say now. I have no permission from my informant to say, but it was in the neighbourhood of Aberdovey, in Montgomeryshire.

61,850. Was he any relation to this Mr. Davies?—I do not suppose he was.

61,851. Because the Landlords' Property Defence Association repudiated any knowledge of this association whatever, and I have some knowledge of the landowners in North Wales, and I never met anyone who knew anything about it. I should be very glad to run down the association to the bottom?—I remember I was accused of being the author of it, and I kept the name to myself. This is the first time the name has come out at all. I refused to give the names.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

70,597. 61,852. Do you know who Mr. John Davies was?—I know nothing at all about him.

Lord Kenyon.

61,853. You know nothing about Mr. Davies?—No.

Chairman.

61,854. Have you anything else to put in?—Yes, a Welsh document addressed by Mr. Carstairs Jones to his tenants at the time of the tithe riots (handing in same).

61,855. Is this a copy or the original?—A copy.

61,856. Where is the original?—The original was not allowed to go out of the hand that was sent about with it. First of all the tenants were invited to dine with Mr. Carstairs Jones. Part of the tenantry went, the other part refused, and that circular was sent round by the hands of a messenger to read to the tenants that did not go.

61,857. Was that in 1886?—In 1886.

Chairman.

Before we go on with this, Lord Kenyon would like to ask you another question on the famous circular.

Lord Kenyon.

61,858. I want to know whether you will give me the name of the tenant who was found, you say, from this office?—David Jones.

61,859. What is the name of his farm?—I do not remember.

61,860. What is his address?—I cannot tell you. It is in the neighbourhood of Dinas Mawddwy. I was coming from Dinas Mawddwy on a certain day, and this man and his family, his sisters, were going in the same train away to America.

61,861. Did they give you the account by word of mouth?—They gave me the account. That is the first intimation I had of the office at all.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

61,862. Did they show you a circular like this?—No, they could not get the circulars themselves, but they had seen it and heard it read, that is all. They gave me the address of the man and everything.

61,863. You could not tell me who was the landlord on whose farm this occurred?—No, I cannot.

Lord Kenyon.

It is very unfortunate. I mean I do not want to throw any aspersion on your truth; I perfectly believe you, but it is very unfortunate that we cannot run it to the ground, as I firmly believe the whole thing is a bogus association.

Chairman.

61,864. Now for the other circular. This is a circular that was alleged to be sent round by Mr. Carstairs Jones on the 31st of June 1886. I must ask you this, because I do not like to have anything put in that we cannot verify entirely. How was this copy procured?—From the copy this messenger had. He granted it for a short time to be copied.

61,865. Who copied it?—I, myself.

61,866. You copied it yourself?—I did.

61,867. And you guarantee its accuracy?—It is accurate.

61,868. You can verify that of your own personal knowledge?—Yes, my Lord.

61,869. You saw Mr. Carstairs Jones's circular?—Yes.

61,870. And copied it yourself; this is an accurate copy of the copy that you took?—Yes, my Lord.

[The letter was read as follows]:—

"Hersedd, Mold,

"January 31st, 1886.

"Dear friends and tenants,

"I am really very sorry that I have to inform you that my health will not permit me to dine with you to-day, but I have asked Mr. Swetenham to read to you a short speech from me, and also to, listen to what you have to say on the matter that I want to call your attention to. This is my situation. I have a number of excellent men as tenants whose feelings I would not for the world hurt, and I am certain if they were left to their own proper opinion they would not cause me any pain. You know that I have always been anxious to assist my tenants in any reasonable way, and that the greater part of my life has been spent amongst you. Take for example what I have set out at Chwyleiriog, for the sole purpose of making Roberts comfortable, and what I am now doing on his behalf. If he would join the Land League or if he is joined with any such league, I should be willing to believe that he could do anything. Would the Land League help him with buildings and improvements? No; but otherwise. They are trying to deny to you and to me free will. They seek to make me let and cultivate my estate as they like, and they seek to prevent you from taking any farm on your own terms, but it seeks to put a tax on your own shoulders for the pecuniary advantage of the agitators of our country, as if you had not sufficient rates to face and meet. I am anxious, and I intend to be free, and I will not allow the Land League to have any voice in the matters connected with our estate. You do as you please, you are free men, choose for yourselves, either myself or the league. If your choice will be the league you will know what to receive for your annual subscriptions. If there are any burdens that weigh upon you, that tyrannise over you, I want you to discuss them at this table to-day. If they are genuine, I will do my best to remove them. I do not remember at any time giving notice to quit to a tenant, but I want you to understand my present situation, as if I have one of my tenants who is a member of the Land League. I must get rid of all, for it would be impossible for me to say that I could send that member off, and keep on those who are not members of the league, as my farms would in that way be vacant, because they would be boycotted, and I could not let them either to tenants or to a company, for it would not answer for a company to take a whole estate up, and I cannot mix the farms between tenants and a company. It follows that the tenants of Hart's Heath must decide that they will not be members of this Land League, and I am certain that they will not do so, and that they wish to remain on their farms. The tenants of Gellygynan must do likewise, if they want to stay. They must understand clearly that it will not do for one to say that he will, and the other to say that he will not. The one estate as well as the others must be farmed by tenants as before, or they must leave, and they will be farmed by a company. I hope and trust that all of you will decide to-day that you will have no connexion with this Land League, and that we shall continue on the same terms as we are now enjoying.

"Yours truly,
"J. CARSTAIRS JONES."

Chairman.

61,871. Have you anything else to put in?—No.

61,872. I think we have almost finished your evidence now?—I believe you have. I could show you more letters from clergymen, but I do not see that it would be any good.

61,873. Letters from clergymen on what subject?—From the same vicar.

61,874. On what subject?—On the subject of the tithes, something similar to the one I handed to you.

Chairman—continued.

61,875. The one you handed to us was a demand for his tithes?—A demand for his tithes, and an intimation that the farm of Bryniau was let at a very low rent in comparison with others, which appears to be very undesirable for a clergyman to intimate to a landowner.

61,876. The letter from the reverend gentleman was a demand for his tithes and an intimation that he would go to law if he did not get them?—Yes, and that he did not know why the tenant of Bryniau was so backward with his tithes unless he was short of money, and that he could not explain that, as he understood that his farm was let at a very moderate price. That intimates to the landowner that his farm was let at a very low rent.

Lord Kenyon.

Well, that is a matter of inference; you can infer what you like from it.

Chairman.

61,877. It is no use putting in letters from reverend gentlemen wanting their money; we should have a great many of them, no doubt. Is there anything else from any vicar, any threatening letter, or anything of that sort?—I have not the original of any other letter, but there is one thing I should like to say. Previous to the election of 1868 I know of an instance where the landlord, Mr. Carstairs Jones, in company with the vicar of our parish, the Rev. Robert Griffiths Jones, went to a certain farm to solicit the tenant's vote for the Conservative. The tenant complained that he wanted more buildings, and they agreed together, if the tenant would vote Conservative, he was to have a new shed. The tenant did so, and the shed is there to-day. I saw it yesterday.

61,878. I have some questions by Mr. Owen Wynne—"Is it not the fact that the owner and agent of the Carstairs Jones' property, at the time upon which you base your complaints, are both now dead?"—Yes.

61,879. "Do Nonconformist ministers never interfere between landlord and tenant in any way?"—Well, I am not aware of any interference in our district, the Gellygynan estate, at all events.

61,880. "When you were local agent, did you ever suggest to Mr. Jones that the agreement was unfair or restrictive?"—I did several times. I can produce letters.

61,881. With what result?—He refused to alter some of them. Some were altered, but those which I complained of were not altered.

The witness withdrew.

Adjourned for a short time.

4 September 1894.

Mr. T. R. WYNNE

[4931 (continued)]

Mr. T. RICHARD WYNNE called and examined.

Chairman.

Chairman—continued.

61,882. You wish to give some rebutting evidence, I believe?—I do, my Lord.

61,883. You were an agent?—I was agent for the past 21 years on the Rûg estate, and I have now retired.

61,884. You were agent to whom?—The Honourable Charles Wynne.

61,885. What do you wish to tell the Commission?—I wish to contradict the statement of Godfrey Roberts.

61,886. Which part of the statement?—Well, in one part of his evidence he says that I held my fist in his face, and he attributes his having had notice to the fact that he declined to give up a part of his farm.

61,887. He said, "In 1887 Mr. T. R. Wynne came and asked me for a half of my land, as Mr. Vosper wanted it to rear game." Do you deny that?—It is perfectly untrue.

61,888. Then, "He wished me to give it up in a fortnight?" Is that correct?—Certainly not.

61,889. "And stated, holding up his fist, that if I would not allow Mr. Vosper to have this land, I should have to leave the place?"—Perfectly untrue.

61,890. You deny that?—I do.

61,891. "He became very angry and unpleasant." That is not the case?—It is not the case.

61,892. Did he tell you that he had 10 children?—I know he has a large family.

61,893. Did he tell you at that time?—I do not remember.

61,894. Did you say "That does not concern me. What I require is the land?"—Oh, dear me, no, certainly not.

61,895. Did he give up that land at all?—No, but in consequence of his being very much in arrear—I have the four last half-years of the Rûg rental, when he was there, for you to see—and when he left the farm he was more than two years in arrears, and it was in consequence of his being in arrears that he had notice to quit. I may say that it certainly was the wish of his landlord that he should be treated with every consideration, and he was so treated, and he was allowed to sell off the crops, although he was bound by his agreement to consume them, and that was an advantage to him.

61,896. You gave Mr. Godfrey Roberts notice to quit, because he was two years in arrear with his rent?—Because he was in arrear with his rent, he was more than two years in arrear when he gave up the farm. I produce the rental. (Witness handed in the rental.)

61,897. He says he received 240*l.* less for what he sold than he would have if he had been allowed to remain until the following year. Was he paid for the seeds?—He was.

61,898. He says "without being paid for the seeds." You say he was paid for them?—He was paid for what he was entitled to, and the sheep were taken at a valuation, although there was no tenant. I may say, that in consequence of the state of the farm no tenant was found for 12 months, and it was let at 20 per cent. less; instead of being let at 75*l.* it was let at 60*l.* in consequence of the state of the farm.

61,899. The farm was unoccupied for 12 months?—That is so.

61,900. And let at a reduced rent?—It was reduced from 75*l.* to 60*l.*

61,901. I think that is all you wish to say?—That is all, my Lord.

61,902. Did Mr. Godfrey Roberts pay all his arrears before he left?—He did.

61,903. Did not you enclose some other land for Mr. Vosper in consequence of Mr. Roberts' refusal to give up the land?—It was enclosed after he left, but not during his tenancy.

61,904. Then this land about which there is a dispute was enclosed?—Not while he was tenant.

61,905. But afterwards?—Mr. Vosper had a little—there was a small quantity.

61,906. Do you absolutely deny the statement that you asked for a piece of his land to be enclosed for game?—I asked him to give a piece of his land, and the rent would be taken off that piece. See 61,887.

61,907. Then I do not think you said that before?—That is so.

Chairman.

I will ask the shorthand writer to read his note of the previous portion of your evidence.

[The shorthand writer read the note from Question 61,885-7.]

61,908. You denied that, I understood. You must be very careful about it. I will put it to you again?—I do deny that; I did not ask him for half of his farm, but a small portion he was asked to give up, if he wished to do so, in a friendly way.

61,909. Then the difference there is between you is that you did not ask him to give up half of his land?—Certainly not.

61,910. But you asked him to give up a small portion?—A small portion I did ask him to.

61,911. Did he refuse to give up the land?—He refused to give that up.

61,912. I will go through the matter with you again, so that there shall be no doubt about it. Did you in 1887 come and see Mr. Godfrey Roberts?—I did.

61,913. Did you ask him to give half of his land?—I did not.

61,914. Did you ask him to give up any of his land?—A small portion of some rough land.

61,915. Did you ask him to give it up in a fortnight?—Certainly not.

61,916. You did not hold up your fist?—Certainly not.

61,917. Did you say he would have to leave the place?—Certainly not.

61,918. You did not get angry or unpleasant?—I did not.

4 September 1894.]

MR. T. R. WYNN.

Chairman—continued.

61,919. You did not say "What I require is the land?"—I did not.

61,920. Did he receive notice to quit at the end of a fortnight after this transaction?—I do not remember. He had the regular notice, in consequence of his being so much in arrear, but I do not remember when it took place.

61,921. You do not deny that?—Oh, he got notice.

61,922. He says "Before the end of a fortnight I received notice to quit." Is that the case?—I cannot contradict it, you know.

61,923. Then "the year I left was a bad season." Was 1887 a bad season?—I do not know that it was particularly bad, but the farm was in such a very bad state.

61,924. "But the year I left was a bad season." Is that true?—I do not remember, indeed.

61,925. You do not remember?—No.

61,926. "I estimate that I received 240*l.* less than I would have had if I had been allowed to remain the following year. I was compelled to leave without being paid for the seeds." He got all that he was entitled to.

61,927. But was he paid for the seeds or not?—He would not be entitled to be paid for the seeds if the seeds had been grazed by sheep. That is the custom of the country, and it is generally known.

61,928. Was he paid for the seeds or not?—I do not think he was, on that account.

61,929. He says also "I had paid 7*s.* for lime that year." Is that the case?—I do not know.

61,930. You do not know whether that is so or not?—No.

61,931. "And the same for guano?"—I do not know, indeed.

61,932. Did he receive a penny for lime or guano?—No, he did not.

61,933. Then he got notice to quit?—Then he got notice to quit, because he was so much in arrear.

61,934. He was two years in arrear?—More than two years when he left.

61,935. And you got all your money?—We got all the money in consequence of his being allowed to sell the crops off. The landlord would certainly not have got the money if he had not been allowed to sell the crops off.

61,936. The following questions are put by Mr. Llewellyn Jones—"Then at that time you say you dealt with him in a friendly way?"—Quite so.

The witness withdrew.

Chairman—continued.

61,937. "You were friendly with him then, were you?"—I was perfectly friendly with him altogether.

61,938. The following question is from the chair—The land was afterwards enclosed?—A small portion of some upland.

61,939. For what purpose?—For the shooting tenant—for a rabbit warren.

61,940. Yes, that is what Mr. Godfrey Roberts told us?—Yes.

Professor Rhys.

68,941. Could you say how much land you asked for in the first instance. It was a small portion, you say?—A very small portion. I do not remember the exact quantity, but it was a very small portion, and whatever had been taken he would have been allowed rent for.

61,942. That I understand?—Yes.

61,943. But what I wanted was to have some idea as to how much it was; would it be 5 or 10 acres?—It might be 10 acres. I do not remember.

61,944. What was the size of Godfrey Roberts' farm?—About 120 acres—a little more.

Chairman.

61,945. There is another question handed in by Mr. Llewellyn Jones—"How many acres are there from Ffordd Gaer to Rhagatt." What is the meaning of that.

61,946. (Mr. Llewellyn Jones.) How many acres are there on Mr. Godfrey Roberts' farm between the road and Rhagatt.

Chairman.

61,947. (To the witness.) You said there were 120 acres on the farm, did you not?—A little over 120 is the size of the farm.

(Mr. Llewellyn Jones.) My question refers to a portion of the farm between a place called Ffordd Gaer and Rhagatt.

Lord Kenyon.

It is very indefinite.

Chairman.

61,948. Can you answer that question?—No.

61,949. How many acres are there from this place to Rhagatt?—I am unable to answer that.

61,950. Has all this land been enclosed?—It was enclosed for a time, but it is not enclosed now.

61,951. What was it enclosed for?—For a rabbit warren, part of it—a small portion.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. G. ROBERTS.

Mr. GODFREY ROBERTS recalled and further examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

61,952. Do you wish to contradict the last witness?—I simply say that what I have said is correct.

61,953. You say that what you have said is correct, and what the last witness said is untrue?—Yes.

61,954. I think that will be sufficient. I understand you to say that you adhere to your original statement, and say that everything the last witness has said is untrue?—Yes. If that is not so, may the sun never rise.

61,955. The following question is by Mr. Llewellyn Jones. "How many fields on your farm lay between Fford Gaer and Rhagatt?"

The witness withdrew.

Chairman—continued.

—Three large fields, one of them being 24 acres in extent, the other 18 acres, and the third about 14 acres, so far as I know.

61,956. One question from the chair. Are those fields now, or have they ever been, a rabbit warren?—No, they are not, because I refused to allow them to be so that year, and they closed up the warren without them.

61,957. Mr. Vincent asks—"Do you understand what the last witness said?"—Yes.

61,958. Are you sure of that?—Yes, I am certain. I could see him telling a lie.

61,959. You quite understand; it is not what you saw, but what you heard?—Yes.

Mr. ENOCH JONES (of Llanfynydd) called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

61,960. Is this your statement?—It is, my Lord.

61,961. Has it been translated to you?—It was read over in English slowly, and I understood it.

61,962. You understand what is in that statement?—I believe I do.

61,963. Are you sure you do?—I believe I do.

Lord Kenyon.

61,964. Is it your statement, or is it not?—Yes, it is what I stated to somebody.

61,965. You had somebody to write it out for you?—Someone else has written it out.

Chairman.

But is it correct?

(The Interpreter.) It has Professor Rhŷs' signature upon it as having been examined.

Professor Rhŷs.

He is as certain of it as he is of anything.

Chairman.

61,966. Is it correct?—Yes, it is correct.

61,967. And you wish it to be read out in English?—Yes, my Lord.

[The statement of the Witness was then read as follows:—]

Evidence of Mr. Enoch Jones, Tan'rnon, Llanfynydd, Wrexham.

I was formerly tenant of Rhydyceirw, Tryddyn, a farm belonging to Mr. Harrop. My mother and I had occupied the farm for 34 years. We had made many improvements, without receiving any compensation for them.

Chairman—continued.

During the last years, owing to the agricultural depression, game, and gamekeepers, I went back in my affairs, and I ran into arrears with my rent. Two distrains were levied for rent—one an illegal distraint. I was also distrained upon for tithe, though, I believe in accordance with the agreement, the landlord should have paid the tithe. An action was also brought against me in the High Court with reference to some action I had taken in regard to a path through the farmyard. I lost this action, and was ruined by it. I have never been able to pay the plaintiff's costs.

61,967a. Of whom were you formerly a tenant?—Of Mr. Harrop.

Lord Kenyon.

61,968. Is it Mr. Halton Harrop?—Yes, my Lord.

Chairman.

61,969. What year was it in which you were distrained upon?—The distraint was put in by the landlord in the year 1887.

61,970. When did you give up your farm?—I received notice to quit at the same time as the distraint.

61,971. What was the notice to quit—six months?—12 months.

Lord Kenyon.

61,972. What do you mean when you say: "We had made many improvements without receiving any compensation?"—Haulage towards making a new building.

61,973. When did you expect to get the compensation?—I understood we were to get it as I was leaving.

61,974. How long did you do the haulage before you left?—Nearly 20 years.

61,975. Then it was somewhat exhausted, perhaps?—No, it is still in existence.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. E. JONES.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

61,976. I suppose the buildings are still in existence. Did you apply for any compensation?—Not particularly so.

61,977. Then why do you put that in? What was the illegal distraint?—Distraint for half-a-year's rent that I had paid.

61,978. What was the action that you took with regard to the path? Did you stop the path or not?—I only gave evidence that there had been a path since I remembered it.

61,979. You gave evidence where?—At Mold.

61,980. Was it an attempt to re-open a path—or what?—It was the new tenant who had closed the footpath up.

61,981. Did they attempt to re-open it?—Yes.

61,982. Were they successful?—Yes.

61,983. Then why did you lose your action; you say you lost your action before the High Court?—I do not say so.

61,984. You say in your statement—"An action was also brought against me in the High Court, with reference to some action I had taken with regard to a path through the farm-yard." I understand you gave evidence?—Yes, I did.

61,985. With regard to this path?—Yes.

61,986. At Mold?—Yes.

61,987. And then you say with regard to that evidence you had another action brought against you in the High Court?—I am not aware of anything else that might have caused that action.

61,988. What was the action?—A claim for the rest of the arrears of rent.

61,989. A claim for the arrears—that is something quite different. Then you think that owing to the evidence you had given with regard to the path they brought this claim for arrears, is that so?—Yes, I do think so.

61,990. It is only your idea that that was the reason?—That is so.

61,991. Why did you defend the action?—Because my solicitor advised me that it was an illegal claim.

Lord Kenyon.

I am afraid you have been a victim of the law.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. OLIVER EVANS re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

62,010 You are local agent to Lord Bagot?—I am.

62,011. On the Pool Park Estate?—I am.

62,012. You have prepared a statement to give us?—I have.

A 86439.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

61,992. And I suppose you want to get the law altered a bit?—Everyone should have fair play.

61,993. Of how many acres was this farm?—67.

61,994. What was the rent?—60%.

61,995. How long did you live there?—Between my mother and myself 34 years.

61,996. And you always used to pay your rent?—Yes, till the times went bad.

61,997. When the times went bad you could not. Did you appeal then to your landlord for a reduction of rent?—I did.

61,998. What did he say?—He said he would do the best he could to assist me.

61,999. Did he do so?—He did not.

62,000. And you gradually lost your capital?—I lost everything completely.

62,001. How long after you left the farm did he make this claim?—Nearly two years.

62,002. Had he during that time asked you for the arrears before?—He had not.

62,003. Then I suppose we are to understand that he meant to forgive you, only you brought an action against him about the path?—That is what I believe.

Mr. Grove.

62,004. Had you left the farm when you gave evidence about the path?—I had. I wish to add that the farm at present has been taken by the gamekeeper to preserve game on.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,005. Does he ever pay his rent?—I believe he does. There are five other farms for the same purpose besides, there.

62,006. Are the farms converted into rabbit warrens?—They are.

62,007. Are there no farmers wanting farms in this neighbourhood?—Very likely there are.

62,008. Who would be the landlord?—Mr. Jonah Harrop—no that is the old man.

Lord Kenyon.

62,009. Where does he live?—Lythwood Hall.

Lord Kenyon.

Yes, that is Mr. Halton Harrop.

Chairman—continued.

62,013. Will you kindly give it to the Commission?—Yes. I am an agent to Lord Bagot on the Pool Park estate, which comprises 19,206 acres, and is situated in 11 parishes, namely, Llanynys, Llanrhaiadr, Llanfwrog,

U u

Chairman—continued.

Efenechtyd, Derwen, Clocaenog, Gyffyllog, Llanfihangel, Llangwm, Bettws Gwerfil Goch, and Cerrig-y-Druidion, all in the counties of Denbigh and Merioneth. I have been agent for 39 years, and reside on the estate. The lower part of the land is good land, adaptable for grazing purposes, and for raising corn, and the average rental of this is 24s. per acre. The land which is in the parishes of Derwen, Llanfwrog, Gyffyllog, and Clocaenog, the middle portion of the estate, is also fairly good for grazing and for barley and oats, and is let at an average of 9s. 6d. per acre. Nearly all these farms have a sheep walk attached. The upland portion of the estate is used for grazing and for growing oats principally, and is let at an average of 5s. per acre. The land that is well cultivated grows good oats. The land on the lower and middle portion of the estate at one time required draining, and considerable outlay has been made at the expense of the landlord in doing so. The pipes were bought and laid down by the landlord. The tenants hold mostly under an agreement in writing, which provides for cultivation and the reservation of the game. The agreements have not been kept by the tenants, and their provisions are very seldom adhered to. There has been no case in my time when their provisions have been enforced. Tenants are allowed to cultivate as they think best, and they have not in any way been interfered with by anyone in this respect. The sporting rights over the estate are let. In case of trespass the tenant makes his complaint to the head gamekeeper, and a valuation in case of dispute is determined upon. The sporting tenant has a valuer, one of the tenants themselves, and he is generally accepted to value for both sides. There have not been any complaints of game trespass save one on the lower portion of the estate, and with reference to this one complaint, which is of recent date, wire netting has been procured, and the field adjoining the wood has been fenced round with the netting, 2 feet 6 inches high, and the shooting tenant has been given a notice to quit, so as to get him to sign a fresh lease providing for compensation to the tenants for damage done by either game or rabbits. The usual conditions of tenancy on the estate are that the rent is made payable half-yearly,—Lady-day and Michaelmas. Credit is given the tenants for five months. The Lady-day rent is received in August, and the Michaelmas in February; 12 months' notice terminates the agreement on either side, the land is given up on November 30th, and the house on May 1st, except on that portion of the estate which has been purchased, and which lies in Llangwm, Llanfihangel and Bettws parishes. The land is given up Lady-day, and the house on May 1st. There are few tenants on the estate which do not hold under agreement in writing; these are very old tenants, and their successors members of their families.

There is no clause in the agreements which provides against the tenants having the advantage of the Agricultural Holdings Act. The tenants take the benefit of the Ground Game Act, and kill the ground game very closely. Very few of the old tenants have a copy of the agreement; such as call for a copy are voluntarily supplied with one. When the agreement is signed the clauses are gone through numerically, and explained to the tenants in the Welsh language. Since my promise at Bala to the Commissioners to get the agreements put into Welsh, they have been translated, and the Welsh copy is endorsed in the fold of the English one.

The total present rental of the estate, including sporting rents, is 7,496l. The rental in 1848 was 5,940l., but this did not include the sporting rents, and the rent of the Hall, which was at that time in hand, and since then several purchases have also been made. The rental at present is, having calculated what has been sold and purchased, about 500l. less than it was at that time. Since 1883, abatements have been made in the rents of 10 per cent., but no permanent reductions. In 1866 a valuation of the estate was made by Mr. Palin, who stated that the farms were underlet, but the rents were not raised in consequence of his valuation.

In 1864 there were 44 labourers, carpenters, and masons employed on the estate, and about that number was maintained up to the year 1890, when they were reduced by 13. From the year 1864 to 1890 there were considerable building operations carried on on the estate. During the course of these years, 39 new homesteads have been built, 63 homesteads enlarged with additions made to the houses, and restored with new roofs, 92 new farm buildings have been built, these include new cowhouses, stabling, barns, granaries, and haylofts. In other places minor repairs have been done, including erection of pigsties, sheds, and small outhouses. 750 acres have been drained at an expense of 4,500l. Over eight miles of new roads have been made for the convenience of the tenants, and over which they and the public now travel. Between 18 and 20 miles of new fencing have been made, posts and wire, walling, turf bank, with quicksets, and double guard of wire. There are on the estate only nine new tenants. On the other farmhouses the tenants' relatives have in each instance succeeded to the holding. Very little permanent improvements have been made by the tenants, and in cases where any have been made, no advantage has been taken, the rent remaining the same to the tenants' relatives on succeeding to the tenancy. There are only four farms into which smaller farms have been consolidated, and these remain so at present. A sawmill is carried on at the expense of the landlord, and three horses are kept on the estate wholly for estate work, carting pipes, bricks, slates, timber, and building materials. I calculate that Lord Bagot has spent on the estate during the last 39 years 85,000l. in building operations, draining, fencing, walling, making new roads, river banking, and wages of workmen. When I prepared this statement I omitted one important item, namely, the amount paid by Lord Bagot to the Improvement Commissioners, 12,318*l.*, which brings the total expenditure during the last 39 years to 98,000*l.* odd. Permit me, my Lord, to answer any questions in Welsh.

Chairman.

Certainly.

(From this point the evidence was taken through an Interpreter.)

Professor Rhys.

62,014. Are most of the tenants Welsh speaking?—Yes.

62,015. Do you find the fact that you are able to speak Welsh helpful in your dealings with them?—Yes.

62,016. So that you feel you are not at the mercy of an interpreter?—Just so.

62,017. We have heard of a case where a man on an estate undertook to act as interpreter, and translate between the landlord and the tenant, or the would-be tenant, and he put in what he liked for both parties. You would not like to trust yourself in that way?—No, I would not like to trust myself to one like that.

62,018. But you know enough English, on the other hand, to deal with your landlord?—I do.

Mr. Grove.

62,019. Do you give copies of agreements to all tenants when they sign them?—If they call for them.

62,020. But if they do not call for them do you give them?—No, I do not unless they call for them.

62,021. But does it not seem reasonable on a large estate that a man, when he signs an agreement, should have a copy that he can refer to?—Yes, it is.

62,022. Do the tenants take advantage of the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No, they do not.

62,023. Are they acquainted with it?—I believe they are. I had a conversation with several of them about it.

62,024. Have you had any notices at all for compensation?—Yes.

62,025. Do they take advantage of the Ground Game Act?—Yes, they do.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,026. Can you let us see a copy of your agreement?—Yes. (The witness handed in copy agreement.)

62,027. Do the tenants approve of your letting this sporting right to other gentlemen?—We have had no complaints at all except now in the lower portions of the estate.

62,028. What is the nature of the complaints you have from there?—They are as to rabbits.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

62,029. Then you have a wire fence to protect the tenants?—Only to protect one field which was eaten up by the rabbits.

62,030. Is it possible to keep them outside?—No, it is not.

62,031. Who was the valuer you employed to value these farms?—Mr. Palin.

62,032. Is he in the habit of valuing in this district?—He was then an agent for Mr. Sandbach, of Hafodunos, Abergele, on similar land to the Pool Park land.

62,033. Was he a professional valuer?—He was.

62,034. How is it you did not adhere to his valuation?—Because we saw it was very uneven.

62,035. Are you a practical farmer yourself?—I am. I was bred on a farm, and I had to take heavy responsibilities at 14 years of age, and I had five years' experience as a bailiff under Mr. Turnour, of Pool Park.

62,036. Then you were in a position to decide for yourself that he had over-estimated the value of the farms?—In some cases.

62,037. How about the cottages?—They are rather scarce.

62,038. Have any tumbled down?—Not recently.

62,039. Have you built any new cottages?—We have built four new cottages, and five of them have been restored.

62,040. You are steadily improving the repairs of the estate?—As much as we can.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

62,041. Are you the head agent or the sub-agent of the estate?—Yes, sub-agent.

62,042. Is there a farm called Fachlwyd Ucha on this estate?—Yes.

62,043. What was the name of the tenant?—Thomas Lloyd.

62,044. He died, did he not, leaving a widow named Margaret Lloyd?—He did.

62,045. Has she left the farm?—She has.

62,046. Did she receive notice to quit?—The landlord gave her notice.

62,047. Why was that?—Because she was in heavy arrears of rent.

62,048. What rent had they agreed to pay?—60*l.*, the annual rent.

62,049. Is it not the fact that Lloyd became tenant in the year 1882 or 1883, and that he took it at the old rent, 46*l.*, but the house and buildings were to be put in thorough repair in the first two years, and then the rent was to be raised to 60*l.*?—No, the rent was 60*l.* at the first, but there was an allowance of 14*l.* during the first two years for lime and for manure.

62,050. Is this the agreement (handing)?—That is a copy of it.

60,051. Was it not a condition of signing the agreement that the premises were to be put in repair the first two years?—It was not.

60,052. Then I understand the premises were out of repair?—They were not so very bad when they went there; they were thatched roofs beginning to go.

60,053. Is it not the fact that there was no pigsty on the place?—There were four pigsties.

60,054. Is it the fact that there was no cart-shed?—No, there was a cart-shed.

60,055. Is it not the fact that the pigsties you refer to were made out of one of the sheds?—Thomas Lloyd and myself bargained that if we made him a loose box out of the lower bay he would take the old shed and make pigsties out of it.

62,056. That is how the pigsties were made, in fact?—Yes.

62,057. Is it not the fact that in 1889 and 1891 the tenant carried materials to the amount of 89*l.*?—He did carry for repairs.

62,058. Was the haulage account about 28*l.*?—I had a claim from Mr. Owen Williams, and I handed it over to the head office.

62,059. What was it for?—For haulage, and because they had not sufficient pigsties.

62,060. Was not the complaint made in reference to the conditions on which they had signed the agreement, namely, that you were to put the place in repair, and provide proper pigsties?—I did not refer to any time, but we were to do it as soon as we could.

62,061. Then you were doing them?—We were.

62,062. You told me a little while ago that there was no agreement that you were to do them?—There was no agreement to make the pigsties.

62,063. To do the repairs was what I put to you first of all?—Only a promise to put the cowhouse, and the house, and the barn in repair.

62,064. That is what I put to you, and you denied it at the commencement. Which do you mean?—I did promise to put those things in repair, but there was no time mentioned to commence them or to finish them.

62,065. Is it not the fact that the only bedroom available for the son was so damp that on rainy nights he had to get up and go away and sleep with the servant man?—I am not aware of that. The place where the servant man slept had a slate roof.

62,066. This agreement was dated 1882. Was the house repaired at any time before Mrs. Lloyd gave notice to quit?—Yes, some time before then.

62,067. When was it repaired?—I cannot give the date.

62,068. Then Mrs. Lloyd received notice to quit because she and her late husband had been so much in arrear?—Yes.

62,069. Are you aware of the fact that she advertised for sale her away-going crops?—Yes.

62,070. Through Messrs. Roberts and Sons, the auctioneers, at an auction?—Yes.

62,071–2. Before the advertisement was issued, did you see Mr. Roberts?—Yes.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

62,073. Did Mr. Roberts tell you that the Lloyds had informed him that Mr. Oliver Evans, the agent, and the Lloyds had arranged the matter?—He said that he had settled, but not that they had settled.

62,074. Did you tell Mr. Roberts that it was all right?—Yes, so far as I understood.

62,075. Did not you afterwards write to Mr. Roberts, after the advertisements for sale by auction had been issued, saying that the crops must not be sold off?—I did not.

62,076. Who did?—The solicitor who acts for the estate.

62,077. Mr. Aneurin Evans?—Yes.

62,078. Then, in fact, the sale was stopped, was it not?—It was not stopped, but they were stopped from selling out.

62,079. You agreed, I think, with the representatives of Thomas Lloyd to purchase the crops of corn and all the hay, and the valuation to be made by two valuers and an umpire in the usual way?—I want to make an explanation of that.

62,080. I dare say; but let us get at the facts first. Was not the sale to you to be subject to an allowance of 2*s.* 6*d.* in the £ upon the amount of the valuation?—They had made such an agreement with the new tenant.

62,081. But with you?—Wait a little. I want to make an explanation of that. John Lloyd wrote to me saying they were going to sell out. I wrote to the head office informing them of that. Mr. Neighbour, the head agent, came and met Mr. John Lloyd at the station; they had a conversation about the matter, and he utterly refused to let them sell. They again met him in the afternoon, and he refused them again. I saw the Lloyds after that; we talked about the matter, and they asked me would I write again about it. I did.

62,082. You were going as a friend of the Lloyds rather?—Yes, quite so.

62,083. The outcome of it was that there was this agreement of the 29th September, 1893, under which you were to purchase at a valuation less 2*s.* 6*d.*?—Before they put the advertisements out I wrote again to the office.

62,084. I understand that; we have got past that?—Then I saw the incoming tenant; I told him to make the best agreement he could with them, and he made a promise to purchase it.

62,085. Did you or did you not sign an agreement undertaking to purchase from the outgoing tenant?—The incoming tenant, after promising to do that, came to my place very early one morning, I believe it was the morning of the sale, and he said he would not take the crops, that his family would kill him if he did—that valuations on crops were such bad ones. Mr. David Roberts came to me on the morning of the sale. I informed him how things stood. I told him the incoming tenant refused to take it, but I preferred to stand in and take it at a valuation to keep peace between the parties.

62,086. You did, in order to keep peace between the parties, take it at a valuation?—I asked Mr. Roberts would he value it. He said he did not care very much to do so, as he was acting for the tenants, but he did not refuse to do so. I could not attend the sale; I was due at other places of business.

62,087. We do not want all this; it is a very simple thing I am asking you. Did you or did you not agree to purchase from the outgoing tenant?—I did. I said I would.

62,088. Was not the sale to be subject to an allowance of 2s. 6d. in the £ upon the amount of the valuation?—It was.

62,089. Did the incoming tenant get the benefit of that 2s. 6d.?—Yes, he had the value of it.

62,090. Did you allow him the 2s. 6d. in the £, or did you charge him the full amount of the valuation?—I did not charge him the full amount.

62,091. What did you charge him?—I want now to explain how the valuation took place. As I was going away I met two men, Mr. Owen Williams, Glanclwyd, and Mr. Henry Williams, Plas-y-ward. I told them how things were. I said that the new tenant would not take the crops, but I had preferred to stand and take it if those two gentlemen would value it.

62,092. We have gone long past that. I want to know what was charged to the incoming tenant, who ultimately bought these crops?—I allowed the incoming tenant one third.

62,093. Give it in pounds, shillings, and pence. What did you pay the representatives of Lloyd?—142l.

62,094. What did you get from the incoming tenant?—I have yet only received 30l.

62,095. What was the amount at which the same was made over to him. What was he bound to pay?—I sold all to him for 70s. a ton.

62,096. 70l.?—It came to 60l.; I allowed 10l., so as to arrive at the consuming price.

62,097. So that you lost over this transaction 72l.?—Oh, no. Will you allow me to explain.

62,098. I really think you could do it better in English?—These are the particulars of the valuation by Mr. Owen Williams: "Five stacks of barley and two cocks of barley, 50l. 8s."

62,099. At what price did you agree to sell the growing crops?—I did not sell all the grain to him. I threshed it myself, so as to make sure what it would come to. It is stated in their figures that there were 126 hobbets of barley at 8s., coming to 50l. 8s., whereas there were only 106 hobbets. It is stated again as to straw that there were 10 tons of the barley straw. That would come to 25l. It is stated again that there were five stacks of oats, with 34 hobbets in each, and one cock of oats, which would make 180 hobbets at 6s. 6d., amounting to 58l. 10s. Instead of 180 there were only 136 hobbets. And then as to straw again. They charged 12½ tons of straw at 50s. which would come to 31l. 5s.

62,100. Were these in the stack?—Yes, small stacks.

62,101. We do not want to go into minute details. Did you sell all you bought from the outgoing tenant to the incoming tenant?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

62,102. You sold some for your own profit?—No, I did not get profit. I did not get the price that they put on it, and, besides that, there was a loss of 8l. in the barley, and a loss to me of 13l. 6s. in the oats, and a loss on the straw of 8l. 10s.

62,103. My point has nothing on earth to do with all this. What I want to know is how you, the agent of the estate, are engaged in a transaction of this kind?—Merely for the sake of making peace between the parties.

62,104. In order to make peace between the outgoing and incoming tenant you run the risk of losing a good part of 140l. Is that what you want us to understand?—I thought I was sure to get fair play from the valuers to keep me free.

62,105. You told the head agent that you went in for this transaction, I suppose?—Yes, for the sake of making peace.

62,106. Have you often done the same thing by way of making peace before?—No, I did not make such an attempt before, but I made several peaces between parties before this.

Lord Kenyon.

62,107. What was the amount of the arrears?—I beg to refer to the solicitor as to what those were.

62,108. If you do not wish to answer it I will not press the question?—I do not know what the arrears were.

62,109. This barley and so on was in stacks?—Yes.

62,110. It was an inflated valuation?—Yes.

62,111. In how many years was it that there were only nine new tenants?—At the present time there are only nine new tenants in existence, the others are members of the same family.

62,112. How many years does this extend over?—20 years.

62,113. From your statement here it might be nine new tenants in one year?—It does not mean that.

Chairman.

There are a great many questions handed up. I should like to know whether they are insisted upon.

(Mr. Aneurin O. Evans.) I think so; although I do not wish to take up the time of the Inquiry, I should like to put the questions to my father, the sub-agent, in order that the whole matter touched upon may be cleared up.

Chairman.

Who are you, Sir.

(Mr. A. O. Evans.) I am the local solicitor.

Chairman.

Do you act for Lord Bagot.

(Mr. A. O. Evans.) Yes, in local matters my Lord.

4 September 1894.]

Mr. O. EVANS.

Chairman.

62,114. These are questions by Mr. Aneurin O. Evans, of Denbigh, and local solicitor for Lord Bagot—"Is there a tenancy of the name of "Maestyddyn"?—Yes.

62,115. "What acreage of land had Mr. Jones, "and what was his rent"?—He had a total acreage of 574 acres 3 roods 8 perches.

62,116. And the rent?—220*l*.

62,117. "Did the head office at Stafford refuse "to Mr. Jones to make the abatement a permanent reduction, and was that because it "would open a precedent to all the others." Is the head office at Stafford?—Yes, at Blythfield, near Lord Bagot's mansion.

62,118. "What money was returned to Mr. "Jones during the 15 years of his tenancy"?—200*l*.

62,119. "Had the letting of Lodge Farm "anything to do with the quitting of Maes- "tyddyn by Mr. Jones, and if so, what"?—I believe he had been vexed because he was not allowed to have the Lodge Farm, but there were other evils creeping up.

62,120. "Mr. Jones said at Mold that you "told him the rent was the same to his successor, and is that true, and have you any "explanation to give"?—Yes. The rent is the same, but there is an allowance for lime and artificial manure.

62,121. "Do you know the Fachlwyd tenancy"?—I do.

62,122. "Was the condition as to rent of 60*l*. "laid before Mr. Edwards when he took the "farm"?—It was.

62,123. "Can you specify the improvements "done for Mr. Lloyd while he was tenant of "Fachlwyd"?—We put a new roof on the barn, made a loose box 15 by 15 at the bottom bay, reconstructed the cow sheds, fixed stalls, root house, and calf's pen, bullock hovel, and stirk shed, new roof on the house, new windows, and new cartshed.

62,124. How long before he ceased to be "tenant had he applied for an additional pigsty"?—Two years.

62,125. When Mrs. Lloyd was leaving, was "there a valuation made, and by whom, and "will you state the circumstances"?—A valuation was made of the crop by Mr. Owen Williams, Glanclwyd, and Mr. Henry Williams, Plas y ward.

62,126. "What were you in your personal "loss on this valuation"?—4*l*. 16*s*. 0*d*., after making every possible deduction.

62,127. "Are Mrs. Lloyd and her two sons "and daughters still alive"?—Yes.

62,128. "Not holding any land"?—They are not.

62,129. "So that they can have no excuse for "not coming forward"?—I am not aware.

62,130. "Were Mr. Aneurin Evans' instructions "from the head office"?—They were; he had nothing from me.

62,131. "Was there any hardship in Mrs. "Lloyd not being allowed to sell out, and if not, "why not"?—There was no hardship at all; they had the crops when they came in at the consuming price; everything that was there; there was not much there.

62,132. "After Mr. Lloyd was refused permission to sell out, did he call upon you and "say he would sell out and take the consequences"?—Yes, the son did.

62,133. "Were you present at the inquiry "yesterday"?—I was.

62,134. "Did you hear Mr Henry Williams "say that money was to be had at 4 per cent."?—Yes.

62,135. "Can you say whether he lent any "money to the tenant of this farm, Fachlwyd"?—He lent them 100*l*. at 5*l*. 10*s*. per centum.

62,136. "Did the late tenant of Fachlwyd "tell you what money he owed when he undertook the tenancy, and what was the amount "of interest he paid annually"?—He said there was a farm belonging to his wife, which had a mortgage of 700*l*. on it, and he wanted to sell that farm.

62,137. I think the others are personal questions, and not necessary to be put; we always avoid personal questions—"What was the "value of Mr. Lloyd's stock when he entered "the farm"?—Very little.

62,138. "What did his sale realize on Mrs. "Lloyd quitting the tenancy"?—288*l*. 13*s*. 4*d*. and the 142*l*. that I had to pay.

62,139. "Are you thoroughly conversant with "the management of estates in West Denbighshire"?—I am.

62,140. "Are you able from your experience "as an agent for 39 years to say whether the "instances of hardship and grievances brought "before the Commission in this part of the "country are the general experiences of farmers "or merely exceptional cases"?—They are merely exceptional cases.

62,141. "Mr. Henry Williams in his evidence "yesterday stated that the buildings on Lord "Bagot's estate and another one were not, he "believed, quite so good as on Sir Watkin's. "Do you know what knowledge has Mr. "Williams of Lord Bagot's estate to warrant "his belief and his conclusion as to repairs"?—I believe he cannot have any knowledge of the estate during the last 20 years, or else he would not have given that answer. See 60,22

62,142. "Would the tenants on Lord Bagot's "estate in your opinion be in a better position "financially if they purchased their holdings"?—No, because if the places were sold one by one they would go above the rent.

62,143. "Are you aware of any small holdings "adjacent to and in the heart of Lord Bagot's "estate"?—Yes.

62,144. "Are they let at a lower, higher, or "same rent as those holdings of Lord Bagot's "the other side of the hedge"?—Much more than half above the rents of Lord Bagot. When Lord Bagot's rent is 17*s*. an acre, the other side of the hedge is rented at 2*l*. an acre. Lord Bagot has a farm 9*s*. 3*d*. an acre and there is another farm the other side of the hedge, poorer land, 30s. an acre.

62,145. "Have you practical knowledge of farming?"—I have.

62,146. "Did you act as bailiff of a farm of 300 acres for five years?"—Yes.

62,147. "Can you say what were the arrears of rent on the estate in 1842 and succeeding years?"—Over 1,300*l*.

62,148. "Have they since increased or decreased?"—They have decreased.

62,149. "What are they this year?"—300*l*.

62,150. "Can you say what proportion of the rents on the estate are spent every year in wages and improvements?"—34 per cent.

62,151. "Do you acknowledge tenant right?"—We do.

62,152. "Can you give instances of concessions?"—About four years ago we paid 80*l*. to a widow when she was giving up the land, and two years after another one had 60*l*. Another widow who was in trouble was allowed 30*l*. The last tenant who quitted the estate, two years ago, was allowed a full sum of 70*l*. for improvements.

62,153. Now Mr. Llewellyn Jones puts these questions. "When you state that the rental is 5*s*., do you include the mountain land on the estate. If so, what is the quantity of mountain land on this estate?"—There are about 6,000 acres of it.

62,154. "Are the buildings on Lord Bagot's estate as a rule in poor condition?"—No, they are not.

62,155. "Are repairs and new buildings sometimes promised and the promises afterwards not performed?"—No special promise is made, but we say we will do them as soon as we can.

62,156. "Are the promised repairs delayed for a considerable time?"—They are not delayed, but we are unable to do them sometimes because we have too much to do.

62,157. "Do you act as agent for the property of which 'Melin Meyarth' is a portion?"—I am not the agent, but I receive the rents for her.

62,158. "How long was this mill stopped working owing to its needing repair?"—I cannot say. That depended upon the millwright, who had promised to do the mill, and he did not do it.

62,159. "Was there any reduction in the rent made for this period?"—She does not pay me, she pays direct to Mrs. Wynne.

62,160. "Is the road which runs from Rhewl to Bontuchel now closed?"—It is not closed, but we have locked it.

62,161. When did the locking of the road take place?—We have always locked it now and then since the road was made.

62,162. When was it locked for good?—It was locked for good, three years ago on Good Friday. Mr. Gee and his family were coming up, I was not aware of it, and I had locked it, and I suppose it was a sin.

62,163. Who made the road?—Lord Bagot made the road at his own expense. It cost him at least 2,000*l*.

Lord Kenyon.

62,164. I suppose you only assert the right to close it. It is a private road?—Yes, it is a private road, but there is another thing. There was a terrible trespass on it—people would come there and cut timber down, and there were gipsies coming there, and donkeys coming there.

Chairman.

62,165. "Had it been open for 40 or 50 years to the public?"—No, it has not been open over 35 years.

62,166. "Had it not practically become a public highway?"—No, because we locked part of it every year.

62,167. "Had you formerly a tenant called David Jones at Maestyddyn Farm?"—Yes.

62,168. "Did he spend a good sum of money in improvements?"—He was a good farmer. I do not think he made many improvements.

62,169. "Such as draining, fencing, &c., purchasing lime and manures?"—Yes, and he was allowed from time to time during his tenancy 200*l*.

62,170. "What was the rent before Mr. David Jones left?"—Mr. David Jones had three holdings for one rent. He had 18 acres in the Vale, and he paid 2*l*. 10*s*. an acre for it, Lord Bagot paying the tithe and taxes. He had another farm.

62,171. "What was the rent of Maestyddyn Farm before Mr. David Jones left?"—132*l*.

62,172. "Did Mr. Jones ask for a reduction in his rent before he left?"—He did.

62,173. "Did you grant him a reduction?"—I did not.

62,174. "If not, what rent do you get now from the new tenant who succeeded him?"—The same rent, with an allowance for lime and manure, and David Jones would have had the same if he had remained there.

62,175. Mr. Llewellyn Jones wants to take you back to the matter of compensation of 200*l*. which you said you had paid to Mr. David Jones for his improvements?—It was not compensation—it was not in the form of compensation—it was an allowance made from year to year during his 15 years' tenancy for manure and other things.

62,176. "Did Mr. David Jones have abatements made from time to time in his rent at the same time as the other tenants?"—He had the abatements like others in addition to the 200*l*.

62,177. "Have there not lately been very unpleasant events between some of the tenants and the gamekeepers on the estate?"—Yes, in the Vale.

62,178. Mr. J. Owen Hughes asks—"Was the allowance to the outgoing tenant you spoke of paid by way of compensation and not as tenant right?"—It was an abatement and as tenant right for what he had done.

62,179. Mr. F. Llewellyn Jones further asks—"Under what circumstances did the tenant of 'Plâs Clocaenog' leave his farm?"—He gave it up.

See 62,309-62,333.

Chairman—continued

62,180. "Did he offer to remain if his rent was reduced to 20l.?"—He did.

62,181. "Was the farm for a long time before a tenant came forward?"—No; there were a good many after it continually.

62,182. "Was he allowed to sell the crops out?"—He was not.

62,183. "Did you allow the new tenant to sell out?"—No, I did not. I went there intending to purchase the hay from him for Lord Bagot, but he had sold the hay in addition to that. The old tenant had been allowed to sell as much as he liked of hay the previous year. We do not interfere with any of the tenants if they can spare hay or straw for selling it.

62,184. "Did he pay Mr. Evan Hughes (the old tenant) more than the consuming price?"—I did not buy any from him. It was other people who bought.

62,185. Mr. Owen Wynne asks—May I ask "if you are a Nonconformist or a Churchman?"—I am a Nonconformist.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. THOMAS HUGHES called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

62,186. Does this statement contain your evidence?—Yes.

62,187. You have had it read over to you?—Yes.

62,188. You have no objection to its being read out in English?—I have none.

The statement of the witness was read as follows:—

Evidence of Mr. THOMAS HUGHES, Hafod-dre, Pentrefoelas.

I am a tenant farmer living at Hafod-dre, Pentrefoelas. About 50 years ago I took a farm under Sir Watkin W. Wynn. I was there for 16 years. I went to a great deal of expense in draining and cultivating waste land and in making new walls and a new building. The farm was ultimately sold by Sir Watkin, and I did not receive any compensation for all the improvements I had made.

I then took a farm on the estate of Mr. Lloyd, of Palé, Llandderfel. This farm was in a bad state when I took it. I occupied this farm for eight or nine years, working hard and assisted by my wife and children. I went to a good deal of expense here again in draining, and I also built several new walls, and carried a great deal of lime to the farm. When the farm was beginning to pay me for my labour, it was put up for sale. I attended the sale and bid for the farm. However, Mr. Price, of Rhiwlâs, was the purchaser, and he refused to let me the farm, giving as his reason that I had bid against him. I failed to get any compensation for my improvements, though the farm was much more valuable than when I took it.

I afterwards took a farm called Geeler, near Pentrefoelas, from Mr. George Ashley. I occupied this farm for 23 years. I built several walls here and made a cart shed, which cost me about 30l. I was allowed 16l. towards this expense. For some years I was very comfortable here, and the house and some of the out-buildings were repaired by my landlord. The stable was, however, left in a very bad condition, and I lost a mare worth 50l. on that account. One day my landlord came to the farm and I asked him to repair the stable, telling him of my loss. I told him I must leave unless the stable was put in proper repair. The next day I received a letter from my landlord telling me that he thought I had better give up my farm, as it was evident I had had enough of the place. I then wrote in reply, asking whether he would let me see him to speak matters over. In reply he stated that he could not see me; that if I did not give up the place he would serve me with notice to quit. I accordingly received notice. Before I received the notice the farm had been let to a neighbour. A few years before I left I had drained one 'fridd,' laying about 3,000 pipes in it, and surrounding it with a wire fence. I never was in arrears with my rent during the whole time I occupied the farm.

The notice to quit was a six months' notice, expiring on March 25th. The tenancy on all the other holdings in the district commences on May 1st; but fortunately I was able to secure a small holding belonging to Mr. R. E. Roberts, of Arundel. See 62,249.

I also beg to offer evidence on the following points:—

(1.) The condition of tenant farmers generally. (2.) The condition of agricultural labourers. (3.) The game laws, and the unsatisfactory relations that exist between gamekeepers and tenants. (4.) The Ground Game Act, 1880. (5.) The difficulty tenants experience in obtaining compensation for improvements when they leave their farms. (6.) The consolidation of farms.

62,189. What is the condition of tenant farmers generally in your district?—Some are pretty well off and some otherwise.

62,190. Is farming profitable at the present time?—Not at all.

62,191. Do you consider that rents are far too high in your neighbourhood?—They are, as a rule—one-third too high.

62,192. There is very little left to the tenant when the rent is paid to the landlord?—Very little.

62,193. Have you applied for a reduction of rent on your present holding?—Yes.

62,194. Have you obtained it?—No.

62,195. Do you think you can go on paying your present rent?—I cannot. I could not have gone on as far as this, only I had saved some money before coming to the present place. I pay about 18s. an acre; most of it is peat land.

62,196. How large is your farm?—From 20 to 25 acres.

62,197. What is your rent?—23*l*.

62,198. And who is your landlord?—Mr. R. E. Roberts, Arundel. It is mentioned in my statement.

62,199. What is the condition of agricultural labourers?—The condition of labourers is much better than the condition of farmers at the present time.

62,200. The condition of labourers, you think, has improved in the last 10 years?—It has improved by half or more in our part of the country.

62,201. Are you much troubled with game on your farm?—Yes, I must give up the farm or get somebody to destroy the game; else I shall be ruined there.

62,202. What is the game—chiefly rabbits?—All kind of game, rabbits, hares, pheasants, and partridges. My farm is right in the middle of the estate of Colonel Wynne-Finch, and the game on my land is let to him.

62,203. Colonel Wynne-Finch shoots over his own estate, does he not?—Yes.

62,204. He does not let it?—He does not, and he shoots over my land as well.

62,205. Colonel Wynne-Finch shoots over your land which is let to him by your landlord?—That is so.

62,206. Would you like the game laws to be done away with?—I would indeed. We must have some alteration, or we shall be all ruined in our part of the country.

62,207. Is there any trouble with the game-keeper?—You dare not look at the game, much less kill them—either the ground game or the other game.

62,208. You know that the ground game belongs to you under the Ground Game Act?—Yes, I do, but we cannot look at them for all that. They take them from my landlord.

62,209. Do you not know that the hares and rabbits on your farm under the Act of 1880 are your own property?—Yes, I do know that.

62,210. You say you dare not kill them?—We dare not kill them. I am not allowed to carry a gun to shoot crows when they are picking the potatoes up.

62,211. Is there any difficulty in obtaining compensation for improvements when tenants leave their farms in your neighbourhood?—I never heard that anybody had obtained any compensation, nor did I get any when I had to leave my places.

62,212. Are you in favour of a court for settling differences between landlords and tenants?—I am not only in its favour, but we must have something of the sort.

62,213. Have many farms been consolidated in your neighbourhood?—Yes, a large number of small farms have been consolidated with large farms.

Lord Kenyon.

62,214. You seem to be very unlucky in changing so often?—Yes, so it happened. I do not know what the reason was, unless it was that I was not of the same political creed as my landlord. I know that had some effect.

62,215. Your first farm was sold by Sir Watkin. How old were you when you took that first farm?—I was then about 23. I am now 75.

62,216. Who bought it?—The tenant who was coming there to live after me.

62,217. Did you apply for any compensation?—No, I did not try. There was no hope for me. A good many had been sold, and nobody got any compensation.

62,218. You did not try. Perhaps they did not ask for it?—I cannot say that. I was offered that farm on sale—that farm of Sir Watkin's—but I did not like to buy it.

62,219. As to the farm of Mr. Lloyd, of Palé, did you ask for compensation?—Yes, I did ask, and I obtained 5*l*. I forgot to put that down, but that is true.

62,220. Why did Mr. Ashley give you notice?—I have not obtained the reason to this day.

62,221. Did you apply for any compensation there?—No. It took me all my time to escape from there with the skin of my teeth.

62,222. What do you mean by that?—Because the new tenant wanted every scrap of things that I had.

62,223. Was your quarrel with the new tenant?—I did agree with him. He bought the sheep.

62,224. If you thought you had improved your farm, I do not quite see why you did not ask for compensation. What was the date of your leaving that farm?—Three or four years ago.

62,225. Yes, exactly. It is since the passing of the Act. If you had done any specific improvements why did you not put in a claim?—The new tenant said that he had taken the farm, and that he was not to buy anything from me.

62,226. Why did you not put in some claim against your landlord?—I had an agreement, but the landlord never adhered to it.

62,227. With regard to the game trouble, is it Colonel Wynne-Finch who will not let you shoot?—The keepers.

62,228. Have you been to Colonel Wynne-Finch?—No.

62,229. Do you not think you would do better if you went straight to headquarters?—I do not think there is much to be had out of him; he does not do much for his own tenants, much less for anybody else's tenants.

62,230. I think if you went to Colonel Wynne-Finch and complained you would find it better than complaining to the keeper?—Well, I might try.

62,231. Or perhaps you have nothing to complain of?—Yes, I have.

62,232. Very well; if you have a well-founded complaint, I am sure Colonel Wynne-Finch is more likely to see to it than the keeper?—I have said nothing to him, I have told the keepers many and many a time, I never see him.

Mr. T. HUGHES.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,233. Who was Sir Watkin's agent when you were there?—Mr. John Williams, Gwernhefin, Bala, the father of the present one.

62,234. Did you consider that you had as much a right to bid for your farm as Mr. Price, of Rhiwlâs?—I thought so.

60,235. But for bidding you say you were obliged to leave your farm?—That was the reason given to me.

62,236. Have you found it rather dangerous to ask your landlord for favours?—Yes, we do consider it so in our country.

62,237. When you asked for a stable, what did you have?—He said if we would keep him and his family he would build for all of us.

62,238. But did he not give you a bit of paper as well?—Not then.

62,239. Did he not give you a notice to quit?—Yes, after that, in less than a week.

Professor Rhys.

62,240. Who told you that you are not to kill ground game?—A little dog that we have, caught a hare in one of our fields, and the keeper took it away and told my boy that the hares were his, and that we were not to touch them.

62,241. Has the landlord ever told you not to kill?—He has not. He said he was letting the game to Colonel Wynne-Finch.

62,242. Yes, but you know that the game belongs partly to you?—Yes, I know that well.

Chairman.

62,243. Mr. Owen Wynne asks the following questions—"Do you know that the farms sold by Sir Watkin at that time were sold at extremely low prices?"—Yes, that was so. I did not care much about my farm. I was offered it, but I did not accept the offer.

62,244. That is the reason why you did not buy it?—And most of those who bought at that time have sold them again.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. ROBERT ROBERTS called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

62,256. Is this your statement?—Yes. It has not been read over to me. I have written it myself in English and I understand it.

62,257. It is rather a long statement, and we have had Lord Bagot's agent called before us today, who gave his evidence at very considerable length; we have also had several of his lordship's tenants called as witnesses, and we shall be obliged to you if you would confine your

Chairman—continued.

62,245. "Why did you not give your evidence at Llanrwst"?—I was not called. It was arranged that I should give my evidence at Denbigh in the first instance.

62,246. "Colonel Wynne-Finch was present at Llanrwst"?—I know.

62,247. "Was the Mr. Price, of Rhiwlâs, to whom you referred the grandfather of the present Mr. Price"?—It is the present Mr. Price, I believe, who bought the farm—the young man.

62,248. "You say your present farm is too highly rented"?—Yes, a great deal. It is only a six months' farm; the landlord keeps sheep on the mountain for six months, and then we only get it for the other six months.

62,249. "In your written statement you said you were fortunate in getting it, did you not"?—I have not said so; I said "unfortunately."

(Mr. Owen Wynne.) It is so in the written statement, my Lord.

(Chairman.) Yes.

(The Witness.) I unfortunately had this farm; it is one of the dearest in the country. Every small holding about our neighbourhood is dearer than the large farms.

62,250. Mr. Owen Wynne asks also: "Do you not know that the law allows you to shoot crows on your farm if you want to do so"?—Yes, I know that, but we are not allowed to do so. They watch us as if we were thieves if they see a gun in our hands.

62,651. The following questions are put by Mr. Vincent—"Was this keeper who told your son that the hare belonged to him in the employ of Colonel Wynne-Finch"?—Yes, he told the boy that was with the dog.

62,252. "What was his name"?—The keeper's?

62,253. Yes?—Richard Davies. He is one of the worst sort—an old poacher himself.

62,254. "When did this happen"?—Either twelve months or two years last winter, during the great snow.

62,255. Mr. J. Owen Hughes asks: "Did not the farmers who resold their farms sell at a great profit themselves"?—I do not know, I think some of them had profit from them. They were all high farms.

Chairman—continued.

evidence to personal evidence?—I have no evidence to give on my own behalf. I am not an holder of land.

62,258. What are you?—A general agent.

62,259. What do you mean by a general agent?—I am a rate collector, for one thing.

62,260. We will have your statement read so far as we think it is necessary to deal with it.

Mr. R. ROBERTS.

Chairman—continued.

The following statement of the witness was read:—

Parish of Clocaenog. This parish contains by admeasurement 7,182 statute acres, 4,758 of which are rated to the poor, leaving a residue of 3,422 acres unenclosed land, uncultivated, allotted to sheep walks, and the breeding of grouse. Since the Enclosure Act, 1852, about 2,000 acres, more or less, have been enclosed; a part of which, mostly in the eastern part of the parish, has been cultivated, and the remainder on the northern side of the parish continuing to be sheep pasture. The gross rental of the parish is 3,314*l.* or thereabouts. Deducting 256*l.* 13*s.* 0*d.* for tithe and glebe land, 522*l.* for woodland, railway and sporting, and 57*l.* 12*s.* 0*d.* for cottages, &c., a total of 836*l.* 5*s.* 0*d.*, out of 3,314*l.* we find the net rentals of land enclosed and cultivated for agricultural purposes to be 2,478*l.*, more or less. Deducting also 453 acres for woodland and railway from the gross acreage of 4,758 we have a remainder of 4,305 of arable and pasture land cultivated for agricultural purposes in the parish, the average rent of which amounts to about 11*s.* 6*d.* per acre, varying from 2*l.* 2*s.* 0*d.* per acre, leaving aside the small holdings which are far higher, to a sheep farm of 400 acres rented at 33*l.* 10*s.* 0*d.*, or a slight fraction less than 1*s.* 8*d.* per acre.

So far as it can be found out there has been but a slight advance in the rentals of the parish during the last 55 years, owing to the market price of corn. Granting 1,200 acres for the upper part of the parish, which is mainly pasture land, to be deducted out of the 4,305 acres above referred to, we have 3,105 acres, the main produce of which properly cultivated must be corn. From the Tithe Commutation Book it appears that the number of acres of meadow land in the whole parish is not above 300. Comparing the prices of corn in the year 1839—wheat 70*s.* 8*d.* per quarter, barley 39*s.* 6*d.*, and oats 25*s.* 11*d.* per quarter—it forms a most unfavourable contrast with the year 1892, when the price of wheat had dwindled down to 30*s.* 3*d.* per quarter, barley 26*s.* 2*d.*, and oats 19*s.* 10*d.* per quarter. Still lower in 1893 and without any advance movement in 1894. Dilating further upon the question, the high price of corn for the first 50 years after the Commutation Tithe Act—

62,261. We have had the averages of the last years very fully put before us, and the fluctuations in prices, and so on?—Very well. I wish to refer to the consolidation of farms.

62,262. Yes, we should like to hear about that?—Another cause of complaint in the district is the consolidation of farms, and to a great extent this contributes towards the decrease of the population in the parish. Families are dispersed with no substitution to fill the vacancy, and the occupier enters the land with no benefit to himself, and in many instances to render the land less productive. The following consolidations have occurred in the parish of Clocaenog within the last 50 years.

Chairman—continued.

62,263. We need not have the list; that you have given. About how many are there?—There are five or six in the parish of Clocaenog.

62,264. Anyhow there are a great many?—Yes, about 15 in all.

Lord Kenyon.

62,265. What has the consolidation been?—About one small holding, Penybryn, has been added to one farm.

62,266. Is that all the consolidation comes to?—Two farms have been made into one in 15 instances.

Chairman.

62,267. Then have you anything to say as to dilapidations?—The farm buildings in the parish are not to be complained of, and even highly commendable on the Nantelwyd estate, especially those of late erection, expensive, comfortable, and convenient. There is one homestead in the parish belonging to Lady Reade an exception. The dwelling-house has lately been repaired by order of the Sanitary Authority—an order discreditable to a landowner.

62,268. What is the name of that holding?—Tynnycaer. The outbuildings are miserable, neither wind-tight nor water-tight. The carts are rotting in the cold for want of a cart house, and the pigsties are in a most dilapidated state, nor is there any granary where the tenant can keep his corn. The whole should undergo repairs if not restoration before winter comes on. Under the circumstances the tenant cannot possibly make the best of his stock and must unavoidably suffer loss. I know of only two farms in the parish where on the greatest drought there is scarcity of water—Henblas and Tyisa'r cefn. It appears that all that can be done to remedy this deficiency has been done at Henblas, but with what success I am not aware. I do not know that anything has been done at Tyisa'r cefn, but I am told the tenant has to water his animals on other premises, or at any rate on the road adjoining other premises, about a quarter of a mile from his homestead.

Remedies: (1.) Renewed settlement of rents founded upon the standard basis of the price of corn. (2.) Security of tenure containing right to appeal for a new valuation and remuneration for improvements. (3.) A restoration of the farms consolidated into other farms whereby persons of limited means may start life and secure their living. (4.) Authority to compel the landowners to erect and keep in repair comfortable, convenient, and suitable dwelling-houses and outbuildings on every farm. (5.) The erection of a number of small holdings in the district in proportion to the number and size of the farms in the district. (6.) Encouragement to workmen to enclose mountain lands or enclose uncultivated land on fair terms with security of tenure or possession as the case may be. (7.) An abolition of the game laws.

Mr. R. ROBERTS.

Chairman—continued.

62,269. Are you well acquainted with the farmers in your district?—Yes.

62,270. Are you acquainted with their condition?—I am.

62,271. Do you think they are making money?—That is a secret that they keep to themselves.

62,272. You are not in a position to give any opinion?—I am not.

Professor Rhys.

62,273. I did not quite understand your description of yourself, it was "general agent." General agent of what or whom?—I am collector of rates and taxes occasionally, and I am secretary of the school board, that is another thing.

62,274. You are insurance agent also?—Yes.

62,275. Do you have a good many opportunities of coming in contact with the farmers, and of knowing all about their circumstances?—Yes. I call frequently at the farms, and I know all their occupiers well.

62,276. But they are very close?—Well, it is not my business to ask them either. That is privacy, it should not be known.

62,277. What do you think about their condition generally? What strikes you most with regard to their condition now?—What appears to me now is that their condition is far worse than it has been; the price of corn is so low, and the farms are valued according to the standard of measures of the price of corn some 15 years ago.

62,278. Then do you think their rents are too high?—That is the evidence I have from the most experienced agriculturists of the district. I have asked more than one.

See 55, 123.

62,279. Are the rates very high?—They are far higher than they used to be times ago. There are charges now on the rates that there were not some years ago, such as the school board rates, though not very heavy, and the highway rate, and the county rate is far heavier, and the wages are just three times what they used to be 50 or 55 years ago.

62,280. Then apart from those rates that you mention now, are the rates higher than the old rates used to be?—Well, they are higher this last assessment, about 4d. in the £ higher.

62,281. Quite recently?—Yes, than the former assessment.

62,282. How do you account for that?—I cannot account for it.

62,283. How much is the school board rate?—2d. or 2½d. in the year.

62,284. And the highway rate?—The highway rate and the poor rate and the county rate are all in one.

62,285. But is the highway rate a new one here?—I cannot say that it is new, but say 50 years ago it was not charged.

62,286. But then you paid turnpike gate tolls in those days, did you not?—Yes. Well, there are no turnpikes now in our district.

Professor Rhys—continued.

62,287. But you would expect the highway rate to be a little higher, would you not?—We should expect it to be higher, but it is no new thing, the gates are pulled down for many years now.

Mr. Grove.

62,288. Do you think that any tenant farmers are afraid to come forward to give evidence?—No, I do not know that any of them are. There was a tenant farmer told me to day that he is giving evidence to-morrow in Denbigh. He asked me whether he should; that is John Hughes, of Pencoed.

62,289. Is it bad times for farmers now?—Yes, it must be bad times for them from what I know of. Now our farmers are working hard, and their sons and daughters are working mostly on the farms. There are only nine able-bodied labouring men within the parish depending on the living of farmers, and the farmers cannot always supply those neither.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,290. Do you find any difficulty in collecting the rates at present?—I do get them, to be sure.

62,291. Have you had to call more than once?—Well, in some places; in other places you can get them at once. There are some persons who have done better than others.

62,292. Was it so years ago?—No, I think it is worse now than it used to be years ago; that is my opinion.

62,293. Have you had to summon any for not paying?—No, I did not summon or distrain upon any one of them.

Lord Kenyon.

62,294. What is the population of Clocaenog now?—The population is 356 or 376; I cannot be sure for the moment.

62,295. What was it at the last census?—It decreased 91 in the last two decades.

62,296. It has decreased the last two censuses?—Yes, in the last two decades the population of the parish has decreased by 91.

Chairman.

62,297. I have some questions by Mr. Owen Wynne. "Will those farmers in Clocaenog who now have their consolidated farms give 'them up again'?"—That is more than I can say, whether they will give them up or not. There is some expense in giving them up, for their buildings have fallen on many of them, on several of them whatever, and there would be great expenses to the landlord to restore them.

62,298. "Do you know what rent John Parry, Lady Reade's tenant, pays?"—I think the rent in the parish of Clocaenog and Llanwrog is about 35*l.*; about 30*l.* in the parish of Clocaenog.

62,299 "Do you know that last year, after paying for repairs, she only received 1*l.* 15*s.* 10*d.* from this farm?"—I do not know what she received, but at any rate she was compelled to repair what she did repair, and it was not very creditable to a landowner that she should be compelled by the sanitary authority, but as for the outbuildings, as I said before, there is no carthouse, and the carts are rotting in the open air, the pigsties are quite dilapidated, and the other outbuildings are neither wind-tight nor water-tight.

62,300. "Do you know that before entry, the tenant was informed only a limited amount could be spent in repairs?"—Well, I have known the place for many years; it is not many years the tenant has lived there.

62,301. "Do you know that he took in a lodger in spite of his complaints of the house?" Yes, he had a lodger for some time.

62,302. "And that the sanitary inspector complained of the accommodation not being

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

"sufficient?"—Well, I am not quite aware of the time, whether the lodger was there or not.

62,303. "Are you a bit of a lawyer?"—Well, no, I cannot say that I am; I cannot claim that.

62,304. Then I have some questions by Mr. A. O. Evans—"How long have you lived in the neighbourhood?"—I have lived there for the last 27 years.

62,305. "Are you acquainted with most of Lord Bagot's tenants?"—Yes. I think I am acquainted with every one of them.

62,306. "Have the tenants anything to say against or in favour of Mr. Evans, the local agent?"—No, I do not think they have any cause of complaint against him.

62,307. "Tyisa'rcefn and Henblas, mentioned as having no water in your report, do not belong to Lord Bagot, do they?"—No, they do not belong to Lord Bagot.

62,308. "Were you present this afternoon, and did you hear a question put as to Plas farm in your parish?"—No, I was not present at the time.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. EVAN HUGHES called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

62,309. Where do you live?—Plas Einws, Ruthin.

62,310. What do you wish to state to the Commission?—I want to say something about Plas Clocaenog, where I lived before.

62,311. Will you tell us what you have to say?—My family had been there living for over 40 years. We considered that the farm was too highly rented, and we appealed for a reduction. They refused to give it to us. It was for that reason that we gave up the farm.

62,312. Anything else?—Most of the outbuildings were in too dilapidated a state to put the animals in them. We offered 3*s.* in the £ for the right of selling out the crops. We were refused, and they allowed the present tenant to sell out the crops that he bought from us at consuming prices for their full value.

62,313. Who was the landlord of this estate?—Lord Bagot.

Lord Kenyon.

62,314. What was the farm rented at afterwards?—120*l.*

62,315. After you left it?—The new tenant took it at the same rate as we paid.

62,316. Does he still pay the same rent?—Yes, I offered to take it for a 20*l.* reduction, and the offer was not accepted.

62,317. The next tenant is able to make it pay at the same rent as you paid?—Well, it is now that he commences; he only went there in May.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,318. Why would not they reduce your rent?—I cannot say.

62,319. Had you offended them in any way?—I am not aware that I had. We had paid them every penny during the whole of the time.

62,320. Whom did you appeal to?—I asked the two agents.

62,321. What did they say?—They said they were to receive the farm from me if I thought it was too dear.

62,322. Then in that case you would like to appeal to some court, would you not?—I asked Mr. Evans if he would consent to do something of that sort.

62,323. What did he say?—He said he would do his best for me.

62,324. But you had no recompense?—No.

62,325. Was there any reason why he should treat the new tenant differently to you?—The farm had been offered to several, but they refused to give the old rent that we paid, and this one came forward and offered to pay it.

62,326. What do you consider was the value of that farm?—I considered that what I offered for it was full value for it before the depression in prices.

Professor Rhys.

62,327. What is the name of your place?—Plas Einws, Rhewl.

Mr. EVAN HUGHES.

Chairman.

62,328. I have some questions sent up by Mr. A. O. Evans: "In what condition did you leave the hedges and ditches of Plas?—They were in fairly good condition, as we had received them.

62,329. "To what outbuildings did you refer as being out of repair?"—There was a shed which was covered with straw; and a cow-shed; they were all in one row. The water, 12 months last autumn, flooded in and came out again into the yard.

62,330. Through the house?—Through the outbuildings.

Chairman—continued.

62,331. "Did your father on entering have the crops at a consuming price?"—I was too young to know that.

62,332. "Did you hear the agent state this afternoon that it was not with his consent that anything was sold off after you left?"—Yes.

62,333. "Are you aware that there were three applicants for the farm willing to give the same rent as you gave?"—I cannot say. Mr. Evans said (and that is true enough), that he allowed the tenants to sell the hay off; but we bought in hay and straw while we were at the Plas as much as would grow there in one year.

Mr. WILLIAM DOUGLAS WYNNE GRIFFITH called and examined.

Chairman.

62,334. Are you the owner of the Garn Estate?—I am.

62,335. Which you manage yourself?—Yes.

62,336. What parishes are you prepared chiefly to give evidence for?—I have prepared my evidence in writing, and with your permission I should like to read it.

62,337. If you please?—I propose, my Lord, to answer the questions in the order in which they appear on your syllabus. In the first place I desire to state that I manage the estate entirely myself, without any agency at all, and I transact all matters of business with the tenants in the Welsh language. That has been the practice on this estate from time immemorial, at any rate for three generations, covering over 100 years. The estate I wish to speak about is situated chiefly in the parishes of Henllan, Llanefydd, and Llanrwst, in the county of Denbigh, but also as to two farms in the parish of Rhuddlan, in the county of Flint. The estate consists of about 2,225 acres, of which about 1,960 acres are in Denbighshire, and 265 acres in Flintshire. It is situate chiefly in the Crown lordship of Denbigh, but that in no way affects the tenure of land in the district that I am aware of. As to ownership generally, of course where a man owns his own farm in fee simple unencumbered he is in a far better position than the man who has to pay heavy interest on a mortgage, and, of course, better than the man who has rent to pay. The unencumbered ownership of his farm represents so much additional capital, and, therefore, so much more power of good cultivation, but I fear such cases are few and far between. As a rule freeholders are heavily encumbered with mortgages, and practically pay much higher rents than tenant farmers. There are about 450 acres of unenclosed common lands in the parish of Llanefydd, in many scattered pieces. Little or none of it is adapted for profitable cultivation. The adjoining farms now exercise rights of pasture over it without payment of any kind

Chairman—continued.

to anyone, and “without stint” so far as I know, though there may be an understood custom among the farmers themselves as to the maximum number of animals each farm is to put on. The right is by no means valuable. I do not think that the rights of pasture on the unenclosed lands just referred to is ever taken into account or thought of at all in fixing the rents of the adjacent farms. It certainly never has been on this estate. There are no farms in the district I speak of which can properly be called sheep farms. As to the question of management, where land is held by small or large, by absentee or resident landowners, no general rule can be laid down. The management varies much in all cases; on the whole I should say that perhaps the land on the large estates is the best managed. I am always resident, but I do not think there is any difference in the case of absentee owners unless in that of very small owners. In other cases the estates are managed the same, and the tenants are as well off under competent agents. As to the question where there is a difference of either language, politics, or religion, between the landlord and the tenant, I do not think or believe that either make the smallest difference, or are ever taken into consideration in the choosing of tenants or subsequent dealings with them. I may say that I speak Welsh myself, and transact all business with tenants in that language where necessary. It has never been the practice on this estate to inquire into either the politics or religion of candidates for farms. The only inquiries ever made are with a view to secure tenants of sober and respectable character, good farmers, and solvent tenants. So far as I am actually aware I have only one tenant of a holding of land who is a Churchman, but as I have never made inquiries on that point I cannot speak with certainty. As to their politics, I know nothing, and I have never canvassed a tenant or asked him to vote a particular way. As to the qualification of agents, so far as I know nearly all those in this part of the county, at any rate of the large estates, are practical and experienced men, and I have not heard of any cases of inconvenience or hardships to the tenants arising from the incompetency of the agent. Then as to occupation, the usual date of entry in our district is the 30th November for the land, and the house and buildings on 1st May following. I believe about Rhyl, in many cases, the land is entered on 29th September, but these dates are not universal, the date of entering the land being the 2nd of February for some upland farms, and in some cases in the parish of Llanefydd; but in all re-letting for some years I have made the 30th of November the date in all cases, believing it to be the best general date for all parties. The holdings are all tenancies from year to year on this estate, and I believe generally in the district. I have never been asked to grant a lease, except in one case where a seven years' lease was granted, and at the end of the term the tenant did not wish to renew it, preferring to remain on as tenant from year to year on the same terms, and is still tenant of the same farm. I do not think tenants would have had any difficulty in obtaining leases in the past if they had wished. I take it that in the present state of things neither party would care for them. Tenants under leases would have no claim for reduction of rent in bad times, and do not care to tie themselves to a fixed rent. As tenants from year to year they are practically masters of the situation. Also tenants of small farms wish to be free to take larger ones, if successful, and as a rule they know that tenancies from year to year are practically as safe as leases, and therefore advantageous to them; also a lease implies a termination, with a re-taking and re-arrangements, if the tenant desires to remain, whereas the tenants, at any rate on most estates, know that tenancies from year to year as a rule go on without any interference, and as long as they farm properly are practically leases for unlimited periods. Then as to the question whether the condition of the leaseholders and of their farming is superior or the contrary to that of yearly tenants, so far as I know of leases, I do not think there is any difference. Then, "Have changes in tenancy become more or less frequent than in former years? If more frequent, to what causes are they attributable?" No. In my experience and so far as my observation goes, I do not think there is much difference on this point. On this estate during the last 10 years, excluding three cases of death and no relative desiring to succeed, and two cases of removals to larger farms (one on the estate). I have only had two changes of tenancies, and as to these I am prepared to give full and satisfactory particulars. No cases of hardship have arisen. Then I am asked, "In resuming the occupation of a field or plot out of a holding, for the sake of planting, building, or for other purposes, do owners generally serve their tenants with proper notices for the purpose, and grant them compensation?" I believe this is always done, but there have been no such cases on this estate. Then, "If damage is done to the land in timber-cutting, is the tenant compensated?" Yes, I believe this to be the general practice, and has been done on this estate.

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

Then the usual conditions of tenancy are by written agreements, of which I produce a specimen. When I succeeded to the estate there were scarcely any written agreements with tenants, but this being contrary to the general practice, and believing it more satisfactory to all parties and having suffered inconvenience from the want of them, I decided to have agreements, and adopted, almost as a matter of course, forms of agreement such as are used on most estates, and which contain some provisions that have proved practically useless, as they have never been enforced, and in some of the more recent lettings I have omitted many of them and intend to omit more in future. These forms of agreements are used by me chiefly as a rough draft to work on only, and are more or less modified and altered in each case, to which they are adapted. There has never been an instance on the estate of any of the clauses of the agreement being enforced, or of any litigation in connexion with them. Of course it never is necessary to enforce an agreement in the case of a moderately good tenant. But although while a tenant farms properly and keeps out of financial difficulties, the restrictive clauses of agreements are practically a dead letter, clauses of more or less stringency, to meet possible contingencies, are an absolute necessity, not only to guard the landowner against fraudulent tenants and fraudulent farming, but also in the interest of good tenants and good agriculture generally, and the maintenance of the land of the country in a productive condition, and therefore in the interests of the public. When a landowner lets a farm, though he may take every possible care in the selection of a tenant, he cannot possibly guard against the tenancy in the time to come falling into incompetent or dishonest hands, to say nothing of the almost utter impossibility of ascertaining the true financial position of a prospective tenant, and however honest and honourable and capable an original tenant may be, and however much confidence the owner may have in him, financial difficulties or other circumstances may place it out of his power to treat the farm properly, or death may transfer the tenancy to very different hands. Therefore, unless there are covenants in the agreements to guard against it, there is nothing to prevent either a dishonest tenant or the representatives or successors in title of an honest one, from running out a farm, impoverishing and exhausting the land and then throwing it on the owner's hands in a state that would make it almost impossible to re-let it on any terms, and certainly only at a great loss for some years. I suppose it will be admitted that there are black sheep in every flock, and that there are such things sometimes as bad and even dishonest and reckless tenants, though I am happy to bear testimony that they are the exception and not the rule,

5 September 1894.]

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

but it is the exceptions that generally have to be provided against in all such matters. A good tenant who farms properly rarely gets foul of the covenants of his agreement, which is never enforced except where a tenant does that which injures the letting value of the holding, i.e., injures another person's property, and the restraining him from doing which can surely be no hardship. Therefore, while it is true that many of the clauses in most agricultural agreements are unnecessary and inoperative with good tenants, they are an absolutely necessary protection against bad ones, if both parties are to have equal justice and fair play. And I may say that although on this estate no proceedings have ever been taken to enforce any of these clauses, I have in more than one instance had farms thrown on my hands in such a condition from the tenants' mismanagement or worse, that I have been a serious loser on the re-letting, but I should say that (perhaps curiously) these cases occurred well before the present agricultural depression. I have never had a tenant object to or complain of any of the clauses as being oppressive. In my opinion they certainly tend to better cultivation in the case of those inclined to farm slovenly or dishonestly. With good tenants they have no effect one way or the other. The tenants usually covenant not to take more than two corn crops in succession, which covenant they by no means keep, as may be seen from the tables of rotation cropping which I am prepared to submit, but no tenant on this estate has ever been called to account for the breach of it. They also agree not to sell off hay, straw, roots or manure, and that such shall be consumed on the holding at the end of the tenancy, and I suppose it will be admitted that if such are sold off a farm that has been poorly farmed during the previous years, the letting value of the holding will be injured, and possibly the holding made difficult to find a tenant for at all sometimes; but as a matter of fact, the breach of these restrictions, as far as hay, straw, and roots are concerned, is constant and frequent, and has never been objected to where a tenant farms reasonably well, and uses a fair quantity of purchased manures or feeding stuffs, and moreover, has been tacitly overlooked and submitted to in very many instances where such is not the case. Indeed, I may say, in all cases, as a matter of fact, these restrictions have never been enforced on this estate, though no objection has ever been raised to them by tenants or candidates for farms. When, on a sale at the end of a tenancy, the tenant has thought the sale of any surplus produce he may have, if sold for consumption on the premises, would be to his disadvantage, it has generally been possible for him, with the consent of the owner, to arrange with the incoming tenant, on a reasonable payment, to allow the produce to be sold to go off. Tenants, as a rule, I have found, consider the restrictions referred to fair and reasonable for all parties, remembering that they may be incoming as well as outgoing tenants. Most agreements contain a penal rent for breaking up old permanent pasture land, without consent, and some for not cultivating according to agreement, but I never heard of an instance of their being enforced, and certainly never on this estate, and I have for some years struck out of my agreements all the penal rents for everything except breaking up old permanent pasture land without consent, for which no penalty can be too much, particularly in these times. My practice is always to give a prospective tenant a draft of the proposed agreement to take home with him, and retain a reasonable time to consider, or to be advised on by anyone he thinks proper, and to point out anything he objects to. When it is finally agreed upon, it is prepared for signature, all costs and stamps of agreements are borne by me, and the tenant is always supplied with a counterpart or duplicate free of cost to him. The rent is usually a fixed gross sum for the holding. No doubt a tenant calculates the rent per acre before taking. Then as to the question whether there is any uniformity in the rents of land of similar qualities on the same or neighbouring estates, there are in almost every case some differences of situation; compactness or otherwise of the farm accommodation of house and buildings, distance from market town, condition of roads, or other circumstances, which make it impossible to accurately compare one holding with another. In many cases there is no doubt, that the rent of the smaller tenantry is higher per acre than on larger farms and it must necessarily be so. The cost of providing a small holding with house and buildings, and maintaining them in repair, is out of all proportion to the number of acres on a small holding as compared with large ones, and the proportion of good and poor land varies on almost every holding.

62,338. Of course I do not want to interrupt you in any way, but we have had a great deal of general evidence of the character that you are now giving, and if there is anything in your statement that you know the Commissioners are acquainted with, no doubt you will pass it over?—I am at this disadvantage on that point. I have not attended many of the sittings of the Commission, therefore, I do not know exactly what you have had before you, but I will endeavour to skip anything I can.

62,339. Everything about fluctuation of prices and so forth that we have had in detail you might pass over?—I do not think I intend dealing with that.

62,340. Anything of interest to the district we shall be very glad to hear?—No services other than the payment of rent are rendered by tenants in respect of their farms on this estate. As to the method of fixing the rents, on this estate, before the depression, farms were, I think I may say, always re-let on a vacancy, at the old rent, unless there was some reason for a reduction, which had occurred owing to the ill-treatment of the farm by the outgoing tenant; otherwise, as a rule, the old rents have gone on from tenant to tenant. There has never been a valuation. When a holding becomes vacant, the most suitable applicant is dealt with by private treaty, but there is never any increase of rent, except in the two cases hereafter referred to. Since the depression, of course, the old rents have been largely reduced. The holding is never let to the highest bidder; in fact, as I have shown, there is no bidding in the matter. I am prepared to give particulars of the rent of every holding on the estate for a great many years back, in some cases as far back as 1819. I wish it were possible to ascertain whether prospective tenants have sufficient capital or not, but I have found it utterly impossible. The system of giving security for each other, and backing each other's bills, is carried to such an extent amongst the farmers, that it is impossible to tell who is solvent. The probability of his having capital is my chief inquiry as to a prospective tenant, but the large majority have none at all. This backing of bills and becoming liable for one another is one great bane of the farmers of the present generation. It misleads both landowners and others who have to deal with them, and renders it perfectly impossible to be sure as to the solvency of any of them, or to get any reliable information as to the financial fitness of an applicant for a farm, it frequently turning out that a man who is, apparently, and generally supposed to be, well-to-do, is really, and perhaps has been for a considerable time, overwhelmed with difficulties, owing to having become security for some relative, or friend, or neighbour. I think many of the present race of farmers often go security for others in the most reckless way, with no thought of the possibility that they may some day actually have to find the money, and that heavy interest and costs of repeated renewals of these bills will quickly roll a small sum into a large one. The fact that before the present depression many farmers started in business and prospered, with no other capital than what was obtained in this manner, goes a long way to prove that farming is, after all, not such a bad business, in anything like even moderately fair times. I am not aware that arbitration is ever resorted to as a means of settling or re-adjusting the rent. The hereditary part of this estate, so far as can be ascertained, has never been valued, and certainly not for more than 60 years, and the purchased parts never since the dates of purchase, varying from 55 to 27 years ago. On the hereditary part (with the exception of two farms close to the town of Rhyl, which I will more particularly refer to later on, if desired), no rent has ever been raised, nor on the purchased part since the purchases by my father, the latest of which was in 1866. In some cases on this estate rents were lower at the commencement of the present depression than they were half a century or more ago. On this point I am prepared to state particulars. More than half the estate was purchased by my father at various times between 1837 and 1866, and none of it has ever paid more than about 3 per cent. on the purchase money, and for the last 12 years much of it averaged little over

Chairman—continued.

2 per cent., and some of it considerably less, as may be seen from the particulars I submit.

62,341. We take it from you the rents have not been raised?—They have been reduced as a matter of fact, as the table will show; they have only been raised in two instances.

62,342. What are the two instances?—In the case of two farms near the town of Rhyl, if you desire to hear the particulars.

62,343. I do not think we need have them. Two farms have been raised, and the rest of the rents of the estate have been reduced?—
Yes.

Lord Kenyon.

62,344. Will you kindly give the rental in 1881, and the rental in 1892?—In 1881, 2,241*l.*, and in 1892, 1,723*l.*

62,345. That shows a fall of something like 520*l.*?—Yes. It works out to an average reduction of 23 per cent., in some cases very much more.

Chairman.

62,346. Now you may leave the question of deductions?—The next question is as to the farms raised.

62,347. How much have they been raised?—I do not know that it is quite fair to me to state the bare fact that they have been raised, without stating the reasons why they have been raised.

62,348. Certainly?—The first farm is a farm situate within a mile of the entirely new town of Rhyl; it is 151*a.* 2*r.* 29*p.*, and for a great many years had been let at the very old and low rent of 172*l.* 5*s.*, far below the renting of any adjoining property, or any similar holding in the neighbourhood, and a rent fixed before almost a stone of the town of Rhyl had been laid, but my father would never have the holding valued, or raise the rent to the old tenant who had occupied a long time, except an almost nominal increase of 5*l.*, from 160*l.* to 165*l.* in 1847, after an exchange of land with Lord Mostyn, and another almost nominal increase of 7*l.* 5*s.* in 1855, after a further exchange of land with the Bodrhyddan estate, bringing the rent up to 172*l.* 5*s.*, it having stood at 160*l.* from 1819 to 1847. The exchange of land referred to had greatly compacted the farm (some of the land having before been nearly two miles from the homestead, and all of it very scattered), and increased its letting value far beyond the small additions made to the rent, as well as the generally increased letting value of such holdings as compared with the time when the rent was fixed. The rise of the town of Rhyl, with its markets and improved roads, &c., had also largely increased the letting value of this farm, but, as I have said, my father would never increase the rent to the old tenant, or disturb him in any way. But in the year 1880, the old tenant who had become of delicate health, and who was unmarried and had no relative who wished to succeed him in the tenancy, retired from farming, and gave up the holding. I, on a fresh letting, to an entirely new tenant, raised the rent from 172*l.* 5*s.* to 210*l.*, which the new tenant, who is still the tenant, considered then very reasonable, and he has often since and even recently, told me that he considered it a fair rent enough, with the then state of agriculture. I may say he was the only candidate for the farm, and introduced to me by the old tenant, therefore there was no question of bidding, or letting to the highest bidder. Since 1886 the rent was first abated, and then reduced by 30*l.*, reducing it to within 7*l.* 15*s.* of the old rent, up to 1890, since when the rent has been again 210*l.*; but the tithe paid by me, which makes it very much the same thing, the tithe in 1892 amounting to 29*l.* 4*s.* 5*d.* Since 1881 I have expended 372*l.*, and in 1893, 37*l.* 10*s.*, making 409*l.* 10*s.* on the improvements of the house and buildings on this holding. In 1892 and 1893 an abatement of 10*l.* was also allowed off the above rent. I do not know whether you want the particulars of the other farm; that has been raised as well.

62,349. No, I think not. We may take it the raising of the rent of the farm was quite justified?—That was raised for the same reasons as I have stated applying to the other farms.

62,350. We need not go into that?—Then as to any permanent or temporary reductions. Since 1885, and in some cases earlier, abatements or remissions of rent, eventually becoming permanent reductions, varying from 10 to 30 per cent., and in some cases more, have been made on all holdings, except in two or three cases of purely accommodation land and very small holdings, which cannot be called agricultural, and an additional 10 per cent. was remitted on the rents of 1892 and 1893 and 1894. The amount of rents paid by tenants in 1892 was an average reduction over the estate of 23 per cent., and taking into account the reduction on the tithe rentcharge, there was a total reduction to the tenants in 1892 varying from 15 to 35 per cent., and in some cases more, as compared with what they had to pay in 1880. I submit tables showing particulars as to each holding. When I first made abatements, about 1885, I did not give the tenants formal notice of my intention to give such an abatement, but I see and have conversations with many of my tenants tolerably frequently, and they knew very well what I intended doing, and in most cases, when the first abatement was made, I intimated that it would be continued in succeeding years until further notice, but these abatements of rent soon became permanent reductions. The year 1892 I consider to have been exceptionally trying to farmers in my district, the weather and the harvest having been much against them, as well as other causes, and therefore in addition to the previous abatements which had become permanent, I returned 10 per cent. of the rent of 1892 and also on 1893, and on the rents so far due in 1894. As I have stated, rents on this estate have not been raised, except in the two cases I have referred to, and stated the reasons for increase. I cannot speak as to the practice on other estates.

Chairman—continued.

Rents in these parts are usually due half-yearly on the 25th of March and the 29th of September. They are so on this estate, on which the rule has been, so far back as can be traced, to give credit for the half year's rent due 25th March until nominally the 27th of May, and for the half year due 29th September until the first Tuesday in the January following; but, as a matter of fact, very much longer credit is constantly being given, and extended time is scarcely ever refused when asked for by the tenant on a representation that it will be an advantage to him. I only actually hold a rent audit once a year in January, when most of the tenants pay, but there are always a few who ask for an extended time of greater or shorter length, which, if I have confidence in the tenant (which, I am glad to say is the rule), I invariably grant, and I think this extension of time has often been of great assistance to a tenant, but, of course, I deal with such requests according to my belief in the honesty of the applicants' intentions. The March rent is paid as soon as convenient after the 27th of May. A few pay about that date, but the majority ask for extended time, more so than in January, which is granted in the same way, and they pay at varying times, sometimes extending into September, and even later. I should state that by the agreements sometimes the rent is made to fall due quarterly, on the dates before named, and on the 20th of June and the 25th of December, but while all goes well it is never collected or asked for oftener than twice a year, the provision making it actually due quarterly being only intended to meet a case of a tenant having an execution levied on him by another creditor, possibly only a few days, before a half-year's rent is due, when the whole of his effects might be taken, and the landowner lose the whole half-year's rent, then nearly due, in addition to all the other losses which invariably fall upon him in case of a tenant's insolvency. Of course, without such a provision I could not have given, at any rate in some cases, the longer extension of credit for the rent to which I have referred, but I may say, however, that I have never, so far, availed myself of the power to demand a quarter's rent. Then, as to the effect of the preferential claim for rent on the position of tenants generally, in my opinion it is very beneficial, for without it a landowner could not possibly accept as tenants at all many whom he now does, or any without very much more satisfaction as to their capital and solvency than he now insists upon. Very large numbers of those who in the past entered on farming with little or nothing to start with, but afterwards got on well, would never have been able to obtain farms at all, had it not been for the preferential claim of rent, nor would it be possible for any landowners to give extended credit for the rent, as I have already mentioned, or indeed any credit at all, without a preferential claim for rent. Prompt payment thereof as soon as due would have to be insisted on, and would quickly become the practice, and in many cases payment in advance would become necessary. All the very small capital farmers would be knocked on one side at once, and there would no longer be any chance left for the intelligent and thrifty labourer, who now sometimes works his way into a farmer. The preferential claim for rent is what enabled me to give the extended credit I have spoken of, thereby enabling tenants to make the best of their produce and stock, which, if prompt payment of the rent had to be insisted upon, would often have to be disposed of at considerable sacrifice, particularly in the case of stock not quite ripe for the market at the time the rent should be paid, and I am continually receiving the warmest thanks of tenants under such circumstances for waiting a few weeks, or often months even, for the rent after it is usually paid under ordinary circumstances. This I, of course, could not do unless I had the protection of a preferential claim against the tenants' other creditors, as to the existence and extent of whom I must, of course, necessarily be in the dark, while they, on the contrary, are always well aware when they give credit to a tenant farmer that the rent is a preferential claim on his effects, and can regulate their dealings with him accordingly, while on the other hand, it must be remembered that the landowner is the tenants' only compulsory creditor; he must give the tenant credit, he cannot help himself, he cannot collect his rent from day to day. Such a system, it need not be said, would be impracticable, and while perfectly in the dark as to the tenants' circumstances or whether he is in the most complicated pecuniary difficulties or not, the landowner must give him credit for the rent, while on the other hand, all the tenants' other creditors have it in their power, if they choose to insist upon ready money dealings, and knowing that the landowner has a preferential claim for his rent, they can always inquire how the tenant stands in that respect, if they have any doubts as to his solvency. The owner's preferential claim for rent, and the power of distraint are of greater advantage and of more consequence to the tenant than even to the owner, as without them the owner would have to protect himself by insisting upon sureties for the payment of the rent, and its immediate payment as it becomes due.

As to other charges on land, tithes used to be paid by the tenants, but since 1886 I had in a great many cases, taken the payment on myself. Of course, now I pay the tithes on all holdings. Land tax has been usually paid by the tenants, but in all relettings (and in some other cases) in the last few years I have also undertaken the payment of the land tax. Chief and Crown rents are, and always have been, paid by the owner. Local rates are paid by the tenant. Income tax, Schedule A., used to be paid by the tenants and deducted from the rent. In recent years I have paid it direct. As to local rates, I believe that they have not increased much in the last 25 years in the district I am chiefly speaking of, except within the borough of Denbigh. In the parishes of Henllan and Llanefydd I can show that the amounts paid by the tenants in 1892 were decidedly less than in 1880. I have been unable to compare them for the other parishes, but I can state the amounts paid by my tenants in Llanrwst parish for 1892.

As to the average size of farms in the district, it is impossible to fix on an average size, there is such variation. They run from 20 acres and even less, up to 200 acres, with a few still larger ones. The majority, however, are under 50 acres. On this estate the holdings are as follows: 1 of 270 acres; 7 above 100 and under 200; 7 above 50 and under 100; 8 above 20 and under 50; 13 above 2 and under 20; 6 holdings with not more than 2 acres.

Consolidation.—I do not think there have been many cases of consolidation of farms. I know of scarcely any in the district I am chiefly treating of. On this estate I have consolidated only in one instance about 11 years ago, when in the case of a farm of 61 acres, with the house and buildings in a state requiring entirely rebuilding, I, on a vacancy caused by the tenant removing to a much larger farm, added the land to an adjoining farm of 78 acres, which it benefited a good deal, making a nice holding of 139 acres, but of course I was a considerable loser of income by the transaction. I think cases of consolidation have been mostly on lowland farms, but there have not been many in the district at all. As to the effects of consolidation, I should say, increase of production, as in my observation the larger farms as a rule are more productively cultivated than the smaller ones. Moreover, where one or two moderate sized farms have been consolidated, the effect has probably been to increase employment for the reasons given in the last answer; but if several very small holdings have been consolidated (I do not know of any such cases) no doubt it would lessen the employment. I should say that all cases of consolidation of farms must have resulted in considerable loss of rent to the owner, in addition to all the cost of the consolidation, which in some, if not most, cases would be considerable. On the other hand, I am not aware of much subdivision of holdings in my district. On this estate I, in 1885, on a change of tenancy, separated a detached portion of land, 33 acres, from a farm of 163 acres, with which it worked badly from its situation, and made a separate holding of it, expending 215*l.* on the improvement of a cottage into a house for it, and the repair and improvement of some available buildings. As to the relative effects of small and large holdings respectively on their occupiers, the smaller holders show but little that can be called "practical skill" in farming.

5 September 1894.]

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

The larger farms are, I think there is no doubt, more skilfully farmed and managed. I am bound to give this as my honest opinion, though I am personally in favour of having as many small holdings as possible, and should be sorry to see consolidation on a large scale. But, on the other hand, I think the smaller farmers, that is, say on farms not exceeding 100 acres or so, decidedly hold their own in times of depression better than the larger ones. Of course the smaller holders do not provide for their families at all; they are, as a matter of fact, no better off than the day labourers, and in many cases a great deal worse. The larger holders have often, indeed generally, been able to start at any rate some of their family in farms on their own account, or otherwise give them a start in some trade or profession.

Cultivation.—There is no scarcity of labourers in my district, except some years, just in the corn harvest, if the harvest comes rather quickly together. The average wages of a fairly good labourer is from 14s. to 15s. per week. Carters get more, also, sometimes, good fencers, they also get extra at harvest time; the wages of extra harvest men varies very much according to the nature of the season, and the consequent demand; farm servant men, I believe, usually get about 8s. or 9s. a week with their board; young men and boys, who are also lodged, less. Fences, ditches and watercourses, &c., &c., certainly are not attended to as they should be, nor, I think, as well as they used to be in years gone by. Well-kept fences are now very much the exception. It used to be the almost universal custom whenever a field was sown with wheat, for the ditches round it to be thrown out and cleared, and for the hedge to be properly banked, cut, and managed so that in their turn, at any rate, nearly all the arable fields were so treated, and their fences periodically put into good order, while all the fences on the farm received a fair amount of attention, but now, for some years, on only too many farms, little more is ever done to fences than what is absolutely necessary to keep the farm stock in and the neighbours' out. Fencing of woodlands: On this point I may mention that on some of the farms on this estate the tenants have now considerably less fencing to attend to than they had before my time, as it used to be the practice for the tenants to maintain jointly with the owner the fences between their farms and any adjoining closed woodlands, which was really a fair arrangement enough, as these fences never suffer any injury except from the tenant's stock, there being no stock to injure them from the woodlands side. Therefore, fencing them jointly with the owner placed the tenant in a better position than if they were joint fences between him and a neighbour's farm where there would also be stock to break through them, but I always maintain the whole of the woodland fences entirely myself. As to watercourses and such like, my experience is that tenants never trouble themselves about them, or take the least trouble with them, though I believe they have almost in all cases agreed to keep them clear and free from obstruction, but I am sorry to say that even where the landowner has expended large sums of money in draining the land, all for the benefit of the tenant, no interest having been charged him, at any rate in my case, the tenants as a rule will not even go to the trouble and trifling expense of keeping the outlets clear, but for the want of the expenditure of a few shillings a year will run the risk of works which may have cost hundreds of pounds becoming ruined and useless. To avoid this I am compelled to send my own man periodically round to look after them, but the small attention necessary could be given much more efficiently by the tenant, who is always on the spot, heavy rain, floods, or other occurrences, possibly suddenly rendering a little attention necessary in a few days even after my man has been round, and in the case of detached farms at some distance it is almost impossible for the owner to attend to such small matters, but the tenants rarely or ever do it.

I do not know of any land going out of cultivation. The question as to whether there is any that is insufficiently cultivated is vague. Probably a good deal of land might be more efficiently cultivated than it is in all parts of the country. The reasons for this are various: want of sufficient capital, want of skill, want of knowledge, and many other reasons. No doubt there is a good deal more land in pasture now than 50 years ago, or even less. I cannot say what the general rule is as to the expense, on my estate very little has been laid into permanent pasture. In the only cases I know of I gave the tenant the seeds; this was about 10 years ago; he still occupies the farm, and is, I hope, likely to continue to do so. As I have said, there has been little or no land laid down in permanent pasture on this estate during the last 20 years or more, and the increase of pasture is in rotation grasses, and I can give figures for all except the farms in Llanrwst parish. Of 1,679 acres, in 1882, 820 acres were in pasture of some kind, or rotation grasses; in 1893, 1,079 acres were in such pasture or grasses, an increase of 259 acres or 24 per cent. on 1880, and 64 per cent. of the acreage of the farms. I should also say that there has been an increase of root crops certainly, but I can give no general figures, except that on this estate the increase is very slight; only from about 102 acres in 1882 to about 116 acres in 1893, an increase of only 14 acres on an acreage of 1,679 acres of farming land. So far as I am aware every improvement and repair of every kind (except in the matter of manures, &c.) are made by the landowner. It certainly is so on this estate, for though the agreements contain the usual clause that the tenant shall keep the buildings and premises, &c. (except the main walls and roofs) in tenantable repair, no tenant on this estate does or ever has done, or has been asked or expected to do a single improvement or repair of any kind. All improvements to buildings, all draining, and all repairs, even to the repairs and necessary periodical painting, of gates, doors, and windows, and the very smallest repairs, are done by me entirely free of cost to the tenant, except the cartage of material. The tenants rarely or ever even as much as put in a nail to save a gate from going to pieces, or to repair a door, and often a perhaps nearly new gate broken by the tenant's horses—a very common occurrence, and usually through the carelessness of his own servants—is either allowed to go to pieces altogether, or he will send to my carpenter to repair it for him. I am told that this leaving of every trifling repair entirely on the landowner is not the practice out of Wales. As stated above, the tenant makes no improvements, unless in the matter of manures and such like. The tenants usually cart the materials required for improvements and repairs, but where a tenant leaves a farm in a year or two after doing any such carting worth speaking of, he is allowed for it, but this is of infrequent occurrence, and has only happened once on this estate in my time, when a tenant died, leaving no children, only a young widow, who desired to be relieved of the farm at once, which I arranged for her, and she was allowed to her satisfaction for the carting done by her husband. Then, “in the case of improvements partly or wholly effected by a tenant, “is there any compensation obtainable in your “district. (i) By agreement between landlord “and tenant?” I am not aware of any cases of the kind, but I do not believe a tenant ever makes an improvement as to which he is not protected by the Agricultural Holdings Act without a specific agreement with the landowner as to compensation. I do not know of any instances where either party contracts out of the operation of the Agricultural Holdings Act, except as to the amount of notice required to terminate a tenancy. Such a contract would be void on all other matters. Agreements often contain a clause that all matters not mentioned shall be settled according to the custom of the country; but any known custom in my district is limited to very few matters. I do not think farmers often apply for their landlord's written consent for specific improvements; I have never been so applied to. The reason why not is, first, that the tenants of such sized farms as form the bulk of this estate and of many others, have no capital to spend on improvements, and, secondly, if they had, they do not see spending it on what they get done for them. The owner does all such holdings really can afford or that would be of practical benefit. I should think the granting of such consent would depend on the nature of the improvement proposed, and the various circumstances connected with the holding. As to the custom of the country, growing crops taken by an incoming tenant, and any claims for tillage and cultivation, are usually valued by a valuer agreed upon by the parties, or by reference, if necessary. Manure is usually agreed to be left, but, of course, the tenant may be able to claim under the Agricultural Holdings Act. Produce is valued as above, possibly subject to the agreement to be consumed on the holding. So far as I am aware, tenants never make any claim for permanent improvements, and I am not aware of any custom affecting the point. Then, as to the question whether I “know of any instances where compensation has been given for the general “improved condition of a holding, and not “simply for specific improvements.” I have never had a claim for any. I cannot speak as to other estates. I never heard of “any right “recognised as belonging to tenants to dispose “of their interests in their holdings to any “solvent tenant to whom the landlord shall “not have any reasonable objection,” nor have I even heard it suggested or hinted at that there is, or ever was, any such right in any district that I know anything of. The idea is entirely a new one, and I do not see how any such right could exist unless the tenant had the almost unfettered selection of his successor, with the power of practically making him pay almost any sum he likes for coming into the holding; in fact, it would be a sale to the highest bidder. Such a system would be absolutely ruinous to the incoming tenant, and perfectly unworkable in Wales; where the majority of farmers commence business, as a rule, with no capital whatever. Almost every farmer would be compelled to commence almost a pauper and in debt, and his rent would be largely increased by the interest of the money which he would always have to pay for coming into the holding. Such a system would entirely defeat any fixing of a fair rent, or even the decrees of a land court. At present a tenant entering a holding pays for nothing but for what he gets a valuable consideration for; even under the Agricultural Holdings Act, an outgoing tenant is only supposed to be paid for that which has increased the letting value of the holding, and which the incoming tenant is supposed to get the benefit of, and, therefore, properly pays for, either direct to the outgoing tenant, or in increased rent, if the owner has paid the outgoing tenant for it. Then, as to whether “the procedure under the Agricultural Holdings Act is workable and satisfactory,” tenancies change so little on this estate that I have little or no experience of the working of the Act, but so far as I have heard of the working of it, I should think it is anything but satisfactory to landowners, on whom it seems to inflict a large fine whenever a tenant may take it into his head to change his farm by making the owner pay the outgoing tenant for a lot of things for which he cannot get a penny, or any increase in rent from the new tenant.

Game preserving.—The game is preserved on most of the estates in the district, I think. I reserve the game and shooting rights on the property in the parishes of Henllan and Llanfeydd, except over one farm, the largest on the estate, over which the tenant has had the right for some years. On the rest of the estate in the parishes of Llanrwst and Rhuddlan the tenants have all the game and sporting rights included in their tenancies. I, however, only preserve game to a very moderate extent, and it is mostly wild shooting. I do not care for and strongly disapprove of battue shooting, or over-preservation of game, and I only attempt to preserve sufficient for wild sport, as will be readily understood when I say, that though I have the shooting right over about 3,720 acres, including some adjoining land, which I rent, or otherwise have the right of shooting over (of which about 250 acres are covers) I only keep one keeper and an assistant, and that the game killed on the whole estate for the last 12 years (and the years vary but little) only averages 257 pheasants and 128 brace of partridges a year, and the far larger part of the pheasants are killed in covers close to my house on land in my own holding, and the tenants never see anything of them. Hares have been nearly extinct for many years and it is seldom one is seen at all on the estate; and as to rabbits, except on my own farm (in my own occupation) and shrubberies round my house, well separated from all let land, I do not think there is ever an average of one rabbit to five acres, and the average number of rabbits shot in shooting the covers is not 150 a year, divided into three days' shooting; so I should think there can be no complaint on this head. I have never had any disagreement with a tenant in connexion with game, and I may add that my keeper has been employed on the estate in that capacity for over 23 years, and, so far as I am aware of, has never had any disagreement either with any of the tenants, and is on friendly terms with them all. It must be remembered that a landowner cannot preserve rabbits if he wishes, except on land in his own occupation, the tenant of the land can kill them all down, whether the owner likes it or not. I take it that tenants do generally avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act, except in those cases where they find an arrangement with the person having the right of shooting more profitable. I believe there are such cases, but on this estate the tenants have always fully and freely exercised their rights under the Act. I have never attempted to restrain them or to induce them in any way not to do so. On this estate there is no damage done by the game. I believe compensation is given on other estates where there is damage. As a general rule, I believe the party having the shooting right is able to arrange with the tenants as to the compensation; where not, valuers are called in. I have no actual personal experience of such a transaction. I never heard of tenants being expected to "beat," and I should think it must be very rare if it exists at all. On this estate no tenant has ever been expected to do so, or been asked or had it suggested to him in any way that he should do so. Then there is a question: "How does game preserving otherwise affect—(i.) cultivation?" In no way that I can see. "(ii.) The relation between landlord and tenant?" If at all, beneficially in bringing the landowner on to the holding more frequently than he might otherwise come, and therefore into greater intimacy and closer relations with the tenant, and also keeping the owner up in knowledge of the condition of the holding and its requirements. "(iii.) The labourers?" In no way whatever; it cannot possibly concern them. "(iv.) The public generally?" I do not see in what possible way it can affect the public, unless it be in the supplying them in the market with a wholesome variety of food, which I question if they would like to be entirely deprived of. As to cases of game trespass, in my petty sessional district the prosecutions for such offences are very few in number, and must bear a very small proportion. The law of trespass in other respects is certainly not satisfactory, inasmuch as persons not in pursuit of game may practically trespass over lands as much as they like, and farmers often suffer considerable injury in that way, particularly near towns. The civil remedy for trespass is worse than useless against such trespassers, and there is no summary proceeding unless malicious damage is committed. Also many products of the land which might be profitable to the farmer are not the subject of larceny or otherwise protected.

Agricultural education, &c.—Poultry farming is always an incident of farming, but no doubt much more might be done in this line, and it should be a greater source of profit to the farmer than it is. As to the general condition of the farming population, freeholders as a rule are far worse off in every way than the yearly tenants about them, their land much worse cultivated, and their houses and buildings in much worse condition, in some cases nearly in ruins; they seem to have gone from bad to worse gradually for many years, and I believe if particulars could be got it would be found that the interest of their mortgages, &c., far exceeds any rents paid by adjoining tenants. Then as to tenant farmers: of course, on all the smaller farms the tenant must work himself. A small farm, it is obvious, cannot afford the luxury of a mere superintendent, and the wives and daughters do the dairy work or such like. There is little or no field work done by women in the district at all. The children also work at home in most cases, so far as there may be work for them. I fancy the arrangements as to their remuneration varies a good deal. I cannot give particulars. As to what provision is made for them by their parents on "marriage or independent settlement in life—" it depends on the status of the parents, whether large or small farmers; of course, the smaller farmers, who are practically no better off than the labourers, can make no provision. I presume present rents could be maintained if wages were paid in respect of children's labour, otherwise how do those occupying similar holdings who have no children labouring on them pay their rents, and there are plenty of such cases. The very small holdings could not exist even rent free except on the condition of the family working on them. A very small holding cannot possibly pay any labour. The serviceable proportion of the household to the size of the holding varies in almost each case; therefore, of course, the proportion of labour rendered by them also varies. Of course, there is and has been going on a certain amount of general migration from all agricultural districts of both farmers' sons and labourers; it must necessarily be so. It must be remembered that while the population is constantly increasing, the quantity of land to employ men on remains the same; therefore, unless some other industry has opened in the district some of the increase in population must migrate. This is a purely agricultural district, and therefore there is no greater demand for labour now than years ago. Therefore a portion of the young men of each generation migrate, whether they are the sons of farmers, labourers, or others. As to whither they have migrated, no general answer can be given; they have gone to all parts of the kingdom, and of the world, and into all kinds of occupations, trades, and professions, according as their tastes, inclinations, and capabilities lead them, as artisans, joiners, masons, plasterers, some as colliers, miners, and some into police forces, employments on railways, and various employments in towns as clerks, book-keepers, &c. The higher wages to be obtained in such skilled employments than as mere agricultural labourers tempts many away, and induces them to qualify themselves for such employments; employment as platelayers on railways has drawn, in my knowledge, many of the most intelligent labourers. There are also instances in almost every district of some of those who have migrated becoming doctors, lawyers, or clergymen, &c.

Remedies.—In this part of Wales, agricultural depression did not begin until after 1880, and was not much felt until 1885. I never had a complaint from a tenant as to the times until 1885. It is my humble opinion that it is not in human power to suggest any practical remedies, and that the present difficulties of agriculturists are clearly traceable to causes chiefly beyond control, namely, partly to a succession of bad seasons, partly to the general stagnation and depression of almost every trade and industry in the country, but still more to the lowness of prices of all agricultural produce in comparison with the cost of production in this country, arising from foreign competition, and the large importation of agricultural produce of almost every kind from countries where the cost of production is so much less than it is in this country. It is not to be expected that agriculture in this country can compete in production with sparsely populated countries, where land can be had at almost nominal rents, almost rates and taxes free, the climate possibly more favourable, the soil more productive, even without any outlay for manures, and the cost of cultivation altogether almost infinitesimal compared with the cost in this country. While these conditions last, as they probably will beyond the present generation, I believe no real remedy can be found, or improvement expected, except what may be expected from better seasons, and the better prices which would undoubtedly follow on a general revival of trade in the country. These two desirable events would probably restore agriculture to pretty much the position it occupied before the commencement of the present depression. We must not, however, lose sight of the important factor that the undoubted increased and increasing personal expenses of the farmer and his family makes him expect, and renders it necessary for him to make larger profits than he used to do out of his farm to meet them. It has been suggested to increase the value of agricultural produce by protective duties on importation. This might have that effect, but I do not believe that in the long run it would really much improve the position of the producers in this country, and I am not in favour of any such proposition, which I consider would be in all ways a retrograde movement, and an indefensible step for a country dependent to so large an extent on foreign importation for the food of its population. Such a proposition is, in my opinion, utterly impracticable, and would, I think rightly, never be tolerated by the country for a moment. It has been suggested, specially with reference to the Welsh farmer, to improve his position by giving him (1) fixity of tenure in the land, (2) free right of sale of his tenancy, and (3) a land court to fix his rent. Well, of course, the transfer of a portion of A's property to B without any consideration will benefit B and improve his position. But apart from the gross injustice of such a change to the landowners, who, under the sanction of the law, have invested their money in the land and sunk enormous capital in it, in the improvement of it, and in making it the valuable property it is I believe such a change of system would place the vast majority of farmers, at any rate in Wales, in a far worse position than they are now. In the first place, fixity of tenure and sale of the tenancy would be gross injustice, not alone to the owner, but also to the majority of the tenant farmer class. To the owner because it would at one fell swoop give the tenant who happened by lucky accident to be in occupation just at the moment of such a change a part ownership in property to the making or acquiring of which he had never contributed anything. To the tenant farmer class because it would give such a tenant a valuable vested interest in the holding, which on all future changes of tenancy would have to be purchased at a large outlay by the incoming tenant. Therefore, there would be at once and for ever an end of all the small capital farmers, and to any hopes of the smaller tenant farmers to rise in the world by taking larger holdings, and an end to any chance for the thrifty and intelligent labourer to grow into a small farmer, as he now often does, as under such a system no man could ever take a farm without not only the necessary capital to stock and start him going in the farm, but also to buy the newly-created tenant-right of the outgoing tenant, which, as it has done in Ireland, would soon become a valuable property, selling, sometimes for half or even more of the actual fee simple value of the holding. In fact, an incoming tenant would practically have to buy a part ownership of the holding, instead of as now, having only to pay for what he actually gets—a substantial consideration—or need not buy at all if he thinks he can do better without. The interest of the money he would have to provide for this purpose would prove simply a huge addition to the rent, and would saddle the tenants of the future with far heavier rents than they have ever before paid, or ever will have to pay under the present system.

5 September 1894.]

As to a land court to fix the rents of land, it is difficult to imagine a more iniquitous proposition, or to understand what possible argument there can be of its equity, any more than of a court to fix the rents of houses, shops, or warehouses, or the consideration for any of the other matters which are now the subject of free agreement between the parties concerned. If a land court does its work justly and honestly it will fix the rent at the utmost penny of its value for the purpose required, and in the vast majority of cases the rents should be considerably higher than they are. There will also, of course, be periodical revision of rents, for the tenant who has his rent fixed in good times will not be content to have it remain at the same figure in bad times; in the same way an owner will expect a rent fixed in bad times to be revised on a return to better times. Thus the owner and tenant will be in a constant state of quasi litigation, instead of the matter being amicably settled between them, as is now done, in the vast majority of cases, in a fair and liberal spirit; but when the owner has no voice in the fixing of the rent, or in the choice of the tenant he will have no interest in either the tenant or the land, and if the tenant should be overtaken by bad times, or by misfortune of any kind, he cannot expect the owner to give him any abatement of rent or to help him as he now usually does in the various misfortunes to which he is only too liable. With a land court and its accompaniments the relations between owner and tenant will be purely commercial and never be friendly. It must also be borne in mind that under such a change of system as is involved in the adoption of fixity of tenure, free sale, and a land court, the tenant will have to do all the repairs and improvements now done for him by the owner, which, if they are to be done properly and the holding maintained in a proper state, will be a further considerable addition to his rent; and that after such an utter revolution in the rights of property, and the transfer of all the most interesting incidents of ownership to the tenant, the relations between the landowner and his tenant will be simply one of business, the landowner will be only an annuitant on his property, in which he will feel no further interest than in receiving the utmost farthing of rent he can induce the land court to grant him, and which he will most certainly take away to spend in London, on the Continent, or elsewhere, instead of spending it largely in the district from which it is derived, as is mostly the case at present. Such a system will quickly establish a race of absentee landowners that will rival Ireland. But possibly this may not be considered of any consequence, though I venture to believe that if the tenant farmers of Wales could fully understand the nature of the suggestions for their supposed benefit, and their probable effects, they would overwhelmingly scout the idea of any such change.

Then, so far as I know the relations between landowners and tenants in general are perfectly friendly. My relations with my tenants are most decidedly friendly; a disagreement of any kind or on any subject has been of the rarest occurrence.

Expenditure on Estate.—In the 12 years 1881–92, I have spent 3,975*l.* 7*s.* 7*d.* on the repairs and improvement of the farms on the estate, excluding 430*l.* 16*s.* spent on the maintenance in repair of cottages in the village of Henllan, or an annual average of 331*l.* 5*s.* 7*d.* The property on which the larger named sum was spent produced in 1880 a rental of 2,241*l.*, and in 1892, 1,723*l.*, thus an average of 330*l.* a year, or taking the rental over 12 years, at the medium sum of 2,000*l.*, which is too much, an average of 16 per cent. of the rental was spent on repairs and improvements. I may say that this was prepared at the beginning of 1893 in view of the Commission coming here. In the year 1893 391*l.* 9*s.* 1*d.* was expended on repairs, and nearly 600*l.* have been already expended up to the 31st of August of this year, 1894. I also wish to observe that this amount does not include anything for agency, or for superintendence of any kind. That is all done by myself. Therefore the amount would be really larger if I paid for superintendence and agency work. No interest has ever been charged to any tenant on the estate for any repair or improvement of any kind, not even for draining. I give particulars of the expenditure on each holding year by year if desired. I think you have that, my Lord.

62,351. You have put that in?—Yes. I may add that I should probably have done a good deal more in the way of improvements on the estate, and have spent considerably more money on such work, had it not been for the agitation for special land legislation for Wales which might have the effect of at any rate partially confiscating any money so expended, for that would be the effect of giving the tenant fixity of tenure, or the right to sell his tenancy. It is difficult to understand upon what principles of justice or honesty it is suggested to transfer to the tenant, who perhaps only entered yesterday, or a very few years ago, a part ownership in all the capital invested in the holding by the owner and his predecessors in title in bringing the land from its original prairie state and value into its present valuable condition by reclaiming, draining, fencing, erection of buildings, and by far the greater part of the present value of the land represents the capital expended on it on such works, and comparatively little the original value in its natural state, all which capital was expended by the present owners or their predecessors in title, and for which they have given valuable consideration; none of it has been expended by the present tenants or their predecessors in title, therefore it is impossible to justify a proposal to give them a part ownership in what now represents all this capital, of which they never contributed any part, and, since what I have just read was written, another stab has been given to the landed interest in the provisions of the new death duties in the recent Finance Act, which, unless I am very much mistaken, will have the effect of causing a good deal less money to be expended by landowners on the improvement of their properties in the future. It will probably have that effect in my case, and induce me to expend no more on the property than is absolutely necessary to maintain it in tenatable repair, and not to make any improvement that can be avoided. I do not feel called upon or inclined to expend money to be hereafter partially confiscated by the State, but rather to make such provision as I can to enable my successor to meet these iniquitous duties without being an absolute pauper for several years after his succession to the property. And I believe it will be presently found that a vast number of landowners will take the same course, and that the addition to the already oppressive burdens on land of these death duties will prove a most serious blow to the prosperity of agriculture, and will injuriously affect the farmers and labourers almost as much as the landowners. Then, I have some cases on the estate of families having held the same farms for generations. Three farms are now occupied by tenants whose families have occupied them at any rate since 1812, very possibly much longer, I cannot ascertain with certainty; and 10 holdings are occupied by sons, daughters, or near relatives of the previous tenant of the same holdings, and others have occupied for many years. I have particulars of a great number of holdings as to the length of time the tenants have been in occupation. I do not know whether you wish me to read them.

62,352. We will take it generally that you have got five farms, and the tenants have been there since 1812, and a great many of the tenancies have gone on from father to son?—The farms are at the present time occupied by sons and daughters, or relatives of the previous tenant, and there are many others that have occupied a considerable time. I have particulars here which I should be very pleased to read if you like to hear them.

62,353. Will you put them in?

The following are the particulars referred to:—

“1st, Cae Berllan, Llanrwst.

“The present tenant's (Hugh Hughes) family has been occupied, at any rate, since 1812, possibly long before. The present tenant is an elderly man, and I do not know of what generation in the holding, but I should think he must be the third, at any rate. The deaths of tenants succeeded by sons do not appear to have been always noted in my books.

“2nd, Ty Gwyn, Llanrwst.

“Thomas Williams, the present tenant, is, at any rate, the third generation of his family in the holding. They have occupied certainly since 1812, possibly much longer.

“3rd, Henfaes, Llanrwst.

“Mrs. E. Williams, the present tenant, is a widow, and succeeded her husband, whose family have been in the holding certainly since 1812, and, I believe, much longer; I cannot say how many generations they make.

“4th, Fedw, Llanrwst.

“William Williams, the present tenant, is, I believe, the third generation of his family in the holding; his grandfather was, I believe, the son of another farmer on the estate, and, I believe came into this holding in 1832.

“5th, Pentre Isaf or Fridd Margaret, Llannefydd.

“A very small holding. Mrs. Davies, the present tenant, is a widow, and succeeded her husband, whose father had occupied since 1833. I am not very certain whether he was not a relative of a previous tenant, Anthony Hops, who had occupied many years.

“6th, Tan y Fynwent (land), Henllan.

“Robert Jones, the late tenant, who died last year, succeeded his father (about 1859), who had occupied since 1834. The late tenant's widow died a few months after her husband, leaving only daughters, who did not wish to continue holding this land, and it is now in hand.

“7th, Merllyn, Llannefydd (land only).

“This holding was occupied as a separate tenancy by the tenants of the above from 1837, the date of its purchase by my father, and the same circumstances apply. The holding is now in hand, as I intended building a house on it, after which it would be again let, but I postponed the work owing to threatened legislation of a confiscatory nature, and the new death duties will possibly lead to my abandoning the intention.

“8th, Bryn Isaf, Llannefydd.

“John Jones, the present tenant, is the son of the tenant found in occupation when the farm was purchased by my father in 1848, and I believe he, or rather his wife's family, had been there long before.

“9th, Tyn y Caeau, Llannefydd.

“Edward Pierce, the present tenant, succeeded his father, who was found in occupation when my father purchased the farm in 1848, and had, I believe, been there some years.

"10th, Tanllan, Llanfeydd.

"William Jones, the present tenant's grandfather, became tenant in 1849 (the previous tenant having removed to a larger farm). He was succeeded by his son, and on his death a few years ago, the widow and son became tenants. The widow is carrying on a very much larger farm on an adjoining estate, leaving the son in my farm, so he is the third generation of his family in the holding.

"11th, Llwyngronwy, Llanrwst.

"Morris and William Roberts, the present tenants, succeeded their father (on his death), who became tenant in 1849.

"12th, Pen y Banc, Henllan (a very small holding).

"Anne Jones, the present tenant, is the widow of the tenant found in occupation when my father purchased the holding in 1856.

"13th, Tan y Bryn, Henllan.

"John Roberts, the present tenant, married the daughter of the late tenant, who was succeeded by his widow on his death some years ago, and on her death a few years ago the daughter succeeded and married present tenant.

"14th, Ty Coch, Henllan.

"Mrs. Jones, the present tenant, is niece of the previous tenant, who had occupied since 1864. She became tenant at his request (about 16 years ago) on account of his failing health, and he still resides with her on the holding. He has died since this was written.

"15th, Hobbwrn, Henllan.

"William and Edward Evans, the present tenants, are sons of the late tenant, who was found in occupation when my father purchased the farm in 1866, and he had, I believe, been there some years.

"N.B.—Besides the foregoing there are several tenants on the estate who have occupied their holdings from 12 to 20 years, and the latest change of tenancy was in 1886."

62,354. We will take it from you that your relations with your tenantry are as friendly as possible?—Oh, yes. Then I have here some supplemental evidence—as to evictions and notices to quit. There has never been a case of eviction on this estate. Notice to quit has never been given for any other reason than the non-payment of rent, and for that reason, only in probably less than half a dozen instances, during the last 20 or 25 years, and none now for some years, and was only carried out in one or two cases, the notices being withdrawn in the others, the tenants being allowed considerable time to pay, in some cases spread over years, and some never paid at all. There has not been an instance, at any rate for a good many years, of a tenant being sold up under a distress for rent on the estate.

Chairman—continued.

Success or non-success of Tenant-farmers.

—In dealing with this question it must be borne in mind that a large majority of, at any rate, the smaller class of tenant farmers in Wales (or this part of Wales whatever), as a rule, commence business with little or no capital at all, often actually heavily in debt, and with very insufficient stock and plant. Farming would appear to be the only business which a man thinks he can enter upon entirely without capital, and that he is entitled to complain if the venture does not turn out successful. For all this, in the good times before the present depression commenced, many of them did wonderfully well, and men who had begun in this way worked themselves into larger farms and got on in the world, and tenant farmers generally admitted to being prosperous. Of course there were several years during which live stock commanded what must be considered almost artificially high prices, which no reasonable and intelligent man for a moment expected to last, but if it were possible to compare the prices of live-stock in recent years and at present with those of 50 years ago, which I do not believe can be done with any approach to reliability, I question very much whether it would not be found that present prices, low as they are, or even the lowest prices touched during the last seven years, are not only quite as high but even higher. The market prices of butchers' meat must surely bear some relation to the price of live-stock, and I take it there is no doubt but that the prices of butchers' meat is 25 per cent. at least higher than it ever was at any time previous to 25 or 30 years ago, or possibly later, and I believe it would be found that corn, principally wheat, is the only farm produce selling at lower prices now than during the period named.

Tenant-right.—Nothing in the shape of tenant-right exists or ever has existed on this estate, or, to the best of my belief, on any estate in the district, or in the country at all; nor have I or any previous owner of any part of this estate ever recognised or been party or privy to any payment by an incoming to an outgoing tenant for anything in the nature of tenant right, or goodwill, or otherwise at all than for substantial consideration and actual value received. An incoming tenant frequently buys stock or plant of some kind from the outgoing tenant. It is also the custom in many cases for the outgoing tenant in the last year of his tenancy to sow wheat before the land has left his possession, of which wheat he is entitled to a certain share, regulated by custom or agreement, according to the circumstances and condition of the land so sown. The incoming tenant frequently buys this share of the outgoing tenant, so as to have the entire management of the crop. It is also the custom, and on this estate confirmed by the agreements, and I believe generally, for the incoming tenant to pay the outgoing tenant for any grass or clover seeds properly sown by him on the holding in the spring preceding the termination of the tenancy. The outgoing tenant has also by custom (on this estate confirmed by the agreements) the use of the dwelling-house and buildings (subject to stable accommodation for the incoming tenant), and of one pasture field, called a boozey pasture, until the 1st of May following the termination of the tenancy of the land, to enable him to consume the produce on the holding. Frequently the incoming tenant buys the stock and remaining produce, or, for other reasons, he and the outgoing tenant come to arrangements for the incoming tenant to take earlier possession of the buildings and boozey pasture, or, perhaps, of the dwelling-house also. In which case, of course, the outgoing tenant receives some consideration from the incoming one, but these matters are not tenant right, but merely matters of arrangement for the mutual convenience of the parties, and may be so arranged on one change of tenancy, and not on another of the same holding; they are not obligatory on either party; and the landowner is not a party to the transaction at all, though, of course, his consent is asked. These are, and from time immemorial have been, the only matters for which an outgoing tenant has any claim for payment, or that can be made to bear even a remote semblance to tenant right; except, of course, claims under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1883, but so far as this estate is concerned, inasmuch, as I have already stated, the tenants never do make any improvements of any kind, of course they never can have any claim under that Act, except some, perhaps, in the matter of manures and feeding stuffs.

I attribute the falling off in the general management of farms, among the smaller class of farmers to which I have referred in the earlier part of my evidence, in some degree, and not a very small one, to the indiscriminate and injudicious use of so-called artificial manures, many of the farmers now instead of employing the labour they used to do on their farms, spend every penny they can (after their undoubted increased personal expenditure) on so-called artificial manures. With many the one idea of farming seems now to be the use of some kind of so-called artificial manure, regardless of its quality or suitability for the crop, or the circumstances under which it is used, and only too often to the almost entire neglect of all the other proper and necessary cultivation of the land, and I hold a very strong belief that this system has largely tended to impoverish both the farmer and the land; much of this so-called artificial manure is either altogether worthless stuff, or utterly unsuitable, under the circumstances used, in many cases only used to force a crop out of dirty, half cultivated land, which it leaves more exhausted and difficult to manage than it was before, but the agricultural districts are so overstocked with the agents for the sale of manures, good and bad, both amongst the farmers themselves and other tradesmen, that it is almost impossible for the farmers to escape their importunities, or from feeling almost obliged to give some of them an order for it. It must not be understood for a moment that I am contending against the proper use of and great value and assistance of good and suitable artificial manures properly applied and suitable to the circumstances. That I fully recognise, but it is my firm belief, and I think the opinion is gaining ground, that if during the last 15 years or so the farmers had spent as they used to do, on labour and lime, some of the money they have in later days spent on artificial manures, many of them would be now far better off than they are, and the lands they farm in better heart and condition, and in a more productive state.

Then I have heard one or two questions being asked when I happened to be present in your court with regard to the position of workmen's cottages. I should just like to say one word upon that point, and then I have done.

62,355. Yes?—I think the provision of workmen's cottages near the place of their employment very desirable, and to be encouraged, though my experience is that the workmen much prefer, and will insist if they can, on living in the villages and towns around, wherever possible, even at the inconvenience of having to walk a considerable distance daily to their work. But the question is, how are cottages adjoining the farms where the men are employed to be erected. In many cases all building materials have to be brought long distances, and the erection of cottages would cost far more money than any farmer, or working man could afford to pay interest for as rent, and the majority of landowners cannot afford to build them at a loss. A landowner, like everyone else, wants to live, and has to educate his family and start them in life, and has not the money at command to build cottages. Of course there is no difficulty in the case of those large estate owners, who, after providing for all necessary expenses, and perhaps some others, have a good surplus income left, and I believe such owners have done very much in this way, and perhaps on most large estates there is ample provision of workmen's cottages, but it is impossible for the smaller owners who, like myself, are already living carefully, and spending every penny they can afford (and in some cases more) on the maintenance of their property in tenantable repair. I think some good might arise from such a provision as has been suggested, for the State to lend landowners money at a low rate of interest, to make permanent improvements on their properties, and I have a very strong belief that unless some such provision is made, not near so many workmen's cottages will be built, or other permanent improvements made on landed estates hereafter. Landowners will not now be nearly so ready as they have been to spend money on improvements which will add to the future value for the death duties; but where they have borrowed money for such improvements it will remain a charge on the estate, and I presume will be deducted, like other debts, in estimating the death duties. There is one statement here which I have neglected to hand in, and which I wish to hand in now. (The witness handed in a statement.)

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

Chairman—continued.

62,356. What is this?—I have referred to it, but I omitted to hand it in. That shows the rent received and the expenditure in outgoings in the last 12 years.

62,357. We are much obliged to you for your statement. There is one question I should like to ask you; I understand you to say that the relations between yourself and your tenants are as friendly as possible?—Certainly.

62,358. You have never had any trouble with the tenants, and they have been on the estate for a very considerable time?—I have never as a rule had any trouble. Of course I cannot go so far as to say I have never had any. There are one or two cases which I alluded to where notice was given for non-payment of rent some years ago.

62,359. They are yearly tenants?—They are yearly tenants.

62,360. There are no leases?—There are no leases now. I mentioned there had been a lease which the tenant did not wish to renew.

62,361. I understood you to say they were quite satisfied under the yearly tenancies?—I never received any complaint.

62,362. You used an expression which struck me; you said, they are masters of the situation?—I consider the tenants are certainly masters of the situation.

62,363. Do you mean on your own estate, or generally?—Generally, I think. My observation is that it is impossible for a landowner to let a tenancy now upon any unreasonable terms, either as to rent or as to conditions. If he wants to do so he simply will not get a tenant, that is all.

62,364. You would say that the Welsh tenants at the present moment are the masters of the situation?—I consider them so certainly.

62,365. Have you followed the evidence given before this Commission at all?—Yes, I have.

62,366. Were you at the sitting yesterday?—I was at a part of it.

62,367. You were not present towards the end?—I left a little after four, between four and half-past.

62,368. Did you hear Mr. Thomas Hughes give his evidence?—I did not, my Lord.

62,369. I will just run quickly through it. Mr. Thomas Hughes about 50 years ago took a farm under Sir Watkin W. Wynn. He was there for 16 years. He went to a good deal of expense in draining and so forth. This is his own statement, and of course, I take his statement as he gave it to us. Then he says the farm was ultimately sold by Sir Watkin, and he did not receive any compensation for all the improvements he had made. He then took a farm on the estate of Mr. Lloyd, of Palé, Llandderfel. This farm was in a bad state when he took it. He occupied this farm for eight or nine years, working hard and assisted by his wife and children. He went to a good deal of expense and so on. The farm was then put up, and Mr. Price, of Rhiwlâs, bought it, and he, Mr. Thomas Hughes, was refused the letting of this farm to him, and he failed to get any compensation. That was his second experience. He did not ask for any compensation, but he got none as appears by his answers to the questions which Lord Kenyon put to him afterwards about that. That was his second experience. He then took a farm under Mr. George Ashley, and that he had for 23 years. He went to some expense, according to his own account, and he told his landlord that he must leave unless the stable was put in repair. This was refused, and he stated that if this tenant did not give up the place he would get notice to quit. He received notice to quit, and before he received notice his statement is that the farm had been let to a neighbour. A few years before he left he laid down, according to his own statement, 3,000 pipes for drainage, and he never was in arrears during the whole time that he occupied the farm. These were that man's three experiences as he told us of them himself late last night. Would you consider him to be master of the situation?—No, but I consider that to be a very exceptional case. There is no rule without any exception, and as I said before in my evidence, there are black sheep in every flock, there are black sheep amongst farmers, and I have no doubt the landlords are not without a black sheep amongst them occasionally.

62,370. Would you consider that an exceptional case?—I should, my Lord, certainly.

62,371. But have you followed the evidence that we have had during these 70 odd sittings in the Principality?—I cannot say that I have read it all.

62,372. You have not followed it carefully?—It is almost impossible to read it all. I have read it here and there.

62,373. But you consider that to be an exceptional case?—If you ask my opinion as to the evidence, I am bound to say that I consider a great deal of the evidence you have had is perfectly valueless. The evidence is not given upon oath and there is no proper cross examination upon it, nor is it tested in any way; therefore I consider the evidence is valueless.

62,374. I ask you, you would consider that an extraordinary case?—The case as spoken of by the man I should say is a very hard one, but I venture to think it is a very exceptional one if it is correct.

62,375. Did you ever hear the account which Mr. Pochin, of Bodnant, gave of his estate?—I do not think I read more than the newspaper summary.

62,376. I think it was mentioned in the newspaper account he had his estate for 20 years, he had 25 tenants and in those 20 years he lost 21 of them?—I should like to make one remark, and that is that you are dealing with districts now entirely unknown to me. I am speaking from my experience and observation in my own district.

62,377. I understand that is so?—I know nothing whatever about the districts which have been mentioned by other people.

5 September 1894.]

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

62,378. Would you like to qualify the general opinion which you have expressed?—I do not wish to withdraw anything. I speak from my general observation. I do not see it is my business to express an opinion upon the evidence given by other parties. I have given evidence in accordance with my own observation and experience.

62,379. Quite so. I only want to know whether you adhere to your statement that Welsh tenant farmers under yearly agreements are, in your opinion, masters of the situation?—I stick most unhesitatingly to it. That is my observation and experience.

Lord Kenyon.

62,380. I see you have handed in a return of the cropping of every field on your estate?—On a portion of the estate—all except the parish of Llanrwst.

62,381. It is of every farm anyhow, 12 farms?—Yes, I hand this in, I should like to explain, for the purpose of showing that the tenants have not been restricted in any way as to their cultivation; they have been practically allowed to cultivate as they like.

62,382. Do the tenants give you these returns?—No.

62,383. You get them yourself?—I have taken them myself.

62,384. It entails a considerable amount of trouble, does it not?—It is very easily done. I am always about the place, and it is done by merely carrying a penny memorandum book in one's pocket.

62,385. You have done it by walking about the place constantly?—Yes, I may say it is done entirely by my own observation made in walking about.

62,386. You take great interest in the cultivation of your estate?—I do. I take great interest in all particulars connected with it. I have devoted myself to it.

62,387. There is one other thing I notice, you have handed in a statement of rent and other items. One thing I notice here is that the rates and taxes paid by the tenant have considerably decreased?—The amounts actually paid in 1892 are considerably less than in 1880.

62,388. For instance, here is the case of one who paid 29*l.* 11*s.* in 1880, and in 1892 he paid 19*l.* 6*s.*, and in some cases there are bigger reductions still. In many cases we have heard of rates being very much increased, and it is satisfactory to find that there is any decrease. Another thing I notice in your agreement is that you have a clause that the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1875, is to apply?—Of course that agreement is, as you see, an old one. That, as I explained, is only used as a draft now. It is adapted to modern circumstances in every particular, matters are struck out and altered, and then when it is agreed to, it is re-written out and signed.

62,389. So that you did take advantage of the 1875 Agricultural Holdings Act?—I think it is excluded there, is it not, my Lord.

Lord Kenyon—continued.

62,390. You took advantage of it with regard to the arbitration?—Yes, with regard to the arbitration. Of course we now substitute the reference to the Act of 1883 instead of the Act of 1875 in the modern ones.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,391. I think you mentioned in your statement that many of the tenants have to go backing bills at banks?—Yes.

62,392. Is it that they are short of money?—I should presume so. I suppose a man does not, as a rule, borrow money and pay interest for it if he can do without it.

62,393. Does that show that the times are very depressed at present?—I do not think it has ever been otherwise.

62,394. Have they always been in the habit of going to the bank?—Yes, to a great extent. I put it down to a different reason; I put it down to the fact, as I stated, that so many farmers commence business upon nothing but borrowed capital.

62,395. Do you think a landlord is justified in taking such a tenant?—How is he to find out?

62,396. Is it not a false policy to take a man on without any capital?—How can you find out? I should be glad to be instructed how to ascertain that. When a man applies for a farm, he does not usually tell one that he has so many bills standing about, or in the bank, with his name on.

62,397. That is true enough, but still you can find out whether he has capital enough to go on with the farm himself?—I should be very glad to have instruction how to find that out. I am sorry to say I have failed to discover it in many cases.

62,398. Is it not the case if you go to, take a farm in England?—I have no experience of taking farms in England.

62,399. You have to show that you have sufficient capital before you can take a farm. Why should it not be the case in Wales?—I do not think it is the practice of applicants for farms in Wales actually to give any proof that they have sufficient capital; they expect you to take their word, or the word of a neighbour, or something of that sort, and the neighbour is as often, perhaps, deceived as yourself.

62,400. You say that the tenants had abatements which practically ended in a reduction of rent?—Quite so.

62,401. Did they have the rates reduced in consequence?—When they became permanent reductions of rent, they had their rates reduced as well, of course.

62,402. You gave them their receipts, then, as permanent reductions to take to the Assessment Committee?—Yes, and whenever they asked me for it, which was in a good many cases, I gave them a certificate of what the rent was, to take to the Assessment Committee.

62,403. Is it an advantage to a tenant to pay his rent only once a year?—Many of them think it is so, but I must not be misunderstood upon

5 September 1894.]

MR. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

that point. They do not now only pay once a year. Once a year is the only time that we receive it on the fixed day. They are supposed to pay twice a year, but very few pay on the day named. There is no rent audit held, and they come and pay when it is convenient. The 27th of May is the nominal day, but many, in fact, I may say, have not paid yet this year the rent of the 25th of March, which, as I say, is paid nominally on the 27th of May.

62,404. It is only in the case of the tenant not paying his half-year's rent that you give him an extension of one year?—There is no question of paying half-yearly at all, but a tenant comes to me and says, "It is not convenient now for me to pay it; will you wait till September for it?"

62,405. I should think it is often a great convenience to a tenant to do that?—It is often a very great convenience.

62,406. Especially where he has laid out so much money for fodder and so on, it is a great convenience to have some money to go on to buy cattle with if he wishes?—I should say it is a very great convenience, and I am glad to say that in almost every case I am able to do it.

62,407. Am I to understand you to say that you are opposed to the use of artificial manure?—By no means. I thought I qualified that in the last part of my answer.

62,408. I have not been here during the whole of your evidence?—If the latter part of my answer be referred to, it will clearly show that I have not said that.

62,409. Is it not a fact that farmers have used artificial manure?—I am a strong advocate for the use of artificial manure if it is properly used, but what I am opposed to is putting anything that is offered to them, without any proof that it is of any value at all, into dirty, filthy land that it is of no possible use for.

62,410. Do you farm yourself?—Very little. I have over 100 acres of land in my holding.

62,411. How often do you lime your land?—We do not require a great deal. We are on the lime rock.

62,412. I thought you advocated the use by tenants of lime instead of other artificial manures?—Yes, but you asked me about my own land, and I say that that is on the lime, and it does not require so much lime as other land might; it is mostly pasture land.

62,413. Do the tenants use lime?—They used to use a great deal, but they do not of late years, and I think they used to get on better when they used it.

62,414. It is rather expensive to use lime now, is it not?—Yes, but that depends a good deal; of course it depends on the localities. There are some localities where the lime is a long way off, and it is almost impossible to use it.

62,415. With regard to workmen's cottages, are there plenty on the estate which you represent?—I do not think that there is any scarcity of them about there. A great many of the workmen employed round about me live in the village. There is a village near there. The cottages, I daresay, belong to 20 different people, or possibly more than that.

62,416. When you have a farm to let, have you many applications?—I have had so very few to let. I have not had a farm to let for years. I have only had two changes of tenancy in the last 10 years.

62,417. How is it generally about the neighbourhood? Do you not hear whether there are many applications?—I think there are a fair number of applicants for farms of a certain size; I think there are very few applicants for a farm of a large size—that is, very few suitable ones—of course, there will always be a number of people who ask for farms, and who are not at all suitable to take them.

62,418. Do you keep the sporting rights in your own hands on your own farms—the shooting over the farms?—The sporting rates in those cases where it is over a tenant's farm are paid by him and brought to me, and allowed always. The owner cannot legally pay the sporting rate over a farm that is let to a tenant. If he lets the shooting to another—to a sporting tenant—then he can be assessed separately for the rate, but he cannot if he lets the agricultural holding to a tenant, and keeps the shooting himself. Then the Assessment Committee gives a certificate of the increase put on for such a thing. That he brings me and I allow it.

Lord Kenyon.

62,419. Mr. Griffiths asks not about the rate, but about the right?—I beg your pardon, I thought you asked about sporting rates.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,420. No. Do you shoot over your own farms?—Yes. I do over those that I reserve the right over, but over several, as I stated, I do not reserve the right—the tenants have the right.

62,421. Do you purchase the sporting rights over other farms?—I rent the sporting right over some other farms in the neighbourhood.

62,422. I was going to ask you if that is the case, do you have any agreement with the gentleman you take the sporting right of?—Not as a rule.

62,423. I think it is only right on the tenant's part to see the agreements produced. We have not had one yet, but I think it is right that we should have them. From what I hear in the evidence every day as we go along, of the way they suffer, I think it is full time that we should see what are the rights given to the sporting tenant?—I take it they are very simple—the rights to shoot over the land instead of the owner.

62,424. Do you ever go into the standing corn to shoot, as we heard yesterday?—No, we never do that.

5 September 1894.]

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

Mr. Griffiths—continued.

62,425. Do you ever trample the corn?—Trample the corn down, do you mean?

62,426. Yes?—I never trample upon it, because, as I do not go into it, how can I trample upon it?

62,427. Or your keeper?—I never heard of any complaint of his doing so.

62,428. Do you know a place called Bryn-coceyn?—Yes, I do.

62,429. Do you exercise the sporting right over that farm?—I do. It is not a farm of mine; the farm does not belong to me.

62,430. So I understand, but you pay for the sporting right upon it?—I do.

62,431. Do you remember on any occasion that there was a complaint made of your trampling upon the corn there?—No, never. The man complained to me about the rabbits on the place, though he had a right to kill them himself, and I sent my men there to kill them, and he promptly ordered them off, so that we did not trouble him again—we left it to him.

62,432. Is not the tenant allowed to kill the rabbits himself?—Yes, certainly; but he complained to me that there were more rabbits than he wanted there, and he wished them killed. I could not see them, but I sent the men to kill them, and he ordered them away again. Of course, I was very glad, because I did not want the trouble of killing them; but I preferred his killing them himself.

62,433. Do you remember on any occasion whether there was much damage done to a field of wheat of this tenant?—By rabbits?

62,434. No, not by rabbits; by going round there to shoot the game?—No, I do not. He complained once of damage to his corn by rabbits, and my reply was, "Then why did you not kill them?"

62,435. Do you not remember that at one time Mr. Foulkes' attention was called to the damage done by the game?—There was this question of the rabbits that I referred to. He complained about damage being done to the corn by rabbits, which, as he had the power of killing them himself, I did not want to interfere about. He invariably stopped us killing them, he said he preferred killing them himself, and I left him to do so. I was very glad that he should do it.

62,436. We will hear further about this case later; the tenant is coming forward to give evidence with regard to it?—Very good.

Mr. Grove.

62,437. Have you had any claims or notices under the Agricultural Holdings Act?—No.

62,438. Do you think that your tenants are acquainted with the provisions of that Act?—I think so.

62,439. You say the actual rates were rather less in 1892 than they had been previously?—I say the actual amounts paid by the tenants for rates in 1892 were less than those paid in 1880.

Mr. Grove—continued.

62,440. Does that arise from an increase in the rateable value of the union, or from a decrease in expenditure, do you think?—I really cannot tell you that.

62,441. I think you have said that a great deal of the artificial manures used are of very inferior quality?—I believe so.

62,442. Do you know the provisions of the Fertilisers and Feeding Stuffs Act?—Yes.

62,443. So far as you know, do the farmers take advantage of that, and send samples for analysis?—That Act has been enacted so recently that it is scarcely generally known in the neighbourhood yet, I believe. It was only enacted last year, I think, if I remember rightly.

62,444. Do the farmers' clubs or societies issue leaflets to the farmers in the district giving them information with regard to the Act?—I think so. They have the matter in hand.

62,445. You speak about the high price of meat. That is still at a good price?—Butchers' meat is, I think. I think every householder knows that.

62,446. Do you think the farmer gets a fair proportion of the high price?—No, I am afraid he does not.

62,447. Where does it go to?—Into the middleman's pocket.

62,448. Could not there be some co-operation among the farmers to try and better that condition of things?—Yes, I should think so. I have often thought that it is a thing which is very much wanted—that the producer should be able to put his produce into the market without the intervention of the middleman to so great an extent.

62,449. I think you have said in your evidence that there is great depression in agriculture at the present time?—Undoubtedly there is.

Professor Rhys.

62,450. I understood you to say that the small freeholders are much worse off than the tenant farmers?—That is my experience of the cases that I know of, judging from appearances. Of course I do not pretend to know their personal affairs, but judging from looking at the state of their farms and buildings, and so on, that is the conclusion I come to.

62,451. But to what do you ascribe that?—To the heavy interest they have to pay on their mortgages.

62,452. Have they all bought their land in comparatively recent times?—No, I do not think any of them have bought in recent times. I think all of them have bought either years ago or have inherited them, in the cases which I have in view.

62,453. How have they come to mortgage them so heavily?—I do not know. I should say want of money is the cause, want of success in their farms, or money expended for the purpose of starting and helping their families on. I cannot say what the reason is, but I think in almost every case the freeholder has a heavy mortgage on his property.

5 September 1894.]

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

62,454. We have heard different opinions on that question?—Yes, I am aware you have.

62,455. But that is your opinion of the state of small freeholders in this district?—That is my opinion, having in mind those cases that I know of.

62,456. Then you say in the vast majority of cases the rents should be higher than they are. I do not know after the qualification you gave to the Chairman just now in your answers to what district you referred exactly, but I understood you to say that the vast majority of rents should be higher than they are?—I am not aware of having said so. I do not know what question that was in answer to. I am not aware of having said that, and I do not know in reply to what question you mean.

62,457. It may be my mistake?—I do not think I said so.

62,458. You say that the majority of farmers have no capital?—That is my belief.

62,459. How do they start farming?—On borrowed capital, as a rule.

62,460. Are labourers and servants sometimes able to collect money enough to become small farmers?—Oh, yes. I have a tenant holding one of my largest farms at the present moment, who I remember not so very many years ago was a labourer on an adjoining farm.

62,461. I understood you to say (perhaps this is a mistake also) that there was sometimes inquiry made of the landlord as to the state of solvency of his tenants?—I take it every landlord tries to inquire as to that, if he can, before he accepts the tenant.

62,462. No, that is not what I meant. I mean that the landlord was sometimes asked by tradespeople as to the pecuniary conditions of the tenants?—No, what I said was that tradespeople had it in their power to inquire as to that if they chose to do so. I never heard any instance of its being done.

62,463. Of inquiring of the landlord?—I said he had it in his power to do so if he wished to do so. My contention was that it was impossible for the landlord to find out what debts the tenants had, but that it was possible for anyone dealing with him to ascertain whether he was in arrear of rent with his landlord or not. That is what I stated.

62,464. Would the inquirer always get answers to his questions?—That I cannot say.

62,465. That would be putting the landlord into rather a delicate position, would it not?—I offer no opinion upon that. I merely point it out.

62,466. But do you think that would work?—I offer no opinion whatever. I merely point out that it is in the power of another creditor of the tenant to make inquiries as to his solvency, which the landowner cannot do.

62,467. Yes, but it seems to me very doubtful whether that power is worth anything. I should think that a landlord would be incurring serious responsibilities if he gave information to every tradesman who liked to inquire with regard to the condition of his tenants' financial affairs?—I fancy there is very little difficulty in anyone who deals with a tenant ascertaining whether he is much in arrear with his landlord or not.

62,468. But as a landlord yourself, I suspect you would find it rather a delicate matter to do that?—Possibly. It will be quite soon enough to decide that when it is done, I think, which perhaps will be never.

62,469. Then you suggest that the tenants do not see anything of the game on your estate. What do you do with it? Do you sell it?—I am not aware that I said anything of the kind.

62,470. You did?—I said that they never see anything of the bulk of the pheasants—the few pheasants that I have are chiefly in the covers and shrubberies around my own house.

Chairman.

62,471. Those were your exact words. Perhaps you would like to explain them. I remember those words being used by you?—Perhaps they might be read out again from my evidence.

62,472. You had better explain, I think.

Professor Rhys.

62,473. I do not want them read out; as you have explained what it means, that is all I want. Have you a copy of your agreement?—I have handed one up.

62,474. Is that any good? I see that it reserves the ground game at all times, and things of that sort? What is the use of sending that up to us? Have you no later agreement? I should like to see what your agreement is that is in actual use now?—I handed that up as the one originally adopted. They are modified in a number of cases. If you wish to see some of the later ones I should be delighted to let you have them.

62,475. Certainly; this is simply misleading?—I will let you have them with great pleasure.

62,476. The Ground Game Act is contravened in this copy of your agreement. Then in your actual agreements you do not have that clause, I take it?—Here are samples of later ones. Some have been used for pasture land only. The ones marked "P" are for pasture land only, and there are notes on them explaining them. I will hand in these, and I will also hand in with them a draft of the agreement which is intended to be used for the future.

62,477. You can tell me whether you have that clause in or not?—Which clause?

62,478. The clause reserving the ground game?—Of course I have not, because it would be illegal if I had. That has never been put in since the Ground Game Act was passed. It would be illegal, of course.

Mr. Grove.

62,479. But it was in the copy you handed in?—I have explained that.

5 September 1894.]

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

[Continued.]

Professor Rhys.

62,480. As a matter of fact, your tenant shoots the ground game himself?—He kills them in any way he thinks proper. The more he kills them the better I am pleased.

62,481. You do not know whether, as a matter of fact, he does it or not?—Yes, I believe in every case he does. I am not aware of any case in which he does not.

Chairman.

62,482. This is the proposed agreement, I understand?—Yes, that is what I propose to have. That agreement has not been actually signed by any tenant.

62,483. But this is what you propose to have?—Yes, that is a draft of it. Perhaps there will be further modifications in it, but the modifications will be with the view of decreasing the restrictive clauses, and not increasing them.

62,484. This is your Ground Game clause: "All game, hares, rabbits, wild fowl, and fish, in or upon the holding, are reserved exclusively to the landlord with the exclusive right"—and then there is put in: "except as provided in the Ground Game Act, 1880"?—That is so, and you will find that to be the case in every one of the agreements used since the Ground Game Act was passed.

62,485. This is what you propose to put in lieu of the old agreement?—There are explanatory notes on those agreements which I have handed in, explaining what they are on each of them.

62,486. There are two or three questions which I have to trouble you with, handed in by Mr. Vincent and Mr. Llewellyn Jones. Mr. Vincent wishes to know: "Your farm is on limestone, is it not?"—When I spoke of the farm being on lime I spoke of where I live myself. My farms are scattered here and there and everywhere; the bulk of them are not on limestone.

62,487. "Your tenants' farms, for the most part, are on some other rock, are they not?"—Yes, the blue stone formation, the bulk of them.

62,488. "Does that account for your suggestion that the tenants might use more lime to advantage, whereas you do not want it?"—I think that is a reason; but that was not my reason; that was not what I had in view. What I had in view was that in my own experience in years gone by they did use more lime than they do now, and I think that the farms looked better then.

62,489. The following questions are put by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Have you a farm called Tywysog on your estate?"—Yes.

62,490. "Is the present tenant about to leave?"—I really cannot tell you. He gave notice, but he has spread it about that he does not intend leaving—that he does not want to leave—and he has thereby prevented any applicants applying for the farm.

62,491. Then you cannot answer that question. He has given notice, but you do not know whether he is going to leave or not?—Of course, I must take it that he means what he says, and that he does intend to leave, but I have recently heard from others that he has stated that he does not wish to leave.

62,492. But we must take it one way or the other, yes or no; is the present tenant about to leave. He has given notice to quit?—He has given notice to quit.

62,493. Then we must take it that the answer is yes?—Yes.

62,494. Mr. Llewellyn Jones's questions continued, "How many tenants have there been on this farm in the last 20 or 25 years?"—I should state, to begin with, that Tywysog was purchased by my father in 1866, and was then occupied by an old gentleman who had been there a good many years. He did not wish to go on with it, and he gave up the farm and took with the aid of his son-in-law a smaller place on the property, where he spent the rest of his days. The farm was then let to a new tenant, who remained there till 1877. Then it was let in 1877 to two other tenants, two brothers, who ought never to have had it. It is a large farm of 270 acres, and they never did a bit of good from the day they went there. They were a couple of lazy, worthless fellows; they never stayed on their farm at all; they were always rambling about, and never cultivated the farm, but they neglected everything and allowed everything to get into a mess, and they had to give it up, as is thoroughly well known in the district. Then it was unfortunately let after that—that farm has had several tenants, there is no doubt.

62,495. How many tenants have there been on this farm for the last 25 years. You can easily add them up, it will not take you a moment?—There have been three, I think.

Mr. Llewellyn Jones: I will take it how many have there been from 1866.

Chairman.

62,496. How many tenants have there been on the farm since 1866, since you bought it?—I think it is four. Anyhow the present tenant has occupied it since 1880.

62,497. But that is not an answer to the question; the question is: "How many tenants have there been on this farm since 1866?"—I think it is four, including the present one. I have not a note of them all. I think it is four, including the present tenant, so far as I can remember.

62,498. Questions by Mr. Llewellyn Jones continued: "If the preferential claim for rent did not exist, do you not think that landlords would be more careful not to take tenants without capital?"—They would be more careful not to take them without security for their rent in some way, but I think they are as anxious to find out whether the tenants have capital now as they would be under any circumstances. These tenants who have been referred to on this farm failed for the simple reason that

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

Chairman—continued.

they went there without any capital. They had no right to go. Two of them were tenants who were doing moderately well on a smaller farm on the estate, and if one of them had stuck to it he would have done well.

62,499. The answer to that question is yes, is it not. "Do you not think landlords would be more careful not to take tenants without capital?"—I do not think it would make any difference.

62,500. "Does not the preferential claim lead to tenants without capital taking farms?"—I do not think so.

62,501. "Does it not make landlords more reckless in the selection of tenants?"—Certainly not.

62,502. "Have you got a farm called Y Fach, in the parish of Llanefydd?"—Yes.

62,503. "Was a former tenant of this farm called David Williams?"—There was a former tenant called David Williams, but I am trying to find whether I have any note in my book here of it. (The witness searched in book.) Yes, I believe there was a tenant of a farm of that name, but it was before my time.

62,504. He was before your time. "Do you know whether he is still alive?"—I believe he is, at least, I have never heard of his death.

62,505. "Did he take a prominent part in the General Election of 1868?"—I really cannot tell you. I know nothing about it. I do not recollect whether he did or not.

62,506. "Can you say whether he received notice to quit?"—No, I cannot, he left before my time.

62,507. That was before your occupation of the estate?—I think I may say this, he did not receive notice to quit, that is my impression, until long after 1868. In fact it was not until the spring of 1875 that he left the farm, about seven years after the election took place. I remember often hearing my father talk of him. I know why he received notice to quit well enough. It was because he got into most hopeless confusion there, and could not pay his way.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,508. One more question: What is the reason that this tenant is going to leave?—That is exactly the question I have asked him and he has never told me. You are referring to the tenant of Tywysog, are you not?

62,509. Yes, the tenant you are speaking of now with regard to his leaving?—That is exactly the question I have asked him, and I have never received any reply to it.

62,510. Has he ever asked you for any reduction in rent?—No, never. He wrote me a note about November last to say he was afraid he would have to give up the farm this year, and he eventually gave notice. I asked him once or twice when I saw him what his reasons were. The only reasons he gave were that he was tired of farming, it did not pay, and he thought if he continued farming he should take a smaller farm. He also told me of other family reasons which I do not consider I am at liberty to mention, but he finished up by adding that it was nothing against me or against the farm. But since that I hear he has told others and spread it about—I do not know whether I am right in saying what I have heard—that he did not wish to leave, and that he had given notice for the purpose of making better terms with me, and therefore stopped applicants for the farm, but he has never opened any negotiations with me with the view of making better terms.

62,511. Did you not tell us just now that you had no changes on your estate, and you have admitted now four changes in that one farm?—No, please do not make me say what I did not say. Please refer to what I did say, and let it be read out.

Chairman.

62,511A. We have here the statement which you made in the beginning of your evidence, and I will ask the Secretary to read the portion referring to this matter.

(Secretary.) The question is: "Have changes in tenancy become more or less frequent than in former years? If more frequent, to what causes are they attributable?" The statement is: "No. In my experience, and so far as my observation goes, I do not think there is much difference on this point. On this estate during the last 10 years, excluding three cases of death, and no relative desiring to succeed, and two cases of removals to larger farms (one on the estate), I have only had two changes of tenancies, and as to these I am prepared to give full satisfactory particulars." See 62,33

(Witness.) I wish to call your attention, my Lord, to the fact that there I have not attempted to conceal the changes, and I have admitted to seven changes if you trace them in that question. I do not think that the observation that has been made is justified.

Chairman.

62,512. Let us clear this up. Do you say there were only a few changes, and you admit to seven. How is that?—No.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

62,513. There are three deaths and four removals?—Yes.

62,514. And there are two cases mentioned in your evidence in chief. As to those I think you have spoken?—Yes.

62,515. Very well, what Mr. Griffiths is putting to you is, have you not just towards the end of your examination mentioned another case that you omitted?—No, I do not think so. I do not see it.

Lord Kenyon.

62,516. I think it would clear it up if I pointed out that your evidence in chief refers to the last 10 years, and that with regard to that particular farm it went back to 1866?—Yes; it went back to 1866. There has been no change of tenancy on this farm within the last 10 years at all.

5 September 1894.]

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

[Continued.]

Mr. Griffiths.

62,517. Then I am to understand that there has been no change in this farm in the last 10 years?—Certainly there has not been. The present tenant has been there since 1880 or the beginning of 1881.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. HENRY VAUGHAN called and examined through an Interpreter.

Chairman.

62,518. Where do you live?—Bryn Coccyn, in the parish of Llanefydd.

62,519. Is this your evidence?—Yes.

62,520. Have you had it translated to you in the presence of a Commissioner?—Yes.

62,521. Are you satisfied it is correct?—I am.

62,522. Are you willing that it should be read aloud in English?—I am.

The statement of the witness was then read as follows:—

Evidence of Henry Vaughan, Bryn Coccyn, Llanefydd. I occupy a farm called Bryn Coccyn, in the parish of Llanefydd, on the estate of Mr. H. R. Hughes, of Kinnel. Before Mr. Hughes came into this property the rent was 32*l.*, but 38 years ago it was raised to 45*l.* The land is cold and damp, and two acres of gorse land. Two tenants failed after the rent was raised. When I took the farm 16 years ago it was in a very dirty condition, and the hedges were in great disorder. I have greatly improved the place since I entered. When new buildings were erected I did all the haulage, which I estimate to be worth 80*l.* Even now the buildings are very inadequate. I was refused a copy of the agreement by the old agent until I paid 5*s.* I think tenants ought always to be supplied with a copy of the agreement free. The game in the neighbourhood of my farm and over my farm is taken by Mr. Griffith, of Garn. I have received great damage on my farm on this account. I have complained to Mr. Foulkes, the agent, and to Mr. Griffith, but have failed to receive compensation.

Professor Rhys.

62,523. What did you complain about?—I complained that the place was too highly rented.

62,524. I was referring to the game more particularly. What was your complaint about the game?—That there was terrible trespass from the rabbits yonder.

62,525. Why did you not shoot them?—They come there in the night from the covers, and they go back in the day.

62,526. Is there anything to prevent you killing them at night?—Nobody can shoot when it is dark.

62,527. The Ground Game Act does not allow that, but it allows some other ways of killing them off, I think?—I sent to Mr. Foulkes, the agent, asking him to come up and see the trespass, and he came,

Professor Rhys—continued.

62,528. I want to ask you more about that. Do you kill them at night at all?—I cannot.

62,529. Why do you not trap them?—I am not accustomed to such things, and I do not care about beginning now.

62,530. You have complained to Mr. Foulkes. Who is Mr. Foulkes?—He is a steward at Kinnel.

62,531. You complained about the damage done by the rabbits?—I did.

62,532. What was the result? Tell us what happened?—He came to my farm, and we walked over the wheat field where the damage that I complained of existed, and he said that it was unreasonable—that he would look into the matter. I understand they sent after that to Mr. Griffith, of Garn, who, accompanied by his keeper, came to the farm. After we had walked over the field Mr. Griffith asked me what I meant. I said to appoint valuers on both sides. He refused. He asked me afterwards what did I think of getting. I mentioned a small sum for the sake of peace, and he thought that was too much.

62,533. What was the sum?—Five pounds. I said it was not really half enough.

62,534. How big was the field?—Five acres.

62,535. What crop had you in it?—Wheat.

62,536. Was the whole field of five acres spoilt by the game?—More than half of it had been destroyed.

62,537. Have you anything further to say?—Nothing on that point, only that I never received any compensation.

62,538. When was this, then?—Four years from this time. I still suffer from the trespass.

62,539. That is long credit, is it not. Did you have any promise of payment of the compensation at all?—Mr. Griffith, as he was starting from the place, said he would come up again. He never came except to shoot over the land.

62,540. I think you admit that Mr. Griffith never goes into your standing corn?—He does not go through the corn.

Mr. Grove.

62,541. What damage, in your opinion, was done to the wheat?—I called two men to look over it after that, and they said it was from 12*l.* to 15*l.*

62,542. How much did you ask for?—Five pounds. I told him then I was asking far less than half of what I ought to get.

5 September 1894.]

Mr. H. VAUGHAN.

Mr. Grove—continued.

62,543. A shooting tenant generally pays a rent to some one, does he not?—I do not know anything of their affairs.

62,544. Then you get no part of it?—I do not.

62,545. What you get, then, is the damage?—That is all.

62,546. Have you suffered damage from anything else, besides rabbits?—Not much. There are a few pheasants, which I do not complain about.

62,547. Did you complain to the landlord?—I had a letter from Mr. Charlton, the agent of Mr. Hughes, of Kinnel, telling me to kill the rabbits. That is all I had.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,548. How large was this field where the damage was done to the wheat?—Five acres.

62,549. Did you at any time see Mr. Griffith or his keepers treading your corn?—No, only the potatoes and the turnips.

62,550. Not the corn?—Not the corn.

62,551. Did he ever put his dogs into the corn?—Yes. If they had lost a bird, they would send a dog after it into the corn.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

62,552. Have you received any abatement?—Yes, 10 per cent.

62,553. For how many years have you received the 10 per cent.?—They gave 10 per cent. three or four years ago. Then they stopped giving it, and they have commenced giving it again.

62,554. Have you found it difficult to pay the rent, even with the 10 per cent. abatement?—Yes; I do find it difficult.

62,555. You do not think the abatement has been sufficient?—I do not.

62,556. Is there anything special about your farm that ought to have entitled you to a greater abatement than that which other tenants on the same estate have received?—I cannot say that, except that I live in the highest farm that they have.

62,557. How many rooms are there in your farmhouse?—Three rooms on the first floor, and two above, and a lobby.

62,558. How many are you in family?—There are two children and the wife at home.

62,559. Yourself, your wife, and two children?—Yes; that is my family at home.

62,560. Do you find the bedroom accommodation sufficient?—There is no room for any strangers or visitors that might come in.

62,561. Have you got any labourer living on your premises?—No; as I have no sleeping accommodation I cannot keep a servant, but I have to pay for a labourer when I want him.

62,562. Have you any female domestic servants?—No, my daughter works.

62,563. Is the house in good repair?—Yes, it is in fairly good repair.

Lord Kenyon.

62,564. What is the acreage of your farm?—69 acres.

62,565. What is the rent which you pay now?—45*l*.

62,566. You say half the wheat crop was destroyed by the rabbits?—Yes.

62,567. Did Mr. Griffith offer to send his keeper to kill the rabbits?—He did not.

62,568. I understood him to say that he did?—I asked for leave to set traps and things in the hedges, and I was refused it.

62,569. In the fencing of the cover, I suppose?—There is a small croft between the covers and my land.

62,570. That croft is not your own, I suppose?—No, it belongs to Mr. Griffith.

62,571. You have made no attempt to kill the rabbits yourself?—In the spring I got a man to kill them, or else they would have eaten me alive before now. I got nothing from them.

62,572. How many did he kill?—I cannot say.

62,573. What did you pay the man?—I did not pay him anything. I let him take the rabbits.

62,574. You simply let him come and take what rabbits he can get?—Yes.

62,575. Does he pay you anything?—He does not pay me anything.

62,576. It is a bad bargain for you, I should think?—Yes, a very bad bargain; but I think it is better than having the rabbits eat everything.

62,577. I should think you might get a man to pay you for them. How much did the landlord spend on the buildings?—I cannot say.

62,578. Did you keep any account of your haulage?—I did not keep an account of everything, but I know the quantity of stones that I carried.

62,579. You estimate it at so much a ton or load, do you not?—By the load.

62,580. You say the buildings are inadequate. How many cattle can you tie?—Four cows.

62,581. Is that all the tying you have got, only four cows?—They have made a place for me to put some heifers in the hovel yonder.

62,582. Is it a sheep farm?—No, I buy sheep for about three months in the winter season.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

62,583. Just one question, please, on a point on which we have not touched in this county yet, I think. With regard to your fare—with regard to your food; what do you generally have for your breakfast?—Sometimes a cup of tea; we cannot get anything else.

62,584. No meat?—No meat for breakfast.

62,585. What time do you dine?—12.30, as a rule.

62,586. What do you have for dinner generally?—Bacon sometimes, beef and potatoes.

62,587. How often do you get beef?—That is more than I can say.

5 September 1894.]

Mr. H. VAUGHAN.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

62,588. Is it twice a week or three times a week, or nearly every day?—Once or twice a month.

62,589. What time do you have tea?—From half-past four to five.

62,590. And do you have any supper?—Supper about half-past seven.

62,591. What do you have for supper?—As a rule a cup of tea.

62,592. What to eat?—Bread and butter.

62,593. Does that represent, do you think, the ordinary fare, and the ordinary custom of farmers in this county?—No, I do not suppose anybody uses so much tea as we do, as we are a family together, and no strangers with us.

Chairman.

62,594. There are some questions by Mr. Vincent: "You say you cannot kill the rabbits?"—No, I cannot.

62,595. "Mr. Griffith says you will not let his men kill them?"—After they had been to my farm, and refused to do anything with me, as soon as I got the crops in, two keepers came up to catch the rabbits. I went to them and said they must either pay me the trespass or leave the rabbits there.

62,596. "If you are both of you accurate, how are the rabbits to be killed at all?"—Well, I tell the truth.

62,597. Did you make any claim after the valuation of damage was made?—No, I did not.

Professor Rhys.

62,598. What was your objection—I did not quite understand. Was it to the time the keepers came?—No, it was because I wanted to get compensation for the trespass, and as they refused that I wanted the rabbits.

62,599. They came to kill when there was no more corn for the rabbits to eat, is that it?—Yes. Very soon after I had the wheat on the field the rabbits went away, you could not see one on the field.

62,600. The rabbits went in search of food naturally?—I do not know where they went.

62,601. Why did you not kill them?—They would not let me set traps for them or snares in the hedges.

62,602. Is that in the Act?—I do not know. Mr. Griffith said it was not. I do not know whether the law allows them to eat my crops.

62,603. I do not know the Act by heart, and I am afraid you do not either.

Chairman.

According to the Act they must not set traps in the fences or the hedges.

Lord Kenyon.

They must not employ spring traps, except in rabbit holes.

Professor Rhys.

My fellow Commissioner shows me a paragraph in the Act with regard to what you can do. I think you had better study it.

Chairman.

62,604. Your contention is that they will not allow you to set traps or snares in the fences, and therefore you are unable to kill these rabbits?—Yes.

62,605. And they did not send keepers to kill the rabbits until your crops were carried?—They did not.

62,606. That was the reason why you objected to their killing them?—Yes.

62,607. You would have been glad if they had come early in the year?—Yes, I should have been glad, and it would have been of advantage to me as well.

62,608. Then I have some questions by Mr. Owen Wynne. "Can you manage to get a glass 'of cwrw' in these bad times?"—When I come to Denbigh I get a couple of glasses, and that is all I do get.

62,609. "I believe you have a small farm of your own?"—Yes.

62,610. How many acres?—Four acres of land, and there is a house on it, a little mansion. It is the buildings that make the value.

62,611. What is the rent of it?—8*l.* 10*s.*

62,612. "Do you allow your own tenant an abatement?"—I do.

62,613. "How much per acre would you pay for the farm you hold on the Kimmel estate?"—13*s.* 5*d.* per acre.

62,614. There is one more question by Mr. Vincent: "The hedge in which you wished to set traps is not in your occupation, is it?"—No, it belongs to Mr. Griffith.

62,615. Is it the hedge of your field?—It is the boundary hedge between myself and Mr. Griffith.

62,616. Is it the fence of the cover?—No. There is a small piece of land between us and the cover.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,617. How long have you been tenant of this estate?—16 years.

62,618. Has Mr. Griffith always been a shooting tenant there?—Yes, and before I went there.

62,619. Did you know that he was to be the tenant when you took the farm?—Yes.

62,620. Have you produced an agreement for your farm?—No.

62,621. Have you no agreement?—They have an agreement, but I have no copy of it.

62,622. You were refused a copy, were you not?—I was.

62,623. Unless you paid what?—5*s.*

Lord Kenyon.

62,624. I want to ask you one or two questions upon what Mr. Brynmor Jones asked you. Is the size of your holding the average size of

5 September 1894.]

Mr. H. VAUGHAN.

the holdings in your district?—There are some much larger and some much smaller.

62,625. Your diet is not the same as that of the bigger farmers?—I cannot say, we take what diet we like.

62,626. But are we to understand that the bigger farmers in your district only get beef twice a month?—I cannot say.

62,627. You only speak for your own class?—I never ask what anybody eats.

Mr. Grove.

62,628. You pay 13s. 5d. per acre for your own farm?—I do.

Mr. Grove—continued.

62,629. You let the $4\frac{1}{2}$ acres at 38s. an acre or about that?—It is the buildings that make up the amount.

62,630. What buildings are on it?—There are three rooms on the ground floor, and two above.

62,631. So that there is really a good house upon it included in that rent of 8l. 10s.?—It is a perfectly new house, made in the best possible way.

62,631a. Therefore there is no fair comparison between the two?—There is not.

The witness withdrew.

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH recalled and further examined

Chairman.

62,632. I understand, Mr. Griffith, that you wish to say something as to the evidence of this witness?—Yes, my Lord. In the first place I should say that when he pointed out the damage to this corn that he speaks of, it was a wretchedly poor crop of corn, sown in half cultivated and dirty land, and altogether a wretched poor crop. I certainly saw that there were some marks of damage by rabbits, but nothing like the extent which he wanted to make out, but my contention was that if there were damage by rabbits it was entirely his own fault, he was always at liberty to kill them. Why he did not do so I did not know, but afterwards I thought I was pleasing him by sending men there to kill the rabbits, so I told my keeper and another man to go there, and he promptly sent them away. Then they went to kill the rabbits in another fence, which really and truly though between his field and mine, is my fence, and in which they had a perfect right to kill rabbits, but he would not allow them to do that either. He ordered them to go away from there, and rather than have any unpleasantness with him they did leave, and I told them never to go there again, because I much preferred that he should kill the rabbits himself. Now he has told one very gross untruth here to-day, and that is that I stopped him from setting traps. I should like to explain that matter properly. It will just serve to show how a man can easily wilfully misrepresent what is said. I asked him why he did not kill these rabbits. He raised sundry objections about them, that he could not catch them in one way, and catch them in another. I said, "Why do you not trap them?" He said, "I cannot catch them in traps unless I make scrapes on the field, and set the traps on them. Will you let me do that." I said, "I cannot give you permission to do that, I believe it is against the Ground Game Act, and you cannot do so; you must take your chance about it." That was the whole and entire conversation that took place about the traps. It was originated by my asking why he did not trap them, and it is a gross misstatement of the truth to come here to-day and tell you that I stopped him setting traps or snares in any possible way, and I do not understand how the man dares to say so.

Chairman.

62,633. We will have this evidence translated to Mr. Vaughan. What we understand you to say is that you gave him power to set traps in your boundary fence?—It must be clearly understood that I had no power either to give him leave or to refuse him leave to set traps. He is entitled to do so by the law of the land.

62,634. To whom does that boundary fence belong. Is it on his farm, or is it on yours?—Well, they were both boundary fences. In one case the boundary fence was his, and in the other case it was mine, but in both cases he sent the man away from attempting to kill them.

62,635. We will come to that later. Did you prevent him from setting snares or traps, or did your gamekeeper prevent him from setting snares or traps in your boundary fence?—No, we might have done so, but we never did so.

62,636. Has he power to set traps and snares in your boundary fence at the present moment?—I have never objected to his doing so, and I have never heard the question raised before.

62,637. But has he the power at this moment to set traps and snares in your boundary fence?—It depends upon how you apply the word "power." As a matter of right he has no right to do so. He has never asked me for it.

62,638. No, but do you give him power at this moment to set traps and snares in your boundary fence? I understand you to say that he has a right to do it. Is that so—that you would have no objection to his doing it?—I have no power to prevent him, but whether he has a right to set them in a fence that does not belong to him, I cannot say in point of law.

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

Chairman—continued.

62,639. But the fence belongs to you, and he thinks you object to it. That may not be the case, and I ask you would you have any objection to his setting snares and traps in your boundary fence at the present moment?—He does not even set them on his own fence.

62,640. I ask you whether you have any objection to his setting them in your boundary fence at the present moment. I want an answer to that?—I have never raised objection to his doing so.

62,641. I want an answer, yes or no?—I answer that I have never objected to his doing so.

62,642. But have you any objection at this moment?—No.

62,643. Is there anything more you want to say?—I should like to say that he has entirely mis-stated as to his having asked me for any sum. He never named any sum; he never told me that he wanted anything at all. I admit that I did not pay him, and I never intended to pay him anything, because I consider that if he was damaged at all it was entirely his own fault. He was able to protect himself. The only other thing I wish to say is this, that he has referred to the rabbits as coming from a cover of mine adjoining. Now I say that there are very few rabbits in that cover. If I maintain rabbits it is for the purpose of sport of course. I do not suppose anybody keeps them for any other purpose. I shall be very happy to hand in here to-morrow my game register, in which appears everything that has been shot on the estate at all for the last 30 years, every kind of game that has been killed, and you will see for yourself the number of rabbits killed when that 50 acre cover has been shot. I think I may safely allow you to judge from that whether it is at all probable that there could have been rabbits to the extent that he says.

62,644. What do you wish then that we should translate to Mr. Vaughan,—that you consider that you have very few rabbits in that cover?—I consider there are very few rabbits in that cover, nothing that could possibly damage him in the way that he wishes you to understand. I should like to call attention to the fact that in my evidence I stated that the whole of the rabbits killed in shooting over the estate in the course of the season only amounted to an average of 150 a year spread over four or five days' shooting.

Lord Kenyon.

62,645. Do you not think we are rather making a mountain out of a mole-hill?—I do think so, but that was set up by this man.

62,646. Do you not think it could be settled with Mr. Vaughan, outside this court, amicably; surely you can come together instead of taking up the time of the Commission with this?—Mr. Vaughan is at perfect liberty to protect himself.

62,647. I am sure you and Mr. Vaughan might kill the rabbits between you, if you joined together, and you might divide the proceeds?—I should like to say this. I had no idea that there was any difference between us. We have met hundreds of times since that happened, and I had no idea that he had any grievance against me at all; we have always been the best of friends, and I did not understand that he had any grievance at all against me.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

62,648. I do not understand that there is any grievance against you. You are merely stating the facts, and you do not quite agree, but you are nearly at one. His grievance is against the landlord?—No, his grievance is against me for keeping up the rabbits, and there is a very large difference between us. This is a matter that happened four or five years ago, and I was under the impression that we had been good friends ever since.

Lord Kenyon.

62,649. However, you go and kill the rabbits and give him half of them. I am quite sure he will be satisfied?—I should be delighted to do so, but I hope he will kill them all himself.

Chairman.

62,650. There is one more question sent up by Mr. Llewellyn Jones: "Did you not state to Mr. Vaughan that you thought the damage was caused by sheep?"—I believe I pointed out to him the marks of sheep having been in the field. I believe I drew his attention to marks at the time of sheep having been in the corn. To the best of my recollection I drew his attention to that.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,651. Do you deny that the landlord said, when he went to see the amount of damage done, that something must be done?—Do I deny what the landlord said? What possible knowledge can I have of what passed between the landlord and tenant when I was not present? What possible knowledge can I have of that? I was not present.

62,652. I mean Mr. Foulkes?—I was not present. I do not know what passed between them at all.

62,653. But this evidence that you are giving is meant to rebut Mr. Vaughan's evidence?—Yes, but you asked me whether I deny what the landlord said. I do not know what the landlord did say; I was not there.

62,654. But do you deny what this gentleman said.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

62,654a. I do not know what you come to rebut; it seems to me irrelevant. What the tenant complains of is that his farm was overrun with rabbits?—I disagree entirely with you; I think it is a most important thing.

5 September 1894.]

Mr. W. D. W. GRIFFITH.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

62,655. Excuse me, I must be the judge whether it is important?—I think it is important when he has told you that I refused to allow him to set traps, and I deny that in toto. I think that is very important.

Mr. Griffiths.

62,656. Do you deny what he said here, that the agent, Mr. Foulkes, came to see the damage, and that he said something must be done. Do you deny that?—How do I know what Mr. Foulkes said when I was not present? I neither deny it nor admit it. I do not know what happened between them. How can I deny a thing that happened when I was not present?

62,657. If you cannot deny it, what do you come here to rebut?—I might as well deny a conversation that took place between you and some other person outside the court this morning. I have no knowledge of it at all.

The witness withdrew.

Major R. F. BIRCH re-called and further examined.

Chairman.

62,658. You are agent for the Llannerch and Gwysaney estates, situate in the counties of Denbigh and Flint, and also agent for estates in Yorkshire, Cheshire, Derbyshire, and Shropshire?—Yes.

62,659. And you are also a tenant farmer, farming 400 acres on your own account?—Yes.

62,660. Now, will you tell us what evidence you wish to give?—I wish to give particulars touching the estates of Sir G. A. Cayley, Bart., and P. B. Davies Cooke, Esquire, namely, the Llannerch estate, 2,040 acres, in counties of Denbigh and Flint, rental, 2,632*l.*; and the Gwysaney estate, 3,687 acres, in counties of Denbigh and Flint, rental 4,311*l.*

62,661. Does the Gwysaney estate belong to Mr. Davies Cooke?—Yes. This is the agricultural acreage. Then there is also the Hartsheath and Gelligynan estate, 2,900 acres, in the counties of Denbigh and Flint, rental, 2,500*l.*

I also wish to give evidence, which I think from what took place yesterday may be of profit to the Commission, as regards the Plas Heaton estate.

62,662. Whose is that?—That belongs to Major Heaton. On that estate there is rather a new feature. There was a good deal of conversation yesterday about averages and a sliding scale. This estate has a number of corn leases, which may be of interest to the Commission.

62,663. How big is that estate of Major Heaton's?—That estate is 1,200 acres in the county of Denbigh.

62,664. They are all in the same county?—The counties of Denbigh and Flint. I will go to this question, whether there is a difference of either language, politics, or religion between the landlord or agent, and the tenant or proposed tenant. In nearly every case tenants on these estates are Nonconformists. Their politics or religion are never inquired into; and to the best of my belief, I am on friendly terms with all, also landlords; two years ago, on the Llannerch estate, we gave land for a chapel, but I did not inquire, nor do I know, what is the denomination of the congregation. I may say that I have never taken any part in politics; I have never canvassed anybody, nor have I influenced the tenants in any one way that I am aware of. As regards my qualifications, I myself was 10 years under-agent before being appointed head agent, and I have farmed and managed land for the last 30 years. I have over 25,000 acres under my management at the present time.

62,665. Under your personal superintendence?—Yes. The date of entry you have heard before. Then I deal with farms let on leases. Of course, I exclude the Plas Heaton estate with regard to that, because I give evidence on that particular point as regards the corn leases. We have one farm taken on lease on the Llannerch estate in 1881 for 21 years. A short time ago we took over the tithe, and allowed it to the tenant, amounting to 18*l.* 14*s.* 2*d.*, and also placed him in the same position as all the other tenants on the estate, and gave him the abatement, which we were not bound to do. As to changes of tenancy, there have been very few changes except those caused by death, and changes are not more frequent than they were 10 years ago. As regards compensation: in the case of resuming occupation for planting, building, and so on, compensation is always given. It is in the agreements. As regards mining, the tenant is under a very satisfactory arrangement, because he gets what we call the trespass rent.

62,666. Will you kindly put in your agreement?—I will put them all in afterwards. The trespass rent is simply double the agricultural rent, and that is always received by the tenant. As regards agreements, there are the usual conditions of tenancy, but I wish to point out very strongly to the Commission that these agreements are also in use in Cheshire, and in Yorkshire.

62,667. The same agreements?—The same agreements. In the case of the Cayley estate, there is a large property in Cheshire, and on that estate in Cheshire the same agreement is used. On the Gwysaney estate, a large property in Yorkshire, the same agreement is used on the estate in Yorkshire. That is a point I want particularly to impress upon the Commission. As to copies of agreements, my

Major R. F. BIRCH.

practice is to give a copy of the agreement, and allow some days for the tenant to consider the clauses before signing it. I go over each clause with the proposed tenant, and I find all the tenants in Wales are intelligent, and quite equal to making a fair agreement.

62,668. Do you speak Welsh yourself?—No, I do not.

62,669. Have you got many Welsh tenants?—We have a great many.

62,670. Of course, the agreement is explained to them in their own language?—In their own language. The rents are fixed on the gross sum, except upon the Plas Heaton estate, where the rents are mostly corn rents. As to services rendered by the tenant, there are none, except hauling for improvements and repairs, which is never insisted on; it is done by voluntary arrangement with the tenant, if he is in a position to do it. If he is not, we do it ourselves. The rent is fixed on the basis of valuation. As regards choosing the tenant, I try to ascertain if he has capital, but I lay equal stress upon his knowledge of farming. As regards arbitration in adjusting the rent, I have not had experience of any difficulty in adjusting the rent. In fact, if I am not speaking in my own praise, I may say that in two cases I have been called in by the landlord and tenant to fix the rent of two farms.

62,671. Which has been satisfactory to both parties?—I hope so. As regards abatements, on the Gwysaney estate there have been considerable reductions, which I can show you. In 1886 10 per cent. in many cases, and in one case 33 per cent.

62,672. Are these permanent reductions or are they abatements?—The 10 per cent. was permanent. Then, I will take the abatements. Abatements on the Gwysaney estate have been 10 per cent. from 1886 to 1888, and 10 per cent. from 1892 to 1894. On the Llannerch estate the rents have been considerably reduced. It is a different estate to the Gwysaney estate, because there is a large amount of clay land which has been unprofitable to farm.

62,673. And that reduction has been much heavier than in the other case?—Much heavier.

62,674. What sort of reduction would you put it at?—On the gross rental you will find from this statement that it is 25 per cent. reduction.

62,675. 25 per cent. permanent reduction?—Yes, permanent reduction; and we have also given an allowance of 10 per cent.

62,676. On the reduced rental?—On the reduced rental. Then I come to the question, "When rents are raised or reduced, does the change depend on a re-valuation? If so, by whom conducted, and at what intervals is it usual? If not, does the change depend on fluctuations in prices, or on what principle (if any) is it based?" I have not raised any rents. The reduction is made by my own valuation and in friendly consultation with the tenant. I have never had occasion to call in a third party, nor do I think it necessary. Fluctuation of prices has much to do with the change, and it has been my chief desire to help the tenants, and in some cases, so to say, to prop them up, and to avoid a change of tenancy. Fluctuations have been all one way of late years. As regards the preferential claim for rent, I think myself it is a most excellent thing. I can speak from experience—I do not wish to mention names—in which tenants have come to me and put before me their position, and told me that if I would only wait we should get our money. They have said that they could satisfy some creditor—a shopkeeper or some other person who was pressing them hard—and if we would only wait we should get our money. I am bound to say that we did wait, and I am also bound to say that in every case the tenant fulfilled his promise.

62,677. In your opinion, it has been very advantageous to the tenant?—That is my opinion. More land has been laid down to grass, one object, of course, being to save the labour bill. In some cases the landlord has found the seeds, and I am always willing if the grass is in good heart when it has been laid down, say for three or four years, to take it at a valuation, and put it in the schedule to the agreement as grass land.

62,678. In other cases, of course, the tenant would have the right to plough it up?—Undoubtedly. As regards materials and repairs, I will put in the accounts on the Gwysaney estate which will show that since 1886 we have spent 11,532*l.* 0*s.* 4*d.* upon materials and repairs and improvements.

62,679. Is that Mr. Cooke's estate?—Mr. Cooke's estate.

62,680. In how many years?—1886 to 1892.

62,681. That is in six years?—In seven years; it includes 1886. Then the annual expenditure for wages and repairs come to 671*l.* 19*s.* 7*d.*, and in materials 793*l.* 11*s.* 5*d.*, which amounts to 1,465*l.* 11*s.* That is omitting all charge for wood fences. On the Llannerch estate (Sir George Cayley's estate) I may say that previous to 1878 we spent the whole income upon the estate and more. Mr. Dod had the estate at that time, and we spent the whole of the income that we received from the farms upon the estate up to a year before his death.

62,682. How long did that go on for?—That went on for 12 or 13 years.

62,683. Was that putting an estate which was in a poor condition into proper repair?—I cannot say. I came when it was half done, but I was under-agent at the time, and had the whole management, and I can vouch that we did spend more than the income that we received from the estate. On Sir George Cayley's estate, from 1886 to 1893 the amount spent has been 6,924*l.* 12*s.* 11*d.* That shows that we have not let things go down.

62,684. Was that on improvements?—Wages and materials for improvements and repairs; an average during the last eight years of 865*l.* 11*s.* 7*d.*

62,685. That estate is in rather good order, I suppose, now?—Well, it is not in what I call

5 September 1894.]

Major R. F. BIRCH.

perfect order. There is always something to do. In fact there is more to do under the present agricultural depression than before, but I think everybody, landlords and agents, are anxious to make matters so that the tenants can improve, and also that they can make a living. As to procedure under the Agricultural Holdings Act I have acted frequently with several gentlemen in this room, under the Act, and I think it is very fairly well known. If not, it is generally explained by the valuers that they are to act under the Act. At all events, I have been arbitrator in several cases under it.

62,686. Then you do not consider it a dead letter?—I do not. Then as to game preserving. Rabbits are killed by the tenants, and if not, if they have any complaint, they are killed for them. Hares are almost extinct. In most cases the tenants avail themselves of the provisions of the Ground Game Act, and I should say on the Gwysaney estate every tenant avails himself of the Act. There is not much damage done by game to the crops and pastures of the tenants, but, if there is any, it is at once looked into and the tenants compensated, the amount being assessed by arrangement. Then, as to the question, "Are tenants expected to 'beat' coverts, &c., when their landlords go out shooting? If so, are they paid, and how?" Certainly not, but there are tenants on the Llannerch estate who come to load for the pleasure of the thing, and they always have a present of game. I believe at Gwysaney some of the tenants go out to beat for the pleasure of it, as they are not expected to do so, and they, of course, have a present of game; but I only know this from hearsay. As to the relation between landlord and tenant, in the case of a tenant who takes the house and shooting of Llannerch, the tenants have a great regard for him, as he has paid over 4*l.* per acre for pheasant rearing ground, and behaves most liberally to them. Then on the Gwysaney estate there is a clause I should like to explain. It has never been in force in any way whatever. As a matter of fact the farm buildings are not insured. We are our own insurers.

62,687. You insure yourselves?—Yes. There is no combination among landlords to accept tenants of a certain description. There is a landlords' association in the district to protect their property, the objects of which have already been explained in the evidence given by Lord Penrhyn. I know of no combination among farmers or labourers to fix wages. As to proprietor farmers, I believe there are some in this district, but I have no certain knowledge. I cannot say whether their number has decreased or not. As to the causes of depression, foreign competition has a great deal to do with it, and railway rates, and also an unfortunate cause that we cannot help, that is, want of capital. I think I need not go through the reasons why I object strongly to a land court. They have been stated to you very frequently, but I do object to a land court most strongly.

Chairman—continued.

62,688. But we should like to know. You say you strongly object to a land court?—I strongly object to a land court. I have myself, friendly relations with all the tenants, and I do not see the smallest necessity for it. I think that they can have everything with a reasonable agent and a reasonable landlord.

62,689. I take it, so far, as regards estates like those that you have got anything to do with, and all the great estates and good estates in Wales, you say there is no earthly reason for a land court to be established?—That is my opinion.

62,690. So far as they are concerned?—Yes. As regards fixity of tenure, I think a lease would answer the whole purpose, and I am only too glad myself to grant leases whenever they are applied for. I have no lease of my own farm.

62,691. Do you farm yourself extensively?—I farm 400 acres as a tenant farmer.

62,692. Under the same conditions as a tenant farmer?—Exactly under the same conditions as a tenant farmer.

62,693. May I ask, do you find that you can make it pay its way?—Well, mine is an exceptional farm; the bulk of the land lies near Colwyn Bay, and the bulk of my farming business is selling milk and market gardening. Of course I grow a large amount of cereals and roots as well, but I mean those are exceptional things, and therefore I must say that I make ends meet on my farm.

62,694. You consider you are rather exceptionally favoured?—I do. I do not think I am an ordinary tenant. I have these advantages.

62,695. But on the whole with your vast practical experience, do you think that the tenant farmers in Wales are in a very shaky state?—Some of them are undoubtedly. There has been a very serious depression. You cannot shut your eyes to it. There is no question about it at all.

62,696. They have had a very hard uphill fight?—They have had a hard uphill fight.

62,697. I think you have told us that they are very industrious as a rule?—I can speak, so to say, as a foreigner, but I have been in Wales for 30 years, and I have received nothing but kindness and consideration from all the tenants. I have had to do with one or two exceptions, and that is natural in everything.

62,698. But you consider them as a class very industrious?—I do, an industrious, hard working, hard living people.

62,699. A frugal people?—Yes. That, my Lord, is all I have to say.

62,700. We are extremely obliged to you for your evidence, which is exceedingly valuable and interesting. Now you were going to tell us about Major Heaton?—Now I will tell you about Major Heaton and the corn leases. I take two instances, one was granted in 1871 and the other in 1881. The first lease was for 30 years, and the second lease was granted for 20 years. It is a fixed rent, subject to fluctuation in prices. I have taken an extract from the lease which perhaps will explain it better than I can myself,

5 September 1894.]

Major R. F. BIRCH.

if you allow me to read it. "And it is hereby declared and agreed that the said rent is leased upon the calculation that the price or value of a quarter of wheat, a quarter of barley, and a quarter of oats is the sum of 114s., and that the lessee, his heirs and assigns, shall on and after the first day of January in every year ascertain the average prices as published in the 'London Gazette' of the said three grains for the 52 weeks of the year preceding the said first of January, and in case the average prices of the said quantities of the said grains shall exceed 114s. by one or more shillings, then in that case the foregoing rent for the two next succeeding half yearly payments shall advance one pound per cent. for every shilling that such average prices shall exceed the sum of 114s., and in case the said average prices of the said quantities of grain shall be under 114s. by one or more shillings, then and in that case the foregoing rent for the next two years shall be reduced one pound per cent. for every shilling that such average prices shall be under 114s." To make it perfectly clear to the Commission I must tell you that in the 1871 lease, a repairing lease, the price is put at 114s. I have a later lease of 1881 for 20 years when the average price is put at 100s. instead of 114s.; but there is no repairing clause in that lease. (For copies of these leases see Appendix.)

62,701. There is no obligation to leave the farm in tenantable repair?—Yes, ordinary tenants' repairs; but in the first lease they have the material given them in the rough, and they have to do the repairs.

62,702. Nothing is done by the landlord?—Nothing is done by the landlord except finding material in the rough, timber, slate, bricks, and everything of that sort.

62,703. And they have to draw it?—They have to draw it, and they have to repair their buildings; that is so. I may say that they are a most contented lot of tenants who are under these leases, and it is an immense advantage to them. If you would like to hear my opinion upon it, I will give it you.

62,704. Yes, the Commissioners would think it of great interest?—I think it is a most excellent way of dealing with the rent, but the term of 30 years or 20 years is much too long. There ought to be a revision of the price of corn, say every five, seven, or ten years, as the case may be, and let that be the basis of rent. Take, for instance, 100s. Well, we cannot get that for our wheat, barley, or oats now. It is an immense advantage to the tenants, I admit. I always wish them to have a pull in the right direction, but I think this is a little too high.

62,705. Did you see that wheat sold at 17s. yesterday at Spalding?—Yes; I have not seen the average prices, but take barley at 24s., and oat at 14.—well, where are you even at 100s.? I shall be very glad to answer any questions upon that point now.

Chairman.

We are very much obliged to you, Major Birch, for your valuable evidence.

Lord Kenyon.

62,706. Would you advise taking any other consideration besides corn as the basis?—I do not see how you could do so. I have thought it out well myself. You see the quality of cattle varies very much, and the quality of sheep varies and the different breeds of sheep vary very much. You have no "London Gazette" or anything to go to, to get the exact value.

62,707. I suppose in this district there is not very much corn raised, is there?—Oh yes, there is a good deal.

62,708. I suppose the rents are down about 30 or 40 per cent., are they not?—I do not think we can say that throughout the country.

62,709. I mean in these two cases?—I do not collect the rents of the Plas Heaton Estate, and I cannot tell you that quite; but I have the management of the estate.

62,710. You have got English as well as Welsh agencies?—I have.

62,711. Do you think the depression has been more felt in Wales than in England?—We did not begin to feel the depression in Wales till they were seriously affected in England. I am speaking now of Yorkshire principally. I do not think we have felt the depression at all in Cheshire.

62,712. Cheese farming?—Not with the cheese farming where they make good cheese.

62,713. Not even now?—Very little. I have complaints just lately that cheese was fetching rather lower prices, but they all admitted that the make was so much greater that perhaps they were compensated for it.

62,714. With regard to the differences in the tenure, and so forth, in England and Wales, what do you notice?—As regards tenure on the estates I speak of, it is exactly the same.

62,715. The same agreements?—The same agreements. Of course in Yorkshire it is a very much worse case for them when they enter their farms, because they have to pay a very large tenant right.

62,716. In Yorkshire?—In Yorkshire; that is according to the custom of the country. They have to pay for their seeds, and their ploughing, and fallowing, and manure, and it comes to a very large sum of money upon their entering the farm. Here, of course, they have the way-going crop to pay for, and on Mr. Cooke's estate—the Gwysaney estate—they would have the hay and the straw to pay for, and on Sir George Cayley's estate they would have the way-going crop, and would not have to pay for manure, or hay and straw. The manure would be their own, and the hay and straw would be at consuming price.

62,717. Who pays for the manure?—It belongs to the landlord, so to say—anything left. As a matter of fact there ought to be no hay or straw left when a man leaves on the 1st of May.

62,718. With regard to the Ballot Act, and with regard to the fear of men coming forward to give evidence, have you anything to say with regard to that?—I have never found the smallest fear of their coming forward in the least.

5 September 1894.]

Major R. F. BIRCH.

62,719. They approach you with their grievances sufficiently freely, do they?—Oh, they have perfect liberty, wherever I am, to go and vote. How they vote I do not know, but they always go, that is quite certain, and they go before my face and before their landlord's face. There is no fear of the Ballot Act at all.

62,720. But I mean it has been said to us that they are afraid to come forward to give evidence before us. Do you think that that is the case in this part of Wales?—I think it is a great reflection on the Welsh tenant farmer to say so myself. I have found him as independent as any Englishman, and quite able to take care of himself. I fancy myself that it is very wrong to say so. He is never afraid to come to me and tell me if I differ with him in opinion, and I do not see why he should be afraid to come here.

62,721. Do they take free part in political meetings and that sort of thing?—As far as I know, most certainly. As I said before, there has never been on my part, or on any landlord's part that I know of, that I represent, the smallest interference in politics in any way whatever.

62,722. You have heard, I think, most of the evidence that has been given in these counties? Do you think it is fairly representative?—I do not think at all fairly representative.

62,723. Why?—Because I consider that many of the witnesses who are brought forward here, although they speak according to their convictions, as for any value in the evidence it is of just as much value as my opinion would be upon Japan.

62,724. You mean that politics has too much effect upon it?—I do not mean to say that for a moment, but whilst I have been present at the sittings of the Commission many men have come forward who know that their opinion upon agriculture is of no value whatever. Therefore what I mean is that you do not get perhaps what we should all wish you to get, and that is the true state of the case all through the country, whether it is good for the landlords or bad for the landlords. I myself, and I know I speak the wishes of my employers, court inquiry; we want everything to be above board. I have also a suggestion to make. I do not know whether it is of any value. My idea would have been that an assistant commissioner or a committee of some kind should go round the districts where the Commission is to sit, and that they should ascertain in that district the representative farmers of the district who can tell the best modes of agriculture and the faults of agriculture, the tenure of the land, and everything connected with it; find those and let them come before you, and hear no evidence but theirs—hear what they have to say. I do not think the landlords have a bit to fear from them. I am speaking, understand, from practical experience of the estates I represent.

62,725. Do you think that some of the bigger farmers have not taken this Commission at its proper value? I mean that they look upon it rather as a court of grievances than a court of inquiry?—They do, and also it takes a good deal of time for them to get up their evidence, and they do not wish to come. Many are shy and they do not care about coming, and at the present time they certainly do not care about leaving their harvest.

62,726. With regard to the Agricultural Holdings Act I think you said you had acted as arbitrator on several occasions?—I have on many occasions.

62,727. Do you wish for any amendments of that Act?—Oh, yes.

62,728. Will you state them?—Perhaps Mr. Brynmor Jones will ask me some questions about that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

62,729. I gave Major Birch Mr. Channing's Bill that we have referred to, and asked him if he would kindly look at the schedule?—I may say at once that I think an Agricultural Holdings Act for Wales might be made so that we could do away with all agreements entirely.

Lord Kenyon.

62,730. I am sure it would be a great blessing if we could?—I believe myself that these agreements that we put in are simply waste paper. They are never acted upon—the penalising clauses are never acted upon—the course-of-cropping clauses are never acted upon. I would not be interfered with as regards my course of cropping (I am speaking as a practical farmer now), and I would not sign any agreement that would interfere with me if I did not know that it was going to be a dead letter. But I think myself, that with a very little consideration, an Agricultural Holdings Act might be made, beginning with, you understand, full compensation for all improvements made by the tenant—full compensation. An Act might be made applicable to England and Wales that should take the place of agreements, and we should have no agreements of any kind or shape, except a few reservations that you might wish to put in. Of course, as regards the minerals and as regards game too, you must put in reservations. I am not giving a lawyer's opinion, only what my experience is. I hate the sight of these agreements myself because they are of no use.

Chairman.

62,731. You say a new Agricultural Holdings Act for England and Wales could be prepared?—Could be formulated, I consider, to take the case of agreements, granting the tenant full compensation, but also (which I omitted to state at the time) full protection to the landlords, so that their farms should not be run out. That is the fault that I find with the present Agricultural Holdings Act—one of the faults. In cases where I have been called in we have made our counterclaim, but no counterclaim would recoup the landlord for what has been done on the farm. The farm has been reduced, poverty stricken, and it then has to be let for a year probably without any rent at all.

Lord Kenyon.

62,732. I take it in nine cases out of ten if a farm is run out the tenant would put in no claim for compensation?—Well, he has done it.

62,733. He is rather a fool if he does?—Yes, but you see when the farm is run out it follows that the tenant has nothing to pay any counter-claim with.

62,734. But he lays himself open to a counter-claim from the landlord?—He lays himself open to a counterclaim, but I can tell you cases where it has never been paid.

62,735. Then you would draft a clause that would give the landlord full protection against bad tenants?—Certainly, and I am perfectly certain that every right-thinking tenant would think the same thing too.

62,736. Would you add a clause for compensation for haulage in case of the tenant quitting?—Yes, I think it would be most unfair if the tenant had to haul for a lot of buildings and then left the farm, if he was not compensated.

62,737. I do not think you would find any landlord in Wales would object to it?—Oh, dear no.

62,738. Do you think, as a practical man, that you could give compensation for the improved condition of a holding?—Well, I heard a suggestion made at one of the meetings of the Commission, and that was that the state of each field should be marked in the schedule. Of course that is an excellent idea, but I think myself it would be impossible to do it.

62,739. So do I, and I wanted to know your opinion as a practical man?—There is a clause in this Bill of Mr. Channing's that I should not object to; that is that the state of buildings and the state of the house should be marked in the agreement.

62,740. The state of the house?—Yes, but I do not think you could do it with the land.

62,741. If a man had been a tenant for three years, and you looked back in the schedule and saw a field marked "fair" or something of that sort, how could you say whether the field had been improved?—I think it is impossible. I think it is a most excellent idea, but it cannot be carried out.

62,742. That is what I was afraid of. On the other hand, when a farm has manifestly improved, the tenant would get it fully in the way of his specific improvements?—Yes, and the tenant should be compensated, undoubtedly.

62,743. You would advocate, perhaps, that better accounts should be kept?—I am afraid that very few accounts are kept, except a banking account.

62,744. Still, as a rule, I think farmers, if they claim compensation, can show you their bills for manures and so on?—Yes, those would have to be produced under the Agricultural Holdings Act.

Mr. Brynmor Jones.

62,745. I have been anticipated in some of the questions I had meant to put, so that I shall not trouble you for any long time. With regard to your suggestion of an Agricultural Holdings Act for Wales which should provide or stand in lieu of an agreement, what I understand you to mean is this: that unless anything is said to the contrary the terms of the tenancy shall be those stated in the Act of Parliament?—Exactly.

62,746. So that there is no need for any document as between the parties to be signed?—Except the reservations, whatever they might be.

62,747. Except any variation from the statutory form?—Exactly.

62,748. In other words you would create a statutory tenancy?—I dare say it would be so.

62,749. But you would, as I understand from your last observation, allow "contracting out," to adopt a modern phrase?—No, I do not wish to contract out. I want an Act that would be applicable and that we could all contract in, and all be in the same boat. I would contract out as regards certain reservations. Take, for instance, an estate I have to do with, Mr. Cooke's estate. We have to do with coal; we have to do with pot clay; and we have to do with bricks. Well we must have some reservation in our agreement.

62,750. That is as to the question what premises or parcels are demised. Of course that would not be contracting out in the sense I was referring to?—Well, some men are farmers as well. They farm the land round their works. I think there would be difficulties in it. I take this broad view. As regards the compensation to the tenant, and the protection of the landlord from any wilful waste of land, I would have no contracting out at all. There are other minor matters that really do not affect the tenant very much that I should like to have out.

62,751. Then it would really come to this that in the statute there should be some term which could not be varied?—Yes.

62,752. But that with regard to some other terms of the tenancy you would allow people either to adopt a statutory form or to create a new form applicable to the special case?—Yes.

62,753. And you would suggest as one of the invariable terms of tenancy that the tenant should be liable for waste?—Undoubtedly. You pay compensation, and why should not they pay if they farm so as to run out the farm?

62,754. Quite so. Would you provide a means of assessing the compensation—a statutory means of assessment?—Yes, but not by a land court. I would have it done—I am adopting now a part of Mr. Pennant's argument—I would have it done, not by the County Council—I should like to have it done by the Board of Agriculture. I do not wish to reflect in any way on the County Council, but I mean to say they are living in the neighbourhood; they are rather intimately acquainted with people about, and therefore I would rather have some entirely independent person to appoint a valuer.

62,755. Then you would rather agree with Mr. Pennant, that they ought to be persons whose tenure of office should be very secure, and whose status should be made a high one?—Well, yes; it would be a responsible position, no doubt. I do not go so far as Mr. Pennant—that the valuer ought to be like one of the judges. I think we can get something betwixt and between that.

Mr. Brynmor Jones—continued.

62,756. You would be content with a list of valuers appointed by the Board of Agriculture?—I should.

62,757. Without any check at all on the Board of Agriculture?—Oh, yes.

62,758. Did you look at the schedule to Mr. Channing's Bill that you were good enough to promise me you would look at?—I did. I had a very short time to do so, but I did look through it.

62,759. What do you say to the first part. Do you think there is anything put in there in respect to which the landlord's consent ought to be required, or ought not to be required?—I think, as regards these improvements, the landlord's consent is necessary; your clause is very strong here.

62,760. You will see this in part 1: "Improvements in respect to which consent of landlord or a reference under the Act is required." Do you see any objection to any of these things?—That varies very much. In the Agricultural Holdings Act it is with the consent of the landlord. That is where you vary.

62,761. That is so, except this, that if the landlord does not consent, there is a means of going before an arbitrator to decide in case of dispute?—Yes, that I should object to, and I will tell you my reason for objecting to it. I do not think that any arbitrator would be qualified to say whether it was an improvement or not. I think that is for the landlord and his agent to say. If it was an improvement, I would grant it to him, but I should not like to put myself in the hands of a third person to say you may build this ugly eyesore, or something which I considered would not be a permanent benefit to the farm, and that I must have it done, and that I must pay for it too.

62,762. Besides, I suppose you use this argument, that the landowner or the agent would look to the improvement of the whole estate rather than look to the question of expending such a sum of money on an individual farm?—Well, yes, but I like to help individual farmers as well. For instance, supposing there was a mansion house, and they wanted to erect a butter factory close to it, connected with the farm, and I objected to it, they might say it would be a very excellent thing, but you do not think it would be right for an outsider to come and say, "Although the landlord and the agent object to it, it must be done, because I think it ought to be done."

62,763. Then, putting aside your objection to what may be called the compulsory reference under the Act, do you see any objection to these improvements being improvements in respect of which compensation is to be given in case the consent of the landlord has been given to making them?—In case the consent of the landlord has been given I see no objection. Of course there are some we never hear of in this country at all.

62,764. Quite so; I should gather that from what I have heard?—I do not say anything as regards that point particularly. You have got drainage here in the first part. That was in the second part of the Agricultural Holdings Act.

62,765. That is so. Do you think that is an improvement?—Drainage is a very difficult thing. You cannot let a tenant do the drainage without supervision. Of course he can do it, but he must have supervision.

62,766. That is clearly the reason why the authors of this Bill have moved it from one part to the other part?—Yes.
